It is hard to follow — or even to find — the logic of this argument. Is the cost of a tractor or of a mechanical cotton picker more "fixed" than the cost of a truck or a crane? Is the cost of seed and fertilizer more rigid than that of steel or textile? Are rent, taxes, and interest rates "administered" for the farmer and not for the industrialist? Yet the argument has been believed, and reiterated, and found effective.

Who Controls Prices?

Here is the argument again, from the testimony of the president of the Dade County Farm Bureau:

We feel that Congress in passing the fair labor standards bill in 1938 recognized that agricultural wages should be and should seek their own level rather than including them in a minimum wage.

I am sure you realize that agriculture is a unique industry in that it has no control of the prices we receive for our commodities. You can set your wages on any other type of industry and they can control the price they charge the consumer. If you raise the wage, they can pass that on to the consumer. We, in agriculture, are entirely operating on the law of supply and demand, and, as such, have no control over the price we receive for our commodities. Therefore, we feel that in setting a minimum wage for agriculture, you are doing an injustice to the grower.[33]

The notion that farmers cannot influence the price they receive for their crops might have more validity if the demand for them had to be created by advertising and other marketing techniques, as with many industrial products. But this is less true of fruits and vegetables (crops that use much seasonal hired labor) than of almost any other consumer product.

Actually, the giant grower who is a large labor user has considerable opportunity to influence price and demand through marketing cooperatives, associations, agreements, and quotas. For example, in 1962, California peach growers forced prices up by reducing the supply by about 30 per cent, a tactic which they have employed in the past and will no doubt employ again.[34]

Part of the reason that growers' organizations often do not bargain effectively on the price of their product is that the same people sit on both sides of the bargaining table. An agribusinessman is involved in the processing and distributing as much as in the raising of his product. His profit comes from the total operation, and he can take it wherever it works out best for him.

Total net income to the integrated (field-to-market) producer depends on his volume of production. Low farm wages help make it possible for him to dispose of the final product at a lower price (wages are the easiest cost to cut when workers are unorganized and unprotected). A lower "break-even" point encourages an expansion of production until market prices decline and volume must be increased again to compensate for this. The integrated producer can add to his profits from his processing and distributing activities in this cycle; but the drop in farm prices is ruinous to the farmer who functions entirely as a producer and depends primarily on his own labor.

"The Small Farmer's Burden"

The farm employer, alone among employers, is still in the position of fixing his own labor costs while other employers are either negotiating with their workers or competing in the labor market with employers who do negotiate wages. He has looked to the federal government for an ample supply of workers, and it has cooperated, even to the extent of allowing him to import them on contract from abroad. Furthermore, his powerful political influence has, thus far, prevented the passage of legislation which would provide farm workers with collective bargaining rights and with national standards for wages, hours, and working conditions.

Wage-fixing by farm employers is widespread. The California Tomato Grower in its July-August issues of 1960, 1961, 1962, and 1963 has announced the scales of pay for picking tomatoes in the state each year. (The magazine is published by the California Tomato Growers Association, Inc., in Stockton.) Records of the wage-fixing of raisin, grape, cotton, and other crop growers go back for decades.[35]

Thus, opposition to the national minimum wage comes from employers who are accustomed to wage-fixing among themselves, without reference either to the workers or to the public interest.

Organizations of family farmers have pointed out that the

Table VIII
Average Hourly Earnings in Agriculture and Other Selected Industries, 1960

U.S. Department of Labor: Hired Farm Workers in the United States, June, 1961; p. 22.

Table IX
Percentage Increases in Average Hourly Earnings in Selected Industries, 1947-49 to 1960

U.S. Department of Labor: Hired Farm Workers in the United States, June, 1961; p. 23.

effect of low wages is to place a ceiling on what farm operators earn per hour for their labor.

> It is our belief that because small farmers are not likely to use Mexican workers, the Mexican farm labor program has had a detrimental impact on the traditional family type American farm. Family type farms rely largely on labor sources within the operator's family to carry on their productive activities. Most of the income of family farms comes from their own family labor on their own crops. Large-scale farm operators, employing low-cost Mexican farm labor, flood the market with crops that compete directly with the output of the family farmer's own labor. The depressed market prices which result, while providing an adequate return for volume production on large-scale farms, has the effect of giving the family farm operator a wage income comparable to that of the Mexican workers.[36]

Testimony given by the National Farmers Union at hearings on Public Law 78 in March, 1963, showed what has been happening. California doubled its production of strawberries with the use of cheap foreign labor in the last decade, and prices dropped. But in the second largest strawberry producing state, Tennessee, production dropped 14 per cent in the same decade because American labor was undercut by foreign labor. Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas, and Oklahoma, all of which use domestic labor for strawberries, were similarly affected.[37]

Of the largest lettuce producing states, California and Arizona depend largely on foreign labor; North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia on domestic labor. Over a six-year period, production in the west rose 25 per cent while production in the east dropped 75 per cent. Price fluctuates considerably, but there has been a marked downward trend led by the west.[38]

Of course there are variants. For farmers raising labor-intensive crops, whether they are large or small farmers, the wage bill will be more of a factor in production costs than for other farmers. But this does not mean that an increase in wages will affect large and small farmers equally or that small farmers will be affected adversely. Many family farm operators themselves believe that higher wages benefit them; they know that low wages have hurt them.

"Farm Workers are Inferior"

The final argument of farm employers — if indeed it can be dignified as such — against betterment of the conditions of farm workers is to blame those conditions on the workers themselves:

> . . . happy-go-lucky and irresponsible, can work hard if the notion strikes > them, or if they have a desire for some immediate cash, but will rarely work if they think conditions are not just right, or if the day is a good one for fishing. Their pleasures are of the more primitive variety; they have little ambition for economic betterment, although they may want to outdress their neighbors. Living only for today, they do little to protect themselves against the proverbial rainy day, hence many of them find themselves without funds when periodic freezes or rains halt the harvest. . . .[39]

This opinion from Florida is echoed in California:

> The average person thinks that the migrant farm worker is abused by the farmer, is underpaid and exploited. There is no question that farm wages are lower than industrial wages for many tasks, but the record shows that too many of the domestic workers are so nonproductive that the farmer cannot pay more. The herd of winos in California is a good example. They are poor unfortunates who for one reason or another have become derelicts . . . and believe me they are not reliable.[40]

Employers speak of an "ideal worker," too, but apparently he existed only in the past. He did not strive, with ambition and energy, to better his condition; rather, he was content with his lot:

> When I first came to California in 1919, practically all the type of labor we are discussing was performed by Mexicans. . . . Some of them did not know whether they were citizens or not. But they started in the Imperial Valley in the spring and worked through the harvest, planting, capping, thinning, weeding cantalopes and fruits of other kinds, and as the harvest season progressed up the state, and they moved to the northern end of the State. . . . They came and followed the crop from one end of the State to the other. . . . They took care of themselves. They presented no relief load to California in those days. They were very thrifty and their wants were few and simple. Some of them had tents and that is what they wanted. That was their way of life and they were used to it. Who am I to say they should live in this kind of house or that?[41]

A California farm worker has commented on such views:

> . . . They call us tramps, yeah, they call us tramps, winos, anything else. But if it wasn't for us tramps, that they call us, you would not have no clothes, no food, no sugar, not nothing. We have to go out and make it, thin it, pick it, gather it. . . . If it wasn't for us tramps the city people would be in one awful fix.[42]

The record is clear that farm workers have often sought to better their conditions, despite handicaps of race, language, ignorance, and poverty. They have tried to organize unions and have met bitter hostility. They have appeared at legislative hearings to refute charges with facts. They have left the migrant stream wherever they have found a chance to settle down.

When they have been offered decent conditions they have shown responsibility. A farm placement officer has reported:

Today's farm worker operates a sugar-cane cutter!

> An Idaho representative was there with $17,000 in cash. . . . In addition to offering family housing and $1.25 per hour, he was passing out the long green on the spot to pay the transportation in advance to Idaho. He says those that will take the money and then not report are nil.[43]

Finally, it should be pointed out that as agriculture has changed into a complex, mechanized industry, the skills and abilities demanded of hired farm workers have greatly increased. When asked, the workers have responded. When the machines appeared, they handled machinery. When packing was moved into the field, they became packers. Trucks and tractors arrived, and they became drivers. Processing was added next door, and they became factory hands. If the vast majority are still untrained and unskilled, it is a question not of "character" but of opportunity.

Photo by Harvey Richards

Bread line of unemployed California farm workers

Photo by Harvey Richards

Summary

Illusions in Agriculture

The belief that American agriculture today is made up of family farms is an illusion – one that is used to shield giant corporations from their responsibilities to their workers and to the public. This illusion can and must be shattered. The facts themselves belie the three major myths fostered by agribusiness:

1. Agriculture is different. Facts and figures show that the segment of agriculture which hires by far the largest share of farm labor is precisely that which most nearly resembles industry, with corporate control and absentee ownership; great capital investment and mechanization; and concentration of the entire process from the farm to the consumer in the same hands.
2. The family farm is threatened if farm workers are included in social legislation. The fact of the matter is that the interests of the family farmer are inextricably linked with those of the farm worker. Both are threatened by competition with low-wage labor employed by the large farm corporations, and by the resulting low consumer prices; the less hired labor costs on the large farm, the less the family farmer's is worth.
3. Farm workers are responsible for their own miserable conditions. On the contrary, they are made powerless by their poverty and their lack of political and economic organization. To implement their desire for a better standard of living they must have the right to organize into trade unions and the other minimum protections of law afforded to other workers.

Beyond a Minimum

Justice demands a living wage and other basic protections for our farm workers. This is the minimum, the immediate goal. But beyond this lie the long-term problems of our agricultural economy. We cannot halt the increasing mechanization of many of our crops, nor some of its inevitable consequences, such as the absorption of smaller farming units into larger ones, and a reduction in the demand for farm labor. But we can stimulate programs and legislation which will reduce the economic inequities which now abound. We can develop the education and skills necessary for better living on the farms today. Further, we can educate and retrain the numbers who no longer can or wish to remain in farming so that they can acquire the skills necessary for their absorption into industry.

Government programs of loans, of training, and of assistance do exist. But they must be vastly extended if they are to do more than scratch the surface. And they must be geared to the special needs of the minority groups which comprise a large proportion of our farm workers.

It would take more than one pamphlet of this nature to spell out the possibilities which American resources, imaginatively applied, could bring to fruition. But the needs and possibilities must be indicated here or the picture of farm workers and their problems would be incomplete. All that has been suggested here is not only possible, but also necessary and long overdue. The way is open and calls to mind an old proverb: "The longest journey begins with one short step."

Footnotes

1. Fisher, Lloyd H.: The Harvest Labor Market in California. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1953; p. 140.
2. Annual Reports of the Department of Labor: Farm Labor Market Developments, Review and Outlook; also, Hired Farm Workers in the United States, June, 1961. U.S. Department of Agriculture: Advance Report on the Hired Farm Working Force of 1962, October, 1963; pp. 1, 7.
3. U.S. Department of Agriculture: Advance Report on the Hired Farm Working Force of 1962, October, 1963; pp. 1, 7.
4. Jessup, Dr. R. Bruce: "Health Conditions and Services for Domestic and Agricutural Workers and their Families in California"; report of a study made in August 1960 and submitted to the Governor of California by the Director of Public Health.
5. Panger, Daniel: "The Forgotten Ones," The Progressive, April, 1963.
6. U.S. Department of Agriculture: Education and Earnings of the Hired Farm Working Force of 1960. Agricultural Information Bulletin No. 262. May, 1962; pp. 5-6.
7. Wright, Dale: "The Forgotten People," reprint from World-Telegram and Sun issued by the National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor; New York, 1961.
8. Sherman, Wells A.: "Changes in the Mechanism of the Fruit and Vegetable Industry," paper read before the National Association of Marketing Officials, Dec. 4, 1929, Chicago, Ill. (Cited by Paul Taylor, La Follette Committee Hearings.)
9. Los Angeles Times, March 19, 1961.
10. Antonell, E. B.: "WGA President's Message," Western Grower and Shipper, Yearbook of the Western Growers Association, 1962; p. 38.
11. Fisher: op. cit.; p. 94.
12. U.S. Department of Labor: Hired Farm Workers in the United States, June, 1961; p. 3.
13. U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census: U.S. Census of Agriculture 1959. Vol. II General Report. Ch. I Farms and Land in Farms; p. 19.
14. New York Times, Oct. 18, 1962.
15. U.S. Department of Labor: Hired Farm Workers in the United States, June, 1961; p. 6.

16. Congressional Record, April 2, 1962; pp. 5245-46. In the debate on the San Luis irrigation project, Senator Wayne Morse introduced a list of the large landowners in the affected area in the Central Valley of California. The Kern County Land Company is the largest single individual owner listed and is cited as owning 348,026.46 acres in the valley.
17. Solow, Herbert: "The Company Twice as Big as Rhode Island," Fortune Magazine, March, 1961.
18. Congressional Record, April 2, 1962; pp. 5245-46.
19. "Dust to (Gold) Dust," Western Grower and Shipper, Yearbook, 1962; p. 105. Elsewhere, Sawdey and Hent are referred to as Sawdey and Hunt.
20. Beatty, William C. Jr., Brigham, Thomas M., and Pickford, Patricia: A Preliminary Report on a Study of Farm Laborers in Frenso County from January 1, 1959 to July 1, 1959 (mimeo); p. 55.
21. Testimony of Rev. Arthur Kent, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Equipment, Supplies, and Manpower of the Committee on Agriculture, House of Representatives, 88th Congr., 1st Sess., on H.R. 1836 and H.R. 2009; March 27, 28 and 29, 1963; p. 220.
22. Testimony of J. Bill Becker at U.S. Department of Labor Hearings on proposed bracero wage rate; Memphis, Tenn., March 2, 1962.
23. Forrest City [Arkansas] Times-Herald, September 13, 1961; reprinted in Congressional Record, Sept. 16, 1961; p. 18604.
24. Arkansas Gazette, March 3, 1962.
25. Testimony of J. Bill Becker at U.S. Department of Labor Hearings, March 2, 1962.
26. Nix, James: "Effect of Cotton Harvest Mechanization on Hired Seasonal Labor," Employment Security Review, Jan., 1963; p. 12.
27. Testimony of John L. Fryer, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Equipment, Supplies, and Manpower, March 27, 28 and 29, 1963; p. 238.
28. U.S. Department of Labor: Farm Labor Market Developments, Employment of Foreign Workers in 1962, Feb., 1963; p. 2, p. 5.
29. U.S. Department of Labor: Farm Labor Market Developments, Review and Outlook, Jan., 1963; p. 5.
30. Testimony of Matt Triggs, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Migratory Labor of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, U.S. Senate, 86th Congr., 2d Sess., Washington, D. C. Part 2, May 12, 1960; p. 798.
31. U.S. Department of Labor: Hired Farm Workers in the United States, June, 1961; p. 5.
32. Brynes, Asher; "Migratory Workers and their Employers," The New Republic, Nov. 6, 1961.
33. Testimony of Abney Cox, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Migratory Labor, Homestead, Florida. Part 2, May 16, 1960; p. 915.
34. Valley Labor Citizen (California Labor News Dispatch), Sept. 28, 1962. The next issue of the Citizen, Oct. 5, 1962, carried the following observation by W. T. O'Rear in his column, "Violets and Vinegar": "If the peach pickers should go out on strike and cause 30 per cent of the peach crop to spoil to keep wages up the pickers would be accused of treason; some would be jailed because they had the courage to match human rights against property rights."

35. E.g., News Letter published by the San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Labor Bureau, August 19, 1948.
36. Testimony of Reuben L. Johnson, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Equipment, Supplies, and Manpower, March 27, 28 and 29, 1963; p. 232.
37. Ibid.; p. 233.
38. Ibid.
39. Testimony of LaMonte Graw, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Labor and Labor-Management Relations of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, U.S. Senate, 82d Congr., 2d Sess., Part 1, Washington, D. C., Feb. 28, 1952; p. 500.
40. Hayes, Edward F.: "Our Readers Write," Christian Science Monitor, June 14, 1962.
41. Testimony of H. L. Strobel, Hearings before the Subcommittee on Labor and Labor-Management Relations, Feb. 29, 1952; p. 686.
42. From interviews conducted by Ernest Lowe and Fred Haines in San Joaquin Valley in 1960 and 1961. Taped dialogues first produced over Radio Station KPFA in Berkeley, California, and excerpted for publication under the title, "Sometimes You Work a Day," The Californian, May, 1962; p. 15.
43. Razee, Don: "Annual Worker Plan," California Farmer, July 21, 1962.

Your contribution to pay for this pamphlet and our other educational work is needed. Please send it to:

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON FARM LABOR

112 East 19th Street, New York 3, N. Y.

Co-Chairmen:

Frank P. Graham
A. Philip Randolph

Treasurer:

John A. Mackay

Assistant Treasurer:

Robert W. Hudgens

William L. Batt, Jr.
Louis H. Bean
Rev. Edwin T. Dahlberg
Helen Gahagan Douglas
L. H. Foster
Rabbi Roland B. Gittelsohn
Henry B. Herman

Msgr. George G. Higgins
Jacob M. Kaplan
Herbert H. Lehman
Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman
Isador Lubin
Archbishop Robert E. Lucey
Benjamin E. Mays
Peter H. Odegard

Daniel H. Pollitt
†Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt
Wilbour E. Saunders
John M. Seabrook
Norman Thomas
Frederick S. Van Dyke
Maurice T. van Hecke

Executive Secretary:

Fay Bennett

Program Secretary:

Helen K. Shettle

Field Representative:

Stanley Hamilton

The National Advisory Committee on Farm Labor is a fact-finding, reporting agency. It provides information regarding the problem of farm workers to aid concerned persons in taking effective action. You may write to the NACFL for more information on this subject, for a list of other literature available, and for names and addresses of other groups concerned with this issue.

ASSISTANCE
ON SPECIAL EDUCATIONAL PROBLEMS OCCASIONED BY SCHOOL DESEGREGATION

Equal Educational Opportunities Program

Authorized By
Title IV, Public Law 88-352
The Civil Rights Act of 1964

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

Office of Education

Purpose of the Program

The Equal Educational Opportunities Program is designed to provide various kinds of specialized assistance to help public school systems and school personnel cope with problems related to school desegregation. The U.S. Office of Education has been authorized by Congress to carry out the program under Title IV of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (P. L. 88-352).

Types of Assistance

Title IV provides assistance that may take the form of informational materials, specialists to act as consultants to school systems, and training for school personnel. The assistance is made available in three ways: technical assistance, grants to school boards, and training institutes.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Section 403 of Title IV authorizes the Commissioner to render technical assistance in the preparation, adoption, and implementation of plans for the desegregation of public elementary and secondary schools to any governmental unit legally responsible for operating these schools. This technical assistance may include, among other activities, information regarding effective methods and personnel especially equipped to assist in coping with special educational problems occasioned by school desegregation.

Special educational problems on which technical assistance might be given include:

--The determination of new ways of organizing the school and classroom to improve the quality of instruction in desegregated school situations.

--The development of new curriculum materials, content, and approaches helpful in meeting educational problems involved in school desegregation.

--The organization of guidance and counseling programs to give adequate attention to individual student needs within the desegregated school environment.

--The establishment of training programs to improve the ability of school personnel to deal with problems related to school desegregation.

--The resolution of problems of school administration related to desegregation, such as the elimination of racial attendance areas, the development of teacher assignment policies, etc.

Technical assistance through consultative services and informational materials will be provided as follows;

Consultative services: Consultants with special knowledge relative to the problems involved, or with experience in situations comparable to that of the applicant, will be selected from the field or from the staff of the Office of Education and their services made available to applicants. In all instances consultants will be assigned by mutual consent between the applicant and the Office of Education. Expenses for consultative services will be borne by the Equal Educational Opportunities Program.

Informational materials: With respect to specifically defined problems, pertinent materials, such as publications, research reports and studies, films, and recordings, may be provided by the Office of Education. In addition, materials bearing on significant problems or programs related to school desegregation will be made available for general distribution. A bibliography of currently available items may be obtained from the Equal Educational Opportunities Program office.

Any school system may request technical assistance by letter or by a telephone call followed by a confirming letter. Original or confirming letters should state the nature of the problem occasioned by desegregation and the type of assistance needed.

GRANTS TO SCHOOL BOARDS

Under Section 405 of Title IV, the Commissioner is authorized to make grants to school boards to pay, in whole or in part, the cost of:
(1) giving teachers and other school personnel inservice training in dealing with problems incident to desegregation; and (2) employing specialists to advise in problems incident to desegregation.

Grants to public school boards will be made on the basis of evaluations of program proposals submitted by the school boards with regard to school desegregation problems in their own communities. A policies and procedures manual that provides instructions for filing grant proposals is available upon request.

School officials may wish to contact nearby institutions of higher education to discuss possible mutual planning of school-system inservice training programs and training institutes conducted by the institutions.

To aid in the development of grant proposals, school boards may request assistance from the Equal Educational Opportunities Program office.

TRAINING INSTITUTES

The Commissioner is authorized under Section 404 of Title IV to arrange with institutions of higher education for the operation of short-term or regular session institutes for special training to improve the ability of teachers, supervisors, counselors, and other elementary or secondary school personnel to deal effectively with special educational problems occasioned by school desegregation.

Grants and contracts for training institutes will be based upon evaluations of program proposals submitted by institutions of higher education. The proposals may relate to any type or combination of school desegregation problem. The format for institute proposals is contained in a policies and procedures manual that is available upon request.

Institutions planning to conduct training institutes are encouraged to consult with superintendents and other appropriate public school personnel in school systems facing present or anticipated school desegregation problems. The training institutes and inservice programs conducted by school systems will often complement each other for greater effectiveness.

Institutes of varying length may be offered in the summer or during the school year. Lists of scheduled institutes will be available continuously from the Equal Educational Opportunities Program office.

Individuals who attend an institute as full-time participants will be paid stipends at the rate of $75 per week for the period of their attendance, in addition to allowances for travel necessary to attend the institute. All institute instructional costs are paid by the Equal Educational Opportunities Program. Applications of individuals who want to attend an institute should be sent to the sponsoring institution, not to the Office of Education.

Eligibility

Applications for assistance under any of the Title IV programs must pertain to problems occasioned by or incident to the assignment of students to or within public schools without regard to their race, color, religion, or national origin. Applications designed to deal with problems uniquely related to the assignment of students to public schools in order to overcome racial imbalance are not eligible for consideration.

Requests for technical assistance and proposals for grants for the employment of advisory specialists or for inservice training programs will be accepted from any school board or governmental unit legally responsible for operating a public elementary or secondary school.

Any approved institution of higher education, public or private, may submit proposals for the operation of short-term or regular session special training institutes.

The eligibility of individuals for attendance at institutes supported under this Program will be evaluated by the sponsoring institution in accordance with selection criteria approved by the Commissioner.

For application instructions for grants or institutes, or for additional information on the Equal Educational Opportunities Program, write, telephone, or complete and mail the enclosed card to:

Equal Educational Opportunities Program
U.S. Office of Education
400 Maryland Avenue, S.W.
Washington, D.C. 20202

Telephone Area Code: 202

GPO 884-658

Summer Institutes for School Desegregation

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
Office of Education

Summer Institutes for School Desegregation

INSTITUTES FOR: Teachers Counselors
Supervisors
Principals
Superintendents
Other public school personnel

DESIGNED TO: Improve the ability of school personnel to deal with special educational problems occasioned by desegregation.

SUPPORTED BY: Equal Educational Opportunities Program, U.S. Office of Education, under authority of Title IV, Section 404, P.L. 88-352, the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Institute programs vary to meet the most crucial administrative, curricular, and instructional problems facing school systems which have desegregated or are in the process of desegregating.

All participants will receive stipends of $15 a day, or $75 a week, plus allowance for travel.

See the listing below for locations of institutes, dates, qualifications of participants, and directors' names.

Participants for all institute programs will be selected without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin.

Inquiries concerning credit should be directed to the institution concerned.

For application forms and further information, write directly to the institute director. Do not write to the Equal Educational Opportunities Program.

AUBURN UNIVERSITY, Auburn, Alabama

Director: John T. Lovell, Professsor of Education
Dates: June 14 - August 21
Participants: 50 elementary and secondary administrators and teachers from Alabama and Georgia systems
Content: Intergroup relations, teaching culturally disadvantaged children in specific subject areas

BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE, Daytona Beach, Florida

Director: Arsenia Cabotaje, Professor of English
Dates: June 14 - July 23
Participants: 30 elementary school teachers from ten Florida counties
Content: Language arts in the desegregated school

BETHUNE-COOKMAN COLLEGE, Daytona Beach, Florida

Director: Thurman W. Stanback, Chairman, Division of Humanities
Dates: June 14 - July 23
Participants: 30 elementary and junior high school teachers and supervisors from ten Florida counties
Content: Humanities in the desegregated school

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Berkeley, California

Director: J. Cecil Parker, Professor of Education
Dates: June 21 - July 16
Participants: 50 teachers and administrators from Oakland
Content: Teaching culturally disadvantaged children in an integrated school

UNIVERSITY OF DELAWARE, Newark, Delaware

Director: Ralph Duke, Professor of Education
Dates: June 24 -26; July 5 - 9
Participants: 60 counselors and administrators in teams from Delaware Content: Counseling and administrative problems related to desegregation

KNOXVILLE COLLEGE, Knoxville, Tennessee

Director: Dr. Ralph Martin, Professor of Education
Dates: June 7 - 25
Participants: 30 teachers from Knoxville and Knox County, Tennessee
Content: Study of intergroup relations and curriculum materials used in desegregated schools

LAMAR STATE COLLEGE OF TECHNOLOGY, Beaumont, Texas

Director: Andrew Johnson, Assistant Professor of History
Dates: August 9 - 12
Participants: 60 teachers, supervisors, and administrators from Texas
Content: Background of desegregation and development of materials for desegregated schools

UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND, College Park, Maryland

Director: Richard Neville, Associate Professor of Education
Dates: June 21 - July 30
Participants: 30 elementary school teachers from the District of Columbia and Baltimore
Content: Teaching culturally disadvantaged children in integrated schools

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI, Coral Gables, Florida

Director: Baker Hindman, Professor of Education
Dates: July 23 - August 1
Participants: 45 school personnel in teams of 5 from 9 Florida communities
Content: Formulating plans for successful desegregation

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI, Coral Gables, Florida

Director: Joseph Barton and Carolyn Garwood, Assistant Professors of Education
Dates: June 14 - July 23
Participants: 36 teachers, counselors, administrators in 12 teams from Florida
Content: Preparing school personnel for the integrated school

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI, University, Mississippi

Director: R. A. Boyer, Professor of Education
Dates: June 10 - July 17; July 19 - August 19
Participants: 40 teachers, counselors, and administrators from Mississippi in each institute
Content: Specific problems being encountered in the desegregated school

UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI, Kansas City, Missouri

Director: Daniel Levine, Associate Director, Center for Metropolitan Problems in Education
Dates: August 2 - 13
Participants: 80 administrators, counselors and teachers from Kansas and Missouri
Content: Instructional, curricular and organizational plans for alleviating problems arising from desegregation

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY, New York, New York

Director: William Van Til, Chairman, Department of Secondary Education
Dates: July 26 - August 13
Participants: 40 supervisors and curriculum specialists from North and South
Content: Understanding of minority cultures and study of teaching materials for desegregated classes

STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK, Albany, New York

Director:	John A. Ether, Professor of Education
Dates:	August 9 - 12; 10 monthly sessions September 1965 - June 1966
Participants:	20 senior education students and 20 kindergarten through 12th grade teachers from small New York cities
Content:	Methods and materials for integrated schools

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA, Chapel Hill, North Carolina

Director:	Dwight C. Rhyne, Associate Director, Extension Division
Dates:	June 21 - August 13
Participants:	100 junior high school teachers, counselors and administrators from North Carolina
Content:	Working with children to develop methods for teaching underachievers in integrated schools

UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA, Norman, Oklahoma

Director:	Glenn R. Snider, Professor of Education
Dates:	June 7 - 23
Participants:	100 teachers, supervisors, and administrators from Oklahoma
Content:	Educational problems in newly desegregated schools and preparation of materials for teaching reading

GEORGE PEABODY COLLEGE, Nashville, Tennessee

Director:	W. H. Drummond, Chairman, Division of Education
Dates:	July 5 - 23
Participants:	100 teachers, supervisors, and administrators from Huntsville, Alabama; Little Rock, Arkansas; Atlanta, Georgia; Rome, Georgia; Shreveport, Louisiana; Greenville, Mississippi; Cincinnati, Ohio; Shelby and Davidson County, Tennessee
Content:	Background of desegregation

PENNSYLVANIA MILITARY COLLEGE, Chester, Pennsylvania

Director:	Mrs. Eleanor M. Logan
Dates:	June 28 - August 6
Participants:	30 secondary school teachers from Chester School District
Content:	Teaching the culturally deprived student in an integrated school

PURDUE UNIVERSITY, Lafayette, Indiana

Director:	Dr. Robert Milliken, Professor of Education
Dates:	August 9 - 20
Participants:	30 school counselors and 10 administrators, one-third from Gary, Indiana, and two-thirds from Norfolk, Virginia
Content:	Counseling practices and problems in desegregated schools

ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE, Raleigh, North Carolina

Director:	Prezell Robinson, Executive Dean
Dates:	June 21 - July 9
Participants:	35 teachers, supervisors, administrators, and board members from the southeastern United States
Content:	Background of desegregation and preparation of teaching materials

ST. LOUIS UNIVERSITY, St. Louis, Missouri

Director:	Theo M. Shea, Associate Professor of Education
Dates:	June 21 - July 30
Participants:	40 teachers, counselors, administrators and public welfare personnel from Missouri
Content:	Human relations and plans for improving the reading curriculum for the culturally disadvantaged child in integrated schools

FISK UNIVERSITY, Nashville, Tennessee

Director:	Vivian Henderson, Professor of Economics
Dates:	June 14 - July 16
Participants:	60 elementary school teachers, 10 guidance counselors, 10 prospective elementary school teachers
Content:	Needs of children in desegregated schools and developing curriculum and materials appropriate to the integrated school

UNIVERSITY OF FLORIDA, Gainesville, Florida

Director:	Robert D. Meyers, Associate Professor of Education
Dates:	June 14 - July 2; July 12 - 30
Participants:	Teams of 5-7 administrators, supervisors, board members, and teachers from Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina; 65 participants in each institute
Content:	Legal and social aspects of desegregation and formulation of plans to facilitate desegregation

FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY, Tallahassee, Florida

Director:	Herman L. Frick, Professor of Administration and Supervision
Dates:	June 7 - July 16
Participants:	50 superintendents, school board members and administrators from North Florida, Southwest Georgia, and Southeast Alabama
Content:	Administrative practices in desegregated schools

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY, Lexington, Kentucky

Director:	Charles C. Manker, Jr., Associate Professor of Education
Dates:	June 14 - July 9
Participants:	30 teachers and administrators from selected Kentucky school systems
Content:	Development of plans for faculty-staff integration

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY, Lexington, Kentucky

Director:	James H. Powell, Director of Student Teachers
Dates:	July 12 - August 6
Participants:	45 prospective supervising teachers from the University of Kentucky and five cooperating institutions
Content:	Desegregation problems faced by supervising teachers

UNIVERSITY OF ST. THOMAS, Houston, Texas

Director:	Reverend James R. Noland, Lecturer in Sociology
Dates:	June 7 - 14; June 15 - 23
Participants:	50 teachers, counselors, supervisors, and administrators from Texas in each of two institutes
Content:	Study of minority groups and resource materials for the desegregated classroom

SPRING HILL COLLEGE, Mobile, Alabama

Director:	Reverend Albert S. Foley, S.J., Chairman, Department of Sociology
Dates:	June 14 - July 21
Participants:	30 teachers and administrators from Mobile, Montgomery, and Birmingham, Alabama
Content:	Instructional and administrative procedures in preparing for desegregation

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Stanford, California

Director:	Fannie R. Shaftel, Associate Professor of Education
Dates:	August 2 - 20
Participants:	50 elementary teachers, administrators and supervisors from California, Oregon, and Colorado
Content:	Problems arising from desegregation and relevant instructional materials

STETSON UNIVERSITY, DeLand, Florida

Director:	Gerald E. Critoph, Associate Professor of American Studies
Dates:	June 14 - July 24
Participants:	24 teachers, administrators and board members from ten Florida counties
Content:	History of the Civil Rights Movement and related social problems since World War I

STETSON UNIVERSITY, DeLand, Florida

Director:	Harland C. Merriam, Professor of Education
Dates:	June 14 - July 23
Participants:	40 administrative personnel from Florida
Content:	Administrative problems related to desegregation

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, Syracuse, New York

Director:	C. W. Hunnicutt, Chairman, Department of Elementary Education
Dates:	July 19 - August 6
Participants:	75 elementary school principals and supervisors in teams from the North and South
Content:	Materials and methods used by Dr. Samuel Shepard in the Banneker Group in St. Louis

UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE, Knoxville, Tennessee

Director:	Frederick P. Venditti, Assistant Professor of Education
Dates:	June 9 - August 10
Participants:	Teachers and administrators from 9 East Tennessee School Systems
Content:	Working with disadvantaged children in desegregated schools

UNIVERSITY OF TULSA, Tulsa, Oklahoma

Director:	Gordon Lovejoy, Professor of Sociology
Dates:	June 7 - July 30
Participants:	40 administrators from Oklahoma and Arkansas
Content:	Study of three minority groups and practices to provide educational opportunities

YESHIVA UNIVERSITY, New York, New York

Director:	Rachel Weddington, Assistant Professor of Education, Queens College, New York, New York
Dates:	July 6 - 26
Participants:	25 teachers from P.S. No. 30 and No. 80, Queens Borough, New York City
Content:	Understanding of disadvantaged children in integrated schools

Other institutes supported by the Equal Educational Opportunities Program include:

AUBURN UNIVERSITY, Auburn, Alabama August

A three-day institute for school board chairmen, superintendents and school board lawyers from Alabama

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI, Coral Gables, Florida February 24 - 26

A three-day institute for superintendents and school board members from Florida and South Georgia

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI, Coral Gables, Florida February 13 - May 29

Fifteen Saturday sessions for teachers, counselors, and administrators from Dade County, Florida

UNIVERSITY OF MISSISSIPPI, Oxford, Mississippi June 2 - 4

A three-day institute for superintendents, school board chairmen, and school board lawyers from Mississippi

UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA, Norman, Oklahoma May 13 - 14

A three-day institute for staff members of colleges of education in Oklahoma

UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE, Knoxville, Tennessee March 26 - 28
April 2 - 4

Two three-day institutes, one at Knoxville, the other at Memphis, for superintendents and school board members from Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Missouri, Alabama, and North Carolina

UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE, Knoxville, Tennessee February 22 - April 22

A two-week session followed by eight consecutive weekly sessions for Eastern Tennessee school administrators, teachers, and counselors

U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE : 1965 O—775-098

r-

st ol

26 da

29 de

4
ol

4

8
4 n-
i,

-
2
n

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF
HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE
OFFICE OF EDUCATION
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20202

OFFICIAL BUSINESS

POSTAGE AND FEES PAID
U.S. DEPARTMENT OF H.E.W.

IN UNITY
there is strength
S

— ELECTORAL VOTE —
BY STATES

*Alabama	10	Hawaii	4	Massachusetts	14	New Mexico	4	South Dakota	4
Alaska	3	Idaho	4	Michigan	21	New York	43	*Tennessee	11
Arizona	5	Illinois	26	Minnesota	10	*North Carolina	13	*Texas	25
*Arkansas	6	Indiana	13	*Mississippi	7	North Dakota	4	Utah	4
California	40	Iowa	9	Missouri	12	Ohio	26	Vermont	3
Colorado	6	Kansas	7	Montana	4	Oklahoma	8	*Virginia	12
Connecticut	8	Kentucky	9	Nebraska	5	Oregon	6	Washington	9
Delaware	3	*Louisiana	10	Nevada	3	Pennsylvania	29	West Virginia	7
*Florida	14	Maine	4	New Hampshire	4	Rhode Island	4	Wisconsin	12
*Georgia	12	Maryland	10	New Jersey	17	*South Carolina	8	Wyoming	3

— PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS —

1800	Electoral Votes	Popular Votes
Thomas Jefferson	73	Unknown
Aaron Burr	73	Unknown

(Jefferson elected by House of Representatives after tie vote in electoral college.)

1824	Electoral Votes	Popular Votes
John Q. Adams	84	105,321
Andrew Jackson	99	155,872
Henry Clay	37	46,587
William Crawford	41	44,282

(Adams elected by House of Representatives after no candidate received a majority in the electoral college.)

1860	Electoral Votes	Popular Votes
Abraham Lincoln	180	1,866,352
Stephen Douglas	12	1,375,157
John Breckinridge	72	845,763
John Bell	39	589,581

(Lincoln elected with minority of popular vote. Electoral vote followed pattern of 1824 election.)

1876	Electoral Votes	Popular Votes
Rutherford Hayes	185	4,033,950
Samuel J. Tilden	184	4,284,757

(Hayes elected by special election commission, set up by Congress, when 22 electoral votes were challenged in Fla., La., Ore., & S.C. Congress, in joint session, affirmed vote of the special commission.)

1948	Electoral Votes	Popular Votes
Harry Truman	303	24,105,812
Thomas E. Dewey	189	21,970,065
Strom Thurmond	39	1,169,021
Henry Wallace	—	1,157,172

(Truman elected with minority of popular vote.)

1960	Electoral Votes	Popular Votes
John Kennedy	303	34,227,096
Richard Nixon	219	34,108,546
Harry Byrd	15	—
Faubus	—	214,549
Hass	—	46,560
Decker	—	46,203
Unpledged Democrat (Miss.)	—	116,248
Other	—	39,262

(Kennedy elected with minority of popular vote. Unpledged electors in three states (Ala., 6; Miss., 8; Okla. 1) gave Senator Byrd 15 electoral votes.)

6 ...DAY FOR DECISION

History stands to repeat itself in 1964 when voters of Mississippi — and other states — go to the polls to choose their presidential electors. For Mississippi, the key day is September 1 — date of the Preferential Presidential Primaries. It will indeed be a Day For Decision.

Prior to that time, both Democrats and Republicans will have selected their candidates for President and Vice President. If those candidates are not acceptable, Mississippi voters can indicate their dissatisfaction on Sept. 1 by choosing a group of presidential electors who will be expected to find another candidate.

This new election procedure is not limited to just one party. It is designed to give voters in both major parties an opportunity to express their approval or disapproval of national candidates well in advance of the November general election. Here is how the plan will work:

Each major party will hold a state convention in 1964. Each of Mississippi's 82 counties is entitled to be represented at each state convention with twice the number of votes that county has in the House of Representatives of the State Legislature.

In each of the two conventions, a motion supported by 10% of the convention membership can designate a slate of electors pledged to support the candidate selected by that party's national convention. A motion by 10% of the convention membership can also designate a slate of electors who are not pledged to support the candidate selected by that party's national convention. Both Democrats and Republicans will have this opportunity when their party's state convention is held following the national convention.

The next step is a primary election held for each party. This is the election now set for Sept. 1, 1964. At that time, each party can place on its ballot two slates of electors — one group pledged and the other group unpledged. The winning slate of electors from each party's primary will then represent that party in the November general election.

The net effect is to give Mississippi voters the possibility of being represented by either Democratic or Republican unpledged electors, if neither party produces a national candidate acceptable to this State. At the same time, this plan does not prevent Mississippi voters from choosing electors pledged to satisfactory candidates, regardless of party designation.

If neither party's candidate is acceptable to Mississippi voters, then it would be the goal of Unpledged Electors — regardless of party affiliation — to join with other states in withholding sufficient electoral votes so that neither major candidate would receive the majority required for election.

If no candidate received a majority of the electoral votes, the responsibility for electing the president would then become the duty of the House of Representatives in the Congress. If the election should be carried to the House of Representatives, each State would have one vote. Fifty votes would be cast, with each State delegation voting as a single unit. The choice of candidates would be among the three men receiving the highest number of votes in the electoral college, with a simple majority required for election.

Within the framework of the Preferential Presidential Primaries, both Democrats and Republicans in Mississippi can find an opportunity to protest vigorously the decisions of the national party conventions, if they so desire. History is on their side; the Nation's future hangs in the balance.

IN UNITY THERE IS STRENGTH

Voters in Mississippi and across the South can learn a lesson regarding the absolute power of minority groups by studying the election returns of 1960. For it was then that 406,176 voters in a key state provided the power bloc to assure the election of the Democratic nominee and thereby doom the Independent Elector movement to temporary failure.

The State was New York. At stake were 45 electoral votes. Democrats polled 3,423,909 votes; Republicans polled 3,446,419 votes. The balance of power lay with the 406,176 votes of the Liberal party which, with no candidate, was free to bestow its blessing upon the candidate who would favor its beliefs in greater measure. Thus it was that a little more than 5% of the voters in one key state controlled the decision of their state's 7,276,504 popular votes, and ultimately the nation's decision on a president — and they cast their votes for the Democrat. Armed with those 45 electoral votes, the Democratic candidate was elected with 303 votes in the electoral college.

However, if the minority Liberal Party of New York had found the Republican nominee more acceptable — as could well be the situation in 1964 — results would have been far different in 1960. Instead of only 219 electoral votes, the Republican nominee would have received 264. Instead of 303 electoral votes, the Democratic nominee would have received only 258. And neither candidate would have had a majority. Nixon would have been lacking five votes for a majority; Kennedy would have needed 11 votes for a majority; and the 15 Independent electoral votes from Mississippi, Alabama and Oklahoma would have changed the course of history. The strategic balance would then have been in the hands of those who are dedicated to the preservation of government principles based upon constitutional prerogatives.

This is the principle of the powerful minority, as it functions in national politics. On a lesser scale, the same principle is applied effectively in states other than New York — key states, with large electoral votes, where a minority bloc demands and gets recognition far in excess of its true representation within the mass of voters.

It is this principle which Southern States must learn, understand, and use to advantage if they are to regain their stature in national affairs. One State by itself, two States or even three States, cannot mount an effective offensive. But the several Southern States, who represent collectively 128 electoral votes, can function effectively in a power bloc. Standing firm in their demand for constitutional government, and united in their determination, together they can exert the same effective force which has been used against them with such cunning and deception in years past. The opportunity for Southern unity will present itself again in 1964. The history of the past two decades clearly shows there is no other choice.

. . . WHAT CAN YOU DO?

You are a voter. You can have no greater stature; you can have no greater privilege. By your ballot, you determine the fate of your country. By your ballot, you entrust your future to those elected officials whose wisdom, judgment and integrity you believe are best. You can do much.

Because you can do much — and power-hungry candidates, above all others, know that truth — there will be great efforts to discredit the logic of adapting the principle of a minority power bloc for the benefit of Southern States. This is natural; history tells us to expect it; and voters must stand firm.

Be informed; know the facts. Understand the principle involved, and do not hesitate to inform friends. Voters lacking a full understanding and being reluctant to deny the clouded half-truths blocked the spread of a unified action in the past. Southern States cannot afford those same mistakes in 1964.

Read and re-read the information in this pamphlet. Read the questions; know the answers. Be ready to strike down the mystery of misinformation by giving the facts.

Armed with the courage of their convictions and their votes, Mississippi people and their friends throughout the South can make a significant contribution to the restoration of constitutional government and the recognition of sovereign rights of States on Sept. 1, 1964. On that Day for Decision — VOTE!

A Message from the Governor to the Mississippi Legislature

THE HON.
ROSS R. BARNETT
Governor of the State of
Mississippi

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI:

February 28, 1963

By virtue of the provisions of Section 121 of the Constitution of 1890, I herewith submit in writing the following additional matter for the consideration of the Legislature now in extraordinary session, towit:

> Legislation to provide that the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States representing political parties in this State be nominated by popular vote of the people composing said political parties in a party primary election.

It is my belief that such legislation is necessary in order to give political relief to the great majority of our people.

It is clearly apparent that the greater number of the people of our state, and of the entire South and of the nation can no longer support any party that advocates measures which will eventually destroy this great country of ours.

It is also apparent that our great Republic is in grave danger of dissolution and if the trend continues, the states will ultimately be mere provinces.

In Mississippi, we must give our electoral votes to patriots who are willing to take a stand for constitutional government and the ideals and fundamental principles that have made our country great, and never again support selfish and ruthless politicians who openly seek our destruction. We must support only those who stand openly for our principles and we must vigorously oppose those who seek to defame and debase us.

The electoral strength of Mississippi must be used to preserve our own best interests and those of the nation. We must give our people an opportunity to join with those of like mind in other states and to pool and use our electoral votes to preserve the South and the nation.

There are literally millions of people in this nation crying out for an opportunity to cast an honest and effective ballot in the 1964 presidential election. The people are now captives of the vicious convention nomination system of the two national parties. Many have appealed to me, saying, "What can we do in this dark hour?"

I favor giving them the opportunity of selecting, at the polls, electors they know will be governed by a mandate from them.

We have in Mississippi an opportunity to initiate a plan whereby the people of our state may elect or nominate, in a public primary election, those presidential electors who will represent them in casting their votes for President and Vice-President. In this manner, the people will know positively who they are voting for and will have the satisfaction of knowing in advance that their vote will not be cast for selfish politicians who openly seek our destruction. Such a move on our part could start a trend throughout our nation to this end.

This must be accomplished now in order to give a reasonable length of time prior to the approaching conventions and presidential elections.

We have an unusual opportunity to do away with uncertainty and confusion and to eliminate back stage political manipulation.

Because of these facts and in testimony thereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Mississippi to be affixed, on this the 28th day of February, A.D., 1963.

Ross R. Barnett

GOVERNOR

Heber Ladner

SECRETARY OF STATE

Q. Aren't Democrats and Republicans obligated to vote for the nominee of their party's national convention?

A. No. The two major parties have no national standing, as such. Each party is made up of 50 state parties. Neither major party has ever been a national legal entity.

Q. How many electoral votes are there in the Electoral College?

A. 538 electoral votes, representing the 50 States.

Q. How many electoral votes must a candidate receive before he can be elected President?

A. A simple majority, or at least 270 electoral votes.

Q. How many electoral votes do the 11 Southern States have?

A. 128, and no candidate can ever be elected without those votes.

Q. Do the Preferential Presidential Primaries on Sept. 1, 1964, take the place of the General Election that is always held in November?

A. No. The General Election will be held as usual in November, 1964.

Q. Will this plan work?

A. It can work if there is unity among the Southern States. For example, President Kennedy will need 48 Southern electoral votes for re-election if he is the nominee of the Democratic party and can carry the same States outside the South that he carried in 1960.

Q. Isn't the Unpledged Elector plan just a third party under a different name?

A. No, this is not an attempt to form a third party. It is designed to operate within the framework of the present two-party system. Its goal is simply to produce national candidates who will not make a mockery of constitutional government. This can be done within the two-party system if Southern States will use the power of unified action that they possess now.

Q. Southern States were once powerful in the national parties. When did this change?

A. For the Democrats, the loss of power occurred in 1936 when the national Democratic convention abolished the rule requiring a two-thirds vote in favor of a candidate before he could be the nominee chosen at a national convention. Although Republicans have carried several Southern States in past elections, their strength throughout the South has not been great enough in previous years to register much power in their national convention.

Q. Suppose the election did go to the House of Representatives. Wouldn't the Southern States still lose out?

A. No, because it would require 26 votes to elect a president, and no party controls 26 State delegations. The bargaining power would still rest with delegations from Southern States.

Q. What are the possibilities of party alignment if the election went to the House of Representatives?

A. There are several possibilities. Northern Democrats could join with Republicans to elect a candidate. Northern Democrats could join with Southern Democrats; or Republicans could join with Southern Democrats. This third alternative is the natural alignment, with Republicans voting for the South's candidate.

Q. Who will be the candidate of the Unpledged Electors?

A. No one knows at this point. However, you can be sure it will be someone dedicated to the principles of government which Southern States believe to be right and constitutional.

Q. How can we protest minority bloc power in other matters, and turn right around and promote the principle in this instance?

A. One of the best ways to fight a woods fire is to light a second fire. That's what the Unpledged Elector movement proposes — fighting fire with fire. Once the Southern States have established the fact that they can, and will, stand together in opposition to current trends of government, they will be returned to their former stature in national affairs. Power is respected, whether it be personal strength or the combined impact of government units.

Q. What is the constitutional authority for the plan proposed by the Unpledged Electors?

A. That authority is set forth in the 12th Amendment to the Constitution.

Q. Why is it necessary to develop the Unpledged Elector plan instead of working through the present machinery of the two-party system?

A. First of all, the Unpledged Elector movement is within the framework of the two-party system. Both Democrats and Republicans will have an opportunity to elect unpledged electors on Sept. 1, 1964, if they disapprove of their party's nominee chosen at their national convention. Unfortunately, leadership in the major parties has preferred to ignore Southern States in matters of party policies, which in turn has inspired a trend of government that is highly questionable in the constitutionality of its actions. Southern elected leaders have tried, without success, to halt this trend for nearly 20 years. Now they see the Unpledged Elector movement as a way by which the 10th Amendment, for example, can be revived as a vital part of our constitutional form of government. This is the way out of the dilemma which has confronted the South for many years.

MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE
BY: SENATORS McLAURIN, LOVE AND YARBROUGH
FIRST EXTRAORDINARY SESSION 1963
TO: RULES

SENATE BILL NO. 1522
(As Sent to the Governor)

AN ACT TO AMEND CHAPTER 391, LAWS OF 1952, APPEARING AS SECTION 3107, MISSISSIPPI CODE OF 1942, RECOMPILED, TO PROVIDE THAT THE ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF POLITICAL PARTIES IN THIS STATE BE NOMINATED BY POPULAR VOTE OF THE PEOPLE COMPOSING SAID POLITICAL PARTIES; AND TO REPEAL CHAPTER 312, LAWS OF 1948, APPEARING AS SECTION 3107.5, MISSISSIPPI CODE OF 1942, RECOMPILED.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI:

SECTION 1. The provisions of this Act shall be applicable to all political parties registered pursuant to Section 3107-01, Mississippi Code of 1942, as amended.

SECTION 2. Chapter 391, Laws of 1952, appearing as Section 3107, Mississippi Code of 1942, Recompiled, is amended to read as follows:

3107. State, district and county executive committees — how chosen. The state executive committee shall consist of three (3) members from each congressional district, to be chosen by the delegates from the different congressional districts, each district acting separately, and shall hold office for four (4) years and until their successors are chosen. A state convention shall be held by each political party in the state, in the year 1964, and every four (4) years thereafter, at the time and place to be designated by the state executive committee in the year in which candidates for president and vice-president of the United States are elected, appropriate notice of which shall be given by said committee, to appoint delegates to the national convention, at the discretion of said State Convention, to select a state executive committee, to select one or more slates of presidential electors to be nominated as hereinafter provided, to nominate a candidate for president and vice-president of the United States, adopt a platform, promulgate principles, and take such further action deemed proper by the convention. And the said convention may adjourn from day to day, or to such time and place, or times and places, as to it may appear proper and desirable. County delegates and their alternates shall be certified to the secretary of the state executive committee of said political party, and a roll call at the state convention of the county delegates and alternates and no other shall participate or vote in the state convention except county delegates or alternates so certified. It is expressly provided that the state convention shall not in anywise be limited in the nomination of candidates for president and vice-president by any nomination made by any other convention. Each county shall be entitled in the state convention to a number of votes equal to double its representation in the House of Representatives. The delegates are to be selected by county delegate conventions, to be held in each county. Delegates shall be apportioned equally among the supervisors' districts of each county, or each precinct in the county may be given representation in the county delegate convention in proportion to the votes cast at the preceding presidential election for its party candidates. The state executive committee, or the chairman thereof, shall designate a date, giving at least ten (10) days' notice, for the precinct elections, on which date the electors at such precinct shall meet at ten o'clock A.M. at the usual voting places, and by secret ballot elect delegates to represent such voting precincts in the county convention. The county executive committee shall designate the number of delegates to be elected, and if it fails to designate a number each precinct will be entitled to one delegate in the county convention. The delegate convention of each county shall choose a county executive committee, consisting of three (3) members from each supervisors district as above provided, and the county executive committee may, in their discretion, select from the county at large three (3) additional members of the committee, who shall hold office until the county convention convenes four (4) years later; but a county executive committee can submit the choice of their successors to any primary election held for other purposes, in which the committee so chosen shall hold office until the next county convention assembles under the provisions of this section. Senatorial executive committees shall continue in office until after the returns are received and acted upon for the next general election, after which their successors are to be appointed by the various county executive committees composing such districts. All the present executive committees now acting shall continue until their successors are chosen, as herein provided. All vacancies in state and county executive committees shall be filled by such committees themselves and from the district in which the vacancies occur. All other vacancies are to be filled by the new executive committeemen, appointed by the county executive committees of the counties which made the original appointments. Executive committees for senatorial districts having none, may be appointed by the various executive committees of the counties composing such districts. In any new county hereinafter created the members of the executive committee or committees for the county or counties from which the new county is taken who are resident citizens of the new county, at the time it is created shall constitute the first executive committee for the new county until their successors are selected in the manner provided by law, and they may fill any vacancy on the committee.

Should any state convention elect a slate of delegates to any national party convention, said delegation by secret ballot shall choose the chairman and the vice-chairman of said delegation, who shall perform all the duties customarily required of said officials under the usual rules of parliamentary procedure.

SECTION 3. At said state convention, upon motion supported by ten per cent (10%) of the membership of said state convention, a slate of electors composed of the number of electors allotted to this state, which said electors announce a clearly expressed design and purpose to support the candidates for president and vice-president of the national political party with which the said party of this state has had an affiliation and identity of purpose heretofore, shall be designated and selected for a place upon the primary election ballot to be held as herein provided.

Also upon motion supported by ten per cent (10%) of the membership of the state convention, a group of electors equal to the number of electors to which this state is entitled, which said electors announce a clearly expressed design and purpose not to support the candidates of the political party to which the said party of this state has had an affiliation and identity of purpose heretofore, or to be freed from any obligation to so do, shall be designated and selected for a place upon the ballot for the primary election to be held as herein provided.

SECTION 4. A primary election shall be held the first Tuesday in September in the year of the general election for president and vice-president, and the group of electors receiving the most votes at said election shall be placed upon the ballot in said general election as the electors of the said political party in this state, and no other group of electors shall be placed upon the said ballot as such electors of the said political party in this state.

Unless the electors last above mentioned certify in writing to the Secretary of State at least thirty (30) days before the primary election herein provided for the names of persons for president and vice-president for whom they have the intent and purpose of supporting with their ballot if elected, then said electors shall be placed on the primary election ballot and designated "Unpledged." If no selection of persons is made before the primary provided for in this Act, or by notifying the Secretary of State thirty (30) days before the general election of such selection, then the said electors shall go on the general election ballot as "Unpledged."

SECTION 5. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to deny or prescribe the right of any qualified person to run for the office of elector in this state, provided he or she qualified in the manner herein provided or in any other manner provided for by law. Furthermore, any elector or group of electors so qualifying may have it signified upon the general election ballot as to whom they intend to vote for, or are pledged to vote for in the election for president and vice-president.

SECTION 6. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to place any mandatory or inhibitory restrictions upon the office of elector for president or vice-president contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. Nor shall anyhing in this Act change or alter the provisions of Section 3129, Mississippi Code of 1942, Recompiled, and Chapter 309, Laws of 1948, in reference to the rights of any citizen of this state casting his ballot for electors for president and vice-president as he may choose and see fit without in anywise affecting his party affiliations.

SECTION 7. Chapter 312, Laws of 1948, appearing as Section 3107.5, Mississippi Code of 1942, Recompiled, and all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SECTION 8. This Act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

File

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
SOUTHERN REGIONAL OFFICE
RHODES BUILDING - SUITE 417
78 MARIETTA ST., N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

HEALTH CARE and the NEGRO POPULATION

A publication of the . . .

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York, N. Y. 10017

National Urban League

National Office

14 East 48th Street
New York, New York 10017

Washington Bureau

777 Fourteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005

Regional Offices

Eastern: 14 East 48th Street
New York, N. Y. 10017

Mideastern: 1226 First National Tower
106 South Main Street
Akron, Ohio 44308

Midwestern: Chemical Building
721 Olive Street
St. Louis, Missouri 63101

Southern: 250 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Western: 945 South Western Avenue
Los Angeles, California 90006

© National Urban League, Inc., 1965

FOREWORD

During the past few years, an impressive amount of information has accumulated on the availability of health services to Negroes and concerning the participation of Negroes in health services.

Many organizations have collected and issued this information, including: the United States Commission on Civil Rights, State Advisory Committees to the Commission, the National Urban League and local Urban Leagues, the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the Southern Regional Council, state and local human relations agencies, hospital planning bodies, and professional associations--notably the National Medical Association--several independent professional journals--notably Modern Hospital and Medical Tribune--the staffs of Howard and Meharry Medical schools, and several Members of Congress.

These organizations and individuals have collected the information which was of particular interest to them, frequently with little awareness of what the others had done or were doing. Some of the information is nationwide in character; some is limited to regions, states and cities. Most of it is based on firsthand experience, observations and interviews.

The National Urban League decided that the available information should be systematically assembled and reviewed as a first step toward an expanded, professionally sound program dealing with health services as related to the Negro. The task of collecting and the initial analysis was undertaken by Mrs. Ann Langenberg Riday, National Urban League Research Associate, under the direction of Miss Jeweldean Jones, Associate Director for Health and Welfare, National Urban League.

The second step was to interpret the available information in light of the nation's historic civil rights struggle and of the nation's medical care crisis. The interpretation and action recommendations were drafted by Dr. Walter J. Lear, member of the Subcommittee on Health Needs and Resources, National Urban League, and consultant on community health services. The entire Subcommittee on Health Needs and Resources actively participated in the final formulation of the interpretation under the direction of Mrs. Mary Gay Harm, chairman. In this process, it was fortunate in having the assistance of a number of national experts in the field of public health and medical care.

The interpretation does not necessarily represent the views of each member of the Subcommittee in every respect. However, the Subcommittee believes the interpretation as a whole does constitute a valid basis for action which would eliminate racial discrimination in health services and improve the effectiveness of health services for all Americans.

The action recommended would require resources far beyond those of any one organization. Only the continuing energetic efforts of a wide range of organizations and individuals will move the nation's health services in the directions outlined.

Many of the concerned organizations and individuals will also wish to review the available information. Anticipating this need, an annotated bibliography has been prepared and is available from the National Urban League.

". . . AND THERE IS NO HEALTH IN US"

> "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done; And we have done those things which we ought not to have done; And there is no health in us."
>
> --Book of Common Prayer

This quotation is tragically precise in the context of a report on the health and the health care of today's American Negroes.

As a nation we have left undone those things which we ought to have done to secure equal opportunities for Negroes to have a good education, earn a living wage, live in decent housing and eat nourishing food.

As a nation we have done those things which we ought not to have done by discriminating against Negroes in every sector of life, including opportunities for adequate health care.

Is it any wonder that Negroes, poorly housed, poorly fed, poorly clothed, are highly susceptible to tuberculosis, influenza and pneumonia -- diseases we think of as yesterday's killers?

"And there is no health in us..." The undeniable fact is: Infant or adult, man or woman, Northerner or Southerner, the Negro is substantially less healthy than the white.

Poor health, along with all the other disadvantages imposed upon him, has become the Negro's lot. Perhaps even worse is the fact that Negroes, who need so much more in the way of health care, get so much less than white people. And what they get is less good. Why? Because they can't afford the cost of private medical care and because racial discrimination forces them to accept public care which is both separate and unequal.

This document presents facts and figures concerning the health and the health care available to our twenty million Negroes -- facts and figures which add up to a shameful record of needless, preventable waste of human beings and human life.

It is our hope that an informed and aroused citizenry will move swiftly and boldly to rewrite that record, to eradicate the evils of racism and poverty, to assure adequate and humane health care for all our citizens.

Whitney M. Young, Jr.
Executive Director
National Urban League

NEGRO HEALTH: Measured In Minuses

When we speak of the health of Negroes in this country we are speaking of a minus quantity. All the facts are negative ones; all the figures are to be found on the minus side of the ledger. The same is true of the health care available to Negroes: there is less of it and it is less good.

As we reach the mid-point of the 1960's, the status of the Negro in American life seems more hopeful than it has since the birth of this nation. But the accumulation of disadvantage borne for so many generations has left its mark, particularly in the area of personal health.

Economic deprivation has led to less resistance to disabling illness; social deprivation has led to less medical care, less adequate medical care and less assistance in meeting its cost. The consequences of insufficient and inferior medical care have been harsh: lingering illnesses, dragged-out disabilities, premature death.

Has the Negro in this country made gains toward securing those civil liberties which are every man's right? Is he about to be granted the full measure of those "inalienable rights": Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness? When that happens the nation will still be confronted by the consequences of 300 years of discrimination and segregation endured by the Negro.

The first "inalienable right," the right to life itself, is cut short for every Negro in America, compared to his white counterpart at every stage, at every age.

The story of his foreshortened life begins before his birth. It begins with the startling fact that most Negro expectant mothers simply do not get the basic prenatal care that most white expectant mothers take for granted today. Then, too, fewer Negro mothers have their babies in hospitals than do white mothers. The results are predictable: more deaths of Negro babies, more deaths of Negro mothers in childbirth -- four times as many as white mothers.

There is still another grim result. Women without prenatal care are about three times more likely to give birth to premature babies, than those who do receive proper care. Very small premature infants are ten times more likely to be mentally retarded than full-term children.

The chance that a Negro baby born today will not live to his first birthday is almost twice as great as for a white baby born at exactly the same time. Of every 1,000 Negro babies, 41 will not live a full year in contrast to only 22 out of 1,000 white babies. (Note, in the accompanying chart, how this tragic disparity is maintained with variations, in cities from one end of the country to the other.)

This same shortened life expectancy dogs the Negro's footsteps through youth and middle age. Those who manage to reach old age have been called "the survivors." A white baby boy born today can expect to live long enough to celebrate his 68th birthday. For a Negro baby, the chances are that his life will be cut short seven years sooner.

By the time the average American reaches the prime of life today he is pretty well protected by modern medical science against many of the former deadly diseases. Of every 1,000 white Americans in their late forties, five will die in the coming year. If they are Negro, ten will die.

No particular disease accounts for the greater number of deaths among middle-aged Negroes. The major causes of death among them are the same as for whites -- heart disease, cancer, brain hemorrhage -- but proportionately more Negroes die from each of them than do white persons in the same age bracket.

These high death rates mean, of course, that fewer Negroes than whites live to reach old age. Negroes constitute only six per cent of all Americans 65 and over, but they account for 7.5 per cent of the deaths in this age group. In spite of miracle drugs and antibiotics, deaths from tuberculosis of Negroes 65 or older are 15 per cent of all deaths in this age group and those from influenza and the pneumonias are eight per cent.

Death rates -- the most scientific and detailed information regularly collected about all people -- show that proportionately more Negroes than whites die at all ages. But while they're alive -- what? Reports on the health of large groups of people based on medical findings or events other than deaths are not always conclusive, but information has been gathered from such sources as the Government's selective service examinations and the home-to-home interviews of the U. S. National Health Survey.

Emerging clearly from the mass of independent details collected are these salient facts: The Negro, in comparison to the white, has more diseases and disabilities, one-third more days when he is unable to function at full physical capacity, is sick enough to require bed rest on twice as many days and loses one and one-half times more days from work because of disease and disability.

There is considerable evidence that the Negroes' shortened life span and increased amount of disease and disability is due almost wholly to low incomes, inadequate education and poor living conditions. When Negro and white populations with the same social and economic status are compared, many of the health differentials tend to disappear.

No matter how unpleasant the implications may be, the nation must face up squarely to the real picture of Negro health. No matter how costly the remedy, it can never equal the staggering cost of the disease -- the disease of human waste.

HEALTH CARE: Separate AND Unequal

When poor medical care is added to the burden of poor health and when flagrant racial discrimination is part and parcel of the medical care available, there is such a heaping up of injury as to demand redress.

The medical care needs of Negroes are disproportionately large, yet the health services they receive are disproportionately small.

Inequalities are to be found in practically every kind of health service, ranging from the care of the chronically ill older person to the care of the individual suffering from mental distress. This pattern of inequality is found in all sections of the country. Not surprisingly, the greatest disparity is in the South -- a region whose spokesmen, ironically, assert that they "take good care" of Negro citizens.

The lack of skilled nursing home care in this country has reached the proportions of a national tragedy. For Negroes needing this kind of facility the situation is intolerable. There are pitifully few nursing homes which even open their doors to Negroes. A 1962 study in Louisiana, a state with a high concentration of Negroes, showed that there were 103 nursing homes serving 3,418 white persons and only 22 nursing homes serving 488 Negro patients.

What happens to the Negro who is ill or infirm and has no family member to care for him? State after state has indicated in reports and other documents that, because there is literally no other place for them to go, chronically ill Negroes have been condemned to live out their lives in custodial care mental hospitals!

Despite their greater need for regular medical care, Negroes of all ages visit physicians less often than white persons. Recent national studies tell us this:

On the average, a white person visits a doctor about 4½ times during the year. But a Negro will see a doctor only about 3½ times a year. White patients also have many more telephone consultations with the doctor than do Negroes.

Tragically, the disparity of medical attention is most marked for children. During the critical, formative period of life, the Negro child receives just about half as much attention from doctors as does the white child.

The median income of the Negro family at the beginning of this decade was $3,233. Thus, more than half of Negro family incomes fall below the poverty line. Only one out of every ten children in these low-income families sees a pediatrician as often as once a year. In contrast, one in three children from higher income families are taken to a pediatrician at least once a year.

Higher income families are able to afford the skills of specialists about twice as often as those in the low income group. They also spend more of their health dollars for preventive care, an expense which is simply out of the question for the average Negro family.

A recent Public Health Service study observed that recommendations for or against elective surgery are often based on the patient's ability to pay for such surgery. For example, children between the ages of six and 16 in families with incomes under $4,000 a year have 8.1 tonsillectomies per 1,000 population in contrast to 15.7 for youngsters in higher-income families.

Similar comparisons can be made for other surgical procedures: the hysterectomy rate for women 25 and over is only 3.2 per 1,000 in the low-income category contrasted with 5.3 in the over-$4,000 group; appendectomies are 40 per cent more frequent in the higher income families than in the lower.

Statistics about general hospital care further illustrate the white-Negro differential. In an average group of 100 white persons, about 12 will have a short stay in a hospital during the year. In an average group of 100 Negroes, only nine will be a hospital patient. Once in a hospital, Negroes, on the average, tend to stay somewhat longer, probably because medical care is put off for so long that illnesses become more severe.

The hospitalization rate of nonwhites (92 per cent of whom are Negroes) is 20 per cent less than for the entire population, but their use of hospital outpatient clinics is double the rate of whites.

Many of our health services indulge in practices which, in effect, close the doors to Negroes. Some of these discriminatory practices are overt, some clandestine. A recent Urban League survey of a medium-sized mid-western city uncovered some of the latter kind. Officials of the two hospitals in this city were quick to say that beds in their various rooms are available to Negroes. But a visit to one of the hospitals gave first-hand evidence of the special arrangements made for Negro patients.

Negro patients are put in a Negro ward. If there are not enough Negro patients in a particular division to make up a ward, they are put in semi-private rooms. Not so bad? Here's the clincher: In spite of the fact that the hospital is not filled, there are sometimes no beds for Negro patients. Why? Because this hospital will not put Negroes in rooms where there are empty beds, if the other patients are not Negro! One local doctor made it clear that this policy has imposed a hardship on more than one Negro patient in need of hospital care.

Such discriminatory practices are easy to carry on today because modern hospital design discourages large wards. Usually rooms accommodate two to six patients. Hospital admitting clerks assign "compatible" patients to the same room. "Compatibility" frequently means that all patients in a room are either white or Negro. Although the "compatibility" criterion is used out of a solicitude for the supposed feelings of the white patient, the feelings of the ailing Negro are ignored and his health jeopardized.

As has been noted in other areas of our national life, where racial prejudice is operative, reasonable and consistent behavior is not. So, too, inconsistency is often a hallmark of hospital practice.

For example, in some hospitals, patients who presumably would balk at being treated by a Negro doctor are ministered to constantly by Negro nurses.

In some hospitals the abandonment of official discriminatory policies seems to have had little effect on entrenched practices, while in others, official integration policies are scrupulously observed. But where discrimination occurs, whether clandestine or overt, it is because the medical profession, hospital administrators and the community are not committed to equality of care; not because integration is impossible to achieve. It can work, even in the Deep South. Striking proof is provided by the Veterans Administration. For more than 10 years the VA has integrated all its hospitals -- including those in Birmingham, Jackson and New Orleans!

On the other hand, hospitals and clinics which refuse to care for Negro patients can be found in Northern and Western cities with significant Negro populations. The Hill-Burton hospital grant program has played an unfortunate role in this connection, largely on the basis of Congressional direction.

The Hill-Burton law, passed in 1947, authorized the Public Health Service to help finance construction of local governmental and private non-profit hospitals and health centers. It specifically permitted grants to facilities which did not admit Negroes, provided the community had separate facilities for Negroes of equal quality and equitable in size.

Under this provision, grants have been made to 104 hospitals and health centers having overt racial exclusion policies. Of these, 84 are for whites only and 20 are for Negroes only.

Now, in a recent and historic decision, the United States Supreme Court has found that racial discrimination in two private non-profit hospitals in Greensboro, North Carolina, (both of which had received Hill-Burton financial aid) was illegal and that the "separate but equal" clause of the Hill-Burton law is unconstitutional. The National Urban League has requested that the President cut off federal funds to all medical institutions which practice racial discrimination, as he is empowered to do under Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

In many cities, Urban Leagues, civil rights groups, human relations agencies and Negro leaders have helped to bring about the elimination of segregated hospital services. Desegregation has been achieved in hospitals in Chicago, Washington, D.C., Knoxville, San Francisco and other cities. Some religious-supported hospitals have desegregated on the orders or recommendations of their sponsors. Some hospitals have desegregated without any specific outside pressure. The Urban League will continue to document discriminatory practices and seek full access to all facilities.

> A fresh wind of change is beginning to blow through the health field, but we cannot rest content while any racial barriers still exist in the nation's health services. Until these barriers have been swept away, Negroes cannot hope to get their fair and reasonable share of good medical care.

HEALTH CARE: Insufficient and Inferior

The health care received by the American people as a whole leaves much to be desired. Incredibly, this wealthiest, technologically superior of all nations must take an inferior position among the countries of the world in national health.

In the vital area of infant mortality, regarded as one of the most telling yardsticks of a nation's health, the United States makes a shockingly poor showing.

A report issued in 1963 by the Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare reveals that the number of infant deaths per 1,000 live births in this country is 25.3 compared with:

Netherlands	*15.4
Sweden	*15.5
Norway (1959)	18.7
Australia	19.5
Finland	*19.8
Switzerland	*20.8
United Kingdom	22.1
Denmark (1959)	22.5
New Zealand	22.8
United States	*25.3
Canada (1960)	27.3
Japan	28.8
Ireland	30.5
Luxembourg (1960)	31.5
Federal Republic of Germany	*31.7

(*provisional)

The chaos and shortcomings of this nation's health services are a reflection of the lack of coordination and planning which characterizes our medical care "system" of unrelated, self-centered practitioners and institutions.

People with money can buy a kind of medical care having a degree of personal dignity, but like the poor they, too, have trouble getting good medical care. Medical care for the rich is also mostly an uncoordinated aggregate of the costly, highly specialized services required at the times of medical crisis. Rich or poor, the patient is at the mercy of doctors who are overworked, undersupervised, and responsive primarily to the diseases or injured portions of the body that they personally can do something about.

The accomplishments of the medical profession in this climate of chaos are far below its combined potential and far short of the scope and quality of service currently possible if each community or region had a working plan that would assure the best use of what is available. Such a plan would identify and fill gaps, eliminate duplication, promote excellence of performance and assure each individual of a personal doctor and a comprehensive range of health services. These services should have continuity, emphasize preventive and prompt care, be family-centered and respect the dignity of the individual.

Instead, what do we have? On the whole, what we have is a crazy-quilt, patch-work, catch-as-catch-can non-system. This situation works a hardship on all who are in need of medical care, but for the 30 million white and 10 million Negro citizens mired in poverty, medical care is a national disgrace.

Mr. Smith's story illustrates how our haphazard system results in insufficient and inferior medical care, far more costly to the community than a well-planned, orderly and coordinated system of prevention, supervision and treatment could ever be. Mr. Smith is an elevator operator, barely able to support his wife and three children. He is a diabetic. Like most diabetics he needs frequent checkups, lab tests and other medical help. But there are at least three "Berlin Walls" for Mr. Smith to hurdle before he can get the care he needs: its cost, its organization and his own ignorance.

Cost:

Even people with good incomes have a difficult time managing the high and unpredictable cost of medical care. But Mr. Smith, like many Negroes, has a smaller paycheck and a bigger potential medical bill. He must do without medical care or settle for that which the community provides at nominal or no cost.

Why can't health insurance take care of his problem? None of the health insurance plans now available has been of much help to the Negro population. The kinds of jobs Negroes usually have carry little or no health insurance. A recent study of the amount of hospital insurance protection for short-stay patients was most revealing. Of Negro patients, only 42 per cent had insurance that paid at least some part of the hospital bill; only 30 per cent had insurance that paid three-quarters or more of the bill. For white patients, the figures were 71 per cent and 53 per cent, respectively.

Frequently, Negroes with health insurance are deprived of its full benefits because the health services are denied to them. Often, they find themselves in inferior, segregated, and overcrowded facilities -- where there own doctor is banned from treating them.

Health insurance which provides really good protection is not widely available and costs considerably more than the prevailing types. It seems highly unlikely that any private insurance plan is going to meet the need for good protection at reasonable cost. The best solution would seem to be a nationwide, universal insurance program which would eliminate the current restrictions on Mr. Smith's insurance protection because of the size of his income, the particular job he holds, and the locality in which he lives. AN IMMEDIATE

MINIMAL STEP IN THIS DIRECTION IS THE PROVISION OF HOSPITAL CARE BENEFITS TO THE AGED UNDER THE SOCIAL SECURITY SYSTEM.

Organization:

Without adequate health insurance or adequate income, Mr. Smith has no choice but to use clinic and hospital services supported by general taxes and philanthropy. Many people believe that these services provide the Mr. Smiths with excellent medical care. They know that the total cost of public medical care is very high and they are aware that outstanding medical centers and hospitals provide some public medical services. These facts don't make public medical care good medical care for the people who must depend on it. Let's see how it works for Mr. Smith.

When he goes into diabetic coma he is rushed to a modern hospital. His life is saved by a team of expert specialists who give him the best that medicine has to offer. But, is this the real goal of modern medicine? Did Mr. Smith receive the kind of medical supervision that would have prevented his going into a coma?

The public medical clinic available to him would discourage regular attendance from the most health-conscious individual. In the first place, clinic sessions are scheduled only during the day, so he has to lose at least a half day's pay every time he goes to the clinic.

The number of patients scheduled for each session far exceed the capacity of the space and staff. Hours of waiting are the rule. Doctors and nurses have little or no time to answer questions or take an interest in patients as human beings. There is no meaningful "doctor-patient" relationship. By chance, Mr. Smith may be seen by a doctor who has seen him before -- but usually not.

Follow-up on special diets and family problems are the responsibilities of the nutritionist and the social worker, respectively. These specialists, who must cover several clinics in one day, are too busy to talk with each patient long enough to gain confidence, give instruction and encouragement. At best, Mr. Smith is treated with harassed indifference. At worst, by undisguised contempt, including the crude abuses of racial bigotry. In this atmosphere, Mr. Smith is discouraged from going to the clinic and preventive care becomes impossible. Mr. Smith received costly, excellent treatment for his coma, but his medical care as a whole was poor.

Ignorance:

The last important obstacle to good medical care is ignorance. Our Mr. Smiths simply don't know about the potential benefits of medical science, about the proper time to go to doctors, dentists, public health nurses, and about the location and "behaviour" of hospitals, clinics and other medical facilities.

Ignorance and disease are old companions. For the Negro, ignorance about health stems in large part from poor grade school and high school education. Racial discrimination in the nation's educational system makes a tragic contribution to preventable disease and premature death among Negro citizens. Quality education is imperative if people are to understand what modern medicine has to offer -- and how to get the most out of it.

For those with poor schooling, special compensatory efforts must be made. Research studies suggest there may be ways to stimulate the desire for good health habits and preventive medical care on the part of people with an educational handicap. More has to be learned before practical steps can be taken.

Even full use of the health services that are available does not assure good medical care. The nation is painfully short of doctors, dentists, nurses and all types of health workers. The nation is dangerously short of nursing homes, rehabilitation centers, prenatal and infant care clinics, home nursing programs, psychiatric day hospitals and many other preventive and therapeutic services. Effectiveness is further reduced when scarce professional and technical time and skills, and expensive equipment and buildings are senselessly divided between services marked "white only" and "Negro only."

In the scramble for medical care, those with more money, more education, more access to health services get the most and the best. Negroes, with less money, less education and less access, get the leftovers -- or nothing at all.

> Wiping out racial barriers is the first and indispensable necessity, but it is by no means enough to assure adequate medical care. The Negro suffers most from the chaos and shortcomings of the nation's health services, but any effort invested to improve these services will return a full measure in better health for ALL Americans.

DOCTOR, DENTIST, HOSPITAL CHIEF ....

> Walk through any hospital and it is easy to see that many, if not most, of the maids, janitors, and kitchen workers are Negroes. Also obvious in many hospitals are Negro nursing aids and orderlies, and in quite a few there are Negro professional nurses, too. But it would require months of walking through hospitals (except the handful of predominantly Negro hospitals) to find a Negro doctor taking care of a private patient or a Negro heading up a department -- or even working behind the reception desk.

The number of Negroes in professional and supervisory hospital positions in this country is conspicuously small. The same situation exists in nursing homes, health departments, visiting nurse agencies and related medical institutions.

Is this the result of racial discrimination?

It is, but today, it is not necessarily the result of hospitals refusing to accept qualified Negro applicants. This blatant form of racial discrimination no longer exists in many hospitals. Increasingly, official policy is to hire the best qualified applicant regardless of race, creed or color -- and this policy applies even to positions requiring the greatest skills and paying the highest salaries.

If one looks hard enough, Negroes can be found in almost every kind of hospital position somewhere in the country: in Waltham, Mass., a hospital director; in Louisville, a record librarian; in Kansas City, a chief psychiatric social worker; in San Francisco, a pharmacist; in San Antonio, a supervising professional nurse; in Jersey City, a director of the out-patient department; in Charleston, S.C., an X-ray technician; in Pittsburgh, a dietician; in Denver, a full-time professor of pediatrics; in New York City, a chief of occupational therapy; in Detroit, a chief laboratory technician; and in Atlanta, a member of the city hospital board.

The singularity of top positions being held by Negroes is evident. Is this the result of "tokenism" -- that ugly form of racial discrimination so prevalent in schools whereby a few of the large number of Negroes are let through a racial barrier to give the illusion of non-discrimination?

"Tokenism" and other subtle discriminatory practices probably do exist in some of the hospitals and health agencies which officially have a non-discriminatory policy. Yet discrimination of this type is hard to prove. Contrasted with the school situation, there is not a large number of Negroes wanting "in." No group of unemployed Negro health workers is imprisoned behind racial barriers.

Quite the contrary. There is a great shortage of qualified Negro health workers -- and an even greater shortage of qualified white health workers.

Consequently, today every qualified health worker can find a job appropriate to his training and experience, although if he is Negro, it may not always be in the institution or city of his choice.

The shortage of health workers is due to several factors: the nation's growing population; the increased scope and complexity of health services; the additional numbers of young and old people with chronic illnesses; and the greater demands for medical care from a prosperous and better educated people.

For most types of health work, educational and training programs have been increased, but not nearly fast enough to meet the growing need. A good example is in the training of doctors.

Despite the building of new medical schools and the expansion of old ones in recent years, the training of doctors has not kept pace with the population growth. Just to maintain our present ratio of doctors-to-people during the next 25 years, at least 20 additional medical schools should be opened.

In the nursing field, the output of new nurses has increased faster than the population, but a severe shortage still exists. One out of every five professional nurse positions in the nation's hospitals is vacant.

What is true for doctors and nurses is also true for health educators, rehabilitation counselors, sanitary inspectors, clinical psychologists, biostatisticians, social workers, radioisotope technicians, opticians -- practically every type of health worker. All are in short supply.

The shortage of Negro health workers is enormous. Although Negroes make up more than 10 per cent of the population, less than two per cent of doctors and dentists are Negro and less than five per cent of all professional nurses are Negro. As with white health workers, the output of new personnel is not keeping up with the growth of the population, but the gap for Negroes is growing faster.

The medical profession illustrates the problem. There are about 5,000 Negro doctors. This means about one out of every 3,700 Negroes is a doctor -- compared to one out of every 640 white persons. This is only 27 Negro physicians for every 100,000 Negro persons, contrasted with 157 white doctors for every 100,000 white persons. For Negroes to catch up, they must graduate 23,000 more doctors!

But even a slight gain is unlikely, for the trend in the production of Negro doctors is in the opposite direction. During recent years, one of the two Negro medical schools expanded its enrollment. But from 1955-56 to 1961-62, the increase in the number of Negroes studying medicine throughout the country was only 10! More startling: during those same six years, the number of Negro students in the predominantly white medical schools had dropped by about 80 -- more than a third.

Is this the result of racial discrimination against Negro applicants to medical schools? Is the increasing gap in the training of other types of Negro health workers due to discriminatory admission policies in their respective training programs?

In the past, most educational and training programs did exclude Negroes and the vast majority of Negro health workers got their education and training at Negro institutions. Such programs were not numerous and so the number of Negroes who could enter the health field was limited until just recently. Now, the picture is quite different. While a few schools continue to exclude Negroes, most have official non-discriminatory policies. Many have admitted Negro students for the first time in the last few years. Except for the medical schools, most schools these days don't have enough qualified applicants to fill their classes and even medical schools complain that the number of good applicants has dropped sharply. In fact, many educational institutions in the health profession have expressed disappointment that a larger number of qualified Negroes has not applied. It is recommended that these institutions go to the predominantly Negro schools to recruit young people for the health service field.

A young person's race is no longer a barrier to the special preparation for a health career. A qualified Negro can be certain that somewhere in the country he can gain admittance to an accredited school in the speciality of his own choosing.

Why, then, are there so few Negroes preparing for health careers?

In the first place, few Negroes are qualified, and in the second, even fewer are interested.

The tragically small number of Negroes qualified to undertake training programs is one of the most pernicious consequences of racial discrimination in this country. The potential of the Negro population has been severely stunted by the grossly inadequate education that has been generally available to them. No significant increase in the supply of Negro health workers is possible until segregated and ghetto schools are abolished, and until the quality of public education at all levels is dramatically improved.

But of the youngsters who are qualified, why aren't more of them interested in one or another of the dozens of health occupations?

One answer is suggested by a casual review of the history of Negroes in medicine. The number of "medical families" is impressive -- the Kenneys, the Wrights, the Wilkinsons, just to mention a few. Three generations of doctors is not uncommon. In such families, general education is valued and encouraged; financial assistance during the many years of higher education may be provided -- at least, the youngster is not required to contribute to the family's support from the time he is big enough to run errands or work in the fields -- and of course, the special rewards of medical practice are visible at home and obviously attainable.

Recent studies of Negro professionals and high school students confirm the impression about "medical families": the choice of a career requiring special education and training is strongly influenced by family income, educational level, and attitudes.

"Enrichment" programs in lower schools and intensive guidance efforts have shown their ability to make up for the lack of career incentives in many families. But this knowledge has not yet been put to effective use for health careers recruitment among Negro youths. Local and national recruitment efforts which would tie in with and take advantage of these programs could prove fruitful.

Expansion of the occupational goals of today's Negro youth is clearly a crucial essential for increasing the supply of Negro health manpower. But this is still not enough. The youngster with higher horizons is increasingly particular about his choice of occupation. The health field, in comparison to others, doesn't always come out on top. This is true with respect to occupations at both the most highly trained and the least highly trained levels. At both ends of the spectrum, financial considerations play an important role.

For example, among the best college students, medicine has lost in popularity to science as a career choice. Not only does a scientific career seem more glamorous, but the total cost of preparation -- and the length of time required -- are considerably less. Financial help for graduate science students has been more plentiful, both in the number of students helped and the amount of help given.

No wonder that the nation's wealthy families (the 12 per cent who have incomes of $10,000 or more) supply almost half of the medical students!

A recently-passed Federal program of loans for students in medical and other health professional schools will ease the financial strain on some students. Loans, scholarships and other measures to remove financial barriers to higher education in the health field have long been advocated by most experts.

Occupations in the health field requiring the least amount of training also have difficulty in attracting workers. Again money is the problem, but with these occupations, the cost of preparation is not particularly troublesome. The deterrent is the prevailing low wages.

The wage level and working rights of most hospital and other health workers are unprotected by legislation, by unions or by professional associations. Only a few state nurses' associations have accepted collective bargaining responsibilities. Unions have only just begun to organize hospital workers. Besides, labor legislation has traditionally excluded workers employed by community hospitals and other nonprofit health agencies with the result that these workers are not even covered by minimum wage laws (except in New York State) nor by unemployment insurance laws!

Community hospitals perform a vital public service and justifiably boast of the amount of that service made possible by voluntary contributions of well-to-do citizens. They neglect to mention, though, that an even greater amount of their public service is made possible by the substandard wages they pay -- a compulsory contribution from their workers, the group least able to be philanthropic.

The disastrous shortage of trained, competent health workers of all kinds is further compounded by the need for whole new categories of health specialists: homemakers, dental assistants, resource referral specialists, midwives, and many others.

Occupations which pay little and resemble domestic service -- the stereotyped notion of "work fit for colored folk" -- fall below the line of vision of youngsters with high horizons. Semi-professional and skilled jobs in the health field deserve decent pay and appropriate dignity. Health departments, hospitals, universities and community health councils should analyze the types of work that must be done and the kinds of background and training necessary to prepare a person for each type of work. New Federal financial assistance for occupational training which has hardly been tapped by the health services field, might be used to upgrade these careers and attract capable young people.

Without complete elimination of racial prejudice in the personnel policies of hospitals and other health agencies and without major improvements in recruitment, training and career opportunities, the health field will continue to lose out in the competition for manpower, Negro and white.

Even under the most favorable conditions the supply of Negro doctors and other health workers will be relatively small for a long time to come. Negro doctors in the future will continue to provide only one-fourth, or less, of the doctor services received by Negroes. The same is true for the other types of Negro health workers.

> The quality and quantity of the health service received by all our citizens depends in great measure on the quality and quantity of our doctors and other health workers. No less than a drastic overhaul in recruitment, education, training, compensation and career benefits in the health professions and health-related jobs is required to make our health services of greater benefit to all.

RECOMMENDED ACTION

Here are a dozen recommendations for basic changes and improvements in national policies and programs which affect the nation's health:

1. Immediate desegregation of all hospital and health facilities. Withholding of federal funds to any medical institution that practices racial segregation or discrimination.

2. Health insurance for the aged under social security.

3. More consumer-sponsored, comprehensive service, group practice health insurance plans.

4. A fiscally and socially sound health insurance program that would assure basic medical care benefits to every person, no matter what his income, job, age, or place of residence.

5. Improvement in the financing and administration of public medical care programs.

6. Development of effective regional health and hospital planning councils.

7. Massive federal and state aid to public schools.

8. Desegregation of all lower schools and of undergraduate technical and professional colleges.

9. Development of a comprehensive nationwide health careers program with federal and state leadership and support.

10. Addition of scholarships to the program of federal aid to medical and other health profession education.

11. Coverage of all hospital and other health workers by the Federal minimum wage law.

12. Sound unionism for hospital and other health workers and job protection programs by the associations of professional and other health workers.

Here are 14 recommendations for community action. These are especially appropriate for local Urban Leagues to undertake in concert with the National Urban League and in cooperation with other community action groups:

1. Appoint fact-finding commissions to report to the National Urban League any discrimination found in federally-aided hospital and health facilities.

2. Initiate or step up private negotiation, public education and nonviolent protest against discriminatory practices in health services as these may be appropriate to local situations.

3. Train non-medical Negro community leaders for effective participation in community health planning and policy-making.

4. Under the Manpower Development and Training Act, use existing facilities to train new workers, upgrade and retrain present hospital workers in a variety of semi-professional jobs, such as laboratory technicians, licensed practical nurses, x-ray technicians, practical dieticians, operating room technicians and homemakers.

5. Inaugurate courses in intergroup relations for staffs of hospitals and other health services.

6. Conduct attitudinal studies to determine what blocks the use of available medical care by low-income Negroes.

7. Sponsor studies of hospitals that have desegregated patient services in recent years; publicize findings to encourage more hospitals to follow suit.

8. Encourage health commissioners in cities where there is a concentration of Negroes to restructure municipal health services so that they will be more responsive to their particular problems. Encourage health departments to engage in experiments which would reach out to influence slum dwellers to use health services.

9. Develop experimental health programs, demonstrate what can be done; gather, package and share experiments that have proved successful.

10. Sponsor special efforts to cut the non-white infant mortality rates through imaginative child and maternal care demonstrations, using current HEW resources, plus the community action projects which will be starting under the poverty program.

11. Develop special programs for the health care of the aging in their own homes as well as in community facilities.

12. Promote intensive health education in predominantly Negro schools and communities.

13. Arrange for NUL Youth Community traineeship programs in hospitals and other health agencies for part-time or summer employment of young Negroes as aides, clerical workers, etc.

14. Promote special health career projects in schools and colleges with predominantly Negro student bodies.

σ

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE

AMERICAN TEAMWORK WORKS

NCCI

File

National Committee for Commonwealth Immigrants

6 Tilney Street,
London, W.1.

Telephone MAYfair 8901

NCCI

What it is: An independent Committee appointed by the Prime Minister to help speed integration of immigrant and native communities

Who is on it: The Chairman is the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Deputy Chairman is Sir James Robertson and the General Secretary is Nadine Peppard. The membership of the Committee includes people from all over Britain and the Commonwealth. The members are chosen for their special knowledge of race relations and immigration and their knowledge of the communities affected

How it works: The Committee has appointed advisory panels which deal with subjects vital to the immigrant and the community at large eg. housing, health, education and employment (for more details see pages 5-6). There is a staff which services these panels, helps to set up local committees, provides information and tries to tackle prejudice and discrimination wherever it occurs.

What it does:

Advises the Government on all questions relating to immigration. It told the Prime Minister in 1965 that government immigration policies had done real harm to the cause of integration.

Submits evidence to special committees set up to consider questions of immigration or other allied subjects.

Studies questions such as the need to extend legislation against discrimination and prepares proposals for government and local action.

Assists liaison committees with local authority support by providing a grant towards the salary of a secretary who helps to get things moving.

Publishes reports, lectures, pamphlets and information material on commonwealth immigration and community relations.

Informs the public through the press, exhibitions and other media of the work being done.

Trains social workers, teachers and others to deal with the special problems of community and race relations.

Consults and co-operates with immigrant and other organisations.

Brings together employers, trade unionists, and others to discuss and propose fair employment practices.

Works in all possible ways for the elimination of race prejudice and discrimination in the United Kingdom.

VOLUNTARY LIAISON COMMITTEES

Advice is useful but most of the practical work is done in the community. Throughout the country voluntary Liaison Committees have been set up to work in immigrant and local communities to solve local problems which affect everyone — not just the migrants. Local work cannot be done by national committees but the NCCI can help both initially and as the work develops. This is where the groundwork is needed. There are Liaison Committees — sometimes called Community Relations Committees, sometimes known as Friendship Councils — in the following areas. More are being set up all the time. Everyone can help themselves. If YOUR area is listed below ring your town hall and find the address or write to us. If your area is not listed approach the Town Clerk or us to see what is going on. Perhaps you could do the spade work.

List of Areas:-

Greater London

Bexley
Brent
Camden
Croydon
Ealing
Hackney
Haringey
Hillingdon
(including Uxbridge, Hayes & Harlington)
Islington
Kensington & Chelsea Lambeth*
Newham
Southwark
Tower Hamlets
Westminster

Lancashire

Bolton
Manchester
Liverpool*

N E England

Newcastle

The Midlands

West Midlands
Birmingham
Derby*
Gloucester
Leicester Northampton*
Nottingham
Rugby
Smethwick Walsall*
Wolverhampton

Southern England

Bristol*
Gravesend
High Wycombe
Luton
Oxford
Slough

Yorkshire

Bradford
Keighley
Halifax
Leeds
Sheffield*

* committee in the process of formation

There are 8 Panels which advise the National Committee:-

Information: Public education is the major need in this country: education against prejudice; education for racial understanding; information about facilities available and about the different cultures and backgrounds which make up our multi-racial society. All publications and information material go through the Information Panel which is also in touch with press, radio, television and publishers.

Education: Organises seminars and conferences of educators both to improve the treatment of race relations in school and to train the teachers to do it.

Employment: The Panel recommended that a non-discriminatory clause should be included in the Fair Wages Resolution and that legislation should be extended to cover discrimination in employment. The Home Secretary has said that he is studying both subjects and is also examining government policy on contracts with firms which discriminate.

Health: Some immigrants have health problems additional to those of the native community; changes in climatic conditions produce change in resistance to illness. Knowledge of health risks and facilities can avoid infection. Local authorities, health departments and information sources can combine to prevent illness and provide health education.

Legal and Welfare: The Panel has examined the need for independent investigation of complaints against the police; the arbitrary powers of the immigration officers; the conditions of entry imposed on some immigrants; the need for further legislation to cover insurance, credit facilities and any other services where race is used as grounds for discrimination. The panel prepared the NCCI evidence to the Committee on Immigration Procedure.

Housing: The home is the key to the community. Studies have been made of local government policy in housing as it effects immigrants and recommendations have been submitted about administrative means of tackling local problems including housing associations in "twilight areas".

Children's Problems: Problems which affect children generally are more acute for children of immigrants. Most Local Committees find the first needs to be pre-school playgroups, nurseries, baby minding and child care.

Social Work Training: Community relations is an old subject with new facets. Social workers need training to deal with new situations. Voluntary workers in their thousands are available but need help to know what to do and how to do it. Seminars and short training courses provide the first answers.

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
315 Lexington Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016

An Address by Bayard Rustin

THE ANATOMY OF FRUSTRATION

The Anatomy of Frustration

An address delivered by

Bayard Rustin, director of the

A. Philip Randolph Institute, at the 55th National Commission Meeting of the Anti-Defamation League

of B'nai B'rith.

May 6, 1968, New York, N.Y.

The United States is in a crisis, a deep moral crisis—and I speak with a heavy heart.

Many younger Negroes today, in deep frustration, sincerely, gropingly, tragically, have adopted many of the negative and degrading concepts which have brutalized and enslaved them, believing somehow that these concepts can achieve freedom for them.

We must try to analyze the problem.

We would be mistaken to think that the only desire of young Negroes today is to have a job, to have a decent house, to be well-educated, to have medical care. All of these things are very important, but deeper and more profound is the feeling of young Negroes today—through all classes, from the lumpenproletariat to the working poor, the working classes, the middle classes and the intelligentsia—that the time has come when they are demanding recognition of their dignity and that the time has come when they should have power, a voice in the solution of problems which affect their lives. Every Negro in the nation could be provided with decent housing, jobs, education, medical care, and we would still have a revolt on our hands because Negroes want, deeply and sincerely, to share in the decision-making process.

The tragedy is that those who are in deepest revolt are not only responding to the frustrations of their objective situation, but more fundamentally to the morality of a society which is teaching them that violence is the only effective force for social change. This society is systematically teaching them that it will respond only to tactics of desperation and violence.

This is not only true for Negroes. Many of us have been concerned for years about Columbia University taking all the land around its Harlem site and running people out of their homes to build high-rise structures exclusively for white people. We warned Columbia officials that a problem would occur. But the great educators at Columbia did not respond to our pleas. They waited until 200 students, using the tactics of desperation, closed down the University. Then they were ready to talk. Then they were ready to discuss whether there ought to be a building where Columbia students, predominantly white, would enter from the top into one gym and where Negroes from Harlem would enter at the bottom of the same structure into a separate gym. One should have known that such separated facilities would create problems.

Or, let us take another example. In Chicago, young Negroes went out into the street because they had no air conditioning, because their apartments had three and four times too many people. They could endure it in the winter but in the summer they could not. And so the kids went out and turned on the fire hydrants and the police came and beat their heads and there was a riot. And then came the tragic lesson that violence is indeed a force for social change: The Mayor of Chicago, failing to meet the basic social and political needs of the people, responded by riding through the ghetto distributing eight dollar sprinklers for the fire hydrants. In addition, he promised them two swimming pools.

Or, in New York where A. Philip Randolph and I had for five years tried to get the police department to upgrade Negro patrolmen: We urged that a Negro be made head of the police force in Harlem for psychological reasons. It was not done. But two weeks after the riot in 1964, they upgraded a Negro lieutenant, made him a captain, and put him in charge of the Central Harlem Precinct. I then received a letter from a youth group saying, "You and Randolph failed. You should roll over and get the hell out of the way for your methods don't work. We upgraded a Negro policeman with sticks and stones and Molotov cocktails."

So this is the lesson we are teaching—that when the liberal forces of this nation join in coalition and urge that something be done, they are ignored. But that when people riot something is done. While basic needs are not met, minor and often insignificant concessions are made.

Negro women in Watts making $55 and $60 a week as maids were spending up to twenty-six of those dollars getting taxis from the Negro ghetto to the white homes where they worked because no one had provided a transportation system for Watts. When Martin Luther King and I went to Watts and told the young Negroes they must put an end to rioting, that it was destroying their own community, they said: "Go back where you came from. We are winning." One of them lit a match, held it up, and said: "This is our manifesto and it's winning." And he went on to say that if you went out into the streets you would find sociologists, economists, city planners, hospital experts, transportation experts, "all there because of our manifesto." The fact is that there were groups in Watts before that riot which had urged the city to do something about conditions. They were ignored.

The action for dealing with the problem of justice must come quickly, and before more rioting, lest we further teach people that the only viable method of social change is an act of desperation.

What I know, and what you ought to know, is the tragedy of a society which will not make basic changes but will make promises and token concessions—so long as the rioting goes to point X. But when it reaches X plus one, we are all in trouble, for then there will be the most vigorous repression. Then there will be vigilantism. Even more important, you cannot repress one-tenth of the population, no matter how badly elements of it behave, without threatening the civil liberties of everyone in the nation. Where there are not civil liberties, we cannot make social progress. That I believe is the problem before us.

What must be understood is the anatomy of frustration, and here is where the Jewish problem can be put into focus. I am not one who goes about apologizing for or explaining away Negro anti-Semitism. It is here, it is dangerous, it must be rooted out. We cannot say it is somehow different or not really important. We cannot sweep it under the rug. What we can and had better do is to understand it if we are in fact to deal with it.

The first thing about those who are frustrated is that their frustration causes them to adopt a psychology, an economics, and a sociology which are frustrated. It goes like this: The United States is no longer viable. All institutions must be destroyed and new ones established. Negroes are never going to get their rights.

The death of Dr. Martin Luther King spurred that philosophy to its logical conclusion. Take what Stokely Carmichael is reported to have said: "If they wanted to brutalize a black man, why didn't they get me or Rap Brown. We're the really dangerous ones to this social order. The fact that they got King indicates that Negroes will never get anything in this society and they are out to exterminate us all."

So the first point of the frustrated is that the society is not viable. Secondly, if the society is not viable, then no program needs to be projected because to project a program is to fool the masses of Negroes. So they viciously attack the Freedom Budget put forth by A. Philip Randolph. To them Randolph and I became the major enemies because we were putting forth a program, and to put forth a program, when you know nothing will move, is dishonest.

Thirdly, if the nation is not viable, and no program is needed, then all those people who have worked over the years for civil rights and are still working for integration into this society become the enemy. Not the Ku Klux Klan, not the John Birch Society, but those closest to you.

This is what Jews need to understand: That in the list of whom you attack, those you love come first. You attack those you expected something from. You attack those who have in fact carried the banner. So before King's death, King and his non-violence were the first enemy precisely because he had done the most. The argument went that if after all the bloodshed, the bombings, the tear-gassing, the water-hosing and the dogs, King could not produce real victories, then he had fooled his people, he had exposed them to useless sacrifice. After his death, of course, a new situation was created. Now they had the opportunity to shift gears, to say that the greatest Negro was killed by a white. But when King was alive, it was a different story.

Next in the list of enemies of the frustrated come Roy Wilkins, Whitney Young, A. Philip Randolph. They are now the traitors to the cause. I have leaflets in my office in which A. Philip Randolph is threatened. One, with blobs of red paint looking like blood, declares: "Randolph, you are next."

Listed, too, are the liberal community which has fought side by side with us and the Jews who made greater contributions than anybody else in the liberal community. Because of this reverse hate-affection syndrome, Martin Luther King, Roy Wilkins, Whitney Young, A. Philip Randolph, the liberals, the Jews, the labor leaders who lifted almost two million Negroes out of the lumpenproletariat into the working classes, are all bastards now.

The point is that if Jews are under attack by the extreme left in the Negro community, they are in the same basket with Negro leaders and even the most progressive political leadership. Jews are not the only victims of this attack. Jews are not likely to feel better simply because others are also under attack, nevertheless there ought to be an understanding of what the problem really is.

In the anatomy of frustration, the long-time leadership is rejected. But heroes must be found somewhere and so they adopt heroes of foreign revolutions—not because they believe in the philosophy of their heroes, but because they want to adopt the extreme tactics that they believe have worked for those heroes. Thus, Che Guevara, Mao Tse Tung, Castro and Fanon become heroes. This doesn't make the militants Communists. It means, rather, that they are so desperate for new methods that they reach into completely different kinds of situations hoping that those tactics can be applied here. Of course, they cannot be.

The tactics of the frustrated, or the anatomy of frustration, are that the only thing left to do, since the society is not viable and program is unrealistic, is to give everybody hell, to denounce everybody and to call for revolt.

Consider the question of the Jew in the ghetto. Nothing that I say is justification for anti-Semitism for I know that in a situation where anti-Semitism exists, none of us is safe. Anti-Semitism must be rooted out. We have, however, an obligation to try to understand Negro anti-Semitism without excusing it.

If you happen to be an uneducated, poorly trained Negro living in the ghetto, and particularly if you live by your wits selling numbers, selling dope, engaging in prostitution, then you only see four kinds of white people. One is the policeman, the second is the businessman, the third is the teacher, and the fourth is the welfare worker. In many cities, three of those four are predominantly Jewish. Except for the policeman, the majority of the businessmen, the majority of the teachers, the majority of the welfare workers are Jewish. Here again is the hate-love syndrome.

Ninety percent of the crime that Negroes commit is against other Negroes in the ghetto. Negroes, therefore, both hate and depend on policemen. To have to depend on someone you dislike and who often brutalizes you is ghastly.

Then comes the businessman. Many ghetto Negroes know nothing about capitalization. The fact is, if you walk up 125th Street you will see what they say you will see—a television set that sells in department stores for $79.50 costs $132 in Harlem. But the ghetto dweller does not calculate that the department store is able to sell the TV set at $79.50 because he has made a considerable down payment, and is required to finish payments within one year; while in the ghetto he is often given, with no down payment, three or four years in which to pay. He often does not understand that as the length of time for payment is increased, the interest is increased. He does not always understand that only such long-term capitalization makes it possible for him to have a TV set at all.

Many people are kept alive for three and four weeks at a time by local businessmen who let them pile up the debt until they hit the numbers or something and can pay for what they bought. But if you hit the numbers once in a year and have to give most of the money to the groceryman for things you have already eaten, when there are still more things you need, you hate him for taking your money even though you know it belongs to him.

The thing to understand is that the chief characteristic of every ghetto and of every major poor area is that people operate on the principle of immediate gratification. If you have little money, you operate on immediate gratification. You don't buy a sheet until the sheet is torn. You don't buy salt until you're at dinner and the salt runs out. Nobody can save up enough money to take advantage of a sale. You've got to get it when you can—and the tragedy here is that the need to live always on the principle of immediate gratification can be sometimes frightening.

A young fellow I got a job for came to see me a week after receiving his first two weeks pay. He came to thank me for the job and to show me what he had bought for himself. He had gone into a store on 125th Street when he had $125 for his two weeks' work and had paid $67.50 for a pair of alligator shoes.

Now, this may shock you, but if you have never had anything but sneakers, and even those with holes in them, and day after day you've been walking past the shoe store seeing something beautiful, then to pay that amount for it may be uneconomical but it is psychologically understandable. He held those shoes to his breast waiting for me to rave about how beautiful they were. And I did. I knew that at a later time I would have to talk to him about the wise use of money, but I wasn't going to destroy his moment of immediate gratification, which was for him a moment of great beauty.

Next comes the teacher. She's Jewish. In the ghetto one does not analyze that the Board of Education and the whole system is corrupt, that no matter how much that teacher wants to teach she cannot teach in those conditions. One does not bother to analyze that it is not the teacher's fault that the child had no breakfast, and may not have lunch, that he may have to go to the poolroom to bum money for potato chips and an orange soda and that that may be all he eats that day. How can you teach that child? How can you teach children when you have forty in a class and two disruptive children who need psychiatric care? To the ghetto mother, there is the teacher and she is Jewish. And she doesn't think the Jewish teacher cares whether her child gets to learn or not.

Then you come to the welfare worker. If you know anything about welfare you know that spying is part of the system. To sneak around on weekends to find out if there are men's shoes or pants hanging in the closets, whether a man has been in the house for the weekend, is part of the job. One method by which the relief rolls are decreased is on the basis of finding a man in the house.

We must get at these problems not on the basis of urging people merely to change their attitudes or of misinterpreting the Kerner Report on civil disorders. That report didn't say that Americans are racist. If it did, the only answer would be to line everybody up, all 200 million of us, line up 200,000 psychiatrists, and we'd all lie on couches for the first ten years trying to understand the problem and the next ten years learning how to deal with it. All over the country people are beating their breasts crying mea culpa—"I'm so sorry that I am a racist"—which means, really, that they want to cop out because if racism is to be solved on an individual psychological basis, then there is little hope.

What the Kerner Report was really saying was that the institutions of America brutalize not only the Negro but also whites who are not racists, and who in many communities have to use racist institutions. When it's put on that basis, we know that the fundamental problem is not sitting around examining our innards, but getting out and fighting for institutional change.

I am all in favor of Jewish businessmen doing what they can to find a job here and there for the Negro. That's very commendable. But if the choice were between putting energy into finding a job here or there for a Negro as against putting the weight of the affluent Jewish businessman behind fundamental social change in which the government becomes the employer of first and last resort for the hard-core poor, then I would propose the latter choice. The problem is that neither individuals nor the private sector of the economy has, or can take, the responsibility for full employment in American society. This is the responsibility of all segments of the society and thus, finally, the government.

The Negro and the poor can only be lifted out of poverty when the government takes the responsibility for creating work for those that the private sector can no longer use, given the impact of automation and cybernation. American business will not buy sheer muscle power. The sale of muscle power began to diminish when sweatshops began to disappear. American capital is not going to put the under-educated back to work; the society must collectively do that. I am all for private enterprise doing what it can, but there are extreme limitations.

For example, we need a national land-use policy. We're not going to find homes for the poor until we have a national land-use policy, as well as a national migration policy. There is all the talk about urban crisis while in Mississippi and Georgia and Alabama, Negroes are being run off the farms and being forced into Chicago, St. Louis and New York. We will never catch up so long as the present farm policy continues to drive them into the cities. The more of them that we find homes for, the more come in. One-half million Negroes are leaving the South annually, coming to New York, Chicago and other ghettos—one-half million coming in while only about 30,000 per year are going out of the ghettos into the suburbs. For those who don't take the trouble to find out, that is how the ghettos grow larger, with more frustration and more despair.

Here are some of the things we are going to have to do in order to deal with white fear and Negro frustration. We're going to have to have a $2 minimum wage in this country. And if there are small businessmen frightened by that, let me reassure them that I am for government subsidization of those who cannot afford to pay just as the government subsidizes millionaire railway men and millionaire farmers with price supports. Why not the small businessman if he can't afford to pay?

We are going to have to have public works to put these people back to work and to do it without a lot of talk about pre-training. These people don't have to be pre-trained. All they need to know is that there is a job. John Dewey said that a man learns by doing. I want to go Dewey one better—we must put these people to work learning while doing, and while being paid. In World War II we did not ask whether people were too black, or too old, or too young, or too stupid. We simply said to them this is a hammer, this is a tool, this is a drill. We built factories and sent these people into the factories. We paid them extraordinarily good wages and in two months they created the miracle of making planes that flew. We can find a peacetime method for doing this. And the method is in public works —for all the schools, all the hospitals, all the psychiatric clinics, all the new modes of transportation, of cleaning the air, of cleaning the rivers. All of these improvements would benefit not only the poor but also the affluent. Furthermore, for those who cannot work because they are too young, too old, too sick, or who are female heads of large families, we must have guaranteed incomes. In addition, we must have free medical care and we must pay a salary to those capable of going through school. Beyond this we must see that the ghettos with their high density of people per room cannot be improved. We must create new towns and destroy the ghettos, providing work through construction and human services to humans. Nothing short of this will be effective.

These programs will cost us $18.5 billion a year beyond the present level of expenditure and that money can come from the Gross National Product. But I want to assure businessmen again—these people are not going to sit on the money when they get it. They're going to act like Americans. They're going to go out and buy all the junk that is advertised, thereby raising the GNP, raising the economic production and growth of the country, and fundamentally adding to the economic stability of the nation.

The way things are now, we are twice damned. We are paying $15 billion a year for the support and misdeeds of those who cannot find work and end up in prison or on welfare. If they are provided with work and improve the economy, then we have additional growth plus the $15 billion we are now paying for keeping them on welfare and in jail.

For the things which must be done, I request the understanding, the cooperation and the aid of Jews. I do so knowing that there is Negro anti-Semitism and knowing how Jews must feel when they hear some Negro extremists talk. To hear these young Negroes spouting material directly from Mein Kampf must bring up terrible memories, shocking inner turmoil. But in times of confusion, I recommend to Jews what I do for myself in times of confusion. I go back and read the Jewish prophets, fundamentally Isaiah and Jeremiah. And I want you to know that if every Jew in the United States—not just a minority of extremists—called me a black nigger and said we don't need you to speak out against anti-Semitism in Poland, we can handle it ourselves, I would not stop speaking out against anti-Semitism in Poland. I would continue to speak because I could do no other, because Isaiah and Jeremiah have taught me to be against injustice wherever it is, and first of all in myself. There is a moral problem in abandoning the fight against injustice merely because less than two percent of the Negroes in this country are engaging in anti-Semitism. It is a problem which Isaiah and Jeremiah would be the first to point out and it may even be a cop out for those Jews who have other reasons for wanting to abandon the struggle. I urge Jews to be aware of that and at the same time to remember that the issue never was, and never can be, simply a problem of Jew and gentile or black and white. The problem is man's inhumanity to man and must be fought from that basic principle regardless of race or creed.

Jews ought not to fall into a trap. They have The Book. They've had the books. There is no more stirring story anywhere in the world, no more important philosophy in history, than can be found in Judaism. Everything is there, but it must be read. It must be remembered, too, that there were problems at the turn of the century when German Jews living in New York were distressed when Eastern Jews began to come in in large numbers. The term Eastern Yidden was used by those German Jews as if it meant nigger. Jews must remember their past history when they consider the militance and anti-Semitism among some young Negroes today. We must get on with the fight for a coalition of labor forces, of religious forces, of businessmen, of liberal and civil rights groups standing together. White fear, Negro frustration, and anti-Semitism will disappear not because we rail against them but because we bring about a social and economic program to neutralize them.

What is truly at stake is whether we can band together in a great political movement beyond party to bring about the socialization of this nation where it needs to be socialized, or whether we are going to permit the nation which we love to be torn asunder in a race war in which people who don't want to be on either side may be forced to take sides. That is our problem. That is our challenge. And I hope that the Jewish people, who have been among the staunchest liberal forces in this society, will continue to be a part of the coalition of forces necessary to meet this challenge.

NO. 12 IN A SERIES OF OCCASIONAL PAPERS

looking forward

The Author

Sandra Feldman is on the staff of the United Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO and a longtime civil rights activist. The views presented here do not necessarily represent those of the UFT or the LID. They are published as part of a continuing discussion of the critical problems confronting urban education.

Design by Eugene Glaberman

Photos by B. Shavitz

PUBLISHED BY THE

LEAGUE FOR INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY

112 E. 19 STREET • NEW YORK, N.Y. 10003

Michael Harrington
Chairman of the Board

Nathaniel M. Minkoff
President

Tom Kahn
Executive Director

285

Decentralization and the City Schools

by Sandra Feldman

Legislation has been proposed for the establishment of 30 to 60 autonomous, competitive school districts in a city whose problems of poverty, discrimination, and ethnic estrangement are among the worst in the nation. The major impetus for the recommendation made by the Mayor's Panel on Decentralization, headed by McGeorge Bundy, was the failure of the school system; the specific nature of those recommendations was shaped by the political climate. The report has come at a time when the struggle for equality, despite a decade of glory, has failed to heal racial division; when, especially among youth in the ghetto, there is an angry and bitter retreat into separatism. Many liberals, weary and disoriented, are willing to settle for "separate but equal" and grasp thankfully at the opportunity to cloak this retrogression in the militant-sounding rhetoric of black power. In the name of reform, private enterprise is offered as a greater healer of social and economic ills than the public sector. The "competitive spirit" is regarded as more constructive than alliances, for in the face of failure and resulting anger, competition is easier, less complicated, than cooperation.

Now, in the name of radical school reform, the Mayor's Panel has written legislation which strengthens segregation and places upon poor communities the burden of creating desperately needed massive, substantive, programmatic changes in their schools.

Yet the ostensible basis for this new proposal is high-minded: the schools in New York City are not educating minority group children. The educational bureaucracy has grown to proportions which make accountability and responsiveness impossible. Decentralization of the system is needed.

But there is a less apparent motivation. The threat of violence in the ghetto is ever-present; the causes are deep-seated and require solutions which neither the city nor the state can really provide. Unable to make a breakthrough in housing or jobs, the Negro community has focused major protest action on the schools, where society's dereliction is painfully, undeniably obvious. And while a total solution to the school problem may be impossible without seriously attacking unemployment and bad housing, it may be possible for protests to be mollified without substantive solutions. It may be — and that's what this discussion is really about — that in giving local communities total control over their schools, society is copping out.

At any rate, the long-needed break-up of the unresponsive school bureaucracy in New York is coming. The move towards greater accountability must be welcomed. But the specific proposals require careful examination. The fundamental question is, how will this upheaval affect the classroom? Will it raise achievement levels?

The Bundy proposal has engendered considerable debate and is likely to be revised. The argument offered here aims to create support for extensive revision which will maximize benefits and minimize dangers. The need for change is indisputable.

Possible Advantages

A proper redistribution of power would increase both the operating efficiency of the schools and their responsiveness to the lay public. Smaller districts run by locally elected boards would better allow education to be tailored to the needs of children in the district. Such a system would give parents real power to affect school program and policy, and this increased power, according to supporters of the Bundy plan for community school districts, would have three major effects:

First, it is claimed, increased parent power in ghetto communities would give the children greater feelings of self-worth and the conviction that they can influence their own destinies; the result would be greater motivation for learning.

Second, the new system would make the professional personnel accountable to the community in which they work — and therefore more responsive to the needs of the children and their parents.

Third, this increased power and the concomitant necessity to compete with neighboring districts would release creative energy and imagination in each community, resulting in a more dynamic and vital educational complex. An analogy with suburban school districts is often made to illustrate this point.

Dangers

While there is some truth in each of these assumptions, the disadvantages are heavy. For example, a careless redistribution of power could decrease efficiency by creating a number of little bureaucracies. More important, we need to re-examine the argument that heightened feelings of self-worth in children depend solely upon increased parental power and involvement. While the theory obviously has some validity, it is asserted by different groups with differing goals in mind. It is used by black power militants who regard decentralization as a step toward self-determination for the Negro community; it is also used by milder proponents of community control, white and black, who have despaired of integration and have begun to favor separatism. Here is Clarence Funnye, former pro-integrationist chairman of New York Core, in a recent piece in the Village Voice called, "Bundy and Black Power: A Retreat to Reality;"

"Some will invoke the dream of multi-racial education, saying that schools controlled by ghetto parents will not be 'integrated.' But are they integrated now? Is there any hope that they ever will be? And isn't locally-controlled segregation at least an improvement over the present centrally-controlled (white) quasi-colonial system?"

There is a very real danger that decentralization will mean an end to the possibility of school integration in New York City. Breaking up the school bureaucracy may be a necessity, but balkanizing the system into 30 to 60 autonomous districts drawn along neighborhood lines could be an educational disaster. Any feelings of "control" or self-worth which Negro schoolchildren might acquire in a system controlled by Negroes could be seriously offset by a continuing segregation sanctioned by society.

The Case for Integration

The massive Office of Education Report, Equality of Educational Opportunity, authored by James P. Coleman, found that the feeling of having "control over one's fate" — a very shorthand phrase for complicated feelings of adequacy and hope — was an important variable in educational achievement.

Some leaders in the Negro community have maintained that once that community is able to exercise the same power over education that most small white communities have, and once, as a result, there are more black authority figures among the professional personnel for children to emulate, the children's feelings of control over their own lives will be greatly enhanced and achievement will rise.

Arguing for the parents at IS 201 who were fighting for community control and a black principal, Floyd McKissick, National Director of CORE, said:

"The parents knew — perhaps better than the professional educators — that their individual and collective feeling of powerlessness and the resulting lack of self respect had had and would continue to have a crippling effect upon their children. They therefore demanded . . . black authority figures (e.g., a black principal) with whom their children might be able to identify and to whose position they might aspire."

In that same article, McKissick argues against school integration:

"In fact total reliance on integration is at direct odds with that sense of 'control' over one's fate which, according to the Coleman Report, correlates closely with achievement."

Yet the Coleman Report demonstrates precisely that minority group children in integrated schools have a greater sense of control over their destinies than minority children in segregated schools; and, even further, that academic achievement among those Negro children in integrated situations is much higher than among Negro children in segregated schools. Coleman saw this as a direct result of the integration itself; that is, being in the integrated situation and having the chance to make his way in the larger world, creates in the child the feeling that obstacles can be overcome by his efforts. It is this that engenders hope and a sense of control over his fate. These are feelings which a ghetto child in segregated schools presumably cannot have because his segregation imprisons him against the opportunity to function in the larger community.

In a summary of his findings in The Public Interest, Coleman writes, ". . . The schools are successful only insofar as they reduce the dependence of a child's opportunities upon his social origins."

Can neighborhood schools in a depressed area do this? Will community control and black authority figures make the difference? Not if Coleman is right when he concludes:

> "It is important to reduce the social and racial homogeneity of the school environment, so that those agents of education that do show some effectiveness — teachers and other students — are not mere replicas of the student himself. In the present organization of schools, it is the neighborhood school that most insures such homogeneity."

The conclusion that children in segregated schools have seriously damaged feelings of adequacy and control is reinforced by the report of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Racial Isolation in the Public Schools, which states in part: "Racial isolation not only inflicts educational damage upon Negro students when they are in school, it reinforces the very attitude and behavior that maintain and intensify racial isolation as well."

And the importance of integrated schooling was further demonstrated in the White Plains, New York, experiment, where Negro children in integrated schools showed startling gains in just a few years.

Therefore, while the major gain projected for decentralization is the enlargement of the power and authority of the ghetto parent over his child's education, there is a major danger that extreme decentralization will permanently "lock up" school districts, and that community control of a small ghetto district, assuming no change in the low socioeconomic status of the residents, will lead to even greater feelings of despair and defeat in the schoolchildren.

If the districts created are too numerous and if boundaries are drawn along the "community" lines suggested in the Bundy legislation, defacto segregation will graduate to the level of an accepted institution.

Acceptance of institutionalized segregation is already in the air. We know it is favored by large segments of white society. Even more tragically, it is seized upon by some in the Negro community as a positive benefit. In his endorsement of the Bundy report, Clarence Funnye argues:

> "Given the existing residential patterns, this means in effect that we are going to recognize a dual school system (which already exists), with real local control. This may hopefully provide for the first time, a mechanism whereby Black superintendents, principals and teachers will educate Black children, and Black parents for the first time will have control over what is taught."

Obviously, the converse of this is that white superintendents, principals and teachers will educate white children . . . and that black teachers will be kept out of white districts. Of course, many "community control" sympathizers are "morally" opposed to this eventuality. Mr. Bundy himself expresses the hope that it will not happen. But if we have learned anything from the long, unfinished struggle for equality, it is that good will is not enough.

Will segregation in the guise of community control give greater hope to Negro schoolchildren? Not if, as all the serious studies indicate, integration is essential to their achievement. And integration — remember we are speaking of economic class, not simply of race — can be attained in a city as complicated and diverse as New York only by exercising enough central control to achieve a degree of consolidation. Heterogeneity where neighborhoods tend to be homogeneous requires the widening and crossing of school district lines, and the establishment of what is often talked about as decentralization but is really a centralized school structure — the educational park and/or complex.

It ought to be noted that in Chicago an equally radical plan for reorganizing the schools has been developed, and it takes a direction almost completely opposite to the one proposed in New York. The Chicago plan calls for massive busing, campus schools, enlargement and consolidation of districts — all for the purpose of integration as well as school improvement.

In New York, the central school board has lost the confidence of the public — for good reason — and decentralization rather than consolidation is coming. To avoid setting up a permanently segregated system, we must keep the number of districts to less than thirty, and we must draw district lines deliberately to achieve maximum integration as a primary goal.

The Need For Quality

Complete school integration cannot be achieved today or tomorrow in New York City. Maintaining an absolutist position in favor of integration could lead to postponing immediate school improvement.

This trap can and must be avoided. Programs providing much more than "compensation" must be established now. The More Effective Schools Program, for example, is a total school program which radically changes the internal structure of the educational institution by offering individualized instruction through drastically reduced class size and increased numbers of teachers, specialists, clinicians, and special services. MES is not a panacea but it has raised reading achievement, and it has stopped, in the early grades, the progressive academic retardation which is prevalent in ordinary special service schools. Something very much like it is immediately necessary, to help the inner city children who are failing so terribly, and to stop the tidal exodus of white children from the public schools. (In one predominantly Negro More Effective School in Brooklyn, 200 white families bus their children to the school each day — and have done so for three years. Obviously, the school offers an excellent, saturated program.)

The trouble is that local control is regarded as an alternative to integration. While most Negroes and liberals agree that integration is best, too many have lost hope of achieving it. Yet integrated schools are not impossible — just very difficult. More difficult than simple decentralization, and more expensive.

There are areas in Brooklyn, Queens and the Bronx, for example, where neighborhoods are close enough to have integrated schools. In Brooklyn and Queens, some of these areas cross borough lines, and even in Manhattan there are borderline streets where a school could replace a block of tenements and be fed a heterogeneous pupil population. Of course, integrated schools have to be really good — good enough to raise the achievement of poor children, good enough to retain the middle class — and good schools cost a lot of money. (New York City spends approximately $450 per pupil in "special service" elementary schools in disadvantaged areas. MES schools cost approximately $950 per pupil, and that is still not enough.)

The fact is, whether we have decentralization or not, without vast expenditures — for all children, not just the disadvantaged — the public school system will continue to deteriorate. The transfer of power from central to local, or from white to black, will not make the important difference when the power itself is over a starved institution.

Decentralization as a Substitute

Another great danger in the current move toward decentralization is that it can be used as a substitute for real (i.e., budgetary) school improvement. If this kind of substitution is permitted, the schoolchildren in poor communities, whose schools are greatly in need of expensive, concrete improvements, will be the first to suffer and will suffer the most.

Let us look at the "suburban schools" analogy offered by decentralizers, and the probability that the proposed decentralization will see cutthroat competition between autonomous neighborhood districts for scarce money, services, and personnel.

The suburban areas that are looked to as examples of "good schools" because of local control spend more money. (Almost all of them have taxing power.) New York City spends approximately $750 per pupil (system-wide) compared to the typical suburban community's $1,100 per pupil. There is no indication whatever that significant sums of money will be provided to upgrade New York City school. If hiring power, for example, is given to the individual districts, and schools in segregated poor communities do not experience a simultaneous material change in conditions, how will they compete for qualified personnel? And further, how will the higher income taxpayers be persuaded that a good share of their taxes must go to separate school districts in low income areas? Will middle-class communities allow public funds to be disproportionately distributed on the basis of greater need to school districts outside of their own?

The Bundy report does provide for a greater allocation of state aid to the schools on the basis of decentralization, and also includes a complicated formula for the distribution of that aid on the basis of need. The report even acknowledges a great need for resources beyond the state allocation.

It ought to be noted, however, that a good part of the increase in state aid will be eaten up by operational costs — including the expense of the initial changeover. According to Bundy, whose estimate is probably conservative, "The net annual cost of decentralization might be very small indeed, or it might in the long run go as high as $50 million or even $100 million a year, depending on the choices of those responsible for the new system." (That same amount could provide for 100 or 200 More Effective Schools.)

As for the acquisition of additional money, there is nothing in the report beyond the enthusiastic recommendation of district-by-district competition for supplementary funds from foundations, the federal government, and other agencies. Instead of an economic program, the panel relies upon the third major decentralization argument — that power and competition will release creativity and dynamism, and communities will "awaken" to demand what is due them. From a social science point of view, the argument is interesting. From a political point of view, it is disastrous.

One liability of surburban school systems, for example, is the frequently lost battle over increased school taxes. It is very likely that high income taxpayers will resist any increase of taxes for schools in New York City when it is not their schools which need them.

Interestingly enough, the parochialism of the small town outlook has already manifested itself in the calls of some so-called Negro militants for a stop to increased school funds. At the end of last year, the Peoples' Board of Education published an analysis of the school budget, concluding that what is necessary is an end to waste, not increased funds. They wrote:

> "Unless there is decentralization in which local communities can hold the local schools accountable for how the money is spent, can introduce the local kinds of 'quality control' to make certain that local needs are really being met, it seems wasteful and undesirable to simply increase the education budget. Instead it makes more sense for a detailed decentralization plan, for the entire city, to be drawn up with the local groups involved in the design, so that next year education can receive top priority, and the money won't be wasted in artificial and fake programs."

The Bundy method of school funding seems designed to keep taxes low and the budget down. It requires community boards to base their proposed budgets "on an estimate by the Central Education Agency of the amount likely to be available in the ensuing fiscal year. . . ." Districts are forced to compete for additional funds from private foundations and city, state, or federal agencies. Instead of this, there must be a sweeping revision of the proposal in the legislature to provide a guarantee of substantial supplemental funds for district use.

Just as the call for Black Power without a realistic economic program cannot provide an answer for thousands of Negroes suffering from poverty and joblessness, local control of ghetto schools without a realistic funding program for school improvement cannot end massive academic retardation. Just as Black Power receives support from conservatives because it does not make extensive economic demands on the larger society, local control of schools will receive that support for the same reasons.

"Reconnection"

The Bundy Report is called "Reconnection for Learning." Its basic assumption is that local control will reinstate community confidence in the schools, and improve relations between parents and professionals. It is reasonable to believe this could result, but in at least one demonstration district where a decentralization experiment has been established, the contrary has occurred.

Last year, teachers and parents in Ocean Hill-Brownsville met regularly and, in several instances, demonstrated together for school improvements. They won a few small victories. Because relationships were fairly good there, the area was chosen for experimentation in local control.

Now schools which were overcrowded, understaffed, severely lacking in special services, and sorely in need of renovation for years are under control of the community. They are still overcrowded, more understaffed than ever before, completely lacking in services, still in need of renovation, and handicapped even further by an atmosphere of tension and hostility which has driven a wedge between the teachers and the community.

Rather than the "reconnection" of community and school which the Bundy Report talks about, there has been a widening of the gap. There is increased blame-placing on both sides for poor learning conditions, and there is greater tension as parents and teachers, each from separate vantage points, see radical changes in procedure unaccompanied by substantive change in educational assets.

Although racial overtones intensify the conflict, the cause of the basic tension is unmistakable: academic failure. Teachers, losing confidence, beset by difficulties, and unable to make a significant dent in the retardation, blame the parents for not preparing their children for school. The community, which elected a governing board, which hired their own superintendent and principals, is discouraged and angry and blames the teachers.

Unfortunately, the greater accountability desired by the community (the second argument for decentralization) cannot be realized by severe criticism or even discharge of professionals: there must be a rise in achievement, and teachers alone, without a substantial increase in services and personnel, cannot provide it — not even under threat of dismissal.

The attitudes of parents and teachers toward each other in the decentralization experiments should be compared with those of parents and teachers of children in More Effective Schools, where services and personnel are abundant. MES has served to "reconnect" as no other program has. With MES the community and the school are convinced, by the tangible evidence of achievement and available services, that society has — in that instance at least — placed a high value on the education of their children. Will poor communities left to their own devices without adequate funds be able to accomplish this?

The Danger of "Disconnecting"

There is certainly the danger that local control will become an expression of the narrow parochial interests of certain groups in each area, to the detriment of the needs of the public generally. Care must be taken to see that decentralization is an expansion, not a shrinkage, of democracy.

With districts competing for supplemental funds as well as for personnel, there is a danger of intensifying conflict. Herman Badillo, Bronx Borough President, was adamant in his criticism of this kind of competition in a society where class and ethnic lines are firmly drawn. "We will see more civil strife than ever before," he declared. Indeed, besides the losing battle the poor communities will wage with their middle-class neighbors, there will be wars within the already divided and sub-divided minority communities. Local boards with the power to dispense funds and create jobs will have to be exceptionally high-minded to avoid creating little political clubhouses out of each school district — especially with the Mayor appointing 5 out of 11 members on every school board. There will certainly be more "Mayor Power" in these areas than "little city halls" could create. There could also be real power for irresponsible extremist elements — right or left, white or black — that would not otherwise be able to attain such influence.

It must be understood further that along with the acquisition of power, there will be, for the Mayor, a simultaneous dispersal of his responsibility for the success or failure of education.

The onus will be on the local boards to produce academic success. Then, according to the New York Times editorial writers and other cynics, they will have no one but themselves to blame for failure.

Cynicism of that sort is a "moderate" backlash reaction to the blunt anger of black power types who are among the most vocal leaders in the school fight. It is eerily compatible with the guilty reaction of some liberals to that same anger — a patronizing willingness to support separation because to do so is less painful than to argue against Negro bitterness for something which seems lost forever anyway.

Destroying an archaic, ineffective school hierarchy doesn't have to mean a balkanized, segregated system. We need change, but we need change for the better.

Conclusions

Decentralization will certainly be a part of the solution to the school crisis, provided it is not substituted for resources, provided competition is minimized and funds are maximized, provided enough central control is maintained to prevent districts from locking each other out and provided district lines are drawn to assure that inroads toward integration can be made. The positive aspects are obvious: greater community involvement, less bureaucracy, more accountability. But these advantages will not in themselves ensure greater learning achievement. To do that, whatever form decentralization takes, a coalition of parents, liberals, teachers and other trade unionists must wage an all-out fight for increased funds for education. Only the federal government can provide the kind of resources needed, and only a massive coalition of forces can prod Congress into action. To the extent that an ascendent separatist point of view prevents groups in the Negro community from coalescing with white allies to demand increased federal aid to schools, and to the extent that the white community uses black extremism as an excuse to turn its back, the children, white and black, will suffer.

Some Guidelines

In any decentralization scheme, we must maintain a city-wide Board of Education which retains considerable powers, including the licensing and appointment of teachers. Professionals must be hired on an objective basis so that, for example, Negro teachers cannot be turned away from schools in white areas and white teachers from schools in Negro areas. Also, appointments must continue to be made equitably where vacancies exist, especially while the teacher shortage lasts. If communities have the power to hire teachers as has been proposed, then, conversely, teachers will have the power to choose where to work. As we have already said, without immediate and radical changes in the conditions of schools in poor areas, these schools will not be able to compete for teachers — white or black.

The city-wide board should set city-wide educational policy and enforce standards, to ensure equal educational opportunity. It should contract for independent expert evaluative services and should function as the clearing-house for evaluative information, which would include district by district comparisons of pupil performance. It should have jurisdiction over zoning and site selection, to ensure equal allocations of new buildings and the construction of schools in borderline areas where integration may be possible. The city-wide board should also have power to bring charges against any local authority, lay or professional, for severe violation of moral, legal and educational ethics.

Beyond the powers of the central agency, the powers of laymen and professionals on the local level must be clearly defined to preserve the integrity of the schools.

The decision-making power of the community should reside primarily in their lay board's control over the district superintendent, whom they should hire and have the right to fire.

Moreover, the local board should have enough leeway to mandate particular broad curriculum emphases within the prescribed policy and standards set by the city-wide board. They should also have authority over supplemental funds for special programs they deem necessary for the particular needs of their district. They should be able to contract independent educational expertise for help in the development of these programs, and they should be empowered to commission outside agencies for evaluation and studies.

Professionals should retain jurisdiction over matters of professional personnel, including rating, hiring and firing of teachers. A district superintendent who does not weed out incompetent teachers would himself be uprooted by the local board.

Recourse to an impartial third party, for both the parent and the teacher, could be worked out in the event of conflict. The establishment of an ombudsman or similar vehicle for the review of parental complaints against professionals, and of professional complaints against the lay board, would be extremely valuable.

Also, within the policy mandated by the state, city, and local boards, teachers—not parents—must have the power to construct and organize courses of study, and to determine methodology and texts.

The sharing by parents and teachers of a wide range of advisory powers with regard to school program and policy would be beneficial and could be worked out in each school or district, or both.

Whatever form the decentralization of the school system takes, honest and sturdy cooperation between teachers and parents must be a primary goal, along with the preservation of democracy and equal educational opportunity for all.

ALSO FROM THE LID

THE SOCIAL-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

Michael Harrington, author of THE OTHER AMERICA, raises some fundamental questions about the implications for democracy of growing business involvement and influence in education, urban planning, and the war against poverty.

by Michael Harrington . . . . . 35¢

THE URBAN SCHOOL CRISIS 75¢
Essays by Paul Goodman, Christopher Jencks, Nathan Glazer, and others

WHICH WAY OUT? 25¢
by Bayard Rustin

THE PATHOS OF BLACK POWER 25¢
by Paul Feldman

TO BUILD A NEW WORLD: A Brief History of American Labor 35¢
by Thomas R. Brooks

AMERICAN POWER IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY 50¢
by Michael Harrington

Quantity Rates: "Decentralization and the City Schools."
1 or more — 25¢ per copy
10 or more — 20¢ per copy
100 or more — 17¢ per copy
500 or more — 15¢ per copy

For publications or additional information about LID write
LEAGUE FOR INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY
112 E. 19th St., New York, N. Y. 10003
(212) AL 4-5865

UNIVERSITY REFORM

.15 ✓ The Multiversity: Crucible of the New Working Class. Carl Davidson
.10 ____ Toward a Student Syndicalist Movement. Carl Davidson
.10 ____ High School Reform. Mark Kleiman
.10 ____ Student Social Action. Tom Hayden
.10 ____ University of the Status Quo. David Nolan
.10 ____ An End to History. Mario Savio
.10 ✓ What is Wrong with Negro Colleges. J. Raymond Hodkinson
.10 ✓ The Future of Negro Colleges. Richard Robbins
.10 ✓ The Free University Movement. Paul Lauter
.10 ✓ University Reform: A Platform Statement Alan Ogden
.10 ✓ Political Meddling & the Florida Board of Regents. Alan Levin

POWER STRUCTURE RESEARCH

.10 ✓ NASHVILLE: A Preliminary Study of the Power Structure. Dave & Ronda Kotelchuck
.10 ✓ Suggestions for a Study of Your Hometown. Robert K. Lamb
.10 ✓ The Care & Feeding of the Power Structure Jack Minnis.
.10 ✓ The University & the War: Research Guide.
.10 ✓ How to Select Targets to Disrupt the Empire. Edie Black & Lois Reivich

SOUTHERN RADICALISM

.10 ____ Jefferson & Radicalism. Staughton Lynd
.10 ____ Negro Slave Revolts. Herbert Aptheker
.10 ✓ Southern Populism. Norman Pollack

.10_____Selective Service System Or The Manpower Channelers. Peter Henig

.10_____Draft Counseling Centers. Vietnam Summer Staff.

.10_____Channeling. (Unedited Official Selective Service Memorandum)

.10_____Immigration to Canada as an Alternative to the Draft.

.10_____Emigration to Canada: Legal Notes for Draft Age Men.

Southern Student Organizing Committee
P. O. Box 6403, Nashville, Tenn., 37212

_____Enclosed is _____ for the pamphlets checked.

_____Enclosed is $4.00 for a one year subscription to our monthly magazine, THE NEW SOUTH STUDENT. (.50 cents for a sample copy).

_____Enclosed is $5.00 for membership in SSOC which includes a years subscription to THE NEW SOUTH STUDENT.

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

CITY_____

STATE_____ZIP_____

(Make checks payable to SSOC. Contributions for postage are appreciated.)

LITERATURE

Available From The

SOUTHERN STUDENT ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

P. O. Box 6403
Nashville, Tennessee
37212

VIETNAM AND FOREIGN POLICY

.10_____Vietnam: The Myth and Reality of American Policy. David Nolan

.10_____Vietnam: Lost Opportunities for American Policy. Richard J. Coughlin

.10_____Vietnam & Civil Rights Bob Parris & Howard Zinn

.10_____Vietnamese and American Freedom Martin Nicholas

.10_____Political Programme of the South Vietnam National Front for Liberation.

.10_____On the Way to 1984. Henry Steele Commanger

.10_____Judgment at Fort Jackson. The Trial of Dr. Howard Levy. Ira Glasser

.10_____Dow Shalt Not Kill. Howard Zinn

.10_____America Needs an Agonizing Reapprasial. Arnold J. Toynbee

.10_____Scarce Resources: The Dynamic of American Imperialism. Heather Dean

.10_____The Argument of Latin America. Carlos Fuentes

.10_____Cuba: The Revolution Not Seen. Dave Dellinger

.10_____Message to the Tri-Continental Congress Che Guevara

.10_____Chinese Aggression: Myth or Menace? Charles S. Burchill

.10_____Contemporary Forms of Imperialism. Conor Cruise O'Brien

BSM
Do we have
?

DOMESTIC ISSUES

.10 ✓ Deliberate Depopulation of Whole Areas: A Protest (Appalachia). Albert Solnit

.10 ✓ The Decay of American Cities. Percival Goodman

.10 ✓ This is War? (The Poverty Program) Robb Burlage

.10 ✓ The South as an Underdeveloped Country. Robb Burlage

.10 ✓ Mississippi's Economics & Mississippi's "New Image". Mike Burland

.10 ____ The Cybernation Revolution. Robert Theobald

.10 ✓ The New Nonviolence. David Dellinger

.10 ____ BLACK POWER: Reprint of a Paper by the SNCC Vine City Project.

.10 ✓ The Power of the Dixiecrats. Tom Hayden

.10 ✓ Organizing Poor Whites. Kim Moody

.10 ✓ Poor Whites and the Movement. Emmie Schrader

✓ .10 ____ The Survey & Community Organizing. Nick Egleson

.10 ✓ Rural Community Organizing. John Zippert

.10 ✓ Notes on Organizing. Charles McLaurin

.10 ✓ The Peace Called War: Lyndon Johnson's Poverty Program. David Nolan

.10 ✓ How to Prevent a Pogrom. Arthur I. Waskow.

.10 ✓ Over 30. On Organizing Adults. Elizabeth Tornquist

.10 ____ Finding & Making Leaders. Nicholas von Hoffman

.10 ____ Davy Crockett in Little Egypt. Story of the Strike at Murray Ohio in Lawrenceburg Tennessee. Vera Rony

.10 ✓ Students & Labor. Al Haber

.10 ✓ A Brief History of Duke Local 77. Peter Brandon & Nancy Parks

A PROGRESSIVE VOICE FROM THE SOUTH—SUBSCRIBE NOW TO

NEW SOUTH STUDENT

SPECIAL FEATURES

THE ROOTS OF SOUTHERN RADICALISM
Staughton Lynd on Jefferson...Herbert Aptheker on Slave Revolts....Don West on Abolitionists....Norman Pollock on Populists.....H. L. Mitchell on the Southern Tenant Farmers Union...Myles Horton on Highlander....Rev. Clarence Jordan on Koinonia.....Anne Braden on the Southern Conference for Human Welfare...and others.

SURVEY OF SOUTHERN POLITICS
....state-by-state in depth treatment

PUBLISHED MONTHLY DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR BY THE SOUTHERN STUDENT ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

OTHER ITEMS OF INTEREST

....Robert Theobald "On the Way to 1984"....A New Look at Negro Colleges.... The Case Against the Draft....The War in Vietnam and American Foreign Policy ....Problems of University Reform...The Southern Sex Myth...The Black Belt.. ..Appalachia....

PLUS ....book reviews....poetry....and news coverage of the peace, civil rights, and student movements.

NEW SOUTH STUDENT,
Box 6403, Nashville, Tennessee, 37212

[ ] enclosed find $4.00 for a one year subscription
[ ] enclosed find 50¢ for a sample copy

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP CODE _____

ssoc
box 6403
nashville, tenn.
37212

NONPROFIT ORG.
U.S. Postage
PAID
Nashville, Tenn.
Permit No.1633

Mrs. Glenda Bartley
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth St. N W
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

The Labor-Negro Coalition – A New Beginning

Over 40,000 mourners pack the plaza in front of Memphis City Hall after march memorializing Dr. King and backing strikers.

by Bayard Rustin

The murder of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. has thrust a lance into the soul of America. The pain is most shattering to the Negro people. We have lost a valiant son, a symbol of hope and an eloquent spirit that inspired masses of people. Such a man does not appear often in the history of social struggle. When his presence signifies that greatness can inhabit a black skin, those who must deny this possibility stop at nothing to remove it. Dr. King now joins a long list of victims of desperate hate in the service of insupportable lies, myths and stereotypes.

For me, the death of Dr. King brings deep personal grief. I had known and worked with him since the early days of the Montgomery bus protest in 1955, through the founding of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the Prayer Pilgrimage in 1957, the youth marches for integrated schools in 1958 and 1959 and the massive March on Washington in 1963.

Though his senior by 20 years, I came to admire the depth of his faith in non-violence, in the ultimate vindication of the democratic process and in the redeeming efficacy of social commitment and action. And underlying this faith was a quiet courage grounded in the belief that the triumph of justice, however long delayed, was inevitable. Like so many others, I watched his spirit take hold in the country, arousing long-slumbering consciences and giving shape to a new social movement. With that movement came new hopes, aspirations and expectations. The stakes grew higher.

At such a time, so great a loss can barely be sustained by the Negro people. But the tragedy and shame of April 4th darken the entire nation as it teeters on the brink of crisis. And let no one mistake the signs: our country is in deadly serious trouble. This needs to be said because one of the ironies of life in an advanced industrialized society is that many people can go about their daily business without being directly affected by the ominous rumblings at the bottom of the system.

Yet we are at one of the great crossroads in our history and the alternatives before us grow more stark with every summer's violence. In moments like these there is a strong temptation to succumb to utter despair and helpless cynicism. It is indeed hard to maintain a clear perspective, a reliable sense of where events are heading. But this is exactly what we are called upon to do. Momentous decisions are about to be made—consciously or by default—and the consequences will leave not one corner of this land, nor any race or class, untouched.

Where, then, do we go from here?

We are a house divided. Of this Dr. King's murder is a stunning reminder. Every analysis, strategy and proposal for a way out of the American dilemma must BAYARD RUSTIN is Executive Director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute and a board member of the League for Industrial Democracy. He helped plan the march of the Memphis sanitation men which was to be led by Martin Luther King, Jr. When Dr. King was assassinated, the march was carried on as a memorial to King.

Mrs. Coretta King fulfills husband's pledge to lead Memphis march. At right is Rev. Abernathy; at right corner is Rustin.

begin with the recognition that a perilous polarization is taking place in our society. Part of it is no doubt due to the war in Viet Nam, part to the often remarked generational gap. But generations come and go and so do foreign policies. The issue of race, however, has been with us since our earliest beginnings as a nation. I believe it is even deeper and sharper than the other points of contention. It has bred fears, myths and violence over centuries. It is the source of dark and dangerous irrationality, a current of social pathology running through our history and dimming our brighter achievements.

Most of the time the reservoir of racism remains stagnant. But—and this has been true historically for most societies—when major economic, social or political crises arise, the backwaters are stirred and latent racial hostility comes to the surface. Scapegoats must be found, simple targets substituted for complex problems. The frustration and insecurity generated by these problems find an outlet in notions of racial superiority and inferiority. Very often we find that the most virulent hostility to Negroes exists among ethnic groups that only recently "made it" themselves or that are still near the bottom of the ladder. They need to feel that somebody is beneath them. (This is a problem which the labor movement has had to face more acutely perhaps than any comparable institution in American life. And it's a problem which some of labor's middle-class critics have not had to cope with at all.)

Negroes are reacting to this hostility with a counter-hostility. Some say the white man has no "soul"; others say he is barbaric, uncivilized; others proclaim him racially inferior. As is so often the case, such a reaction is the exaggerated obverse of the original action.

And in fact it incorporates elements of white stereotypes of Negroes. ("Soul," for example, so far as it is definable, seems to consist in part of rhythm, spontaneity, pre-industrial sentimentality, a footloose anti-regimentation, etc.—qualities attributed to Negroes by many whites, though in different words.)

This reaction among Negroes is not so new as many white people think. What is new is the intensity with which it is felt among some Negroes and the violent way it has been expressed in recent years. For this, the conservatives and reactionaries would blame the civil rights movement and the federal government. And in the very specific sense, we must conclude that they are right.

One effect of the civil rights struggle in the past 10 years has been to convince a generation of young Negroes that their place in society is no longer predetermined at birth. We demonstrated that segregationist barriers could be toppled, that social relations were not fixed for all time, that change was on the agenda. The federal government reinforced this new consciousness with its many pronouncements that racial integration and equality were the official goals of American society.

The reactionaries would tell us that these hopes and promises were unreasonable to begin with and should never have been advanced. They equate stability with the preservation of the established hierarchy of social relations, and chaos with the reform of that unjust arrangement. The fact is that the promises were reasonable, justified and long overdue. Our task is not to rescind them—how do you rescind the promise of equality?—but to implement them fully and vigorously.

This task is enormously complicated by the polarization now taking place on the race issue. We are caught in a vicious cycle: inaction on the poverty and civil rights fronts foments rioting in the ghettos; the rioting encourages vindictive inaction. Militancy, extremism and violence grow in the black community; racism, reaction and conservatism gain ground in the white community.

Personal observation and the law of numbers persuade me that a turn to the "right" comprises the larger part of the polarization. This, of course, is a perilous challenge not only to the Negro but also to the labor movement, to liberals and civil libertarians, to all of the forces for social progress. We must meet that challenge in 1968.

Meanwhile, a process of polarization is also taking place within the Negro community and, with the murder of Dr. King, it is likely to be accelerated.

Ironically and sadly, this will occur precisely because of the broad support Dr. King enjoyed among Negroes. That support cut across ideological and class lines. Even those Negro spokesmen who could not accept, and occasionally derided, Dr. King's philosophy of nonviolence and reconciliation, admired and respected his unique national and international position. They were moved by his sincerity and courage. Not, perhaps, since the days of Booker T. Washington—when 90 percent of all Negroes lived in the South and were occupationally and socially more homogeneous than today—had any one man come so close to being the Negro leader. He was a large unifying force and his assassination leaves an enormous vacuum. The diverse strands he linked together have fallen from his hands.

The murder of Dr. King tells Negroes that if one of the greatest among them is not safe from the assassin's bullet, then what can the least of them hope for? In this context, those young black militants who have resorted to violence feel vindicated. "Look what happened to Dr. King," they say. "He was non-violent, he didn't hurt anybody. And look what they did to him. If we have to go down, let's go down shooting. Let's take whitey with us."

Make no mistake about it: a great psychological barrier has now been placed between those of us who have urged nonviolence as the road to social change and the frustrated despairing youth of the ghettos. Dr. King's assassination is only the latest example of our society's determination to teach young Negroes that violence pays. We pay no attention to them until they take to the streets in riotous rebellion. Then we make minor concessions—not enough to solve their basic problems, but enough to persuade them that we know they exist. "Besides," the young militants will tell you, "this country was built on violence. Look at what we did to the Indians. Look at our television and movies. And look at Viet Nam. If the cause of the Vietnamese is worth taking up guns for, why isn't the cause of the black man right here in Harlem?"

An Atlanta scene during King's funeral as nation mourned.

These questions are loaded and oversimplified, to be sure, and they obscure the real issues and the programmatic direction we must take to meet them. But what we must answer is the bitterness and disillusionment that give rise to these questions. If our answers consist of mere words, they will fall on deaf ears. They will not ring true until ghetto-trapped Negroes experience significant and tangible progress in the daily conditions of their lives—in their jobs, income, housing, education, health care, political representation, etc. This must be understood by those often well-meaning people who, frightened by the polarization, would retreat from committed action into homilies about racial understanding.

We are indeed a house divided. But the division between race and race, class and class, will not be dissolved by massive infusions of brotherly sentiment. The division is not the result of bad sentiment and therefore will not be healed by rhetoric. Rather the division and the bad sentiments are both reflections of vast and growing inequalities in our socioeconomic system—inequalities of wealth, of status, of education, of access to political power. Talk of brotherhood and "tolerance" (are we merely to "tolerate" one another?) might once have had a cooling effect, but increasingly it grates on the nerves. It evokes contempt not because the values of brotherhood are wrong—they are more important now than ever—but because it just does not correspond to the reality we see around us. And such talk does nothing to eliminate the inequalities that breed resentment and deep discontent.

The same is true of most "Black Power" sloganeering, in which I detect powerful elements of conservatism. Leaving aside those extremists who call for violent "revolution," the Black Power movement embraces a diversity of groups and ideologies. It contains a strong impulse toward withdrawal from social struggle and action, a retreat back into the ghetto, avoidance of contact with the white world. This impulse may, I fear, be strengthened by the assassination of Dr. King.

This brand of Black Power has much in common with the conservative white American's view of the Negro. It stresses self-help ("why don't those Negroes pull themselves up by their own bootstraps like my ancestors did?"). It identifies the Negro's main problems in psychological terms, calls upon him to develop greater self-respect and dignity by studying Negro history and culture and by building independent institutions.

In all of these ideas there is some truth. But taken as a whole, the trouble with this thinking is that it assumes that the Negro can solve his problems by himself, in isolation from the rest of the society. The fact is, however, that the Negro did not create these problems for himself and he cannot solve them by himself.

King at 1961 AFL-CIO session with Vice Pres. Lee Minton.

Dignity and self-respect are not abstract virtues that can be cultivated in a vacuum. They are related to one's job, education, residence, mobility, family responsibilities and other circumstances that are determined by one's economic and social status in the society. Whatever deficiencies in dignity and self-respect may be laid to the Negro are the consequence of generations of segregation, discrimination and exploitation. Above all, in my opinion, these deficiencies result from systematic exclusion of the Negro from the economic mainstream.

This exclusion cannot be reversed—but only perpetuated—by gilding the ghettos. A "separate but equal" economy for black Americans is impossible. In any case, the ghettos do not have the resources needed for massive programs of abolishing poverty, inferior education, slum housing and the other problems plaguing the Negro people. These resources must come primarily from the federal government, which means that the fate of the Negro is unavoidably tied to the political life of this nation.

It is time, therefore, that all of us, black and white alike, put aside rhetoric that obscures the real problems. It is precisely because we have so long swept these incendiary problems under the rug that they are now exploding all around us, insisting upon our attention. We can divert our eyes no longer.

The life and death of Martin Luther King are profoundly symbolic. From the Montgomery bus protest to the Memphis sanitation workers strike, his career embodies the internal development, the unfolding, the evolution of the modern civil rights struggle.

That struggle began as a revolt against segregation in public accommodations—buses, lunch counters, libraries, schools, parks. It was aimed at ancient and obsolete institutional arrangements and mores left over from an earlier social order in the South, an order that was being undermined and transformed by economic and technological forces.

As the civil rights movement progresssed, winning victory after victory in public accommodations and voting rights, it became increasingly conscious that these victories would not be secure or far-reaching without a radical improvement in the Negro's socio-economic position. And so the movement reached out of the South into the urban centers of the North and West. It moved from public accommodations to employment, welfare, housing, education—to find a host of problems the nation had let fester for a generation.

But these were not problems that affected the Negro alone or that could be solved easily with the movement's traditional protest tactics. These injustices were imbedded not in ancient and obsolete institutional arrangements but in the priorities of powerful vested interests, in the direction of public policy, in the allocation of our national resources. Sit-ins could integrate a lunch counter, but massive social investments and imaginative public policies were required to eliminate the deeper inequalities.

Dr. King came to see that this was too big a job for the Negro alone, that it called for an effective coalition with the labor movement. As King told the AFL-CIO convention in 1961:

"Negroes are almost entirely a working people. There are pitifully few Negro millionaires and few Negro employers. Our needs are identical with labor's needs—decent wages, fair working conditions, livable housing, old age security, health and welfare measures, conditions in which families can grow, have education for their children and respect in the community.

"That is why Negroes support labor's demands and fight laws which curb labor.

"That is why the labor-hater and labor-baiter is virtually always a twin-headed creature spewing anti-Negro epithets from one mouth and anti-labor propaganda from the other mouth.

"The duality of interest of labor and Negroes makes any crisis which lacerates you, a crisis from which we bleed. As we stand on the threshold of the second half of the twentieth century, a crisis confronts us both. Those who in the second half of the nineteenth century could not tolerate organized labor have had a rebirth of power and seek to regain the despotism of that era while retaining the wealth and privileges of the twentieth century.

". . . The two most dynamic and cohesive liberal forces in the country are the labor movement and the Negro freedom movement.

". . . I look forward confidently to the day when all who work for a living will be one, with no thought to their separateness as Negroes, Jews, Italians or any other distinctions.

"This will be the day when we shall bring into full realization the American dream—a dream yet unfulfilled. A dream of equality of opportunity, of privilege and property widely distributed; a dream of a land where men will not take necessities from the many to give luxuries to the few; a dream of a land where men will not argue that the color of a man's skin determines the content of his character; a dream of a nation where all our gifts and resources are held not for ourselves alone but as instruments of service for the rest of humanity; the dream of a country where every man will respect the dignity and worth of human personality —that is the dream."

And so Dr. King went to Memphis to help 1,300 sanitation workers—almost all of them black—to win union recognition, dues checkoff, higher wages and better working conditions. And in the midst of this new phase of his work he was assassinated. Since then, the sanitation workers have won their fight. But the real battle is just beginning.

The Report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders is the latest in a series of documents —official, semi-official and unofficial—that have sought to arouse the American people to the great dangers we face and to the price we are likely to pay if we do not multiply our efforts to eradicate poverty and racism.

The recent recommendations parallel those urged by civil rights and labor groups over the years. The legislative work of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and of the AFL-CIO has been vital to the progress we have made so far. This work is now proceeding effectively on a broad coordinated basis. It has pinpointed the objectives for which the entire nation must strive.

We have got to provide meaningful work at decent wages for every employable citizen. We must guarantee an adequate income for those unable to work. We must build millions of low-income housing units, tear down the slums and rebuild our cities. We need to build schools, hospitals, mass transit systems. We need to construct new, integrated towns. As President Johnson has said, we need to build a "second America" between now and the year 2000.

It is in the context of this national reconstruction that the socioeconomic fate of the Negro will be determined. Will we build into the second America new, more sophisticated forms of segregation and exploitation or will we create a genuine open, integrated and democratic society? Will we have a more equitable distribution of economic resources and political power or will we sow the seeds of more misery, unrest and division?

Because of men like Martin Luther King, it is unlikely that the American Negro can ever again return to the old order. But it is up to us, the living, black and white, to realize Dr. King's dream.

This means, first of all, to serve notice on the 90th Congress that its cruel indifference to the plight of our cities and of the poor—even after the martyrdom of Dr. King—will not be tolerated by the American people. In an economy as fabulously productive as ours, a balanced budget cannot be the highest virtue and, in any case, it cannot be paid for by the poor.

Next, I believe, we must recognize the magnitude of the threat we face in an election year from a resurgence of the rightwing backlash forces. This threat will reach ever greater proportions if this summer sees massive violence in the cities. The Negro-labor-liberal coalition, whatever differences now exist within and among its constituent forces, must resolve to unite this fall in order to defeat racism and reaction at the polls. Unless we so resolve, we may find ourselves in a decade of vindictive and mean conservative domination.

We owe it to Martin Luther King not to let this happen. We owe it to him to preserve and extend his victories. We owe it to him to fulfill his dreams. We owe it to his memory and to our futures.

King, here with Phil Randolph, stressed labor-Negro ties.

After struggle and tragedy, Memphis strikers cheer victory.

Reprinted from May 1968
AFL-CIO AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST

LABOR'S JOURNAL OF OPINION subscribe today to the labor movement's journal of opinion — an influential guide for trade union leadership only $2.00 per year

HORACE T. WARD
THIRTY-NINTH DISTRICT
859½ HUNTER ST., N. W.
ATLANTA, GA.

MEMBER COMMITTEES:
BUSINESS, TRADE & COMMERCE
COUNTY & MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT HEALTH & WELFARE
PENAL & CORRECTIONAL AFFAIRS

File

The State Senate

Senate Chamber
Atlanta

Rec'd 2/23/66

February 18, 1966

Mr. Pat Waters
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Waters:

Knowing of your interest in capital punishment, I am herewith forwarding to you a copy of the report of the Senate Capital Punishment Committee. It is my hope that this issue will be kept alive and capital punishment will be totally abolished in Georgia at an early date.

With best regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Horace T. Ward

Horace T. Ward
Senator, 39th District

HTW:eks

Enclosure

Report of The Senate Capital Punishment Committee

THE STATE SENATE
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

The State Senate

Atlanta, Georgia

TO: THE GOVERNOR, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MEMBERS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF GEORGIA AND OTHER INTERESTED PERSONS.

* * * * * * * *

REPORT OF THE SENATE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT STUDY COMMITTEE

* * * * * * * *

THE COMMITTEE

HONORABLE B. AVANT EDENFIELD
SENATOR, 4th DISTRICT
CHAIRMAN

HONORABLE OLIVER C. BATEMAN
SENATOR, 27th DISTRICT

HONORABLE LEROY R. JOHNSON
SENATOR, 38th DISTRICT

HONORABLE ROBERT E. LEE, JR.
SENATOR, 47th DISTRICT

HONORABLE JOSEPH E. LOGGINS
SENATOR, 53rd DISTRICT

HONORABLE KENNETH KILPATRICK
SENATOR, 44th DISTRICT
SECRETARY

HONORABLE JOHN T. McKENZIE
SENATOR, 17th DISTRICT

HONORABLE ROY NOBLE
SENATOR, 19th DISTRICT

HONORABLE WILLIAM A. SEARCEY SENATOR, 2nd DISTRICT

HONORABLE HORACE T. WARD
SENATOR, 39th DISTRICT

February 1, 1966

The State Senate

Atlanta, Georgia

February 1, 1966

TO: LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR PETER ZACK GEER

The Interim Committee of the State Senate created by S. R. No. 107 authorized to study the question of capital punishment in the State of Georgia has completed its report. We hope that the information contained in the within report will be of assistance to the members of the General Assembly and to the people of Georgia. The information contained herein is a composite of the information furnished to the Committee by the people of Georgia reflecting the opinion that capital punishment should be retained and that capital punishment should be abolished.

Legislation effectuating the intent of the majority of this Committee will be introduced at this term of the Legislature.

We wish to acknowledge the assistance of the Office of Legislative Counsel, and particularly the services of Mr. Harvey D. Findley of that office.

Respectfully submitted,

B. AVANT EDENFIELD
Chairman,
Senate Capital Punishment Study Committee

BAE/ms

Encl.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

		Page No.
I.	Introduction	1
II.	Background Information on Capital Punishment and Recent Trends	3
III.	Results of Public Hearings and Other Opinions Expressed by Interested Citizens.	9
IV.	Majority Report.	12
V.	Minority Report.	18
VI.	Recommendations of the Committee . .	24
	Appendix	26
	Exhibit "A" - Laws of Certain States that have Abolished Capital Punishment	1-a
	Exhibit "B" - Capital Offenses in Georgia.	6-a
	Exhibit "C" - Prisoners Executed Under Civil Authority in the United States, by Offense, Race and State - 1930-64	7-a

I.

INTRODUCTION

The Senate Capital Punishment Study Committee was created pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 107, adopted during the 1965 session of the General Assembly. The Committee consisted of ten Senators who were duly appointed by the Lieutenant Governor. The Committee held its first organizational meeting on June 21, 1965, at which time officers were elected and plans were made as to how the Committee would proceed with its work. The cover page of this report indicates the names of the members of the Committee and the officers thereof.

The creating resolution charged the Committee with the responsibility of "...investigating and studying the matter of capital punishment in the State of Georgia, including the current status of the law in Georgia and elsewhere, crimes for which the death sentence may be imposed, the value of the death sentence to society, public opinion and other matters". At the organizational meeting, the Committee decided it could best carry out its responsibility by an examination of some of the written material on the subject and by holding public hearings at major cities throughout the State.

The plan of the report that follows is to present certain background information on capital punishment and a review of recent trends in an effort to place the subject in its historical perspective. There is also included a very brief summary of the testimony received at the public hearings and a few remarks concerning other information and opinions the Committee received from interested citizens throughout the State of Georgia. There is a great deal of published statistical information available on the subject of capital punishment. The Committee believes that it would be beyond the scope of this report to attempt to provide the General Assembly with most of this information. As a result, with a few exceptions included in Section II of the report, the statistical information which the Committee believes might be of particular interest to the General Assembly has been placed in the Appendix of the report. The principal part of the report consists of majority and minority positions of the members of the Committee, because it is believed that these positions will be of most interest to the members of the General Assembly. In its final deliberations the Committee split six to four on the question of whether or not capital punishment should be retained in Georgia, the majority position being that capital punishment should be retained. Also included in the report, however, are recommendations of the entire Committee regarding changes in the laws relating to the death penalty.

II.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT AND RECENT TRENDS.

Capital punishment, which might be defined as the death penalty, pronounced and carried out, through the legal processes of a society on one of its members, goes back at least to the Code of Hammurabi which is the first known code of laws compiled around 2,000 B. C. Insofar as the criminal law was concerned, the ruling principle of the Code of Hammurabi was the lex talionis or the law of retaliation, and capital punishment was applied under the Code somewhat indiscriminately. The lex talionis was also a fundamental principle of ancient Hebrew law as expressed by the idea of "an eye for an eye; a tooth for a tooth". In the latter, however, the idea of degree was introduced into the law, and capital punishment was not applied as indiscriminately as under the Code of Hammurabi. The ancient Hebrews allowed the death penalty for adultery, bestiality, blasphemy, cursing father or mother, idolatry, incest, rape, Sabbath breaking, unchastity, and witchcraft.

Under the Roman law, capital punishment also meant punishment that affected the status of the citizen, such as banishment. The death penalty was possible, however, for the following offenses: treason, adultery, sodomy, murder, forgery by slaves, corruption; kidnapping under certain conditions, seduction and rape.

The history of capital punishment shows a shifting of stress from sacrilege and offenses against property to murder, although this shifting has not been uniform. For example, at the beginning of the 15th century in England capital crimes had been reduced to 17, but during the 18th century, the number had been increased to over 200, most of which were crimes against property. Toward the end of the 18th century and the early 19th century, however, under the influence of Jeremy Bentham, Sir Samuel Rommily, and others, the trend was again toward the reduction of capital crimes so that by 1837 capital offenses had been reduced to 15.

The English colonies in North America did not join the mother country in creating such a large number of capital crimes. Prior to the American Revolution, the colonies had established capital punishment for from 10 to 18 offenses, and after the establishment of the Union in 1789, the trend was toward the reduction of capital crimes. In his autobiography, Thomas Jefferson, when writing about his working on the revision of Virginia's laws from 1777 to 1779, expressed the belief, which was apparently shared by other prominent Virginians working with him at the time, that capital punishment should be abolished for all crimes except murder and treason.

Although capital punishment appears to have been a part of human history almost since man first organized into some form of society, it has been debated for centuries, and there has never been anything approaching uniformity of opinion concerning the subject. Prior to 1764, the debate of capital punishment revolved around theological, moral, and ethical considerations, but in that year the question was raised by Cesare Beccaria, in a small volume entitled An Essay on Crimes and Punishments, as to whether or not the death penalty contributes to "the greatest good for the greatest number". In short, the utilitarian value of capital punishment in society was questioned and analyzed by Beccaria, and he concluded that the death penalty did not contribute to the "greatest good for the greatest number". Beccaria's discussion placed the arguments concerning capital punishment in a more modern context, and with certain refinements, the same questions that were raised by Beccaria are still discussed today. It should be noted, however, that the moral and theological arguments are still very much a part of the debate surrounding capital punishment, and many members of present day society believe that the death penalty is a moral and religious imperative, notwithstanding the arguments questioning its utilitarian value.

There are discernible trends throughout the United States and in Georgia toward applying capital punishment less and less frequently until it is retained, in some instances, more or less as only a statutory possibility. The trend has led to its abolishment in many European countries and in 13 of the 50 states of the United States as of the year 1965. Four of the states, New York, North Dakota, Rhode Island and Vermont which are classed as abolitionist states, retain the death penalty for certain limited crimes such as killing a police officer or a prison guard under certain conditions. (See Appendix, Exhibit "A").

The following table shows the relatively less frequent use of capital punishment in the United States, the seventeen Southern and border states, and Georgia. The table also shows that the Southern states, as a group, have used capital punishment more frequently than other parts of the country, and that the rate of decrease has not been as rapid in the South as in other parts of the country. The trend toward the relatively infrequent use of capital punishment is particularly noticeable during the last ten years, although the year 1957 was an exception for the State of Georgia. Georgia had no executions for the year 1965, but information is not available at this time to complete the table in the other categories.

TABLE

LEGAL EXECUTIONS - 1930 - 1964

YEAR	UNITED STATES	SOUTHERN AND BORDER STATES	GEORGIA
1930	154	67	7
1931	153	78	17
1932	140	81	12
1933	160	93	14
1934	168	100	13
1935	199	110	23
1936	192	128	11
1937	147	92	16
1938	185	101	15
1939	159	93	8
1940	124	83	14
1941	123	76	6
1942	141	96	11
1943	130	89	18
1944	120	69	10
1945	116	75	19
1946	131	99	16
1947	152	102	16
1948	114	84	13
1949	119	59	8
1950	81	52	13
1951	105	69	7
1952	83	51	11
1953	58	28	8
1954	80	44	12
1955	76	38	4
1956	64	41	6
1957	63	44	14
1958	49	29	6
1959	49	31	4
1960	56	32	6
1961	42	26	3
1962	47	22	1
1963	21	10	2
1964	15	12	2
TOTAL	3,816	2,304	366

* Omitting Federal Executions

 Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas.

Among the various states retaining capital punishment in 1960, there were some 31 offenses for which the death penalty was a statutory possibility, but in practice, only seven offenses were actually punished by the death penalty from 1930 through 1960. The seven offenses were as follows: murder, kidnapping, rape, armed robbery, killing by abortion, aggravated assault by a life prisoner, and one miscellaneous offense.

Although several of the offenses amount to murder, technically there are some 23 offenses under present Georgia law for which the death penalty is a statutory possibility. (See Appendix, Exhibit "B"). In practice, however, only three of these were actually used during the period from 1924, when the electric chair was adopted as the means of execution, through 1964. The three offenses were murder, rape and robbery by force. In Georgia, as in the other states retaining capital punishment, murder accounts for the vast majority of legal executions. According to information supplied by the State Board of Corrections, there were 415 executions in Georgia from 1924 through 1964, which are broken down according to the crime involved and the race and sex of the offender, as shown below:

LEGAL EXECUTIONS IN GEORGIA 1924-1964

	MURDER		RAPE		ROBBERY BY FORCE
	75	White males	3	White males	6	Colored males
	267	Colored males	63	Colored males	-
	1	Colored female	-		-
TOTAL	343		66		6

MURDER	343	(82.65%)
RAPE	66	(15.90%)
ROBBERY BY FORCE	6	(1.45%)
TOTAL EXECUTIONS	415	(100%)

In the thirteen states which have abolished capital punishment, life imprisonment has been substituted for the death penalty for the crime of murder by each of the states, and in most instances, life imprisonment is either required or may be imposed for rape. Most of these states require a minimum number of years to be served on a life term before eligibility for parole. The minimum number of years that must be served before eligibility for parole ranges from 10 years to 30 years. In some instances, there is a mandatory life sentence without eligibility for parole, but in practice the Governor may commute the sentence to a lesser number of years causing the prisoner to become eligible for parole. In one state, a prisoner sentenced to life imprisonment for murder in the first degree is not eligible for parole unless the jury recommends mercy or the accused pleads guilty, in which cases, the court may, in its discretion, provide that the person will be eligible for parole, but a minimum of 10 years must be served. In North Dakota, a prisoner serving a life sentence may apply for parole at any time, but sentiment exists in that State to amend the present laws to provide that a minimum number of years be served before parole, which was required until the laws were amended in 1963.

III.

RESULTS OF PUBLIC HEARINGS AND OTHER OPINIONS EXPRESSED BY INTERESTED CITIZENS

The Committee held public hearings in Rome, Athens, Albany, Macon, Savannah, and Atlanta on July 12 and 13; September 13, 14 and 15; and on November 15 and 16, respectively, with two days used for the hearings in Atlanta. The public response to these hearings was quite satisfactory, and the Committee heard testimony from a total of 175 persons. The persons appearing before the Committee at these hearings represented a fairly broad cross-section of Georgia citizens in that essentially all social and economic segments of the State's population made an appearance. It should be noted, however, that more clergymen appeared than any single group and that educators and other professionals were also well represented. The members of the Committee wanted to become familiar with the arguments on both sides of this question and also wanted to give those persons who are interested in the subject an opportunity to express themselves which were the primary reasons for holding the public hearings. The table below gives a compilation of the opinions expressed for and against capital punishment at these public hearings:

TALLY OF OPINIONS EXPRESSED AT ALL PUBLIC HEARINGS

ROME - July 12		ALBANY - September 13		SAVANNAH - September 15
For	8	For	0	For	20
Against	11	Against	1	Against	18
Undecided	1			Indefinite	1
TOTAL	20		1		39

ATHENS - July 13		MACON - September 14		ATLANTA - Nov. 15 and 16
For	5	For	13	For	30
Against	14	Against	17	Against	36
TOTAL	19		30		66

For Capital Punishment	76
Against Capital Punishment	97
Undecided or indefinite	2
TOTAL of all persons appearing	175

It would be beyond the scope of this report to attempt to summarize the arguments presented by the 175 persons who appeared before the Committee, but it may be of interest to the members of the General Assembly to have a general idea of the arguments the Committee heard on both sides of this question. As a result, the table below has been prepared which sets forth in very brief phrases the arguments heard by the Committee in the approximate order of the frequency mentioned. It should be understood that other points were also mentioned, and the various individual speakers frequently mentioned several of these points in their presentation for or against capital punishment.

A SUMMARY OF ARGUMENTS FOR AND AGAINST CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN THE ORDER MOST FREQUENTLY MENTIONED.

FOR CAPITAL PUNISHMENT:

It is supported by the Bible; it is the law of God.

It is a deterrent to crime.

Justice requires it; those who commit murder should pay for the crime with their lives.

The laws are already too soft on criminals; crime is increasing.

Life imprisonment is too expensive.

It is more humane than life imprisonment.

It is a necessary evil to protect society.

AGAINST CAPITAL PUNISHMENT:

It fails as a deterrent to crime.

It is not applied fairly; it falls on the poor and minority groups.

The possibility of executing the innocent exists.

It is as wrong for the State to take a life as it is for the individual to do so.

The Bible and Christianity are opposed to it.

It is a barbaric, primitive practice and has a brutalizing effect on society.

Criminals are frequently emotionally disturbed or insane.

Society creates the conditions that produce the criminal.

It is more expensive than life imprisonment.

In addition to the public hearings, the members of the Committee received a great number of letters from various citizens of Georgia. These letters were received by each of the members individually, and time did not permit any attempt to consolidate them.

In addition to the letters, the Committee received petitions from several hundred Georgia citizens in which their desire to retain capital punishment in the State was expressed. Finally, the Committee received recommendations from approximately 60 grand juries representing counties all over the State of Georgia, all of which expressed the desire to see capital punishment retained.

IV.

MAJORITY REPORT OF THE SENATE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT STUDY COMMITTEE

The question of whether for the State to exact the death penalty is one which has intrigued and bothered the ministry, penologists, criminologists and the public in general for many years. The Senate Capital Punishment Committee is the first such group appointed in Georgia to make a thorough investigation of this question.

The Senate Capital Punishment Study Committee, hereinafter referred to as the "Committee" traveled throughout Georgia during the summer of 1965, holding public hearings, soliciting opinions, and received letters, petitions, grand jury recommendations, and declarations from people of all walks of life. Many arguments were propounded to the Committee, either to retain or abolish capital punishment in Georgia.

The Committee heard arguments of varying nature and varying conclusions. The question is one upon which reasonable people may differ.

Whether to retain or abolish capital punishment involves both moral and legal considerations; therefore, the majority report will be addressed primarily toward answering these questions.

A large amount of statistical data was made available to the members of the Committee. Primarily, the use of the statistics was made by those opposing capital punishment; however, no figures were readily available from any state comparable to Georgia which had abolished capital punishment and the attendant result upon capital crimes.

It was reported to the Committee that several states had abolished capital punishment; some who had previously abolished the death penalty later reenacted capital punishment.

England abolished capital punishment, reenacted it, and has again abolished it. Statistical data available for 1965 showed a significant increase in capital crimes in that country. It was debated whether the increase was due to a general increase in crime throughout civilized countries, or whether the abolishment of the death penalty caused the increase. It is to be noted here that all grand juries, who made any recommendations to the Committee, unanimously approved the retention of capital punishment.

Many arguments were advanced to the Committee that the use of capital punishment had no uniform application. It was further stated that the poor, and members of minority groups were more often executed than from any other class.

This argument can neither be admitted nor denied since no statistics were made available showing who committed the majority of capital crimes or their relative status in the community. Theoretically, all members of society stand equally before the bar of justice.

This report cannot deny that there has been abuses connected with the death penalty. History tells us that life has been taken by society for trivial and insignificant crimes. This fact tends to obscure the considerations which justify capital punishment in principle. It cannot be successfully argued that because the use of the death penalty has been abused that there are no crimes for which it would be a necessary protection for society.

The State in considering whether to retain or abolish the death penalty must consider the protection of society.

Certainly, sympathy is due to anyone who is to be executed, and the members of his family. Nevertheless, we should never lose sight that sympathy is due to the victim and his or her family, and to society as a whole. The rule of law and preservation of law and order makes our society distinct from anarchy. Many who state that it is immoral for the State to take human life favor its retention for murdering police officers or the killing of a prison guard. This seems to weaken the moral argument, since if it is wrong for the State to take life, it is wrong for it to take life whether the criminal killed a derelict or ten policemen.

It is impossible to know how many lives have been saved or how many crimes that would have been committed, have not, due to the presence of the death penalty.

We have had cases of robbers using toy pistols or unloaded weapons. It seems obvious the only motivation these people had was the possibility of the application of the death penalty.

It is not the role of this report to conclude that capital punishment is completely effective, but on the other hand it is not always invoked, quite the contrary, it is very rarely invoked. Nor do we advocate its greater application.

Many who testified before the Committee, evidenced their concern for persons under death sentence and the long appeals, new trials, and reprieves; neverthelss, we can only conclude this is not cruelty, but it serves to emphasize the painstaking effort used to exhaust all legal remedies. This is controlled by the accused. There will always remain the possibility that an innocent person will be executed, however, it was the opinion of a majority of those on the Committee that this has served to overdramatize the problem.

Criminal laws exist to protect members of society. No effective means have been found to protect without punishment. The accused should be accorded all of his rights, but who commits the moral wrong - the criminal or society?

The subscribers to this majority report hold that the supreme authority of the State of Georgia has the right to exact the death penalty when it appears from competent evidence that it is necessary for the protection of our society against criminal attack. This conclusion is reached by virtue of the following considerations. It is assumed that the death penalty is primarily punitive and inflicted as such. Its imposition does not have to be exercised on this reason alone. But on the contrary, it is used for its deterrent influence, even though drastic as it may be. The State takes human life only when the crime is of flagrant and serious magnitude. The primary aim of the State is to evidence and to discourage by drastic means its abhorrence of the crimes for which the death penalty may be used. In this connection, the State is not so much considering the individual condemned to die, but the protection of all other members of society who must be protected. The State is not concerned with problems of vengeance in this area, nor of rehabilitation, treatment, or parole. Its objective is to deter would-be offenders as a protective means for society.

We come to the question of whether the death penalty serves as a deterrent. This question has the utmost significance to all people who are concerned with the question of retaining or abolishing capital punishment. It is fundamentally true that all human beings fear the loss of their lives, even though they may be mentally unbalanced or suffering from delusions. No instinct is so strong as that of self-preservation; thus we feel that the threat of death necessarily has a determining influence on human and criminal behavior. Statistically, it is impossible to determine that a certain number of lives have been spared or may be spared because of capital punishment. This will always remain true because it is virtually impossible to learn of the motivation a would-be assassin or person who commits a capital crime will consider before he makes a determination of whether to commit a crime, or to refrain from doing so.

Statistics that seem to show that the incidence of crime does not vary consistently with the presence or absence of the death penalty are inconclusive at best. Another facet that needs to be considered is the so-called delay between arrest and the eventual execution. We feel that it is quite necessary that the legal procedures be very exacting and that every means be afforded to the accused to defend or justify his act, and that every possible precaution be taken to assure that no innocent man is executed.

Another question that needs to be considered is whether life imprisonment or other measures sufficiently protect society against capital crimes. In support of the affirmative, many people now consider society to be so well developed that capital punishment is an archaic, inhuman and brutal law. Yet, statistically, we know that crime, both in the State of Georgia and throughout the United States, continues to increase at an alarming rate each year. Respect for the law is diminishing. Therefore, it appears that those who would commit crime hesitate less to sacrifice human life than ever before. But if it is admitted that capital punishment is a deterrent, then we believe that any other punishment would not serve as a successful deterrent. The use of capital punishment is justified on the basis of the protection it affords to society as a whole. We feel that the minority report gives too great an emphasis to the criminal or accused. The ever present threat of execution, as a part of the public law of this State, will serve to deter the potential criminal from committing his deed.

With regard to the religious and moral arguments concerning capital punishment, more clergymen appeared before the Committee during the public hearings than any other single group. The opinions expressed by the clergymen ranged from total abhorrence of the death penalty to total endorsement of the death penalty with many shades of opinion between these extremes. It is interesting to note that the clergymen, as a group, were almost equally split on the question of whether or not capital punishment should be retained in the State of Georgia. As a result, the majority feels that at this point in time, the religious and moral arguments concerning the question are inconclusive.

We have all worked together in harmony and regret that the report of the Committee is not unanimous. However, we recognize that those writing the minority report are sincere in their belief and conscientious in their duty. We further recognize that reasonable men may disagree in the matter which we have been asked to consider.

The majority of the Committee recommended certain changes in the present law that will be found elsewhere in this report.

/s/ B. AVANT EDENFIELD
Senator, 4th District

/s/ JOSEPH E. LOGGINS
Senator, 53rd District

/s/ OLIVER C. BATEMAN
Senator, 27th District

/s/ JOHN T. McKENZIE
Senator, 17th District

/s/ ROBERT E. LEE, JR.
Senator, 47th District

/s/ ROY NOBLE
Senator, 19th District

V.

MINORITY REPORT OF THE SENATE CAPITAL PUNISHMENT STUDY COMMITTEE

THE ARGUMENTS AGAINST THE DEATH PENALTY

The Committee heard many and varied arguments in opposition to the death penalty. The better of these arguments follow. Many witnesses before the Committee stressed that they were opposed to capital punishment and at the same time were in favor of law and order. Some further stated that they knew law and order was a problem in this country at this time. They also acknowledged that as a society we should do all in our power to protect police officers and those persons engaged in the hazardous occupation of law enforcement. The possibility that their own home or family could be torn asunder by some maniac was admitted by many. Nevertheless, these people felt that capital punishment should be abolished.

DETERRENCE:

The question of whether or not capital punishment is a deterrent to the commission of capital offenses has long plagued the best minds and the most conscientious people. Statistics indicate that capital punishment does not deter crime. One expert has pointed out that Georgia, in addition to having the highest number of executions in the United States in recent years, also has the highest number of prisoners per 100,000 population in the country. Taking into consideration Georgia's extensive use of capital punishment, one would think that Georgia would have one of the lowest homicide rates of any state in the Union -- if capital punishment really were a deterrent. Such is simply not the case as any research whatever will indicate.

Homicide rates have not appreciably changed in any state upon the abolition of the death penalty. The supposition that our citizenry will immediately embark on a lawless binge upon abolition is a myth that neither stands statistically sound nor reasonably correct.

The following factors support the position that capital punishment is simply not a deterrent to crime:

(a) About 50% of all murders occur in the home, i.e., a parent kills a child, a child kills a parent, a husband kills his wife or vice versa. These people, while guilty of murder, in most instances are not professional criminals. Their one major act of lawlessness in a lifetime is committed in a rage of anger or passion. They cannot be considered by the law as the law should and does consider the professional burglar or robber, or even the petty thief.

(b) A substantial number of persons committing serious crimes and being sentenced to death represent the most deprived and under-privileged segments of our society. These are not people who weigh advantages and disadvantages and logically consider the consequences before they commit a crime.

(c) The professional killer or the murderer who plans and schemes before the act never expects to be apprehended. Capital punishment is certainly not a deterrent to these people.

(d) Somepsychiatrists testify that there are some people who have suicidal tendences who actually commit a capital crime because they are seeking their self-destruction and actually wish for the electric chair. This may or may not account for the fact that the homicide rate has fallen slightly in some states when capital crimes have been abolished.

(e) Many people who commit capital crimes are not mentally responsible. Sex offenders fall into this category because no normal male commits a sex crime. Certainly, it has never been the policy in this country to execute the weak-minded and mentally incompetent.

It further appears that surrounding executions with secrecy is inconsistent with the position that the death sentence has a deterrent effect on crime.

STATUS OF THE ACCUSED:

Beyond a shadow of a doubt, the people who are most often put to death are the poor and the friendless. A Negro is more likely to "get the chair" than is a white man who is guilty of the same offense. (The penal and correctional records in Georgia show that of the 415 executions in the last 40 years, 337 were Negroes). A poor man cannot hire the best legal counsel that is easy for the rich man to obtain. While this would be true of any crime by any criminal, there is no punishment as severe as the taking of life and for this reason the economic, social and racial status of the accused is of special significance when that status makes the accused susceptible to the punishment. This uneven application of the death penalty lends support to the contention that the death penalty has already been abolished for everyone except the poor, the friendless, and the mentally disturbed. While it is true that death prevents the offender from ever committing a second capital crime, society should not overlook the fact that elimination of the criminal will not eliminate the circumstances which caused the crime. One man may be electrocuted, while ten men are being made potential offenders by their environment.

THE INNOCENT:

As long as human beings administer justice, errors will be made. Errors have been made in the past and innocent people have been executed. Once a convicted person is executed there is no chance to correct the error because the ultimate in punishment has been administered. Along with this, it is worthy of note that after execution the investigation to prove innocence ceases and for this reason it is impossible to tell how many innocent people might have been executed.

REHABILITATION:

All men can be redeemed with rare exception. As we learn more and more about the human mind, we learn more and more about why people do the things they do. Capital punishment forever bars a person from thereafter living a useful life even in prison. If society believes that rehabilitation should be the ultimate aim of our prison system, there is no reason for that purpose not to apply to all criminals.

In this connection, the matter of expense is advanced in terms of the possibility of execution being less expensive to the State than imprisonment. It is doubtful whether execution is really less expensive. In the first place, prisoners earn some of their support while in prison. At the same time, multiple appeals and petitions on the part of persons confined on death row are a great burden and expense to the State.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE:

The abolition of capital punishment would lift a great burden from juries and judges. It is enough that juries must decide guilt or innocence without having to decide on life or death. It is enough for judges to sentence to prison without sentencing death. The administration of justice would be immeasurably improved by abolishing capital punishment.

A capital case is often a long and expensive task to constitute a trial jury, as many prospective jurors are excused because of not being in favor of the death sentence. In many instances it has been apparent that juries will more likely convict when life imprisonment is involved, but will more likely acquit when execution is involved. The sharing of the general power of sentencing between the judge and jury in capital cases (with the jury having power to recommend mercy or not), illustrates an effort on the part of society to camouflage the person or persons finally responsible for the imposition of the death sentence.

There was also presented to the committee a legal argument which maintains that capital punishment is unconstitutional on three grounds: (1) that it is a denial of equal protection of the law (by virtue of discriminatory application in terms of economic status, sex and race); (2) that it is cruel and unusual punishment; and (3) that it is a violation of due process of law (the automatic elimination from jury service of persons opposed to the death sentence).

REVERENCE FOR LIFE, MORALITY AND RELIGION:

Passages from the Bible can be quoted by those who choose to do so to defend capital punishment or to urge its abolition. In any event the life of Jesus Christ was built around the idea of love and forgiveness and not around revenge and retaliation. Jesus was not personally repulsed by any man no matter how odious that person's life may have been, and it is hard to conceive of Him pulling the switch on a man strapped in the electric chair. If He would be unwilling to act as executioner, it could never be said that He would sanction such an act by one of us. It is immoral to take life because that perogative is God's alone. Human life is too precious to be the subject of barbaric attitudes, actions and impulses. Once man subjected man to terrible acts of cruelty and justified himself in so doing. Humanity now considers boiling in oil, the rack, and drawing and quartering to be inhuman. A hundred years from now men will consider the electric chair the same.

The acts of society as a whole are the acts of each individual who is a part of that society. No amount of rationalization will do away with this ultimate fact. Each time a person is put to death by the State of Georgia, that death is the responsibility of each citizen of Georgia.

Each and every time the lights dim at Reidsville, we have helped to create a climate of violence and have placed upon the people of Georgia a useless guilt. It is high time we looked at what we are doing in the light of fact, reason and humanity.

As a result of the foregoing considerations, the minority believes that capital punishment should be totally abolished in the State of Georgia.

/s/ KENNETH KILPATRICK
Senator, 44th District

/s/ LEROY R. JOHNSON
Senator, 38th District

/s/ WILLIAM A. SEARCEY
Senator, 2nd District

/s/ HORACE T. WARD
Senator, 39th District

VI.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE

As the majority and minority reports indicate, six members of the Committee believe that capital punishment should be retained in Georgia, while four members believe it should be completely abolished, but the minority, believing that any reduction in the number of capital crimes would be an improvement in Georgia's criminal law, joins the majority in making the following recommendations:

1. That capital punishment be abolished in Georgia for all crimes except the following:

   (a) Treason

   (b) Murder

   (c) Rape

   (d) Kidnapping for ransom

   (e) Robbery by open force

   (f) Perjury causing death or perjury resulting in the conviction of another person of a crime punishable by death

It should be pointed out that several capital offenses, although separately listed in the Georgia Code, actually amount to murder, and the Committee is not recommending the abolishment of capital punishment for these crimes.

2. That life imprisonment, reducible to 10 - 20 years and reducible as otherwise provided by law, be substituted for the remaining crimes presently punishable by the death penalty.

3. That present procedure be changed with regard to the crimes for which the Committee recommends retention of the death penalty so that in order for the death penalty to be carried out, the jury finding a defendant guilty of a crime punishable by death shall be required to make a recommendation of the death penalty if the jury desires that the defendant be put to death. If no recommendation for the death penalty is made by the jury, the sentence would automatically be life imprisonment.

The Committee will propose bills to the General Assembly to carry out these recommendations.

A P P E N D I X

EXHIBIT "A"

LAWS OF CERTAIN STATES WHICH HAVE ABOLISHED CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ALASKA:

1. Year abolished: 1957.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Life imprisonment.
4. Parole: A person who has been convicted for murder in the first degree is not eligible for parole until he has served 15 years. Persons convicted of murder in the second degree or who are sentenced as a habitual criminal are not eligible for parole until at least 5 years have been served.
5. Commutation: No information.

HAWAII:

1. Year abolished: 1957.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Murder in the first degree, life imprisonment, not subject to parole; murder in the second degree, imprisonment for any number of years but for not less than 20 years.
4. Parole: No information given other than above.
5. Commutation: No information given.

IOWA:

1. Year abolished: 1965.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Mandatory life for first degree murder and kidnapping; rape is punishable by not less than five years and may be punished by life.
4. Parole: No prisoner serving a life term for any crime is eligible for parole.
5. Commutation: The State Board of Parole automatically reviews the case of each prisoner who is serving a life term after the prisoner has served 15 years and at least once every three years thereafter, making such recommendations as the Board sees fit to the Governor. The Governor invariably accepts a recommendation against commutation and usually, but not invariably, accepts a recommendation for commutation. When a life sentence is to be commuted, the commutation is usually to a term of years such that the prisoner is immediately or will very shortly be eligible for parole.

MAINE:

1. Year abolished: 1887.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Life imprisonment for crimes ordinarily punishable by capital punishment.
4. Parole: A person sentenced to life imprisonment may be paroled after serving 30 years.
5. Commutation: No information.

MICHIGAN:

1. Year abolished: Michigan has never imposed the death penalty upon conviction of a capital crime. The State joined the Union in 1837. The only person executed for a crime in Michigan was a person involved in a bank robbery and he was executed under the provisions of Federal law at the Federal prison in Milan, Michigan. The only crime ever punishable by death in Michigan statutes was treason and that law was repealed on May 10, 1963, following the adoption of the new State Constitution.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: First degree murder is punishable by life imprisonment without the possibility of parole. Michigan laws provide indeterminate sentences up to life upon conviction of 21 separate crimes including various degrees of murder and for rape. The minimum sentence in these cases is 10 years.
4. Parole: Parole is possible in all sentences except life imprisonment or first degree murder.
5. Commutation: In cases of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole the Governor may commute the life sentence making the prisoner eligible for parole. There is no time period for the Governor to act but commutation is rare before the prisoner completes 15 years of a life sentence.

NEW YORK:

1. Year abolished: 1965
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: (a) killing a peace officer; (b) Killing another in connection with confinement in or escaping from a prison under certain circumstances.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: First degree murder, life imprisonment.
4. Parole: A prisoner sentenced to imprisonment for life serves about 26 years and 7 months in New York before being paroled.
5. Commutation: No information.

NORTH DAKOTA:

1. Year abolished: 1915.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: Serving life sentence for first degree murder when convicted of first degree murder and for treason.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Mandatory life imprisonment for first degree murder; possible life imprisonment for first degree rape, possible for habitual criminals.
4. Parole: Prior to 1963, persons serving life sentences could apply for parole after they had served one-half of their life expectancy. In 1963, the Legislature repealed these provisions and now a convict may apply for parole at any time. Sentiment exists in North Dakota to reenact the provisions relating to providing for a minimum sentence for all life-term prisoners and a bill to that effect will probably be introduced at the 1967 session of the Legislature.
5. Commutation: No information.

OREGON:

1. Year abolished: 1964.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Mandatory life sentences for first degree murder.
4. Parole: A prisoner serving a life sentence is eligible for parole after serving 10 years but he is not eligible for a certificate of discharge.
5. Commutation: No information.

RHODE ISLAND:

1. Year abolished: 1852.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: Committing murder while under sentence of imprisonment for life.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Murder in the first degree: life imprisonment; murder in the second degree: not less than 10 years and up to life imprisonment; rape: not less than 10 years and up to life imprisonment.
4. Parole: Any person sentenced to imprisonment for life is not eligible for parole until he has served at least 20 years, and parole may be given then only by unanimous vote of all members of parole board.
5. Commutation: No information.

WEST VIRGINIA:

1. Year abolished: 1965.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Murder in the first degree, life imprisonment; kidnapping, life imprisonment; rape, life imprisonment.
4. Parole: A person sentenced to life imprisonment for murder in the first degree is not eligible for parole unless the jury recommends mercy or unless the accused pleads guilty, in which case, the court may, in its discretion, provide that such person shall be eligible for parole; the same procedure is also true of rape. If a person serving a life sentence is eligible for parole, he must serve at least 10 years and no person sentenced to life who has been twice previously convicted of a felony may be paroled until he has served 15 years.
5. Commutation: No information.

VERMONT:

1. Year abolished: 1965.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: Killing a police office or prison guard under certain circumstances.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Murder, life imprisonment.
4. Parole: No information.
5. Commutation: No information.

WISCONSIN:

1. Year abolished: 1853.
2. Crimes for which capital punishment is retained: None.
3. Sentences in lieu of capital punishment: Murder in the first degree, life imprisonment; rape, sentence may not exceed 30 years; second degree murder, 5 to 25 years; third degree murder, not more than 25 years.
4. Parole: Wisconsin permits parole for any offense but in some instances does not permit probation. The minimum length of a life sentence with reduction for good behavior is 11 years and 3 months.
5. Commutation: Life sentences can be commuted to a certain number of years.

The states shown above plus Minnesota make a total of thirteen states which do not have capital punishment at the present time except for the crimes indicated under New York, North Dakota, Rhode Island and Vermont. A letter was written to all states except Vermont which have abolished capital punishment to solicit the information included in this memorandum, but a reply was not received from Minnesota. Little information is shown for Vermont, because it was not known until recently that Vermont had abolished capital punishment, and time did not permit writing a letter to that state.

EXHIBIT "B"

CAPITAL OFFENSES IN GEORGIA

Code Section	26-801	Treason
" "	26-903	Insurrection
" "	26-1005	Murder
" "	26-1103	Foeticide
" "	26-1104	Advising the killing of an infant
" "	26-1208	Castration
" "	26-1302	Rape
" "	26-1304	Sexual intercourse with a female under 14
" "	26-1603	Kidnapping for ransom
" "	26-2204	Burning of railroad bridge
" "	26-2206	Arson causing death. (See also Sections 26-2208, 26-2209 and 26-2210, 26-2211)
" "	26-2301	Destruction of a house with explosive substances causing death
" "	26-2302	Malicious destruction of a house within a city or town
" "	26-2303	Malicious destruction of a house not within a city or town
" "	26-2502	Robbery by open force
" "	26-4007	Perjury causing death or perjury resulting in the conviction of another person of an offense punishable by death
" "	26-5203	Dueling when death ensues
" "	26-5401	Mobbing or lynching causing the death of a citizen
" "	26-7310	Wrecking train when death ensues
" "	26-7314	Destroying railroad property, etc. when death ensues
Code Anno. Sec.	26-7320	Mishandling snakes or advising or counselling the mishandling of snakes when death ensues. (See also Sections 26-7318 and 26-7310).
Code Anno. Sec.	26-8117	Desecration of a burial place with intent to rob
Code Anno. Sec.	42-9917	Second conviction for furnishing minor narcotic drug

EXHIBIT "C"

Table 3. - PRISONERS EXECUTED UNDER CIVIL AUTHORITY IN THE UNITED STATES, BY OFFENSE, RACE, AND STATE: 1930-1964

(For years 1930-1959, excludes Alaska and Hawaii except for three Federal executions in Alaska, one each in 1939, 1948 and 1950.)

Region and State	All offenses				Murder				Rape				Other offenses
													Total			Armed robbery		Kid-naping	Other offenses (a)
	Total	White	Negro	Other	Total	White	Negro	Other	Total	White	Negro	Other	Total	White	Negro	White	Negro	White	White	Negro
United States	3,849	1,743	2,064	42	3,325	1,657	1,628	40	455	48	405	2	69	38	31	5	19	20	13	12
Percent .	100.0	-	-	-	86.4	-	-	-	11.8	-	-	-	1.8	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
FEDERAL	33	28	3	2	16	11	3	2	2	2	-	-	15	15	-	1	-	6	8	-
TOTAL STATE	3,816	1,715	2,061	40	3,309	1,646	1,625	38	453	46	405	2	54	23	31	4	19	14	5	12
NORTHEAST	608	424	177	7	606	422	177	7	-	-	-	-	2	2	-	-	-	2	-	-
Maine (b)	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
New Hampshire ..	1	1	-	-	1	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Vermont	4	4	-	-	4	4	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Massachusetts ..	27	25	2	-	27	25	2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Rhode Island (b).	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
Connecticut	21	18	3	-	21	18	3	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
New York	329	234	90	5	327	232	90	5	-	-	-	-	2	2	-	-	-	2	-	-
New Jersey	74	47	25	2	74	47	25	2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Pennsylvania ...	152	95	57	-	152	95	57	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
NORTH CENTRAL	398	253	143	2	388	250	136	2	10	3	7	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Ohio	172	104	67	1	172	104	67	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Indiana	41	31	10	-	41	31	10	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Illinois	90	59	31	-	90	59	31	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Michigan (b)	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
Wisconsin (b) ...	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
Minnesota (b) ...	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
Iowa	18	18	-	-	18	18	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Missouri	61	29	32	-	51	26	25	-	10	3	7	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
North Dakota (b).	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
South Dakota (c).	1	1	-	-	1	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Nebraska	4	3	-	1	4	3	-	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Kansas (c)	11	8	3	-	11	8	3	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-

SOURCE: National Prisoner Statistics - Number 37 April, 1964

Region and State	All offenses				Murder				Rape				Other offenses
													Total			Armed robbery		Kid-naping	Other offenses (a)
	Total	White	Negro	Other	Total	White	Negro	Other	Total	White	Negro	Other	Total	White	Negro	White	Negro	White	White	Negro
SOUTH	2,304	635	1,659	10	1,822	583	1,231	8	443	43	398	2	39	9	30	4	19	5	-	11
Delaware(c) ...	12	5	7	-	8	4	4	-	4	1	3	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Maryland	68	13	55	-	44	7	37	-	24	6	18	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Dist. of Col. .	40	3	37	-	37	3	34	-	3	-	3	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Virginia	92	17	75	-	71	17	54	-	21	-	21	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
West Virginia ..	40	31	9	-	36	28	8	-	1	-	1	-	3	3	-	-	-	3	-	-
North Carolina	263	59	199	5	207	55	149	3	47	4	41	2	9	-	9	-	-	-	-	9
South Carolina	162	35	127	-	120	30	90	-	42	5	37	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Georgia	366	68	298	-	299	65	234	-	61	3	58	-	6	-	6	-	6	-	-	-
Florida	170	57	113	-	133	55	78	-	36	1	35	-	1	1	-	-	-	1	-	-
Kentucky	103	51	52	-	88	47	41	-	10	1	9	-	5	3	2	3	2	-	-	-
Tennessee	93	27	66	-	66	22	44	-	27	5	22	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Alabama	134	27	107	-	105	25	80	-	22	2	20	-	7	-	7	-	5	-	-	2
Mississippi ...	154	30	124	-	130	30	100	-	21	-	21	-	3	-	3	-	3	-	-	-
Arkansas	118	27	90	1	99	25	73	1	19	2	17	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Louisiana	133	30	103	-	116	30	86	-	17	-	17	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Oklahoma	59	41	15	3	53	39	11	3	4	-	4	-	2	2	-	1	-	1	-	-
Texas	297	114	182	1	210	101	108	1	84	13	71	-	3	-	3	-	3	-	-	-
WEST	506	403	82	21	493	391	81	21	-	-	-	-	13	12	1	-	-	7	5	1
Montana	6	4	2	-	6	4	2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Idaho	3	3	-	-	3	3	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Wyoming	6	5	1	-	6	5	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Colorado	46	40	5	1	46	40	5	1	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
New Mexico ...	8	6	2	-	8	6	2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Arizona	38	28	10	-	38	28	10	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Utah	13	13	-	-	13	13	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Nevada	29	27	2	-	29	27	2	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Washington ...	47	40	5	2	46	39	5	2	-	-	-	-	1	1	-	-	-	1	-	-
Oregon(c)	19	16	3	-	19	16	3	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
California ...	291	221	52	18	279	210	51	18	-	-	-	-	12	11	1	-	-	6	5	1
Alaska(d)	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX
Hawaii(d)	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX	XX

(a) In this category the 8 Federal executions were for espionage. The 9 executions in North Carolina and the 2 in Alabama were for burglary. In California, the 6 executions were for aggravated assault committed by prisoners under a life sentence.
(b) Death penalty illegal during entire period, except for provisions indicated in the text.
(c) See text for period during which death penalty was in force.
(d) Alaska and Hawaii when territories abolished capital punishment in 1957. As States, Alaska and Hawaii are included in this series beginning Jan. 1, 1960.

File/churches

Changes in the Methodist Discipline affecting Race Relations.
(Material added by the 1964 General Conference in CAPS.)

THE METHODIST CHURCH IS A PART OF THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL. THEREFORE, ALL PERSONS, WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, COLOR, NATIONAL ORIGIN, OR ECONOMIC CONDITION, SHALL BE ELIGIBLE TO ATTEND ITS WORSHIP SERVICES, TO PARTICIPATE IN ITS PROGRAMS, AND TO BE ADMITTED INTO ITS MEMBERSHIP ANYWHERE IN THE CONNECTION. The membership of a local Methodist Church shall consist of all persons who have been received into its fellowship on profession of their faith, by transfer from some other church, or by restoration and whose membership has not been terminated by death, transfer, withdrawal, expulsion, or action of the Quarterly Conference. A member of a local Methodist Church is a member of the Methodist Church anywhere in the connection.

All provisions of the Discipline relating to property, both real and personal, and relating to the formation and operation of any corporation, are conditioned upon their being in conformity with the local laws shall prevail. PROVIDING, THAT THE SERVICES OF WORSHIP OF EVERY LOCAL METHODIST CHURCH SHALL BE OPEN TO ALL PERSONS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, COLOR, OR NATIONAL ORIGIN.

It (The Commission on Education) shall determine the policies for the church school as a whole and its parts, and shall give general direction to all the educational work of the church, PROVIDED THAT THE EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM OF THE CHURCH SHALL BE OPEN TO ALL PERSONS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, COLOR, NATIONALITY OR CLASS.

(Questions to minister on trial candidates) ARE YOU WILLING TO RELATE YOURSELF IN MINISTRY TO ALL PERSONS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE, COLOR, OR NATIONAL ORIGIN, INCLUDING RECEIVING THEM INTO THE MEMBERSHIP AND FELLOWSHIP OF THE CHURCH.

The Annual Conference may make rules to govern its own procedure, provided that no Annual Conference shall make any rule contrary to the Constitution or to the power granted it by the General Conference; PROVIDED FURTHER THAT IN THE EXERCISE OF THE POWERS GRANTED BY THE GENERAL CONFERENCE EACH ANNUAL CONFERENCE SHALL ACT IN ALL RESPECTS IN HARMONY WITH THE POLICY OF THE METHODIST CHURCH WITH RESPECT TO ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF RACE. An Annual Conference can not financially obligate The Methodist Church or an organization unit thereof except the Annual Conference itself.

Higher education is part of both our Methodist heritage and our present task. In establishing and maintaining educational institutions and in ministering to students WITHOUT RESPECT TO RACE OR NATIONAL ORIGIN the church continues its historic work of uniting knowledge and vital piety.

It shall elect, WITHOUT RESPECT TO RACE OR NATIONAL ORIGIN, on nomination of the general secretary, directors for each of the departments, and such other staff members as are needed for the operation of the division.

It shall engage personnel, WITHOUT RESPECT TO RACE OR NATIONAL ORIGIN, appoint such commissions and committees and adopt such regulations as necessary for the discharge of its responsibilities.

The division (of the local church) shall prepare standards for all types of camping, including standards for camp sites and other physical aspects of camping and standards for the program, leaderships, and curriculum for use in Methodist camps, including day camps. IN KEEPING WITH THE POLICY OF THE METHODIST CHURCH ON RACE, SUCH STANDARDS SHALL CONTAIN A RECOMMENDATION THAT ALL CAMPS SHALL BE AVAILABLE TO ALL PERSONS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE OR NATIONAL ORIGIN.

The board (of Hospitals and Homes) shall formulate standards, spiritual, financial and scientific, to protect the aims and ideals of The Methodist Church and shall encourage and assist institutions in attaining these standards. ALL HOSPITALS AND HOMES OPERATED BY, OR UNDER THE AUSPICES OF, OR RELATED TO ANY CONNECTIONAL UNIT OF THE METHODIST CHURCH ARE URGED TO MAKE THEIR PROGRAMS AND SERVICES AVAILABLE TO ALL PERSONS REGARDLESS OF RACE.

THE BISHOPS, BEARING IN MIND THE STATED GOALS OF AN INCLUSIVE CHURCH, SHALL SEEK THE COOPERATION OF CABINETS AND CONGREGATIONS IN THE APPOINTMENT OF PASTORS WITHOUT REGARD TO RACE OR COLOR.

THE COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE SHALL REPORT TO THE COUNCIL OF BISHOPS IN 1966, AND TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE IN 1968, THE RESULTS OF SURVEYS OF THE SERVICES AND EMPLOYMENT POLICIES, WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN HIRING AND ADVANCEMENT, OF ALL INSTITUTIONS AND AGENCIES OF THE CHURCH WHICH RECEIVED FINANCIAL SUPPORT FROM THE COUNCIL ON WORLD SERVICE AND FINANCE.

File

INTER-FAITH CONFERENCE

- A Confrontation of

"THE EVILS WE DEPLORE"

FEBRUARY 26, 1965 - 10:30 A.M.

THE TEMPLE, 1589 Peachtree St., N.E.

Abou Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase!):
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich, and like a lily in bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold;
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
And with a look made of all sweet accord,
Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."
"And is mine one?", said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the Angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still, and said, "I pray thee, then Write me as one who loves his fellow-men."
The Angel wrote and vanished; the next night
It came again with a great wakening light,
And show'd the names whom love of God hast blest
And lo! Ben Adhem's led all the rest.

--Leigh Hunt
(1784-1859)

P R O G R A M

10:30 - 12:45

PRAYER - (In Unison)

O God of boundless might and incomprehensible glory, infinite compassion and measureless love to man; look down upon us as we gather for this hour of self-searching of the inner recesses of our hearts.

Show us the riches of Thy mercy and tenderness, and make us worthy, with a pure heart, and a contrite spirit, with hallowed lips and lives that have no need to be ashamed to pray unto Thee. AMEN.

GREETINGS - Rabbi Jacob M. Rothschild

PURPOSE - Mrs. M. E. Tilly

PLAY - "Some of My Best Friends" - (Youth Group)

Elizabeth Edwards
James Price
Serelda Smith
Patrick Tracy
Patsy Wise

"THE EVILS WE DEPLORE" - (Speakers)

Mrs. Ella Mae Brayboy
Mrs. Betty Cantor
Mrs. Edw. G. Holmes
Mr. Gordon Patton
Rev. Henry Steins

DISCUSSION GROUPS - "Save us from weak resignation
To the evil we deplore."

LEADERS - Mrs. Boone M. Bowen
Mrs. Thos. G. Brockman
Miss Estelle Clemmons
Mrs. Phil Narmore
Mrs. Stanley Rawn
Mrs. I. Wilen

REPORTERS - Mrs. Bruce Fanguy
Mrs. K. Kaplin
Mrs. R. N. McLemore, Jr.
Mrs. Nobbie Morgan
Mrs. Jack Patterson
Mrs. H. A. Rubin

SUMMARY - Rev. Don McEvoy

CLOSING PRAYER - (In Unison)

Eternal Spirit of good will,
Help us to keep our hearts warm with affection,
And with a spirit of forgiveness and brotherly cooperation,
And with zeal to promote good will among men. AMEN.

PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS:

Atlanta Diocese of Catholic Women
B'nai B'rith
National Conference of Christians and Jews
Southern Regional Council
United Church Women

PLANNING COMMITTEE:

Mrs. J. W. E. Bowen
Mrs. Edw. P. Faust
Mrs. J. C. Howard
Rev. Don McEvoy
Mrs. Phil Narmore
Mrs. Stanley Rawn
Mrs. M. E. Tilly

PROGRAM COVER:

Designed and drawn by

Miss Marge Manderson

Lettered by

Mrs. Sue Rusche

February 26, 1965
Atlanta, Georgia

File Movement

NEW STYLES IN "LEFTISM"

Ideologues and Desperadoes . . . The Cult of Verbal Violence . . . Charismatic Leaders and Authoritarian States . . . The Decline of the West . . . Politics as Style

by IRVING HOWE

Reprinted from DISSENT, Summer 1965

File
leftists

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT WHITE PAPER ON VIETNAM

Prepared by the

MAY 2nd COMMITTEE
Harvard-Radcliffe

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT WHITE PAPER ON VIETNAM

Published by:

MAY 2nd COMMITTEE
Harvard-Radcliffe
39 Putnam Avenue
Cambridge 38, Mass.

Printed in the U.S.A.
April, 1965

116

If the cause the U.S. Government supports in Vietnam is just, and the war it has been waging is honorable, why have the facts about Vietnam been kept secret from the American people for almost 15 years? Secretly, the U.S. began its role by financing the French in a losing colonial war. Secretly, U.S. involvement increased as more and more Special Forces troops were sent as "advisors." The secrecy prevailed until the activities of the U.S. in Vietnam attracted the attention of the entire world and could no longer be kept from the American people. Then, on February 27, 1965, the U.S. State Department issued a White Paper attempting to justify the presence and conduct of the U.S. Armed Forces in Vietnam.

The White Paper was presented with the strong implication that the policy it was trying to justify was being instituted for the first time. In fact there is nothing new about either the policy or the justifications being offered for it. The Administration has moved from secret escalation on a lower level to overt escalation toward a major war. Each act of escalation has been presented as a fait accompli and described as a response to provocations. The White Paper seems to have been issued to justify continual escalation in lieu of specific rationalizations. This analysis will demonstrate that the whole scheme of secrecy and rationalization constitutes an attempt by the Administration to push through a war policy in Vietnam while avoiding the protest that would inevitably arise if the American people were given the facts.

In early February the Administration notified the American people that it had made overt air strikes against North Vietnam. These "retaliatory measures" were but an escalation of earlier attacks on North Vietnam, which began in 1957 with intelligence and counter-espionage operations. They picked up after 1961 when the Kennedy Administration sought to "disorganize the economic and military potential of the North in order to prevent its aid to the rebels in the South, an aid they feared without yet having formal proof of it." (Georges Chafford in Le Monde, August 9, 1964)

The Administration had not informed the American people about this phase of its "advisory" activity. An article that appeared in Aviation Week on April 6, 1964, stated,

> "War against the Communists has erupted over the borders of South Vietnam in hit and run guerrilla raids and infiltration moves as far north as China... With U.S. backing in aircraft, weapons and money an estimated 50,000 elite South Vietnamese troops are being trained to take the offensive in over-the-border strikes at Communist supply centers and communications routes. Despite Defense Secretary McNamara's implication in Washington March 26 that the decision has not yet been made to extend the war it is known here that guerrilla strikes against the Communists have been increasing since last summer..."

On August 4, 1964, the Administration "retaliated" for an alleged attack on an American ship by North Vietnamese P.T. boats. But the U.S. destroyers were in fact providing an escort for a flotilla of South Vietnamese junks that were raiding the North Vietnamese coast, and were within 12 miles of the North Vietnamese coastline. Any vessel committing hostile acts within 12 miles of our shores would also be attacked. At the time of the alleged incidents the Administration claimed that there had been two attacks and that on the second occasion the American ships were withdrawing from North Vietnamese coastal waters. The Administration could furnish neither flotsam and jetsam nor pictures of the three boats that were allegedly sunk during the second attack, which North Vietnam has claimed was a complete fabrication. Turning to the reprisals themselves Professor Bernard Fall, author of The Two Viet-Nams, wrote in the Washington Post on August 9 that "none of the targets attacked (during the American "reprisal raids") was previously known as a regular port or base area. Hon-Gay, for example, was one of the largest open-pit coal mining operations in Asia, if not the world." (quoted in I. F. Stone's Weekly, August 24, 1964) In the same issue Stone further pointed out that on August 9 when Senator Eugene McCarthy was queried by Robert Pierpoint on "Face the Nation" as to why "the North Vietnamese navy would have decided to take on the U.S. Navy?" the Senator replied, "I don't know, it may be that they were bored."

The American public, however, did not respond belligerently to the alleged North Vietnamese attacks upon our ships, and during the election campaign President Johnson felt it politic to project himself as the "peace candidate." On September 28 he said that > "...some of our people—Mr. Nixon, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Scranton and Mr. Goldwater—have all, at some time or other suggested the possible wisdom of going north in Vietnam... When we retaliated in the Tonkin Gulf, we dropped bombs... within 35 miles of the Chinese border. I don't know what you would think if they started dropping them 35 miles from your border, but I think it is something you have to take into consideration. So we are not going north and we are not going south... We think that losing 190 lives in the period that we have been out there is bad, but it is nothing like the 190,000 that we might lose the first month if we escalated the war..." (L.B.J. at Manchester, N.Y., September 28, verbatim White House text)

In February the Johnson Administration took up again the policies it had abandoned before the election. A new series of "retaliations" were launched for the Vietcong attack on Pleiku. This time Administration sources alleged "that the size and intensity of the attack indicated that it was a major blow carefully timed by Hanoi." But Charles Mohr in the New York Times of February 8 noted:

> "...Reports from the field indicated...(that) this is not a large Vietcong assault. Many are much larger. There were American casualties, but the attack was not especially intense... Another factor advanced by Government sources is a belief that attacks launched the same night...indicated a pattern of overall direction probably from Hanoi. Since larger numbers of Vietcong attacks have taken place throughout South Vietnam on other nights, why should this particular conclusion necessarily follow? There were other inconsistencies in the Administration's story: Secretary McNamara ...at his news conference...said he did not believe 'it would ever be possible to protect our forces against a sneak attack of that kind, that the mortars had been fired from a considerable distance, and that clumps of foliage on the generally open plateau had offered cover.' Reports from Pleiku, however, later established that the Vietcong had been able to crawl right onto the U.S. helicopter base to place explosive charges against barracks walls on the outstrip."

Even though no evidence was produced indicating North Vietnamese involvement in the specific attack, the Administration proceeded to "retaliate" against "military targets" in the North, among which was the village of Dong Hoi, bombed on February 7. On February 17 Bernard Fall noted in a radio interview that Dong Hoi is "a small fishing village with only a small road leading out of it." Defense Secretary McNamara had told the press that "Dong Hoi was a staging area for sending soldiers and supplies into South Vietnam." Fall said that this was extremely improbable, pointing out first that the village has only one small road. Secondly, he noted, it can easily be watched as well as shelled from the sea, eliminating any military need for air strikes. "And thirdly, a team of the International Control Commission was stationed in Dong Hoi at the time...One member nation of the Commission, Canada, a close ally of the United States,... certainly would report to this country any hostile military actions.... For the Communists to put depots in the path of the International Control Commission would be unlikely," he said. (I.F. Stone's Weekly, March 1,1965)

The Defense Department and the State Department had been experiencing some difficulty in keeping their rationalizations consistent. On the one hand, the Defense Department justified "reprisals" against Hanoi by alleging that the given occasions for the reprisal represented important acts of intervention by the North in the civil war in the South, whereas the State Department has made Hanoi solely responsible for the existence and continuation of all strife in South Vietnam. If the Defense Department was right, then the State Department was wrong, since the Defense Department's rationalizations freed Hanoi from general responsibility for the war and pointed instead to specific acts of intervention that had to be punished. If, however, the State Department was right, then the rationalizations of the Defense Department were meaningless.

In addition, the State Department's version of the starting point of Hanoi's offensive prior to the latest White Paper upset the justification of the Defense Department's actions preceding that date. In his speech before the Economic Club of New York on April 22, 1963, Secretary of State Rusk asserted that "the Communists... decided in 1959 to renew their assault on South Vietnam." (I.F. Stone's Weekly, October 28, 1964) If the offensive was "renewed," it had apparently ceased at some time prior to its renewal in 1959. This destroys the Defense Department's justification for waging an uninterrupted war against the North since 1957. (Georges Chaffard in Le Monde, August 7, 1964)

With the publication of the recent White Paper, the State Department and the Defense Department have achieved a desired meeting of the minds. The attack is transformed into a continual process beginning in 1956, while the Defense Department's policy, it is claimed, has been to limit operations against Hanoi's aggression to the territorial confines of South Vietnam until the recent air strikes. According to the White Paper,

> "...after 1956 Hanoi rebuilt, reorganized and expanded its covert political and military machinery in the South.... In short, Hanoi and its forces in the South prepared to take by force and violence what they failed to achieve by other means.... By 1958 the use of terror by the Vietcong increased appreciably.... From 1959 through 1961 the pace of Vietcong terrorism and armed attacks accelerated substantially.... Though it has been apparent for years that the regime in Hanoi was conducting a campaign of conquest against South Vietnam....the Government in Saigon and the Government of the United States both hoped that the danger could be met within South Vietnam itself. The hope that any widening of the conflict could be avoided was stated frequently. The leaders in Hanoi chose to respond with greater violence.... Clearly the restraint of the past was not providing adequately for the defense of South Vietnam.... It was mutually agreed between the Governments of the Republic of Vietnam and the United States that further means for providing for South Vietnam's defense were required. Therefore air strikes have been made... (that) constitute a limited response to the aggression that produced them."

This new position distinguishes itself both by its inconsistency with either of the two official positions formerly held and by its false presentation of Defense Department policy since 1957. However, even this partial success of the White Paper in effecting a meeting of the official minds represented considerable progress in comparison with the uncertainty, embarrassment and discord which prevailed when the Administration adopted in February the policy which it had explicitly rejected in September.

In the New York Times on February 18 Max Frankel reported from Washington:

> "President Johnson and Vice-President Humphrey indicated in brief public comments... what their associates have been reiterating in private: that they see no alternative at the present moment to standing militarily...at the side of the South Vietnamese Government and that a call for negotiations or any other commitment to future tactics would further weaken the position of anti-Communist forces in Asia. The reasoning behind this position has not been made explicit. A number of high State Department officials have described themselves as embarassed by uncertainty in conversations with colleagues in allied embassies. Members of Congress who oppose negotiations have joined those who favor them in urging the President to explain his tactics and objectives. Some of Mr. Johnson's reticence has been ascribed to differences among Mr. Johnson's closest advisers about the extent to which retaliatory attacks upon North Vietnam should continue. But fear of displaying an interest in negotiations has been virtually unanimous.

"The private response of officials to the appeals for negotiations has been, 'When and with whom?' It is based on a belief that the non-Communist forces of South Vietnam are too weak politically and militarily to negotiate anything except the surrender of their country to the Vietcong. The question is based too on a belief that even if the Soviet Union, Communist China, and North Vietnam were interested in guaranteeing the "neutrality" of South Vietnam they could not persuade the Vietcong to lay down their arms without assuring them a dominant position in the future Saigon governments—the equivalent, in Washington's eyes, of a defeat...."

By publishing the White Paper the Administration has sought to restore consensus amidst this confusion. The position reached is that,

"Above all, the war in Vietnam is not a spontaneous and local rebellion against the established government.... In Vietnam a Communist government has set out deliberately to conquer a sovereign people in a neighboring state. And to achieve its end it has used every resource of its own government to carry out its carefully planned program of concealed aggression."

President Johnson has repeatedly stressed that the United States' goal is to see peace secured in Southeast Asia. But he has noted that

"...that will come only when the aggressors leave their neighbors in peace. The people of South Vietnam have chosen to resist this threat. At their request, the United States has taken its place beside them in their defensive struggle.... The choice between peace and continued and increasingly destructive conflict is one for the authorities in Hanoi to make."

This position raises an important question: How is it that one week before the White Paper was written, officials believed that the "non-Communist forces of South Vietnam are too weak politically and militarily to negotiate anything except the surrender of their country to the Vietcong" and that the Soviet Union, China, and North Vietnam "could not persuade the Vietcong to lay down their arms without assuring them a dominant position in future Saigon governments..."?

If North Vietnam alone, not to mention the Soviet Union and China, could not compel the Vietcong to surrender, then the Vietcong is apparently not controlled from the North and its success cannot be attributed to the assistance of Hanoi. If the Vietcong was dependent, the North could compel the NLF to surrender by threatening to withdraw what the State Department describes as the overwhelming proportion of the "hard core Vietcong" and to cut off the flow of "up-to-date arms and special types of weapons." According to the White Paper, their requirements for such weapons "have risen to the point where the Vietcong cannot rely on captured stocks."

If the Vietcong is independent of the North Vietnamese regime, as high officials in the administration seem to fear, and with good reason, this independence is based on the ability of the Vietcong to withstand the withdrawal of support in men and material from the North. The striking thing about the State Department's new White Paper is how little support it can prove. According to the Pentagon figures given in I.F. Stone's reply to the White Paper, which was published as an advertisement in the New York Times on Sunday, March 7, only 179 Communist-made weapons turned up in the 18 months from June 1962 to January 1964. This was only 2.5 per cent of the total weapons captured from the Vietcong during this period, hardly a measure of massive intervention.

But the White Paper says "dramatic new proof was discovered just as this report was being completed" in the capture of a suspected Vietcong arms cargo ship on February 16. The New York Times commented astringently on this in an editorial on February 28: "Apparently, the major new evidence of a need for escalating the war, with all the hazard that this entails, was provided by the sinking in a South Vietnamese cove earlier this month of a 100-ton cargo ship loaded with Communist-made small arms and ammunition. A ship of that size is not much above the Oriental junk class. The standard Liberty or Victory ship of World War II had a capacity of 7,150 to 7,600 tons." Stone comments further: "The affair of the cargo ship is curious. Until now there has been little evidence of arms coming in by ship. A huge fleet of small vessels patrols the coast and there have been glowing stories in the past of its efficiency. 'About 12,000 vessels, the AP reported from Saigon (New York Times, February 22) 'are searched each month by the South Vietnamese coastal junk patrol force but arrests are rare and no significant amounts of incriminating goods or weapons ever have been found.' This lone case of a whole shipload of arms is puzzling."

Stone's study also reveals that the White Paper was unable to establish that there has been a substantial movement of men from North to South Vietnam. "The White Paper claims 'that as many as 75 per cent of the more than 7000 Viet Cong who are reported to have entered the South in 1964 were natives of North Vietnam.' But a careful reading of the text and the appendices turns up the names of only six North Vietnamese infiltrees. In Part I of the White Paper, Section B gives 'individual case histories of North Vietnamese soldiers' sent South by Hanoi but all nine of these are of South Vietnamese origin. The next Section, C, is headed 'Infiltration of Native North Vietnamese.' It names five infiltrees but one of these is also from the South. That leaves four North Vietnamese natives. Then, in Appendix C, we are given the case histories and photographs of nine other Viet Cong sent South by Hanoi. The report does not explain which ones were originally from the South but it does give the names of the provinces in which they were born. When these are checked, it turns out that only two of the nine were born in North Vietnam. This gives us a total of six Northern infiltrees. It is strange that after five years of fighting, the White Paper can cite so few."

In short, there is precious little evidence for the Administration's claim of widespread outside aid for the Vietcong, from North Vietnam or anywhere else. The structure of the White Paper's argument in this instance is built upon crude techniques of statistical mystification. I.F. Stone points out that: "The number of North Vietnamese infiltrees (according to the White Paper) is 'based on information...from at least two independent sources.' Nowhere are we told how many men who infiltrated from the North have actually been captured. There is reason to wonder whether the count of infiltrees may be as bloated as the count of Viet Cong dead; in both cases the numbers used are estimates rather than actual bodies." (emphasis in original) In dealing with the alleged support in terms of arms and material the White Paper confines itself to the presentation of numbers and types of weapons captured. Nowhere does the White Paper deal with the question of what proportion of any specific type of weapon used by the Vietcong comes from the North, or for that matter what proportion of the total Vietcong arsenal is coming from the North. Without an answer to these questions it is absurd to present data in the form of numbers and types of weapons captured as evidence of control by Hanoi.

The Administration argues that the Communists lacked serious popular support in 1954, and that the South Vietnamese government through its own progressive economic and social policies succeeded in reducing that support to the point at which spontaneous popular rebellion was inconceivable. Therefore the Vietcong movement, this view continues, was dependent upon Hanoi from the beginning and has remained so because of its character as an agency of Hanoi attempting to overthrow a popular government.

The argument combines the virtues and deficiencies of medieval theology; it is logically consistent and empirically a non sequitur. In 1954-1955 Hanoi did not have to take any measures whatever to insure the support of the South Vietnamese people. It had been built up during a ten year struggle against the French colonial regime during which the Communist Vietminh gained a political position in the South which was as strong as their position in the North. In his memoirs former President Eisenhower states, "I have never talked or corresponded with a person knowledgeable in Indo-Chinese affairs who did not agree that had elections been held as of the time of fighting possibly 80 per cent of the population would have voted for the Communist Ho Chi Minh." (Mandate for Change, p. 372) Joseph Alsop writing in March 1955 stated, "If you ask the Americans here, (in Saigon) they will tell you that outside of the feudal domains of the military and religious sects, anywhere from 50-90 per cent of the Southern Indochinese villages are subject to Vietminh influence or control." French experts gave still higher figures: between 60-90 per cent. (Ellen Hammer, The Struggle for Indochina, p. 36) Ellen Hammer, who cited Alsop, observed that "some experts believed that the Vietminh was stronger south of the 17th parallel than it was in the North." (Ibid., p. 22) Graham Greene, writing in the New Republic of May 1955, stated, "You will find no Vietnamese who believes that the elections (scheduled for July 1956 under the Geneva Agreements of 1954) will ever be held...no one has the slightest doubt that Ho Chi Minh could agree to any form of supervision without risk; his majority in the north and south is assured." Finally in the New Yorker of June 25, 1955, Joseph Alsop wrote, with telling surprise, "I could hardly imagine a communist government that was also a popular government and almost a democratic government."

What the White Paper euphemistically refers to as "South Vietnam's refusal to fall in with Hanoi's scheme for a peaceful takeover" was Diem's refusal to hold the elections scheduled under the Geneva Agreement, a refusal which bears witness to the popularity of the Communist government of Hanoi in the South.

The White Paper alleges that the Diem regime consolidated and increased its support among the South Vietnamese people between 1954 and 1960. Strangely absent from the "evidence" that is supposed to indicate growing support for the regime is an assertion of the existence of political democracy in South Vietnam. Previously the State Department has been less modest concerning the achievements of its protege. Secretary of State Rusk, in his speech before the Economic Club of New York on April 22, 1963, noted that "their four national elections, their thousands of elected hamlet councils, and their forthcoming village council elections show steady movement toward a constitutional regime resting on popular consent." Other analysts were less enthusiastic. Bernard Fall sums up the situation that prevailed under the Diem regime as follows:

> "It is, in terms of the actual relations between government and governed, an absolute monarchy without a king, such as Admiral Horthy's Hungary...or as Franco's Spain.... Diem received absolute dictatorial powers on June 19 (1954).... Diem was never again to entrust his power to the incertitudes of parliamentary democracy." (The Two Viet-Nams, pp.237-244)

Secretary Rusk's indiscreet enthusiasm is missing from the White Paper, but it assumes, as does much of our government's propaganda, that the Diem government and its successors have merited and received the support of the South Vietnamese people. The State Department's "evidence" on this point is a hash of statistical confusion, phrase mongering and outright lies. Figures which purport to show an increase in food production per capita do not by any means indicate an increase in the consumption of food per capita. The political loyalty of the peasantry, which represents over 80 per cent of the South Vietnamese population, does not depend on the increased productivity of peasant labor, but on what the peasants are getting out of the increase in production. The latter, in turn, depends on the structure of landholding, rent and taxes, or conversely on what the peasants themselves are paying for increased production both socially and economically. The White Paper approaches this question very indirectly, failing to go beyond the sterile cliche. "An agrarian reform program was instituted." The White Paper is conspicuously silent on the substance of that reform, its effects on those peasants who had lived under Viet Minh rule, the manner in which it was implemented, and its political consequences.

The White Paper statement that "food production levels of pre-war years were reached and surpassed" is an outright lie. Official South Vietnamese and U.S. Government statistics indicate that with the single exception of 1959 total rice yields were below the level of 1938; after 1959 the figures move steadily downward until the last official estimate in 1962, which gives a figure that is well below the offical estimate for 1938. The official figures as presented by Bernard Fall are as follows: (op. cit., p. 294)

Year	Total Yield (metric tons)
1938	5,300,000
1954	2,565,540
1955	2,839,324
1956	3,412,567
1957	3.191,567
1958	3,995,333
1959	5,311,250
1960	4,955,000
1961	4,259,000
1962	3,000,000

As far as these statistics were used at all in the White Paper to adduce increases in food production per capita, Professor Fall's observations as to their creditability places the honesty of the entire procedure in question. U.S. Government estimates and official South Vietnamese estimates are often at variance; and "even those so-called official figures are subject to retroactive revisions....Private sources vary even more sharply....The foregoing makes it obvious that even 'Western statistics—since they are in the post-colonial era usually derived from local base figures—must be taken with a grain of salt." (Ibid., p. 294)

As far as it is possible to conclude anything from these statistics, the picture is dismal, especially when it is recalled that the population of South Vietnam has increased by 50 per cent since 1938 and is currently increasing at a rate of 3 per cent per annum. In short, food consumption per capita has declined drastically since the pre-war period.

The statement in the White Paper that "Production of textiles increased in the South more than 20 per cent in one year (1958)" is improbable, to say the least. Professor Fall, writing in Pactific Affairs in September 1958, cited "the official organ of the Saigon Chamber of Commerce, April 11, 1958." It described the situation of the textile industry as follows: "The newspapers of the past week have announced the closing of many spinneries...12,067 textile worker families will be out of work....Mill owners have stated that the textile weaving industry is at present the prey of difficulties it had never known before. The artisans bring their product to market, but find themselves faced everywhere with strongly rivalizing foreign products....On March 28, 1958, the Federation of Vietnamese Industrialists in a meeting of its delegates with the Vice-President of the Republic stated that "the invasion of the Vietnamese market by foreign products has almost paralyzed local production...." Professor Robert Scigliano, in his volume South Vietnam Since Independence, refers to a 1958 industrial study that "showed half of Vietnam's industrial capacity to be unutilized." (p. 116)

The White Paper's statement that "in the same year, South Vietnam's sugar crop increased more than 100 per cent" represents an attempt to create a general impression of growth and prosperity by introducing an irrelevant datum. Sugar is a rather insignificant item in the total South Vietnamese food production. The production figure for sugar in 1960 was 57,091 tons, compared to 4,955,000 metric tons of rice. In any event, the production of sugar in 1960 was well below the level of production in 1938. According to Bernard Fall:

"...South Vietnam, save for coffee, never even reached pre-war levels—let alone made up for the impressive population growth.... Since the cease fire, the value of food imports to South Vietnam has almost consistently exceeded the value of food exports ..." in spite of the fact that South Vietnam is an agricultural country. (Fall, p. 293)

The irrelevance of this figure as an index of economic development is most clearly seen from Fall's observation that "diversification of the economic structure is further off in the mid 1960's than it was in the colonial era or at any time between the two wars." (Fall, p. 296)

According to official statistics cited by Fall in 1962, "In a population of more than 14 million only 4.8 million out of 9 million potential workers are employed; of those, 3.9 million are in agriculture." And outside of the armed forces and the civil administration which absorbed another 600,000, there were 300,000 working in other economic activities, including 50,000 domestic servants. (Fall, p. 312)

In June 1962, a study cited by Fall summed up the situation as follows:

Merely to avoid urban pauperization, 400,000-500,000 jobs would have to be created each year. (There are fewer than 100,000 jobs a year opening now.) Present investment, internal and foreign, amounts to about 8 million a year; about 120 million would be needed just to break even, in view of the fantastic population rise of 3 per cent per year." (p.301)

In short, the economic picture is one not of "steady progress and growing prosperity," but is summed up as follows: "After six years of large-scale American aid, Vietnam is becoming a permanent mendicant." This description was given by "...a former American taxation adviser to the South Vietnamese government, Professor Milton Taylor, in the fall of 1961 issue of Pacific Affairs." (Fall, p. 290)

According to the White Paper, "the elementary school population nearly quadrupled between 1956 and 1960." This statement is both factually inaccurate and a typical example of the State Department's statistical mystification. According to South Vietnamese government statistics cited by Fall, primary school attendance in 1956 was 638,104, whereas in 1960, it was 1,365,-939. (Fall, p. 314) Total attendance in primary schools doubled, not quadrupled, and the figures do not give any indication as to whether the number of places available matched the increase in the number of children of primary school age. Assuming conservatively that the population of South Vietnam was 10 million and assuming a linear increase of 3 per cent a year on that base, the number of children born in South Vietnam between 1956 and 1960 was 1.5 million, whereas the number of new places opened was 730,000. Thus, if the population estimates are correct, more children of school age were out of school in 1960 than in 1956.

The figures on building construction in South Vietnam published by the official American Aid Mission do not indicate that the regime has a social conscience. "Between 1957 and 1960 South Vietnam built 47,000 square meters of cinemas and dance halls and 6,500 square meters of hospitals, 3,500 square meters of rice mills, and 86,000 square meters of schools but 425,000 square meters of high-rent villas and apartment buildings." (Fall, p. 315)

According to the conservative Australian journalist, Denis Warner,

"A meager 1,4 per cent of United States aid, or $15 million, went to agriculture between 1955 and 1960. The much-vaunted rural help programme does not exist. Land reform was a flop. Industry was insignificant.... In the first five years of American assistance, 87 per cent of the non-military aid came in the form of commodity imports. These were sold by the Vietnamese government. The piastres thus generated went into a counterpart fund from which the government paid the army.... Nearly half the imports were in the form of consumer goods and their display in the shop windows, and their use by the well-heeled minority distracted attention from the lack of well-being and the mounting unemployment, or underemployment, among the majority." (Warner, The Last Confucian, pp. 137-8)

If imported food was to help the peasants

they would have to buy it. There is some reason to think that peasants were not in a position to buy anything.

> "The Japanese peasant pays the equivalent of 600 piastres for a ton of (fertilizer); the Vietnamese pays 2,300 piastres a ton—if he buys it, or can afford to buy it. The Japanese rice sells at 1,000 piastres a ton; Vietnamese rice at 600 piastres. The Japanese yield is about five tons a hectare, the Vietnamese yield only slightly more than two. The Japanese peasant is conservative and satisfied with the status quo. What should we expect the Vietnamese peasant to be?" (Warner, p. 141)

It is unlikely that many peasants buy imported food.

The famous Diem land reform was preceded by efforts on his part to provide social cohesion and eliminate opposition to his government. In mid-1955 Diem proclaimed the "Anti-Communist Denunciation Campaign," under which all Vietnamese were called upon to denounce anyone who was suspected of any loyalties to or past associations with the Vietminh. "Political Re-education Centers" were established as early as 1954, and a presidential ordinance of January 1956 provided for the arrest and indefinite detention of anyone deemed dangerous to the State. (Scigliano, pp. 167-70) The South Vietnamese Secretary of State for Information stated in 1956 that "between 15,000 and 20,000 Communists and active sympathizers had been held in political re-education centers since 1954. This figure was probably low at the time." (Scigliano, p. 171) However it turned out that "the majority of the detainees (were) neither Communists nor pro-Communists," according to Scigliano. (p. 171)

Diem's avowed purpose, according to Edgar Snow (The Other Side of the River, p. 700), was

> "...to confound the Communists (by providing) land for the landless tillers, to show that the regime stood for some betterment of the havenots. With a satisfied peasantry as its foundation the whole countryside might have been stabilized."

As it was, South Vietnam was an obvious field for thoroughgoing land reform. According to Fall's figures, of 2,300,000 hectacres of rice land owned by 250,000 landholders, 1,045,000 nectacres, or 45 per cent of the land, was owned by 6,300 people, or only 2 per cent of the landholders; whereas 345,000 hectacres, or only 15 per cent of the land, was owned by 183,000 people, or 72 per cent of all landholders. (Fall, p. 308)

The success of Diem's scheme for winning the loyalty of the South Vietnamese peasantry demanded that Diem would present those peasants who had experienced the Vietminh land reforms with a program which offered them the maintenance or improvement of their present conditions. According to Fall, "The Communist land reform...had been in effect in some areas from 1945-1955." (P. 309) If we begin with the previously cited American and French estimates of population subject to Vietminh influence or control, it might be conservatively estimated that the Vietminh land reform was experienced by 40 per cent of the South Vietnamese population. The Vietminh program consisted in the removal of those landlords who had not already fled and consequently the abolition of rent and the redistribution of the landholders' estates among the peasantry. The peasantry no longer were paying taxes to Saigon, but instead were paying a food quota to the Vietminh. Given the redistribution of land and the abolition of rent, the tax load imposed by the Vietminh was probably lighter than the sum of previous burdens.

The substance and effect of Diem's measures upon these peasants are described by Denis Warner: "In areas where lack of security had for many years prevented the landlords from visiting or collecting rents from their properties, the peasants regarded the land reform as an added tax, or worse. While the land reform programme proper was in the mill, Diem promulgated regulations governing the maximum rentals that should be paid by tenants to landlords. The rates were fixed at 15 to 25 per cent of the principal crop. Though ths was meant to depend on the fertility of the land, the landlords gaining access to their family estate after many years of Viet Minh control chose to interpret the 25 per cent as a legal minimum, and often charged much higher rate.

> "The propaganda opportunities such practices presented to the Viet Cong were obvious enough. The political subtleties of the situation were beyond the peasants. All they knew was that Diem had brought the landlords back. To be sure, they had to pay taxes to the Viet Minh and were liable to compulsory service either as porters or as guerrillas, but they knew the money did not go to the profit of absentee landlords. Thus, in September 1957, when they discovered that in addition to the payment of what they regarded as exorbitant rentals they now faced the payment of high prices (from $7 to $428 a hectare) for land they had once all but regarded as their own, they did not often respond with the enthusiasm that Saigon and Washington attributed to them." (p. 140)

In effect the rent reduction was a rent increase for those peasants under Vietminh control and for the remainder of the peasantry it was an empty promise: a promise that recognized the illegitimacy of the prevailing situation while doing nothing to change it. The effect of such promises was to undermine social stability and thereby to promote revolution.

The land redistribution program of Diem had a built-in conservative bias—land was sold, and not given, to the peasants—and its enforcement was similar in character to that of the rent reduction. The peasants who had experienced the Vietminh reform felt robbed. The remainder was presented with empty promises.

> "In marked contrast to the land reform programme on Taiwan...or in Japan,... South Vietnam's land reform was anything but radical. A landlord in South Vietnam may retain up to a hundred hectares of rice land and another fifteen hectares for burial grounds and ancestor worship. To have been cut down to this level may have been unpleasant for the rich; but it was precious little help to the poor in a country where half a million peasant families own farms of one hectare or less.
>
> "The programme lacked regulatory machinery to control tenant-landlord registration, and all sorts of side arrangements were entered into to defeat its intention. In Central Vietnam, where there are at least a hundred thousand farms of one hectare or less, each village has public lands which, in theory, it rents out at reasonable rates to the poorest peasants. The idea is that the public lands should provide both village revenue and relief. In practice, the system usually works as yet another means for squeeze and graft by appointed village chiefs and one of the worst forms of land exploitation. No security of tenure is given beyond the crop year, and there is no incentive for crop or land improvement when the poor peasants are allowed on the land. More often than not they do not get a chance at all, and the land goes to the richest and most prominent landlord." (Warner, p. 139)

It was this land reform program, implemented by an authoritarian regime that could not provide enough food or jobs to keep up with population growth and accompanied by a government terror campaign in the countryside that produced the revolt of the Vietnamese peasantry and the Vietcong as the agency of that revolt. Acccording to Devilliers:

> "...the Diem regime, haunted by a strange desire to bring back into being the society of former days, when there were no sects and no Communists, and reckoning that it would itself be safe in the future, accentuated its authoritarian and repressive character....
>
> "The Diem government...launched out in 1957 in to what amounted to a series of manhunts.... A considerable number of people were arrested in this way and sent to concentration camps.... This repression was in theory aimed at the Communists. In fact, it affected all those, and there were many—democrats, socialists, liberals, adherents of the sects—who were bold enough to express their disagreement with the line of policy adopted by the ruling oligarchy....
>
> "In 1958 the situation grew worse.... The Communists, finding themselves hunted down, began to fight back. Informers were sought out and shot in increasing numbers, and village chiefs who had presided over the denunciations, village notables and members of the militia who took part were frequently treated in the same way. The people of the villages, thus intimidated fell silent. Diem's police and army saw their sources of information drying up one after another. To make good the lack, they resorted to worse barbarity, hoping to inspire an even greater terror among the villagers than that inspired by the Communists. And in that fateful year of 1958 they overstepped their bounds. The peasants, disgusted to see Diem's men acting in this way, lent their assistance to the Communists...." (Phillippe Devillers, "The Struggle For the Unification of Vietnam," as quoted in I.F. Stone's Weekly, October 28, 1963)

"Out in the more remote villages of mud and wattle, the government was identified as the man in uniform who came on a punitive raid, or with a heavy bodyguard, and they always wanted something — money, labour, or even those suspected, sometimes incorrectly, of working for the Viet Cong. The Viet Cong cadre, on the other hand, was barefooted and dressed in black like every other peasant. He made tax demands, but they were not excessive. He was meticulous about paying for food and lodging, and scrupulous, also, in his relations with village girls and with the villagers' property. To begin with, he did not talk Communism or Marxism, but exploited local grievances, and was at pains to implement the idea that the Vietnamese had overthrown French colonialism only to be saddled by President Diem with American colonialism. It was simple propaganda, but effective....

"The people are not interested in Communism or in anti-Communism. Above all, they are interested in land, and what that means to their livelihood.... They are interested in schooling and in health. The Diem administration lost its following only when the landlords returned and the Communists exploited their demands." (Warner, pp. 32, 151)

"In December 1958 the death of some 20 Viet Cong detainees in the Phu Loi concentration camp served to fan the flames of anger of the guerrillas.... In the course of that December and the following January armed bands sprang into being almost everywhere....

"What did the authorities of the Democratic Republic of (North) Vietnam do in the face of these sad circumstances? They protested in diplomatic notes. The members of the Viet Minh cadre in the south, who had been promised by Hanoi that unification would be rapidly achieved, had to listen to the bitter remarks that were made to them about the inability of the North to do anything about the Diem dictatorship. The overriding needs of the world-wide strategy of the Socialist camp meant little or nothing to guerrilla fighters being hunted down in Nam-Bo.

"It was in such a climate of feeling that, in 1959, responsible elements of the Communist Resistance in Indo-China came to the conclusion that they had to act, whether Hanoi wanted to or not. They could no longer continue to stand by while their supporters were arrested, thrown into prison and tortured....

"The point of view of most foreign governments, especially in the West, is that the fighting going on in South Vietnam is simply a subversive campaign directed from Hanoi...it leaves out of account the fact that the insurrection existed before the Communists decided to take part, and that they were simply forced to join in. And even among the Communists, the initiative did not originate in Hanoi, but from the grass roots, where the people were literally driven by Diem to take up arms in self-defense." (Devillers, op. cit., as quoted in I.F. Stone's Weekly, October 28, 1963)

The State Department's White Paper is clearly an attempt to justify the unjustifiable by blatant falsehood. But the significance of the White Paper lies far beyond its relevance to the struggle in deceiving some Americans as to the nature of our policy, there is no doubt that the people of Vietnam, who know the bitter truth far better than we, will some day determine their own destiny. Americans, however, will continue to live with a government that to maintain its power has arrogated to itself the right to lie and consciously deceive in a manner unprecedented in our history. Democracy presupposes free discussion of the issues that determine the destiny of a nation, but this free discussion is meaningful only if the people are fully and honestly informed.

Many Americans have reacted skeptically to the White Paper. It is as if the very secrecy that shrouded the early stages of the war has left the people with a great, unvoiced suspicion that the U.S. role in Vietnam is unjust. We conclude this analysis in the hope that a sense of justice will prevail in our country and it will lead the American people to oppose our government and bring about the peace.

FOR ADDITIONAL COPIES WRITE:

MAY SECOND MOVEMENT
39 Putnam Avenue
Cambridge 38, Mass.

THE CRISIS IN OUR LIBRARIES

By JAMES E. BRYAN
President,
American Library Association
Member,
Kiwanis Club of Newark, New Jersey

PUBLIC AND SCHOOL libraries today face a crisis of proportions undreamed of a few short years ago. Even those who before 1957 pleaded for more attention to education could not anticipate the effect of Sputnik's launching. The feat shook America's educational foundations, and one of the effects of that tremor was a stampede of both adults and children to our libraries.

In one eastern city alone—Baltimore, Maryland—a recent study shows that high school students get 5 million books during the school year and must spend 11 to 12 million hours during the year in libraries. And other recent American Library Association study revealed that adult circulation in public libraries increased 40 per cent in the past six years.

Yet, despite this growing use of libraries and increasing pressure to provide more and better services, 18 million Americans have no library service at all, and 110 million have inadequate library service. The current per capita expenditure for library materials and services is half what is required. It is estimated that 25,000 professional librarians are needed today, and 130,000 would be needed if all libraries were up to national standards of library service.

All libraries are affected by this rush to learn. Fewer than 50 per cent of the libraries in four-year colleges meet minimum standards established by the American Library Association, and the problem grows daily. Projections show that public school populations—33.8 million in 1959—will be increased another 10 million by 1969. College and university students totalled 3.4 million in 1959, and by 1970 another 2.5 million will be added.

Librarians work overtime to provide services in their communities. They keep open longer, promote the use of libraries in every conceivable manner, provide film services for club programs, conduct lecture and concert series, and give language assistance through phonograph recordings. Some have even experimented with rapid reading and teaching machines, while many have educational television and radio programs.

That they have succeeded in promoting use of libraries is evident. The question is: What now?

In our democracy, support for libraries and improved services must come from the citizens at the local level. The Congressman from your district wants to know how you feel about federal aid to libraries before he casts his vote on pending educational legislation. And for your own community, not only do you approve the tax rates that support most public libraries, but you elect the board of education members who decide how the tax funds of the school district will be spent.

It's here, at the community level, that Kiwanians can give support for better library service. If your club does not already have a library assistance program—and many do—it may want to adopt one. As one part of such a program, for example, the club might send a representative to speak for improved library service at school or village board meetings.

Meanwhile, the library can help your club. Your members may not be fully acquainted with the extent to which the library can fill their business and professional needs. Most libraries serve as community centers of information, and most librarians will be glad to explain this facet of their work at a club meeting. In fact, a librarian can be a valuable member of your club, and if he isn't already a member, you might invite him to join. The modern library, with its lecture programs, film and phonograph recording collections, and adult services programs, is an excellent source of program material, and the librarian's broad knowledge of this information can help maintain club attendance and membership.

Librarians will also cooperate in presenting programs that will alert club members to the needs of local libraries. And the state library, located in your state capital, has consultants who assist in developing programs for new library services and activities. These consultants work with groups like Kiwanis clubs and the local librarian not only to improve library service but to make the community more aware of what the library has to offer.

Good library service is an asset to any town. Kiwanians are in an excellent position to contribute to the improvement of that service and also to share in the many benefits it will bring. THE END

REPRINTED FROM THE APRIL 1963 ISSUE
OF
THE KIWANIS MAGAZINE

ATLANTA PUBLIC LIBRARY

BOOK SELECTION POLICY

GENERAL OBJECTIVES

In a democracy, free access to ideas and information is essential and basic to almost all of the other freedoms. Public libraries must provide the books and other materials which will enable patrons to make intelligent and informed decisions on the issues of the day. The American system was founded on the fundamental belief that the average citizen, given access to fact, is capable of arriving at truth, of recognizing propaganda and of rejecting distortion.

As an essential part of the American system, the public library attracts patrons with widely divergent points of view of politics, religion, ethics and with differing literary tastes. It must therefore select books which reflect various viewpoints and which vary in degree of sophistication.

The book selection policy of the Atlanta Public Library is intended to implement the general objectives of the library in its attempt to provide free library service to all the people in the community. The purpose of the selection process is to obtain expertly chosen books and other materials to further the library's program of providing (1) tools for self education, (2) organized information, (3) materials for aesthetic development, (4) preservation of local history, and (5) recreational reading. These materials are selected by the staff, making skilled use of selection aids: basic general lists, current general lists, special bibliographies for reference books and particular subject materials, and book reviewing journals. No one book-reviewing journal is relied upon exclusively; the critical opinions of reviewers are checked against each other.

RESPONSIBILITIES FOR BOOK SELECTION

The ultimate responsibility for book selection, as for all library activities, rests with the Director of the Library, who operates within the framework of policies determined by the Board of Trustees. This responsibility is shared in its execution among various departments of the Library and members of the staff.

The Director must be able to answer to the Board and to the public for actual selections made by the staff and therefore must have the right to reject or to recommend any book contrary to the recommendations of the staff.

The Heads of Reference, Business and Science, and Fine Arts Departments are responsible for the selection of material in their fields. Selection of books in other subjects is divided among several professional members of the staff whose education, backgrounds and interest best qualify them to recommend books in their fields.

The Head of the Children's Department is responsible for the selection of all books for children though her responsibility is shared by the branch librarians. No title is added to the collection without first having been read by a staff member.

The selection of books for the branches and the bookmobiles is made by the agency librarian from the titles approved for purchase for the Main Library. They may, of course, make suggestions for the consideration of the Main selectors, but usually the branches will not acquire titles that Main does not have.

In addition to the selection of new titles, it is also the responsibility of the selectors to maintain a close watch over the collection in their subject fields to see where more material or additional titles are needed. They also, by judicious weeding of out-of-date materials and books that have outlived their usefulness, keep the Library's book collection live and up-to-date. In discarding, however, care is taken to be sure that the title has lost its value to the Library and when in doubt, titles considered for discard are checked in recognized lists of standard and desirable books. Books which are used only occasionally are transferred to closed stacks or, possibly, to the Reference Department.

GENERAL POLICIES

To meet the needs of the readers of a city the size of Atlanta, the Library attempts to provide a large general collection of reliable materials covering the broader fields of knowledge, with due regard for variations in educational level, reading ability and reading interest. Great works which are the basis of our civilization are provided, preferably in attractive editions. A generous proportion of the current output of reputable, general American publishers and a smaller number of the publications of the university presses and foreign publishers are purchased. Except in the field of local history, the Library does not aspire to provide extensive research materials; its aim is rather to provide a wide range of materials for reference and reading. The special emphases of other Atlanta libraries are carefully considered in selecting very specialized subject materials since the occasional demand for this type of material can usually be met through inter-library loan.

Patrons and staff members are encouraged to make suggestions of titles to be considered for purchase. Such requests are carefully considered and are weighed in relation to the total library program and policy.

Gifts of books and other materials are accepted by the Library with the understanding that they are not necessarily to be added to the collection. In some cases, materials received as gifts are added even though they would not ordinarily be purchased, but, in general, the same standards of selection are applied to gifts as to the purchase.

Materials are duplicated within reason to take care of permanent or even temporary demands, but always this is weighed in relation to the total Library program and the exigencies of the budget. A sound, readable book in heavy demand is duplicated when necessary, but the extensive duplication of sensational, trivial and biased books, however popular, is not desirable.

In considering the replacement of books lost or discarded, each case is weighed with regard to several factors: number of duplicate copies, existence of adequate coverage of a field, other similar material in the collection, especially later and better material, and demand for the particular title or subject. Every effort is made to replace important titles, including out-of-print items with second-hand dealers. As a rule, the responsibility for keeping the collection complete in this manner is that of the Main Library. Branches can usually substitute materials in print for a hard to replace title.

Replacement of books which, because of subject matter or illustrations, are continually mutilated may be seriously questioned. Where the title is considered essential to a well-rounded collection, consideration is given to assignment of the replaced copy in the Reference collection or in a locked case.

EVALUATION

In the selection of current titles, the Library relies on book reviews in a number of widely recognized publications such as the LIBRARY JOURNAL, AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION BOOKLIST, SATURDAY REVIEW, KIRKUS, NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW and the NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE BOOK REVIEW. In addition, a number of review sources covering specialized fields, such as the TECHNICAL BOOK REVIEW INDEX and the New York Public Library's NEW TECHNICAL BOOKS and various magazines are consulted. In cases of questionable or controversial titles, no one review is relied on exclusively, but the opinions of reviewers are checked against each other. In some doubtful cases or where reviewers disagree, approval copies are ordered for staff examination. This approach, however, is kept to a minimum due to lack of staff time.

In addition to reviews, publishers' catalogs, the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY and the BOOK BUYER'S GUIDE are also examined. While these publications do not afford a critical evaluation, many books in certain categories, such as the "how-to" titles are seldom reviewed. In selecting from these publications, however, care is taken to select titles from reputable publishers only. Books by recognized authors and books by local authors and on local subjects also are often ordered without waiting for reviews.

SELECTION IN SPECIFIC AREAS

ART

Major books on art, architecture, sculpture and the applied arts are selected, including works on the great periods and the great artists of those periods. Current directories of American artists, architects and musicians are purchased and art annuals giving current prices of art work and antiques.

In general, single copies are bought, and the more expensive editions are assigned to closed shelves. Some foreign editions are chosen when the book is outstanding and is not available in English.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Bibliographies of a practical nature are emphasized, eliminating the specific, detailed, scholarly type more appropiate for research and university libraries.

FICTION

A generous duplication of the great novels of the past in attractive editions is maintained. The Library also recognizes an obligation to include in its collection the current novels, which in the opinion of reputable reviewers, are most outstanding.

These are of many different types and some or them deal with situations and employ language that some readers may find objectionable. Novels are not excluded purely on the basis of the subject matter, realistic treatment or frank language. Literary quality and the purpose of the author and how well he succeeds are the criteria used. A limited number of the better light novels are bought, but in main, this type of book is supplied from a rental agency.

FOREIGN LANGUAGES

A limited number of books in French, German and Spanish and a very small number of some of the other languages are bought. No attempt is made to cover all fields of knowledge in any foreign language. There is some representation from the classics in each of the major collections, but the emphasis is on the acquisition of well-written current fiction, literature, biography, travel and history. Some translations of outstanding American books are bought, particularly those that will help to give a newcomer an understanding and appreication of American history and ideals.

GENEALOGIES

Books of southern genealogy which cover more than one family, the publications of the patriotic societies and local and regional county histories are purchased, as are guides on how to do genealogical research, standard genealogical encyclopedias and indexes. With the possible exception of Georgia families, the Library does not purchase genealogies dealing with only one family. These are, however, welcomed as gifts.

GEORGIA COLLECTION

Since one of the basic objectives of a public library is to serve as a repository for local materials past and present, the Library attempts to build as complete a collection of books about Georgia and by Georgians as possible. In general, a Georgia author is defined as any writer who has spent a significant part of his or her life in Georgia. This includes lifetime residents, and persons who, moving into the state as adults have been residents long enough to have made some contribution to the cultural life of the community. Writers born in the state who leave it in early childhood and short-term adult residents, such as professors in local colleges, are not regarded as local authors. An effort is made to secure at least one copy of any book or pamphlet about Atlanta or Georgia. The Library endeavors to collect and keep all editions of GONE WITH THE WIND.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

FEDERAL

The Atlanta Public Library is a selective depository for United States Government Documents. It does not attempt to include all publications, but selects those which, on the basis of experience of the staff, will be in fairly constant use. The selection is made by the Documents Librarian after consultation with subject specialists on the staff.

Duplicate copies for circulation and reference at the Main Library and branches are frequently purchased.

GEORGIA

Selections from official chech lists are made on the basis of anticipated use. Such documents are cataloged and classified with regular book material.

ATLANTA

The objective of the Library is to secure and organize a complete file of official Atlanta documents.

LAW

With the exception of the United States Code and the state and city codes, acquisition of law books is limited to those on general principles, philosophy, history and explanations designed for the layman.

LIBRARY SCIENCE

The collection of books on library science is intended for the use of staff members and interested members of the public. No attempt is made to assemble a complete history of libraries and library methods for research purposes.

MEDICINE

Most medical books are obviously unsuited for public libraries. Exceptions are histories of medicine, medical dictionaries, directories of physicians, dentists, and hospitals, general books of anatomy and physiology and certain texts for nurses, students, and technicians. Authoritative books on health and disease written specifically for the layman are generously supplied.

MUSIC

Books by authorities on music theory, composers, performance, composition, music history, study and teaching are bought for the general reader, but not books of scholarly interest only.

In the case of music scores, selection is limited to opera scores, miniature scores of symphonies, concerti, chamber music and to bound collections of folk songs, hymns, nursery songs and other standard favorites.

RELIGION

In the field of religion, selection should be broadly tolerant, and should include all of the great religions of the world. Books will be selected that are affirmative in their approach, avoiding those that show partisanship or are destructively critical of another faith. Histories of religions, classics in the field, works of the better-known theologians, authoritative statements of the beliefs of the various denominations and timely well-written inspirational books without a narrowly sectarian bias are purchased. Books and magazines specifically denominational and not of general interest are not bought but may be accepted as gifts.

SEMI- OR PSEUDO-SCIENTIFIC AND OCCULT MATERIALS

Basic books in this field are provided for informational purposes. The Library must balance its obligation to meet demand and to maintain tolerance and open-mindedness with its obligation to exclude materials which are poorly prepared and are available from other sources at low cost. High priority is given to titles included in the STANDARD CATALOG FOR PUBLIC LIBRARIES and other basic recommended lists.

SEX

Authoritative, sane and up-to-date books about sex are selected with regard to the needs of various ages and groups. Extremely scientific and technical works are not bought.

TEXTBOOKS

No attempt will be made to supply textbooks in quantity for the use of students since this is primarily the responsibility of the school and college libraries. However, a generous number of the best texts in certain fields, especially the sciences, grammar and mathematics - where they provide the best overall coverage at various levels of difficulty are provided.

SELECTION OF MATERIALS OTHER THAN BOOKS

COLLEGE CATALOGS

A large collection of the current catalogs of all of the outstanding colleges of the country, together with many of the minor ones and some foreign universities is maintained. All Atlanta and Georgia colleges and preparatory schools are represented.

FILMS

The library's film collection consists of 16mm sound films, educational in nature, but excluding teaching films produced for classroom use.

Films are selected by the Head of the Fine Arts Department and are previewed before purchase. Choice is governed by critical reviews in periodicals and by material from Producers Accuracy, honesty of presentation and technical excellence are considered in making a selection.

Films are primarily for the use of adult civic groups, and preference is given to films on subjects in which local groups are currently interested. Travel films and religious films are always in demand. In buying religious films, an attempt is made to avoid controversial issues, and to add only those films which are of interest to a broad group of borrowers. Travel films of sociological value are given priority over the purely scenic type.

Children's films include safety, scouting, nature study, some of the famous fairy tales and a few of today's classics.

Sponsored films from industries and organizations are accepted for deposit or as gifts if they fulfill a community need and if they meet professional standards of content and production.

FILM STRIPS

A small collection of 35mm silent filmstrips is maintained for club programs, religious groups and home use. Selection is governed by critical reviews and choice of subject by local interest.

FOUNDATION LIBRARY

The Library has been designated as a regional depository of the Foundation Library Center. Annual and other reports of the leading foundations of the United States are sent gratis. Usually only the current report is kept, the earlier ones being discarded when the latest is received.

MAGAZINES

The Library subscribes to a large number of magazines to supplement its book material. New subjects appear in periodicals before being available in book form. Some subjects appear only in magazines.

First priority is given to periodicals which are indexed in a standard service such as the H. W. Wilson series. Exceptions are made in the case of local periodicals and new magazines which give promise of distinction.

New periodicals are examined critically, noting particularly the uniqueness of their field of concenteation and coverage of information in magazines already available. In general, new subscriptions are entered only at the beginning of the new subscription year in January. An exception may be made for a really outstanding periodical which begins during the year if the Library feels reasonably sure that it will want to have a complete file.

Requests by borrowers for additions are kept and a decision made at the beginning of the renewal year whether to subscribe or not.

Gift subscriptions to magazines are, in general, governed by the same policy as books. In the case of ephemeral periodicals, the current issue is placed on the Open Shelf and discarded when the new issue is received.

All periodicals indexed in standard services are bound. Magazines of local interest are bound even though not indexed. Magazines which are paid for but not bound are kept for six months only.

MAPS

The Library makes no attempt to build up an extensive map collection. Some current road maps and city maps are bought to supplement atlases. An attempt is made to secure all available maps of Atlanta and Fulton County. The Ivan Allen Map Collection consisting principally of historical and southern maps, was a gift and is added to as significant items become available.

NEWSPAPERS

The Library subscribes to the daily newspapers of the largest United States cities and of a few foreign cities, and to important trade and commercial dailies. It endeavors to maintain a complete file on microfilm of the local newspapers, the NEW YORK TIMES and the WALL STREET JOURNAL. Other newspapers on the Library's subscription list are available for the current month only.

PAMPHLETS

Pamphlets are acquired usually where they cover material not available in book form. Some pamphlets, however, are acquired to supplement material found in books or periodicals, to provide a compact treatment of a subject. They are considered expendable and are discarded when they have outlasted their usefulness.

PICTURE COLLECTIONS

A picture collection, arranged by subject, is maintained in the Reference Department from which pictures are lent for the use of artists, etc. Most of the pictures are acquired by clipping old magazines and discarded books, but occasionally, when needed, pictures are purchased.

PRINTS (FRAMED REPRODUCTIONS OF WORKS OF ART)

Since this collection is designed primarily for patrons to display in their homes and offices rather than for study purposes, the cheif aim in selection is to provide good reproductions by recognized artists large enough to frame attractively yet small enough to be carried easily to and from the Library. No attempt is made to build up a complete collection from a historical point of view; the emphasis is rather on the decorative and aesthetic needs of borrowers.

No original works are considered for purchase. The large majority of the prints are reproductions of paintings, but a small number of original serigraphs are included in the collection. Reproductions of drawings, lithographs and black and white reproductions are not usually considered for purchase.

RECORDINGS

All recordings in the collection are 33 1/3 rpm and include both monophonic and stereo records. Approximately one half of the records are obtained through "disk jockey" contracts available to radio stations and large libraries under which the issuing companies agree to send their new releases periodically. Both classical and popular records are obtained through this source. Records obtained through regular channels are selected on the basis of the following:

1. Excellence and lasting quality of work.
2. Quality of record itself from a standpoint of durability.
3. Demand by patrons.
4. Favorable reviews in reputable sources.

Most of the popular records in the collection are obtained through the contract service; no effort is made to maintain a large collection of current popular music. Good jazz and musical comedy music is purchased if the demand and reviews indicate its desirability.

A collection of children's records is maintained, and includes stories, poems, music and some foreign language records. Teaching records designed for the classroom are not considered for purchase.

Foreign language courses for adults, shorthand dictation, bird calls and other records of a special nature are purchased where the public demand indicates interest.

TELEPHONE DIRECTORIES

A file of telephone directories is maintained for United States cities of over 1000,000, Southeastern cities of over 50,000 and for all Georgia communities where house numbers are used. A few of the very largest foreign cities are also represented.

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION
50 East Huron Street, Chicago 11, Illinois

From: Charles R. Carner
Public Relations Officer

For release Saturday, January 12 p.m.'s

Chicago, January 12-- Soviet authorities from Lenin to Khrushchev have given special attention to libraries in the USSR because they consider them vital institutions in the Soviet system and valuable instruments for guiding and controlling the Soviet people.

This high status of libraries in the Soviet Union is emphasized in a paperbound report published today by the American Library Association covering the 5500 mile, month-long exchange mission of seven U.S. librarians during the spring of 1961. The librarians on the mission interviewed more than 150 Soviet officials, librarians, and other specialists on every phase of library work from the USSR's extensive reader services to automation in libraries. They studied more than 30 libraries and ministries in five major cities. The Americans went to Russia immediately following a tour of American libraries by four Soviet librarians.

The report, Soviet Libraries and Librarianship* was written by Melville J. Ruggles, Vice President, Council on Library Resources, Inc., Washington, D. C. and Raynard C. Swank, Dean, School of Librarianship, University of California.

Accompanying them on the mission were: David H. Clift, Executive Director of ALA and chief of the delegation; Mrs. Frances Lander Spain, then President of the ALA and currently Librarian, Central Junior College Library, Ocala, Fla.; Emerson Greenaway, Director, Free Library, Philadelphia, Pa.; Sallie J. Farrell, Director, Field Services, Louisiana State Library, Baton Rouge, La.; and Rutherford D. Rogers, Deputy Librarian of Congress.

(more)

Add 1. Soviet Libraries

As a result of several government decrees, the latest in September, 1959, special emphasis on libraries and library service in the Soviet Union was given, the ALA report states.

"All important aspects of library service in the Soviet Union were profoundly affected by this latest decree, and much of what the American delegation observed was a reflection of the energy and diligence with which Soviet library authorities were attempting to implement this latest official edict," the report states.

A Pravda editorial on the decree reported that: "Libraries must become genuine centers for the mass propagation of political, educational, scientific-technical, agricultural, and professional knowledge," and should be the "fulcrums for the Party organizations in the communist education of workers."

The American librarians also found that considerable emphasis is placed on readers' services by all Soviet libraries. Indeed, it is the major emphasis placed by most Soviet libraries on all their activities in their role as mass media for social education and political propaganda, the librarians report.

"With few exceptions the libraries... appear to be heavily used. The reading rooms of the scholarly libraries are often well occupied not only with students but also with serious adult readers... This seriousness of purpose is also evident in the mass libraries, where the use of scientific, technological, and other nonfiction books appears to be relatively high. The demand for foreign literature, expecially for language training, is conspicuous," according to the report.

(more)

Add 2. Soviet Libraries

Though the decree of 1959 stipulated that "all libraries must be mass libraries open to the public, " the report points out that "in most of these libraries, borrowing privileges and access to collections vary widely with the status of the readers," and only "a small proportion of the books in Soviet libraries is accessible on open shelves." The proportion, however, is increasing.

"Regarding reader access to library collections, one Soviet practice particularly interested the delegation: the practice of reserving the author catalog for staff use only. Over and over again, the delegation learned that a classified subject catalog was open to the public, but if a reader wanted a book by a specific author he was required to enlist the help of the library staff. The staff looked up the call number and the location of the book for him in the author catalogs closed to the public.

"Members of the delegation examined parts of the author catalog at the Lenin Library (the great National library of the Soviet Union) and even there found missing some authors whose works were objectionable to Soviet authorities. It was assumed that such books were kept in the special closed section which has its own catalog," the authors said. "This collection, called Spetskhran, is a common feature of large Soviet research libraries," the report adds. "Control of access to some materials is also achieved by the system of admittance to special reading rooms."

Hours of library service, the librarians found, were generous and adjusted to the needs of working people. Soviet librarians make every effort to keep their doors open when all classes of readers are most free to come. Larger libraries are open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily including Sunday, but are closed on Thursday; academic libraries are open from 8 a.m. or 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. every day of the week, except for five national holidays.

(more)

Add 3. Soviet Libraries

The librarians also reported: "It was clear to the delegation that the proportion of books used within the library... was greater in the Soviet Union than in the United States. American readers are less inclined to use the library reading rooms and prefer their own homes for settling down to enjoy good books. This fact might help to explain the larger numbers of readers in Soviet library reading rooms. Perhaps to some extent Soviet readers are allowed to take fewer books home; it is more likely that Soviet homes, crowded as they are known to be, are less conducive to comfortable reading."

Services to readers are extensive, and the Americans found a great outpouring of reading lists of every kind. "Libraries everywhere are enjoined to produce more and better book lists and reading guides as an element in the improvement of education...

"A variety of goals is served by these lists. Some are cultural: they promote reading in literature, the arts, and history... Others are social and political: they help people to become loyal citizens. Still others, perhaps the largest group of all, are technical: they help to make people useful."

The efforts of Soviet libraries to attract readers and to interest them in books and related cultural activities go far beyond the extensive book exhibits and reading lists, the Americans found. The mass libraries have especially strong promotion programs. Close relations are stimulated between the library and the reader, and community needs and interests of individuals are thoroughly studied. The library truly functions as a peoples' university with some actually offering formalized adult education courses.

Most libraries offer lectures, foreign language classes, concerts, book reviews, and author nights. These are widely publicized by posters, in newspapers, and on radio and TV.

(more)

Add 4. Soviet Libraries

Records of reading habits of both adults and children are often kept, presumably to help librarians guide and advise readers. In many libraries individual readers' folders are kept on file, listing every book borrowed. Some libraries meticulously record not only the title of every book used by each reader, but also how often and how well he reads and what he likes best.

Librarians enjoy high status in the USSR, the Americans found, comparable with other professions, but in the operation of the libraries the Americans concluded that standardization as practiced throughout the Soviet system tended to standardize undesirable practices as well as desirable. The emphasis was not so much on individual initiative in the development of new and more effective techniques as on group conformity.

"For this reason Soviet libraries in general seemed... less inventive... and less interesting than the libraries of most Western countries. Nevertheless, their power to carry out a national program... is highly impressive."

*Soviet Libraries and Librarianship, Report of the Visit of the delegation of U. S. Librarians to the Soviet Union, May - June, 1961, under the U. S. - Soviet Cultural Exchange Agreement, 1st edition, by Melville J. Ruggles and Raynard C. Swank, the American Library Association Publishing Department, 147 pages, paperbound, $4.

JN 26225

Sent to: Art Levin, Oscar Cohen, Sam Lubin, Ruby Hurley, Tartt Bell, Barbara Moffett, William Oliver (2 copies), Will Campbell, J. Oscar Lee, Edwin Lukas, Seymour Samet, and Roy Wilkins.

Southern Regional Council, Inc.

ROOM 432, 63 AUBURN AVENUE, N. E. ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

JAckson 2-8764

HAROLD C. FLEMING
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

A Council to attain, through research and action, the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South.

MEMORANDUM September 24, 1958

To: Agencies Participating in the Joint Fact-Finding Project

From: Harold C. Fleming

Re: Transmittal of Revised Draft of Findings.

At long last, we are in position to consider a revised draft of the report on violence, intimidation, and reprisals in the South. The enclosed draft has been amended and the incidents rearranged in accordance with the decisions of the last steering committee meeting. All that remains to be done is a final up-dating of the incidents, -- probably through June 30, 1958, although some later incidents might also be included.

Since some time has to be allowed for you and your associates to read and react to this draft, I propose that we reconvene the project steering committee again at the time of the next Southern Interagency meeting -- that is, on the evening of Thursday, October 9. The object will be to reach final agreement, so that we can proceed promptly with publication of the report. If your agency is not to be represented, please let us have your reaction by mail or telephone to the following questions:

(1) Do you approve the report substantially as it stands?

(2) If not, what changes do you feel are absolutely essential?

(3) Do you want the name of your organization to appear on the report as one of the sponsoring groups?

Decisions on such details as the printing, distribution, and publicity will have to be made by the committee on October 9th. Subsequently, we will send any unrepresented organizations a report on these decisions and on finances.

Best regards.

Postage for Fact-Finding Project mailing
(Revised Draft of Findings) - 9/24/58

2 copies to Wm. H. Oliver $1.92

8 copies @ $1.20 ea. 9.60

$11.52

Sept. 30, 1958:
4 copies (air parcel) to Oscar Cohen
$ 3.50

$15.02

Oct. 6, 1958
3 copies (air parcel) Wm. H. Oliver
2.15

$17.17

D R A F T

JOINT INTERAGENCY FACT FINDING PROJECT

ON

VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION

by

Margaret Price

D R A F T

INTRODUCTION

In the long, hot summer of 1954 the South was in a state of shock. This was the period following the momentous May 17 when the Supreme Court of the United States ruled public school segregation unconstitutional.

True, there were some editorials condemning the decision and the Court; some public officials maintained that no one could force integration and predicted that blood would flow if anyone tried. There was much talk of States Rights and maintaining the Southern way of life. Generally, however, while the early opposition was vigorous and loud, it was unorganized.

By the late summer and early fall of 1954, segregationists began to band together. In Sunflower County, Mississippi, the White Citizens Council was born, with the announced aim of maintaining segregation by all legal means and by the use of economic pressures. This movement, which began with the meeting of a few men in a private home in Indianola, spread across the South until in 1956 there were more than 300,000 members in resistance groups patterned after the original Citizens Council.

Even as the first shock wore off and private groups organized, officeholders throughout the region also began to mobilize and plan ways to circumvent the school decision. This was to result in a rash of state legislation setting up private school plans, outlining pupil assignment procedures, cutting off funds to integrated schools and, as a last resort, closing public schools.

Economic pressures and the legal means advocated by many persons were too slow for some individuals seeking a more direct method of resistance to integration. Gunpowder, dynamite and leather straps were quicker means of intimidation. For others, it would be the anonymous, threatening telephone call or the written warning.

The Ku Klux Klan, on the attorney general's list of subversive organizations and condemned by governors and the press of the South, gained advocates once again. Newspapers began carrying more and more accounts of sheeted parades and cross burnings.

In short, with the start of 1955, the basic battle plans of the resistance forces had been drawn. When the Supreme Court handed down its implementation order on May 31 of that year, requiring school districts to proceed with reasonable speed toward integration, the plans already had been put into action.

Since early 1955, legislatures have gone beyond the school question and directed their attention to other means of continuing the status quo or even turning back the clock for the Negro citizen. Several passed laws curbing or outlawing activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). Voting laws were tightened in some states, making it even more difficult for Negroes to register.

The stresses and strains of the period have been apparent even to the most casual reader. Few could have missed accounts of the rioting that surrounded the enrollment of a few Negro high school students in Clinton, Tenn., and ended with the governor calling out the Tennessee National Guard and the Highway Patrol and the subsequent conviction of several opposition leaders. Neither was it easy to overlook the disturbances and emotions aroused by a Negro woman's entrance into the University of Alabama, the bus boycott in Montgomery, school disturbances in Hoxie, Ark., and Mansfield, Texas. As for events in Little Rock, few stories of the past decade have had a greater impact than the spectacle of mob action following the entry of Negro students into Central High School, causing President Eisenhower to send federal troops into the area to enforce a federal court order.

Along with these widely publicized stories, there has been a mounting list of violence, reprisal and intimidation. All these incidents point, we believe, to a temporary deterioration of race relations in the South and to a steady, widespread erosion of civil liberties, for whites and Negroes.

The aim of this report is to present a list of specific instances which have occurred during the period January 1, 1955 - May 1, 1958, in the 11 states of the old Confederacy: Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, Virginia and Texas.

The report lists 417 cases of violence, reprisal and intimidation. However, since some cases involve community wide action, this number cannot reflect how many hundreds of persons have been affected.

Only items which have appeared in the general press of the nation have been used. With this as the criterion, many private and individual reports of violations of civil rights, even though from reliable sources, have not been used. Also, an effort has been made to confine the listings to instances reflecting the heightened racial tensions following the Supreme Court school decisions. For this reason, crimes which are part of a continuing legal and social problem--murders without racial connotation, some police brutalities, rapes, robberies and juvenile delinquencies have been omitted.

No claim is made that this is a complete list of violations and threats to civil liberties during the period surveyed, but rather an indicative report, based on published press accounts, most of them in Southern newspapers. In two cases, field studies of Southern college professors have been drawn upon for details.

To avoid repetition, an alphabetical system is used to denote the source of the various items. The newspapers, wire services and magazines these letters represent are listed at the end of the report. The date of publication follows the items, although the actual event may have occurred on the previous day or even earlier. One source, Southern School News, is issued monthly and so only the month is used in items from this publication.

INTIMIDATION

Direct intimidation of Negro and white citizens in the South comes most often under cover --- the cover of night, hooded robes, speeding cars, crowds and the anonymity of the telephone.

Once again, crosses are being burned with increasing frequency from the delta to the piney woods. They are lighted in front of the homes of men and women who challenge segregation laws in the courts, before churches, private and public schools which admit Negroes, near Negro homes in once white neighborhoods and sometimes in places selected for reasons apparently known only to the self-appointed guardians of Southern customs.

Occasionally, threats are made in letters, but more often in telephone calls which are difficult to trace.

The Ku Klux Klan appeared again in sections where it had been dormant, or completely absent for years. In a report in April, 1958, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith estimated that the U. S. Klan, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, headed by Eldon Edwards of Atlanta, had between 12,000 and 15,000 members and that the North Carolina Klan had between 2,000 and 5,000. The report said none of the seven other Klan organizations in the South is believed to have more than 1,500 members.

The League said the South has reacted with "intense hostility" and aversion to the revival of the KKK. It added, however, that "as a breeder of violence and an incitement to the worst criminal elements in society, the KKK is not to be dismissed or taken lightly."

Under whatever name the Klan operates, meetings follow the same general outline. Klansmen may parade or not, depending on local ordinances and police tolerance, and then meet on city property, again depending on local authorities, or in a private field. Crosses are burned, the Supreme Court is denounced and the label "Communist" is applied to individuals and groups with which they disagree. Increasingly, notes of anti-Semitism and anti-Catholicism are creeping into the speeches. The Klan faces more obstacles than in its earlier years. Several states have anti-mask ordinances, although sometimes Klansmen now wear dark-rimmed eyeglasses without lens, as a partial disguise, along with their robes and hoods.

The question arises whether a mere Klan meeting comes within the scope of this report, for it is impossible to assess the degree of implied intimidation in an ostensibly peaceful gathering. Some meetings are listed where a note of intimidation seems clear, where something out of the ordinary occured or a particularly inflamatory statement was made. For the rest, a quick sampling gives an idea of the scope of the Klan.

In Florida, at least 1,000 attended a Klan meeting near Jacksonville in September, 1956, jamming suburban traffic for hours; the same month, Klan leaflets were distributed at Tarpon Springs on the west coast, where tension existed over reports Negroes planned to use a beach. In February, 1957, about 4,000 gathered at a private ranch outside Gainesville and heard one hooded speaker declare, "We are not a violence organization. But we are not a social club, either. We are not pussyfooting around." In August, 1957, Klansmen paraded at a downtown theater in Jacksonville protesting showing of the movie, "Island In The Sun," starring white and Negro actors. (A-G)

At Stone Mountain, Ga., long-time Klan meeting place outside Atlanta, an estimated 1,200 cars brought KKK members from five states for a rally in September, 1956. The same month about 300 members gathered in Macon. In November, about 3,500 persons again met at Stone Mountain, with the leader angered by the refusal of Atlanta police to provide an escort. About the same time, the mayor of Savannah denied the Klan use of the city park. In December, 1956, a "gigantic" rally brought only 40 Klansmen from four states to Columbus, where 50 city policemen turned them away from the baseball park; by the time they moved to a vacant lot to burn a cross, only three Klansmen were on hand and they had to saw the cross to a size they could handle, while amused spectators watched. Knights of the KKK met at Warner Robins, near Macon. Maj. Gen. K. V. P. Anderson, commander of nearby Warner Robins Air Materiel Area, had warned earlier that the Air Force would initiate "additional security investigation" of any Robins AFB personnel identified as members of any Klan group. (A,E,D)

In Ozark, Ala., the city council on December 13, 1957, refused to let the KKK use the city park for an organizational meeting. Mayor Douglas Brown said, "We haven't had any trouble with the Negroes and the people here all get along. We hope we can get by without trouble if we don't have a Klan or a White Citizens Council." At Tuscaloosa, scene of mob rioting when a Negro, Autherine Lucy, enrolled at the University of Alabama, hooded men paraded through the streets the following month and another night about 75 burned a cross six miles from town. (A—April 8, 1956—B)

The Klan also turned up again in North and South Carolina. Many in those states thought the KKK had been stamped out between May 1952, and December, 1954, after a reign of terror in southeastern North Carolina and northeastern South Carolina which resulted in conviction of 101 persons in flogging and kidnapping cases. (B)

Nevertheless, in October, 1956, a "motley crowd of nearly 1,000 gathered, some out of curiosity" to watch for the first time a Klan meeting in Concord, N.C., according to the Charlotte Observer. The sheriff and his 15 deputies were on guard. In December, about 300 attended a Klan meeting in Greensboro to hear a speaker standing on a flatbed truck with no license plates. At Statesville, a Klan "wizard" received only scattered applause and some heckling from a group of young people in August, 1957. (C,O)

KKK activity began again in the eastern part of South Carolina in August, 1955, with a small group burning a cross in Florence County and about 1,000 converging at Manning. The following February, the first public Klan rally at Orangeburg in many years began with a motorcade of about 55 robed figures. In mid-June, some 1,000 attended a meeting staged by 75 robed Klansmen in the upcountry area between Greenville and Pickens. The next month, hooded and masked Klansmen sought $3 memberships from a crowd of 2,000 at Camden and claimed they signed up 800. In September, at least three Klan meetings were held--at Dillon, Gaffney, and near Hartsville. The largest Klan rally in South Carolina in years was held in Spartanburg in October; a Greenville News reporter estimated the crowd at from 6,000 to 10,000. That month smaller meetings were held near Pomaria and Rock Hill. In January, 1958, more than 200 robed Klansmen formed a human cross on the Statehouse steps to advertise a rally. (A,Q,B)

In April, 1957, approximately 1,500 gathered, about 500 in white robes, in Cleveland, Tenn., for a rally of the Knights of the KKK. Speakers denounced both Negroes and Jews. (A)

Following is a list of additional meetings and action by resistance groups, telephone and mail threats and other instances of intimidation. The list, if the 27 Klan meetings mentioned above and those which follow are counted, add up to a total of at least 115 instances of intimidation (in some cases an individual may have been threatened more than once but this is counted as a single instance).

Montgomery, Ala.: Two effigies were hanged in the court square, one representing a Negro labeled "NAACP" and the other a white man tagged "I talked for integration." Police and several hundred spectators milled around the gallows. (Aug. 5, 1956--M)

Tuscaloosa, Ala.: Angry white men watching a Ku Klux Klan rally caught a Negro man and tossed him in the air "like a baby," Police Captain J. P. West said. Another Negro told police he was injured by one of the robed Klansmen.

During the program about 25 Negroes approached the rear of a burning cross and shouted profanity, witnesses said. Unrobed white men chased them. State Sen. Albert Davis of Pickens County was applauded loudly when he said, "Give me segregation or give me death." (Aug. 26, 1956--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: About 1,000 persons, some 350 in robes, attended a KKK rally. Explosion of a firecracker started a stampede in an unsuccessful effort to catch the person who set it off; after a second explosion, one youth was searched roughly, but unsuccessfully. Alvin Horn, grand dragon of the Alabama Klan, told the crowd the way he felt about Negroes "who want to integrate is this: they don't want an education, they want a funeral." Earlier in the day about 100 robed Klansmen walked up and down Dexter Avenue; city authorities had refused permission for a Klan parade. (Nov. 25,1956--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: John Kasper, jailed for his part in the Clinton, Tenn., race riots, applauded the appearance of Ku Klux Klansmen at a Citizens Council rally and said, "we need all the rabble rousers we can get." Kasper told the rally of about 500 persons that pro-segregation groups must use every means available to stop integration and that, "we want trouble and we want it everywhere we can get it." (September 13, 1956--C)

Montgomery, Ala.: About 1,200 attended a Klan rally and heard one speaker accuse "Catholics, Jews, Communists Negroes and northern agitators" of threatening the "destruction of the white heritage." Following the rally the Montgomery Ministerial Association passed a resolution registering "disapproval of undisciplined and intolerant remarks and acts at public meetings at which different groups of our citizenry, including religious groups, are slanderously set upon as targets for hatred and violence." (October, 1956--A)

Miami, Fla.: Six white persons were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct for marching in front of the home of Frank Legree, a Negro entertainer who lives in an all white section. They carried signs saying "we intend to keep this neighborhood white," and "Did Clinton get too hot for you?" Several protest meetings had been held since the Legrees moved into the section. (March 24, 1957--B)

Bradenton, Fla.: The KKK asked permission for a motorcade through the city; Bradenton police agreed only if Klansmen remained unmasked, stayed out of the Negro area and passed through the city quickly. However, Sheriff Roy Baden provided an escort for the parade and his men were at the head of the line as it passed through the Negro section. After an investigation, Gov. LeRoy Collins wired Baden, "Your conduct and that of your deputies cannot be approved or condoned. Your actions gave the appearance of 'shepherding or leading the parade' and granted to it the apparent sanction of the law." The governor said the KKK is "a symbol for intolerance, to riot and disorder.... law enforcement officers should prohibit to the utmost of their authority demonstrations by this organizations."

Gray, Ga.: The local theater manager was threatened with a Klan visit because he allowed Negroes to sit in the balcony on a segregated basis. Later, Klansmen from neighboring Bibb County rode down the main street but denied any connection between the threats and the night ride, explaining the group was only advertising a future rally. (July 8, 1957--N)

Summerville, Ga.: About 100 cars bearing license plates from Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama moved through the city, past a section of Negro homes and to the nearby county fairgrounds for a rally. One robed participant in the parade displayed a breeched shotgun. Observers said some Negroes were disturbed and obtained shotguns also, although making no move to use them. (November 20, 1956--B)

Jackson, Miss.: W. D. Mangrum, a Jackson Negro, reported that several white boys tossed a stone through the windshield of his car on September 14, believing it to be the car of a Negro editor. (September 15, 1955--J)

Statesville, N.C.: Police guarded the vacant home of two white sisters officers said were found in a car with two Negro men. A crowd of between 500 and 600 demonstrated before the house the previous night. At the same time, police said that 14 Negroes were arrested downtown for disorderly conduct because they were crowding white persons off the sidewalk and making insulting remarks. (Nov. 16, 1957--B)

Elloree, S.C.: L. A. Blackman, contractor and president of the Elloree chapter of the NAACP, said friends told him speakers at a Klan rally had said it was "up to the colored people to see that Blackman gets out of town." Blackman said he had no intention of leaving. He was active in distributing petitions seeking integrated schools in Elloree. (Dec. 7, 1955--B)

Williamsburg County, S.C.: Firearms and firecrackers were discharged on June 12 when a group of white Catholic priests and assistants presented a film on the life of Christ for an all-Negro audience of about 200. Father Patrick Walsh, head of Our Lady of Springbank Dominican Friary, reported to police that he had been stopped and cursed for some 15 minutes while enroute to the film showing. Four white youths in a pickup truck stopped him, he said, and told him, "we run our own neighborhood and to hell with all authorities." Thereafter, the priest reported a pickup truck sped up and down the road alongside the area where the film was being shown. Firecrackers were discharged and several shots fired; several bullet holes were found in the projection screen. Three young men were held temporarily but released later in the absence of formal charges. (July, 1956--A)

Hartsville, S.C.: A crowd of 2,000 jammed a field to hear a speaker denounce President Eisenhower and shout, "Moderation has never been the answer to anything. It is the extremists--you and me--who are going to have to solve this problem." (July 28, 1956--B)

Mobile, Ala.: About 100 robed Klansmen burned a cross on the property of Mrs. Dorothy DaPonte, wealthy Mobile widow. Mr. DaPonte had tried unsuccessfully to enter a 12-year-old Negro girl, whom she raised and had been educating in Europe, into a white school. (Sept. 18, 1956—C)

Opelika, Ala.: A cross was burned in front of the home of the Rev. W. F. Wagner, white Baptist minister, after his church admitted a Negro high school group to hear the church's presentation of "The Messiah." (Jan. 1957—A)

Mobile, Ala.: White college boys at Spring Hill College, a Jesuit school, disbanded a group attempting to set fire to a cross in front of a dormitory. The Catholic college opened its doors to Negroes three years ago and now has about 40 in the student body. (Feb. 1957—A)

Little Rock, Ark.: A cross was burned October 27 at the home of Mrs. L. C. Bates, state NAACP president. Mrs. Bates received several anonymous telephone calls during the day. Another cross had been burned at her home October 11. (Dec. 1957—A)

Miami, Fla.: Four members of the Seaboard Citizens Council who tried to burn a cross on the lawn of a Negro living in a white Miami neighborhood were found guilty of unlawful assembly and intimidation. Municipal Court Judge Mitchell Goldman told them, "This is a heinous offense. Certainly we get enough trouble in this world without having something like this. You gentlemen have struck at the basis of our democracy." Three were sentenced to 60 days and fined $500 on each of two charges, the fourth was given a suspended 30 day sentence and fined $100; all appealed. (March 7, 1957—B)

Atlanta, Ga.: Two crosses were burned in front of Negro homes, and gasoline was burned in the street in front of one during October. (Oct. 14, 1957—E)

New Orleans: Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia was the main speaker at a Citizens Council rally in Pelican Park May 17. An audience of 4,000 heard speakers attack the Supreme Court, Urban League, the "soft on integration" policies of Louisiana State University and Catholic Archbishop Joseph Rummel of New Orleans. Shortly after the rally a wooden cross was burned outside the archbishop's residence. There was no proven connection between the rally and the cross burning. (June, 1956—A)

Jackson, Miss.: A crudely made cross was burned in front of a Catholic Church, Christ the King. The Rev. P. H. Boer, pastor, learning of it later, commented, "That's the way they operate; they haven't got the guts to come out in the open and do it." He said the burning may have been because of a Negro school the church operates on the rear of its property. Several years before rotten eggs were thrown at the church entrance. (March 26, 1957—L)

Hillsboro, N.C.: A cross was burned before a home in which Dr. Frank Graham, special United Nations representative and former president of the University of North Carolina, was visiting. A 25-year-old student was arrested.( )

Camden, S.C.: Anonymous threats to destroy the buildings of Mather Academy forced Methodist officials to remove a group of young white and Negro church workers from the campus of the Negro school. Earlier, a cross was burned. Camden Mayor Henry Savage said he "certainly thinks" the threats came from a newly organized KKK Klavern in the Camden area. A cross was burned in front of the Mayor's home later, presumably, he said, because he had indicated he would call on the governor for troops if needed to prevent the bombing or burning of Mather school. The mayor and city council had provided what protection they could but had asked the group to abandon its integrated work project in the interest of preserving good order. (July 12, 1956—B; Sept. 1956—A)

Columbia, S.C.: Six white teen-agers were freed, with a warning, after they were arrested for burning a cross in front of a gate to Benedict (Negro) College. (Feb. 1957—A)

Rock Hill, S.C.: A wooden cross was burned in front of St. Anne's Catholic school, the only desegregated one in the state and in its third year of integrated operation. Two months earlier a series of cross burnings in the area caused the Rock Hill Ministerial Union to pass a resolution unanimously saying, "Such acts... are the work of men of ill will and ought to be opposed by all right-minded citizens." (Feb. 1957--A; Nov. 8, 1956--R)

Greenwood, S.C.: Two white teen-aged boys had their probation revoked for burning a cross at a rural home and were sent to the State Industrial School. A third youth was placed on probation and a 22-year-old man was fined $50 in magistrate's court. (Aug. 1957--A)

Charleston County, Tenn.: A cross was burned in front of the home of a Negro candidate for the House of Representatives, John H. Wrighten, about a week before the election. It drew statements of condemnation from all three white candidates in the race. Wrighten ran second in a field of four but trailed far behind the leading candidate. (Jan. 1958--A)

Bonham, Texas: Police said a man who planted a burning cross in the driveway of House Speaker Sam Rayburn's home did not do it as a joke, that it was carefully made by an experienced carpenter. Bonham residents were mystified as to why Rayburn's two-story colonial mansion was selected as a target. The Speaker's brother and his wife, and his sister were in the house at the time. (July 27, 1956--C)

Beaumont, Texas: A 12-foot cross was burned on the campus of Lamar State College of Technology, after the school had been ordered to open its doors to Negroes in the fall. (Aug. 2, 1956--B)

Dallas, Texas: A cross was set afire on the lawn of Dr. Cosette F. Newton's home, which was offered for sale to a Negro. The cross was doused with water by the fire department before any damage was done to the home or to a barkyard pavilion ship which set off a bitter neighborhood feud. Doctor Newton offered to sell her fashionable home to a Negro after losing a battle fought to the Texas Supreme Court to keep her ship, which neighbors called an eyesore. (Jan. 26, 1956 --C)

Hillsboro, Texas: A cross was burned and in Leroy, small town near Waco, the effigy of a Negro was strung across the highway. (Oct. 1956--A)

Nashville, Tenn.: At least 12 crosses have been burned in or near Negro neighborhoods, according to police records. (Nov. 1957--A)

Charlottesville, Va.: The fourth cross since mid-August was burned on a local lawn, apparently in protest against the activities of the local chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations. The latest blazed on the lawn of Dr. Frank D. Daniel, financial chairman of the group; another was burned at the home of Mrs Sarah Patton Boyle, officer of the state group, and one at the home of Mrs. Morris Brown, vice president of the local chapter. The first cross was burned before the Westminster Presbyterian Church during a meeting of the Council. It was this meeting John Kasper, ex-secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council, invaded to say his group had "declared war on you people" and would "run you out of town." (Dec. 9, 1956; Aug. 30, 1956--S)

Fairfax County, Va.: Police placed a 19-year-old white girl in protective custody because, when she sought refuge with a Negro family, a cross burning and exchange of shots resulted. The girl said she moved into the home because she had no place else to go. The night after a cross was burned unidentified persons drove in front of the house and fired five shots; a member of the Negro family fired one shot into the air. No one was injured. The girl later was released unconditionally. (She had been a ward of the county for 10 years, had served a vagrancy sentence and been released.) (Aug. 11, Aug. 16, 1956--S)

Sylacauga, Ala.: The Rev. Dan Whitsett reported a death threat was made against the family of a young minister who kicked over a KKK cross. Crosses were burned near the First Methodist Church, of which Whitsett is paster, and the First Baptist Church as Klansmen rallied at the high school football stadium. Whitsett, who was out of town, said the Rev. Newton Maloney, his associate pastor, kicked over the cross and stood briefly in front of a car occupied by

Klansmen. Later, Mrs. Maloney received a telephone call and heard a man warn that unless the Maloneys and Whitsetts were out of town in 10 days "your house and your child will be blown to bits." Whitsett speculated that the Baptist church was a target because of the recent Southern Baptist Convention stand for elimination of racial barriers among its churches. Whitsett's endorsement of moderation in race relations has made him a frequent subject for KKK criticism and his family has received a number of threatening telephone calls. (June 9, 1957--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Three of nine Negro families who signed a petition requesting integration of Birmingham schools reported they have been receiving threatening telephone calls. Another Negro, who said he had nothing to do with the petition, said he and his wife also had been threatened. (Aug. 26, 1957--B)

Atlanta, Ga.: Police reported a Negro family living in a white section received a threatening letter; it contained a newspaper clipping showing the picture of a home damaged by dynamite and the notation in red ink, "take warning from this." The family had rented an apartment in a vacant building between white residences. (March 30, 1956--E)

New Orleans: A Catholic Priest, the Rev. Eugene McManus, was threatened after he appeared as a speaker at a meeting on integration. He said at the meeting the segregation issue had turned "the fairminded people of our city into blinded, frenzied bigots." The following day an anonymous caller threatened "to get" the priest and used "unprintable language." (1956--M)

Raleigh, N.C.: Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Holt Sr., parents of a Negro youth seeking admission to an all-white high school, received telephone threats their home would be bombed "if you don't quit sending messages to the school board," the Raleigh Times reported. Letters containing veiled threats were sent the Raleigh School Board and Holt and were signed, "Executive Committee, Wake County Patriots of North Carolina," according to the Raleigh News and Observer. The

Patriots were formed in 1955 to maintain "the purity and culture of the white race and of Anglo-Saxon institutions." (July, 1957)

Greensboro, N.C.: The Rev. Julius T. Douglas, who heads an organization which offered defense for six Negroes charged with trespassing on Gillespie Park Golf Court said he was informed indirectly his home would be bombed. "The lady next door received an anonymous call saying that she should get out because my house was going to be bombed during the night," he related. (Dec. 21, 1955--B)

Montgomery County, N.C.: Elsie Horn, who with six others withdrew from a suit against the Montgomery County Board of Education, said he had been asked if he would like it if he sent his "kids to a white school and they came up missing or didn't come back at all." (Oct. 13, 1955--T)

Orangeburg, S.C.: Mrs. H. F. Pierce, vice president of the local NAACP chapter, reported threatening telephone calls and a letter with the words "you will die" penciled across a torn piece of newspaper. She turned over the letter to the FBI. Other Negroes have received threatening letters, presumably in connection with an economic battle over segregation issues. (Dec. 10, 1956--B)

Knoxville, Tenn.: Efforts were made to intimidate Mrs. Sarah Patton Boyle, an officer in the Virginia Council on Human Relations, when she appeared in Knoxville for a speaking engagement. Several telephone calls were made to her and her hostess by callers who identified themselves as members of the White Citizens Council. At midnight an ambulance driver appeared in answer to a phony summons from an unidentified person. (Charlottesville-Albermarle Tribune, Nov. 22, 1957)

Nashville, Tenn.: Parents of six of the 13 Negro first graders enrolled for integrated classes for the first time reported telephone threats of harm to their children on the eve of registration. Assistant School Superintendent W. H. Oliver said his family also was threatened. (Aug. 28, 1957--B)

Nashville, Tenn.: Chester Mason, chairman of the Parents School Preference Committee, told police he had received two anonymous calls threatening him. The committee opposed integration of Nashville schools and has proposed a three part system, providing all white schools, all Negro and integrated ones for those who choose them. (March 21, 1958—U)

Nashville, Tenn.: Mrs. Mary Staton, whose family purchased a home in a previously white neighborhood, found cards in her yard carrying KKKK labels, one with the notation, "Your days are numbered. Move now." The president of the Knights of the KKK denied his group had anything to do with it, and said "some people have us confused with the old KKK (three Ks). (Jan. 24. 1958—U)

York County, S.C.: At a Klan meeting near Fort Mill, the principal speaker denounced Billy Graham, the President and Vice President and other government officials. He also listed local and national products and firms, which he said contributed to the NAACP or otherwise to causes for integration, and suggested they be boycotted. (July 1957—A)

Brimingham, Ala.: The KKK demonstrated throughout Jefferson county and distributed pamphlets calling on white employers to discharge all Negroes and warning businessmen that the Klan would boycott them if they continued to employ Negroes. (Nov. 15, 1957--B)

Lakeland, Fla.: As Klansmen burned a large cross and vowed to maintain segregation, a few miles away a Negro church offered prayers for them. (July 21, 1956—B)

Tahoka, Texas: The school board ruled that a 16-year-old Negro boy, Andrew Nance, could attend the white high school as a junior because the Negro school offered only 10 grades. A few hours after he entered the school his white classmates elected him vice president of the junior class. However, he later was accosted by three Tahoka men who threatened him with personal harm if he continued to attend the school. Subsequently, the Lynn County grand jury investigated the threats but failed to indict anyone. (Sept. 18, Sept. 23, 1955—B)

Jonesboro, Ark.: At a hearing on the Noxie school integration case (see Hoxie--Violence, mob action), a Negro told of threats. Clarence, 73, Hoxie, testified he sent his son Joseph, 16, to Pasco, Wash., to live because he had received a letter which contained a clipping on the Emmett Till slaying in Mississippi and a note which said, "Your boy can get the same thing." The son had been enrolled in the Hoxie schools. (Jan. 1956--A)

Union, S.C.: The legislative delegation of Union county announced it was arming against enforced integration. The delegation said it had ordered $1,000 worth of sub-machine guns--nine of them--and $300 worth of ammunition, or a thousand rounds. State Sen. John D. Long of Union said the weapons, for the sheriff and his eight deputies, were to be used to "repel any invasion by Federal troops or anyone else violating our laws." He explained that by "our laws" he meant those calling for separation of whites and Negroes in schools and elsewhere. (Oct. 17, 1957--B)

Charlottesville, Va.: Asa Carter, executive secretary of the North Alabama Citizens Council, told an audience of about 250, Southerners could not look to their politicians or their courts for a solution of the segregation problem. "This is not a legal problem," Carter said. "It won't be settled in the courts. It is up to you to say the Negro is not going to your schools and it is up to you to keep him out." (Sept. 3, 1956--B)

Prattville, Ala.: Six crosses have been burned in the Negro section. As a result, some Negroes who said they felt their lives were in danger armed themselves with shotguns, reporters found. (Oct. 27, 1957--G)

Mobile, Ala.: Police said they arrested two Negroes who were carrying two large crosses in the yard of a white church. Lieut. Walter Burch said the men told officers they planned to burn the crosses in front of a Negro private club a considerable distance from the church. A third cross was found near the church. (April 6, 1958--B)

REPRISALS

A comparatively new weapon fell into the hands of embattled segregationists within a few months of the 1954 school decisions--economic reprisal.

It was forged by the first White Citizens Council in Mississippi and was tested there. However, within the year it proved to be a two-edged sword.

At first it was used against those who signed petitions asking that steps be taken toward school integration to comply with the United States Supreme Court ruling and against Negroes who urged their people to register and vote. Negroes, and sometimes their white supporters, lost their jobs, found their credit cut off. School boards failed to renew teachers' contracts and wholesalers cut off supplies to Negro merchants.

In some cases, nationally known products were boycotted because of real or imagined support of the cause of integration. White merchants in some of the smaller town felt compelled to join the Citizens Council movement in order to keep their white customers.

Soon, this became a two-way fight. Negroes in some sections circulated the names of white merchants who belonged to Citizens Councils and they and their friends took their business elsewhere. Occasionally, entire towns became involved in boycott and counter-boycott, as in Ornageburg, S.C. In Tuskegee, Ala., after moves to curb their vote, Negroes shopped elsewhere.

In a few months time, a quarter of a million dollars was deposited in a Negro bank in Memphis by individuals and groups to aid Mississippi Negroes who were the victims of economic pressures.

Probably the most dramatic counter-measure came in Montgomery, Ala., where thousands of Negroes simply stopped riding buses in a year-long peaceful protest. It was the culmination of what they felt were years of abuse and discrimination and ended with the outlawing of bus segregation there by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Bus protests by Negroes in Tallahassee, Fla., and Rock Hill, S.C., followed somewhat the same pattern.

The following list includes 65 specific cases of persons who lost their jobs, in addition to 32 other instances of reprisals. The latter involved untold hundreds of men and women, since they cover city-wide protest movements.

Selma, Ala.: Economic reprisals against the signers of school desegregation petitions were reported in three counties--Dallas (65 per cent Negro), Bullock (74 per cent) and Butler (45 per cent). In Selma, seat of Dallas County and site of the first White Citizens Council to be organized in Alabama, WCC County Chairman Alston Keith estimated that of the 29 Negroes signing a desegregation petition in August, "about 16" had been fired by September 7. "Probably all of them who had jobs were fired," Keith said, explaning that some were self-employed. When the Dallas County WCC was formed, Keith announced that economic sanctions against Negroes favoring integration would be the prime weapons of the group. He claimed the 16 firings were "spontaneous," however, and that the WCC would accept neither "credit nor censure." Several petition signers in the three above mentioned counties later withdrew their signatures, explaining they misunderstood the purpose of the documents. (Sept. 7, 1955--B; Oct. 1955--A)

Montgomery, Ala.: State Sen. Sam Englehardt of Macon County reported to the State Senate Education Committee, "We've got 196 colored teachers in Macon County and the board tells me they'll fire everyone of them that takes part in this agitation for integration." (July 21, 1955--D)

Auburn, Ala.: An assistant professor at Alabama Polytechnic Institute charged he was dismissed "for exercising his right of free speech." Bud R. Hutchinson declared he had been notified that he would not be reappointed for the coming college year because of a letter he wrote to the school paper concerning segregation. Hutchinson disagreed with an editorial in The Auburn Plainsman critical of integration moves in New York. Dr. Ralph B. Draughon, Auburn president, said, "I felt that Mr. Hutchinson could not expect to advance in his career at this institution. Since he is in his first year, I felt it would be better for him and the institution that he seek employment elsewhere... The decision in no way reflects upon his character or his professional status." As a result, Auburn was one of five colleges censured by the American Association of University

Professors which claimed they had infringed upon academic freedom by dismissing teachers. (May 16, 1957, May 26, 1958--B)

Gwinnett County, Ga.: The State Board of Education ordered the pay of Mrs. Colleen M. Wiggins, a teacher at the Bethesda school, withheld pending an investigation of her racial views. About 150 persons had signed a petition asking her discharge because of her views on segregation. Mrs. Wiggins said she was asked to sign a statement saying she does not believe in racial integration but had refused. She explained that she obeyed Georgia laws on segregation but thought her own views were a private matter. She had told her high school class she would not object to teaching white and Negro students together if that were the practice. The County Board of Education held that Mrs. Wiggins "probably made unwise or indiscreet expressions" but that evidence did not justify her dismissal. This decision was appealed to the state board but before it could act Mrs. Wiggins resigned because she was expecting a baby. (Nov., Dec., 1956--A)

Lakeland, Ga.: Mrs. A. B. Baskin, who had taught in Lanier County schools for 17 years, was forced to resign because she allowed a white school boy, whose own bus had gone, to ride home in a Negro school bus. Mrs. Baskin emphasized that she believes in segregation and had suggested that the schoolboy take the Negro bus only as a final resort. The County Board of Education later ordered her reinstatement on the recommendation of state school officials. (April 9, 1958--Atlanta Journal)

Durant, Miss.: The Rev. Marsh Calloway reported that elders of the Durant Presbyterian Church fired him because he spoke against the Citizens Councils. (Nov. 30, 1955--J)

Jackson, Miss.: The Rev. Roy C. Delamotte, white Methodist minister, was not accepted by any congregation after protesting a resolution in the Mississippi Annual Conference calling for continued segregation. (June 21, 1955--Jackson Daily News)

Guilford, N.C.: A letter to the school board signed by 34 persons saying it would by "just and wise...to admit Negro pupils (to white schools)...if and when they make individual application" caused one white man to lose a part-time job. Another white signer resigned from a full-time job because of protests received by his employer, although the latter indicated that so far as he was concerned the man could continue on the payroll. (Sept. 6-7, 1955-T; Sept. 5, 1955--B)

Columbia, S.C.: Dr. Chester C. Travelstead, dean of the school of education at the University of South Carolina, disclosed he had been dismissed "in the best interest of the university" after making a speech calling for an end to public school segregation. Travelstead had told a campus gathering, "It is my firm conviction that enforced segregation of the races in our public schools can no longer be justified on any basis....(the) fact that we have practiced segregation on the assumption that is was right and just does not make it right and just." Travelstead, a native of Kentucky, left to become dean of the School of Education at the University of New Mexico. ( )

Columbia, S.C.: A 23-year-old Engish major was fired as a legislative telephone page after writing an article in the Gamecock, student weekly at the University of South Carolina. His article said the State Senate was "intent on circumventing" integration and that Southern legislators and governors were "embarassing sound trucks for the South." (March 14, 1956—V)

Elloree, S.C.: Twenty-four Negro school teachers in the Elloree School District either resigned or their contracts were not renewed for refusal to sign a statement inquiring into NAACP menbership. (July 1956--A)

Clarendon County, S.C.: Three Negro teachers said they were not rehired by the Summerton School District of Clarendon County because their father and the husband of one signed integration petition. (Aug. 25, 1955—O)

Batesburg, S.C.: The Rev. George Jackson Stafford's resignation as pastor of the First Baptist Church was accepted because some of his anti-segregation views differed from his congregation. The move was reported to have been spearheaded by Federal Judge George B. Timmerman, father of the governor. (Nov. 1, 1955--V)

Columbia, S.C.: The Rev. John Murry, Methodist minister, transferred from Orangeburg County to Gilbert, S. C., because some of his parishioners protested his support of a resolution deploring economic sanctions against Negroes with integrationist views. (Nov. 1, 1955--V)

Lubbock, Texas: Segregation viewpoints figured in the removal of two faculty members at Texas Technological College. Dr. Byron R. Abernethy, professor of government, and Dr. Herbert M. Greenberg, assistant professor of psychology, were notified that the Board of Directors in executive session refused to renew their contracts. The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal said that Greenberg, who is blind, apparently was removed because of his publicly-statedviews backing integration. The other ousted professor had been active in liberal Democratic political circles. The school's president protested the closed-door procedure and said he had found no fault with the two professors' academic ability. The college has no Negro students, and so far as is known, none have applied. (Aug., 1957--A)

Appomattox County, Va.: The school board refused to renew the contracts of two eighth grade teachers. One said she believed it was because she voted in 1954 against an "inflamatory resolution" favoring segregation; she added that she didn't consider herself an integrationist but did believe the public school system should be preserved. The other said she was "falsely accused of being an integrationist." Eighteen of 19 teachers in the school protested to the board. Commenting on the case, the Richmond Times-Dispatch said, "the impression has been created...that it is becoming dangerous in Virginia for teachers to express even a mild dissent from majority community opinion on the race problem." (June, 1956--A)

Jacksonville, Fla.: The Community Chest United Fund withdrew support from the local chapter of the National Urban League. Officials of the League asserted the action was caused by pressures from the Ku Klux Klan and the White Citizens Council. The executive director of the Chest denied this and said it was because the League had entered "into politics." The Urban League has been forced out of United Fund or Community Chest drives in Ft. Worth, Texas, and three others have withdrawn under pressure--in Little Rock, New Orleans and Richmond. The Urban League, formed in 1910 to improve the lot of the Negro economically and socially through interracial teamwork, has 62 chapters. (1956--K, various)

Atlanta, Ga.: Dr. Guy H. Wells was stripped of his honarary title of president emeritus of Georgia State College for Women because of his views on integration. Wells is executive director of the Georgia Committee on Interracial Cooperation, which was founded in 1919, and is now an affiliate of the Southern Regional Council. The State Board of Regents withdrew the honorary title it had bestowed upon him two years before, shortly after he resigned as head of the college to accept a position with the federal government. The same day, the State Board of Education asked the Teacher Retirement Board to discontinue Wells' monthly pension. Trustees of the retirement system rejected the request as unconstitutional. (April, 1956--A)

Claiborne, La.: School boards in Claiborne and Bossier ordered Time, Life and Look magazines from high school libraries, charging they "distorted" racial news. (June, 1956--A)

Lexington, Miss.: The husband of a crusading weekly newspaper editor lost his job as administrator of the Lexington Community Hospital. Walter D. Smith, husband of Mrs. Hazel Brannon Smith, who criticized the alleged mistreatment of a Negro prisoner, was fired by the hospital's board of directors. In an editorial, the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, Miss., commented, "Smith was ousted not because he was incapable but because some of the views of his vigorous newspaper-woman wife were unpopular...She had the guts to criticize the then sheriff for shooting a Negro in the back for no good reason." Mrs. Smith is editor of the Lexington Advertiser and Durant News. (Jan. 11, 1956--X)

Montgomery, Ala.: On December 1, 1955, a bus carrying white and Negro passengers made a downtown stop. The driver asked four Negroes to give up their seats. Three did but Mrs. Rosa Parks, a seamstress, refused. She said later she acted on impulse. The driver called a policeman who took Mrs. Parks to the police station, where she was charged with violating city segregation laws. Almost overnight word flashed through the Negro community: Support Rosa Parks. Printed leaflets were circulated Saturday, December 3, asking Negroes to stay off the buses Monday, the day of Mrs. Parks trial. Almost 90 percent of them did. They went to work in Negro taxis, in wagons, on foot or bicycle. Mrs. Parks that day was found guilty and fined $14. That night, 5,600 Negroes crowded into the Holt Street Baptist Church and by the end of the evening the Montgomery Improvement Association was formed and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was named president. It was the beginning of a year-long boycott which was to make the name Martin Luther King the symbol of peaceful resistance to his followers. At first, the Negroes asked only that Negro passengers be treated more courteously, that seating be on a first come, first serve basis and that Negro bus drivers be employed on predominantly Negro runs. Negotiations on these points failed and the boycott continued. The mayor and city commissioners joined the White Citizens Council; the Negroes operated a car pool; businesses were damaged by rumors circulated among white buyers that they had contributed to the NAACP or by rumors among Negroes they had contributed to the Citizens Council. King's home was bombed, he was arrested for speeding, a dynamite cap exploded in the yard of another leader. More than 100 Negroes were indicted on charges of violating Alabama's anti-boycott laws. Meanwhile, suit was filed in federal court, which eventually, on November 13, brought a unanimous ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that Montgomery's bus segregation laws were unconstitutional. In December, Negroes called off the boycott and resumed riding on the newly de-segregated buses. The months since have not been smooth. Four Negro churches, the homes of two ministers and a taxi stand have been bombed. (Two white men were acquitted of charges of bombing one of the churches.) A white man was fined for hitting a Negro woman passenger; a Negro school girl was convicted of striking a white girl on another bus. Vandals knocked out a local broadcast of a national telecast featuring The Reverend King. Snipers have fired at city buses, in one instance wounding a Negro woman. (1956-57--A,B)

Monticello, Fla.: Dr. Deborah Coggins was dismissed as health officer of three north Florida counties because she had a business lunch with a Negro nurse. One of her defenders, Robert H. Browning, health educator who worked with Doctor Coggins, lost his job. The Jefferson County Commission simply abolished the post. Browning transferred to Palm Beach County. He had urged the county commission to "practice the kind of Christianity you profess" and retain Doctor Coggins. Mrs. Flo Way was asked to resign from the Jefferson County school system because she had defended the health officer in a public meeting. Mrs. Way refused to resign as a fifth grade teacher and since she had job tenure, she continued in her work. (October 4, 1956--B; Nov., Dec., 1956--A)

Miami, Fla.: Charges that he was too outspoken on the issue of segregation caused the dismissal of Florida's only Negro assistant state attorney. A leader of a segregation group had furnished State Atty. George A. Brautigam with a tape recording of a radio speech in which the Negro in question, Henry Arrington, said his work was not necessarily confined to Negro cases. Brautigam demanded his suspension on charges of "breach of confidence and misconduct." Gov. LeRoy Collins complied on the ground that Arrington had made "public statements in derogation of, and repugnant to, the duties imposed upon him." Arrington said the issue may have been created by "someone who wanted to make a political issue out of segregation." (April 1956--A)

Shellman, Ga.: A Baptist minister who publicly backed the Supreme Court ruling on school segregation was ousted from his church. The board of deacons demanded the resignation of the Rev. Henry A. Buchanan. The church secretary said the minister was not being cast out but that the church needed a change of leadership. "Why quibble with words?" was Buchanan's reaction. (Jan. 1955--A)

Terrell County, Ga.: The Rev. Robert Trotman resigned as minister of the Bronwood Baptist Church upon the request of the deacons after a sermon in which he advised acceptance of the U.S. Supreme Court's school ruling. (June 28, 1954--E)

Orangeburg, S. C.: Boycotts have cut both ways in this town of 17,000. Here the economic struggle began with a petition by 57 Negroes to the school board in July, 1955, asking that immediate steps be taken to "reorganize the public schools on a non-discriminatory basis." White residents responded by organizing a Citizens Council. Under the leadership of W. TW C. Bates, a local insurance agent, and Mayor R. H. Jennings, Jr., reprisals began against petitioners and their families and members of the local NAACP. Those who worked for white employers were fired; those who rented from white landlords were evicted. Credit was denied by white suppliers and merchants. Some no longer could buy, even for cash. Mayor Jennings, who was president of the local Coca Cola company, a bakery and the Orangeburg Ice & Fuel Co., cut off supplies to three Negro grocers and a gas station owner. The Coble Dairy stopped delivery of milk to the grocers and all the petitioners on its routes. A service station operator was forced out of business by the owner-distributor. The Negro residents retaliated with their own boycott. They stopped using products of the dairy and the Mayor's enterprises. They obtained the names of local merchants who belonged to the Citizens Council and someone distributed a list of the 23 firms at all Negro meetings. They started shopping in Columbia or by mail. Students at South Carolina State College, Negro, quietly supported the boycott. A white grocer was forced out of business and other merchants suffered. Still other firms joined the reprisal movement against the Negro --- the Pepsi Cola, Royal Crown and Dr. Pepper bottlers, another bakery and another dairy. Because of the college students' action, Governor George B. Timmerman, Jr., ordered the State Law Enforcement Division to place the college under surveillance; 1,200 students staged a four-day walkout until they were promised a discussion of their grievances on one hand and threatened with expulsion on the other. By the end of the school year, the student council president and 15 other students had been expelled and five faculty members dismissed for their part in the boycott. The fall and winter of 1955-56 was a difficult time for the petitioners in Orangeburg and those in nearby Elloree and Summerton, where similar reprisals were taken. Various appeals brought in contributions of food, money and clothing from many sections of the country. During all this time, only one white person openly joined the fight alongside the Negroes in Orangeburg, a Catholic priest. By the spring of 1956, some disenchantment with the Citizens Councils was felt; pressures slackened somewhat but the basic controversy over school segregation remains unsolved. Both sides seem to agree that the reprisals and counter-boycotts have not been a satisfactory way of solving the problem. (Sept. 1955--A; The Reporter Magazine, Jan. 21, 1957)

Pine Bluff, Ark.,: Fifty members of a railroad metal crafts union announced a boycott of the Pine Bluff Community Chest because it supports the Negro Boys' Club. (Oct. 9, 1957--F)

Jackson, Miss.: Ellis Wright, president of the Jackson Citizens Council, said a letter from the Falstaff Brewing Co., probably would end a scattered boycott of Falstaff beer in Mississippi. Sales had dropped after a pro-segregation pamphlet accused the company of contributing to the NAACP. A letter to Wright from a company official, the CC official said, explained that the company had made a single contribution as a membership fee for one of its Negro salesman and that "in error, apparently, the membership was issued in the name of Falstaff Brewing Corp." (Dec. 1, 1955—B)

Greensboro, N. C.: The furniture business of a couple signing a petition advocating compliance with the Supreme Court school ruling was boycotted. (Sept. 6, 1955—B)

Rock Hill, S. C.: A Negro woman refused to give up her seat by a white woman on orders from the bus driver; she said it was the only vacant one on the bus and the white passenger had invited her to take it. The incident touched off a boycott of the bus line by Negroes and brought threats to a Negro minister and others. A few months later, the bus line stopped operating. (Aug. 3, 1957—O; Jan. 1958—A)

Jackson, Tenn.: M. C. Jolly, operator of the Dr. Pepper Bottling Co., said 12 or 13 Negro merchants had canceled accounts with his firm after he joined in a suit seeking to bar state aid to a college which had admitted two Negroes. Lates, he said increased business from white merchants offset the Negro cancellations. (Feb. 1-2, 1956—B; March 1956—A)

Tuskegee, Ala.: A struggle over the Negroes' right to vote has brought lasting repercussions to this home of Tuskegee Institute, famed Negro college. To understand the situation, it is necessary to know the composition of the town. Tuskegee is in Macon County, which has the highest percentage (85%) of Negroes of any county in the nation. Nevertheless, there have been only 1,100 Negroes registered to vote in the county and 2,700 white citizens registered. The bulwarks of Macon County's economy have been Tuskegee Institute, with an annual payroll of $2.5 million, and a Veterans Administration hospital, with an annual payroll of $6.5 million. All the patients and most of the staff at the hospital are Negro. In June, 1957, the Alabama legislature gerrymandered Tuskegee's city limits, cutting the town in half, redrawing its boundaries and in the process thrusting out of the town about 410 of the city's 420 Negro voters. Sam Englehardt, Macon County state senator and executive secretary of the White Citizens Council of Alabama, was author of the bill, designed to prevent Negroes from registering enough voters to gain control of the local government. Englehardt spoke proudly of gerrymandering the Negroes out of the town and indicated he was motivated by the new civil rights act. "If that Civil Rights Commission comes down here and forces mass registration of unqualified Negroes, there'll be bloodshed," he predicted. A prominent Negro leader denied the Negroes wanted to take over local affairs and said that if Negroes could have had one representative out of five on the school board, one out of five on the city council, one out of seven on the county board of revenue, "I think we'd have bragged of this community as a model one in race relations." In any event, what began as a move to limit voting by Negroes, quickly became an economic battle. Negroes in the town simply began in large part to shop elsewhere. How effective has this movement against white merchants been? A dry goods store owner reported his business was down 35 per cent, an auto dealer 40 to 60 percent below the previous year. The town's only movie theater has closed. In all, 10 white businesses have folded, and some others were expected to follow. Charles Gomillion, head of Tuskegee Institute's social science division and president of the Tuskegee Civic Association, a Negro group leading the resistance, has said, "If white citizens here feel Negroes shouldn't vote, then Negro citizens feel their money should not be spent with these folks." Negro leaders avoid use of the word boycott; they they prefer to talk of "spontaneous reaction." The reason is the state's anti-boycott law. The state attorney general has had a temporary injunction issued against the Civic Association to stop fostering boycott. Merchants have said the move has not brought back their Negro customery. Pending is a move to abolish the county and divide it among the surrounding counties. (Nov. 5, 1957—I; Aug., Oct. 1957—A)

Birmingham, Ala.: "The Southerner," edited by Ace Carter of the North Alabama Citizens Council, carried a column headed, "To Buy Or Not To Buy (There should be no question)" and listing Ford, for its "vicious program of using dollars to integrate" and citing the Ford-Mercury sponsored Ed Sullivan program for his "insistence" that certain Negro entertainers "be showcased frequently." It also listed Phillip Morris and Marlboro cigarettes, accusing the company of contributing to the Urban League, and Kraft, because some of its television programs were "interracial and have sold the idea that the white Southerner is a bully, coward or something very distasteful." (Sept. — Oct. 1956)

Tallahassee, Fla.: On May 27, 1956, two girls from Florida A and M University, a Negro school, boarded a crowded city bus and sat in the only two vacant seats in the front of a bus, next to a white woman. The driver asked them to move to the rear. The girls declined but offered to leave if the driver would refund their fare. He refused and called the police, who arrested the girls. They were released under bond. (The charges later were dropped.) That night a cross was burned in front of the girls' home. The next day, the student body at the college decided in a mass meeting to refrain from riding the city buses for the two weeks remaining in the term. By mid-afternoon, Negroes in town joined the movement. On May 29, Negro citizens met in the Bethel Baptist Church and organized the Inter-Civic Council, with the Rev. C. K. Steele at its head. Since that time, the situation has been complex. Bus service has been discontinued and resumed. Police arrested drivers in the Negro car pool on charges they were violating the state's "for hire" laws. Businesses have been harmed. The ICC accused the police of intimidating Negroes by taking them from their homes at all hours for questioning. Threats have been made, crosses burned, rocks and bricks thrown through windows of homes and cars. After the Supreme Court ruled bus segregation in Montgomery was unconstitutional, the Tallahassee boycott was ended officially. However, the bulk of the Negroes still do not ride the buses, apparently awaiting the outcome of several ponding court cases. (B, and "The Tallahassee Bus Protest", a field report by Charles U. Smith of Florida A. & M. University and Lewis M. Killian of Florida State University.)

Florence, S. C.: After two years of threats and pressure, the Florence Morning News, which repeatedly appealed for moderation and good will in solving segregation problems, banned the subject from its editorial page. For its views, the News had drawn violent abuse, reader complaints and its circulation dropped. The city editor had been punched while covering a Klan meeting; the church editor, a minister, had his tires slashed and two cars had tried to run him off the road. Editor John H. O'Dowd, 29, native of Florence and son of the owner-publisher, had been threatened and chased at night by a car. Finally, O'Dowd announced a "retreat from reason" and wrote, "We have ...sought men of good will...but men seeking the fair solution have not, in two years, come forward." He announced segregation stories would continue to be printed in the news columns. Later, O'Dowd left florence to take a job in a northern city on a larger newspaper. (Time magazine, April 2, 1956)

Choctaw County, Ala.: On September 21, 1956, Life magazine carried another story in its series on segregation. Included was an account of the life of a Negro couple, Willie and Allie Lee Causey in the 95 per cent Negro community of Shady Grove. It told how Causey earned a good living as a woodcutter and farmer, running a small but successful business with a truck, power tools and his own work crew. It also told how Mrs. Causey taught school in a ramshackle building and quoted her opinion on racial problems: "Integration is the only way through which Negroes will receive justice. We cannot get it as a separate people...." Life, in an issue the following December, reported the consequences. Causey's truck was confiscated, merchants refused to sell the family anything, Mrs. Causey was fired. The Causeys had to move from the community and, with the help of Life, resettle in another part of the South. (Life Magazine--1956)

Little Rock, Ark.: Advertisers threatened to boycott the Arkansas Gazette because of its support of the school board's plan of gradual integration of schools in Little Rock. A bakery was boycotted because the high school-age daughter of its owner was quoted as favoring integration in the schools and because a member of the Little Rock school board worked there. Business dropped off in a men's clothing store owned by James T. Karam, a friend of Governor Orville Faubus and described in some quarters as a leader in the violence at Central High School. His store once did a thriving business with Negro customers. These and other measures and counter-measures grew out of the crisis at Central High School. (March 1958--A)

Yazoo City, Miss.: The White Citizens Council published a full-page advertisement in a local paper carrying "an authentic list of the purported

signers to a NAACP communication to our school board." Many of the signers lost their jobs and under this pressure the majority removed their names from the petition. A plumbing contractor was taken off two construction jobs he had underway, refused plumbing supplies by a wholesale house and notified that a loaf of bread would cost him a dollar. (Journal and Guide, Sept. 24, 1955)

Alcorn, Miss.: Prof. Clennon King, controversial professor whose pro-segregation writings touched off a student boycott at Alcorn A & M College for Negroes last year, said he had been dismissed. In a statement, King said, " I stand for academic freedom...(and) freedom of speech." He displayed a letter from the president of the college dated May 1 stating only that King's contract had not been renewed. A majority of the 450 students at the college boycotted classes last year in protest against a series of newspaper articles by King critical of the NAACP. (May 3,1958—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A Negro minister was charged with disorderly conduct because he refused to give up his pastorate. The Rev. U. J. Fields said a group within the congregation of the Bell Street Baptist Church which "does not believe in taking a stand on what our people are pressing for" voted for his dismissal. George Durden, deacon in the church, swore out the warrant for Fields' arrest. Durden said the congregation voted to remove Fields solely in the interest of harmony in the church and that the removal was not connected with the minister's activity in the prolonged bus boycott here in protest of racial segregation. However, Fields charged that "pressure was put on some of my parisioners from outside" becauso of his progressive stand on racial questions. (March 25, 1956—B)

Tallahassee, Fla.: John M. Boardman, white graduate student at Florida State University, was refused permission to continue his studies after the present semester because he entertained Negro students from neighboring Florida A & M on the campus. Boardman was one of six students -- three fo them Negro -- arrested for sitting together on a Tallahassee bus in violation of a driver seating assignment. (March, 1957--A)

VIOLENCE: DYNAMITE, STONES AND GUNPOWDER

Segregationists often talk of the current threat to the Southern way of life. Other citizens, however, are faced with a threat to the more basic, national way of life.

Many of our most cherished traditions and fundamental rights are challenged or denied some of our citizens: the right to live, vote, worship and assemble peacefully.

Probably the majority of Southerners, including "moderates," prefer not to become directly involved in the problems of this transitional period in race relations. Others work for new laws which will hold the segregation barrier as long as possible. There are others who resort to violence and intimidation and it is with those this report is concerned.

The following list of 103 separate incidents in the Jan. 1, 1955---May 1, 1958 period sheds light on their methods.

It includes 32 dynamitings of homes. This figure actually represents more than that number of houses, however. For example, in one dynamiting in Clinton, Tenn., 30 homes were damaged by a single blast.

Six homes were burned under circumstances police consider suspicious. Another 18 homes were struck by gunfire and 11 were stoned.

Three schools were bombed, in Jacksonville, Nashville and Chattanooga. Attempts were made to bomb two others, in Charlotte and Clinton, Tenn. A third, in Mecklenburg County, N. C., was threatened. (The threat against Little Rock's Central High School are included in the report on that disturbance.)

One white church and five Negro churches were bombed, four of them in Montgomery, Ala. Another Negro church, valued at $150,000, was destroyed by fire in Memphis and one church was stoned.

Three temples or Jewish centers were bombed, in Miami, Nashville and Jacksonville and attempts were made on three others in Gastonia, N. C., Birmingham and Charlotte.

A YWCA was dynamited in Chattanooga. Five other public buildings or stores were either burned or bombed. At least 11 automobiles were damaged by acid.

Koinonia Farm in Georgia was the victim of at least 12 separate instances of violence--shootings, fires and dynamitings.

Details of the incidents follow:

Birmingham, Ala.: Four homes purchased by Negroes in the once all-white section of Fountain Heights were dynamited over a period of several months. One of the homes later was damaged by fire which police blamed on arsonists. White property owners in the area have formed an association designed to prevent sales of homes to Negroes. (Nov. 2, 1957, Dec. 7--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: The home of a Negro family which moved into a white neighborhood and ignored a warning fiery cross was damaged by a bomb explosion. The house, in East Birmingham, was occupied by the Otis Flowers family. The blast blew out a wall of the house and Arthur Flowers, 12, suffered a cut hand. Detectives said it was the second bombing of a Negro home within a week. (Dec. 31, 1957--B)

Mobile, Ala.: The fifth of a series of recent bombing attempts in the city was reported by Walter Johnson, Negro cook, who said he supposed the small bomb thrown by a white boy on a bicycle, was the result of his living "in a mixed neighborhood." Little damage was done. (March, 1957--A)

Birmingham, Ala.: The home of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro minister and leader of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which staged a one-day defiance of city bus segregation laws, was heavily damaged by dynamite Christmas night. (Jan. 1957--A)

Little Rock, Ark.: Mrs. L. C. Bates, president of the NAACP, reported an attempt to bomb her home on New Years Eve. The bomb, a crude device in a bottle, went off in the driveway and caused no damage. Two weeks later someone threw a rock through a bedroom window. (Feb. 1958--A)

Miami, Fla.: The school-recreation annex of Temple Beth El was dynamited, causing at least $30,000 in damage. The Miami incident was the first of its kind since a wave of terrorism in 1951 when several synagogues and Negro homes were bombed and dynamite was found at a Catholic church. (March 17, 1958,B)

Atlanta, Ga.: An explosion damaged a home into which a Negro family moved a few days earlier and caused minor damage to a neighboring home owned by a white man. The blast shattered a corner foundation, tore a hole in the living room and a piano toppled into the cavity. Five Negroes in the house escaped injury. (March 25, 1956--B)

Atlanta, Ga.: An explosion heavily damaged a Negro-occupied house in a predominantly white neighborhood and broke six windows in a white-occupied house next door. The Negro couple, who had rented the house recently, escaped injury. The blast ripped off portions of the front porch and the walls of two front rooms shortly before dawn. About 45 minutes after the explosion, the woman occupying the damaged house next door received an anonymous call telling her, "You will be next." (July 2, 1956—B)

Gastonia, N. C.: Thirty sticks of dynamite were found at a synagogue. A fuse had burned to within 1½ inches of the dynamite, then gone out. (Feb. 9, 1958—B)

Greensboro, N.C.: An explosion at the home of a Negro man whose two children attend a previously all-white school was reported. Police first said it was dynamite then that it could have been a large firecracker. Mud and small rocks were thrown on the porch and a small piece of siding was knocked off the house; the noise was heard five blocks away. (Oct. 2, 1957—B)

Charlotte, N.C: Three members of a KKK klavern, which was broken up by a police undercover agent, began serving prison sentences for plotting to plant a homemade bomb at a Negro school Feb. 15. Two others were acquitted. (March 21, 1958—B)

Charlotte, N.C.: Police Chief Frank N. Littlejohn disclosed that an unsuccessful attempt was made to dynamite a synagogue and that after 10 days of intensive investigation the KKK "is definitely suspected." Littlejohn said six unexploded sticks of dynamite with a partially burned 14-foot fuse were found outside the Temple Beth-El Nov. 12 (Nov. 22, 1957—C)

Gaffney, S. C.: Five men identified by police as members of the KKK were charged with bombing the home of a white physician whose wife wrote an article urging a "moderate" approach to the racial integration crisis. No one was injured in the blast at the home of Dr. and Mrs. James H. Sanders Nov. 16. Mrs. Sanders, a native of Charleston, contributed to a publication entitled "South Carolinians Speak—a Moderate Approach to Race Relations."

The Rev. John B. Morris of Dillon, S.C., one of the publishers, reported that former Rep. James Richards (D-S.C.) praised the publication as a "real contribution" to freedom of expression. (Dec. 7, 1957—B)

Cowpens, S.C.: A blast damaged the dwelling of a Negro tenant farmer. The white owner of the house could give no reason. The Spartanburg Herald-Journal announced it would pay $2,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of person or persons responsible. The following day, the Gaffney City Council added $500 reward for information about the blast at neighboring Cowpens. Early the next morning a cross was burned near the home of one councilman. (Dec. 1957—A)

Charlotte, N.C.: A bomb scare at a Mecklenburg County Negro grammer school proved a dud. Police Capt. G. A. Stevens said an anonymous caller warned police that a bomb was set to explode in a school at Paw Creek, about five miles away. Officers searched the school but found no bomb, although they did find a cross burning in the school yard shortly after the call. Stevens said both incidents were acts of intimidation. (Feb. 6, 1958—B)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: A small charge of dynamite damaged a house owned by R. H. Craig, Negro lawyer who recently appeared before the County Council to urge more jobs for Negroes in county government. Earlier, two crosses were burned on the property and the house was shot into. Craig said the house, inherited by his wife, always had been owned by Negroes although it was in a section otherwise white. The Craigs continued to live in their own home and only visited the house which was bombed. (May 25, 1957—D)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: Police investigated the third dynamite incident in Negro sections in less than two weeks. In the latest explosion, a vacant house was practically destroyed and several hundred dollars damage done to another. The houses are in a new subdivision designed exclusively for Negroes. None of the

65 houses is occupied. On October 27 an explosion ripped a hole in a field near a Negro area and the follwing night a house rented by a Negro couple was damaged by a dynamite blast in the front yard. Officer had no theories. (Nov. 5, 1957—B)

Chattahooga, Tenn.: An explosion was set off outside the Phyllis Wheatley branch of the YWCA, a community building for Negroes. The blast was the second in eight days near a Negro institution. (Jan. 27, 1958—B)

Nashville, Tenn.: A dynamite explosion at the Jewish Community Center ripped down the ceiling of the reception hall and broke windows, causing damage estimated at $6,000. Almost as soon as the roar of the explosion ended, Rabbi William B. Silverman of the Jewish Temple received a call from a man identifying himself as a member of the "Confederation underground" who warned that the "temple is going to be next" and that a Federal judge "would be shot down in cold blood." The latter threat was against District Judge William E. Miller whose orders brought first step desegregation to Nashville schools. Guards were posted at the Temple and Gov. Frank Clement offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to arrest and conviction. The city of Nashville offered a $1,000 reward and other rewards were offered by citizens. The Associated Press said that "so far as is known, none of Nashville's Jewish citizens has been active on either side in the school desegregation issue. The center has been used frequently for interracial meetings, chiefly by agencies of the United Givers Fund." (March 17, 1958—B)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: One of the largest Negro schools in the state was rocked by a blast from a homemade bomb. Damage to the $3 million doller Howard school was estimated at $1,000. (Feb. 1958—A)

Knoxville, Tenn.: A dynamite explosion reverberated through a municipal building where Louie Armstrong's band was playing for a segregated audience.

The blast, apparently from a single stick of dynamite tossed from a passing car, tore a four-foot hole in mud about 200 feet from the building. As for Armstrong, the Negro trumpeter merely remarked, "That's all right, folks. It's just the phone." (Feb. 19, 1957--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Fifty-four sticks of dynamite left in a sachel at Temple Beth-El failed to go off when a fuse went out. The Dynamite sticks had enough power to demolish the synagogue. Harry Horwitz, administrative director of the Temple, said he could offer no explination. (April 28, 1958--B)

Jacksonville, Fla.: Dynamite explosions damaged a Negro school and s synagogue. The blasts at the tow buildings, about four miles apart, occured within a half hour. Police estimated damage to the James Weldon Jones High School at $20,000. The explosion blew in windows and doors of the Jewish center and shattered windows of homes two blocks away. The Florida Times Union received a call from a man who said he was a member of the "Confederate underground" and that there would be three bombings. He said, "we want no more Jews in Florida except at Miami Beach." Rabbi Sydney M. Leftkotitz reported a call from a man who said, "This is the Confederate Center of Information. We have just blown up your Jewish center. All integration in the South must stop." (April 28, 1958--B)

Bessemer, Ala.: A dynamite explosion knocked out windoes and the side of a Negro church during a service and another blast damaged the home of a Negro civic leader and union officer. No one was injured, although there were 200 persons inside at the time the explosive was ignited in an alley behind the Allen Temple Methodist Church. Police knew of no motive. Neither the minister nor the man whose house was bombed had been active in any integration drive. (April 29, 1957--C)

Montgomery, Ala.: The home of a young white minister who was active in Montgomery's bus boycott by Negroes was bombed. The Rev. Robert Graetz and his family were away from home at the time. Graetz, 27, the white pastor of the all-Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, has actively supported the boycott and been a member of the Montgomery Improvement Association. (Aug. 25,1956--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: Four Negro churches and the home of a Negro minister, in addition to the home of a white minister (see Graetz, above) were bombed, less than 12 hours after another racially integrated city bus was ambushed with gunfire. No injuries were reported. (Jan. 10,1957--B)

Prichard, Ala.: The Rev. Joshua Barney, 68-year-old preacher and carpenter, who sought a city council post, narrowly escaped harm when four shots were fired into his home. Barney was warned anonymously to get out of the race, as was another Negro running for the council in Huntsville. Both Negroes were defeated. (Sept. 7, 1956--B)

Carrollton, Ala.: Robed nightriders fired into the home of a Negro tenant and ordered him to move within 48 hours. Sheriff R. R. Shields waited at the house, which is near Palmetto in north Pickens County, as the deadline approached but the men did not reappear. The sheriff said he had been told of a false rumor circulating that the Negro's children were going to ride a white school bus. (Jan. 5, 1957--B)

Mobile, Ala.: A Negro's home in a white section was damaged by fire, less than 24 hours after it was peppered by a shotgun. Fire Inspector J. B. Foster said it apparently was arson. Booker T. Gulley, the owner, said windows had been smashed frequently by bricks and he had received threatening telephone calls since moving into the house a few weeks earlier.

He said that he had used all his money as a downpayment for the house after a Negro real estate agent told him, "the white people were going to move out and the colored people move in." Nevertheless, after the fire, Gulley said he would move out as soon as he could sell the house. (Sept. 27, 1956—B)

Selma, Ala.: A white couple poured gasoline on a Negro woman's home and set it ablaze. (Sept. 23, 1955—D)

Sorrento, Fla.: The father of children whose right to attend white schools was upheld by a circuit judge reported several men tried to burn his rural home with gasoline bombs. The family put out the fire. Lake County Sheriff Willis McCall, who contends the children have Negro blood, commented, "Anybody could have done this. The people are mad about the court's ruling." The father denied that the children were part Negro and said he and his wife were of Cherokee and Irish descent. The children were admitted to a private church-supported white school. (Nov. 12, 1955—B)

Rossville, Ga.: A one-room frame shack, center of a rural racial dispute, was in ashes, destroyed by an unexplained fire. The owner of the place, who had moved to the farm a week earlier, planned to let a Negro man live in the shack while working as a laborer. Then a man drove into his yard and told the Negro he had better not be working at the place the next day. The following night a crowd of about 300 converged on the farm; finally, after a 40 minute talk, the white owner agreed he would not allow the Negro to live on the farm. The crowd dispersed. Two hours later the shack was in flames. The Walker County sheriff's office said no investigation was being made, that the incident had not been reported. (Jan. 9, 1957—B)

Atlanta, Ga.: A 51-year-old white man was sentenced to six months in jail after a court was told he threw a rock, and paid to have another one thrown, into the home of a Negro who moved into a white neighborhood. (June 6, 1957—E)

Jackson, Miss.: The home of Dr. A. A. McCoy, NAACP leader, was fired upon. (Sept. 15, 1955—J)

Greenwood, Miss.: Police reported a rifle shot was fired into the home of a Greenwood woman who is a member of the Mississippi Council on Human Relations. Mrs. Elizabeth Wheatley and her husband, D. S. Wheatley Sr., cotton buyer, were at home but neither was wounded. (March 13, 1957—B)

Greensboro, N.C.: A five pound rock was thrown through the window of City School Supt. Ben L. Smith's home. It was one of a series of incidents since Greensboro admitted six Negroes to white schools in the city last year. (Feb. 1958—A)

Manning, S.C.: Billy Fleming, 33-year-old Negro leader, reported that his home was hit with buckshot for the second time in two months. He believed the attacks stemmed from his NAACP activities. (Nov. 30, 1955—B)

Columbia, S.C.: A dozen buckshot pellets were fired into the home of James M. Hinton, state NAACP president. Mrs. Hinton, who was home alone, reported she was not injured. The shots smashed a mirror and pierced potted plants, walls and the stairway. The Hintons said that in previous months they had received "a lot of threats over the phone." (Jan. 20, 1956—V)

Fountain Inn, S.C.: Two shots were fired into the home of the Rev. Joseph S. Jones, Presbyterian minister who is "unalterably opposed to the mixing of the races." He said he believed it was "a deliberate attempt" on this life. Later, local and state police said the house might have been hit accidentally by hunters. (Feb. 15—B; Feb. 16, 1956—C)

Lake City, S.C.: The Rev. J. A. DeLaine, one of the Negroes who helped organize the original Clarendon County school suit, reported to police that his home had been the target three times of rocks and empty bottles. He also turned over a letter warning him to get out of the state. Later, LeLaine admitted firing upon a passing car, maintaining he did so to "mark the car" after his house was fired upon from the vehicle. Four white occupants insisted they had not discharged any shots and were fired upon without cause. The minister was charged with assault and battery and three days later a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. However, he had fled to New York, where the governor refused to extradite him. (Nov. 1955—A)

Jersey, Tenn.: The home of a Negro couple was dynamited and a shotgun fired into the home of another. The first was the target of shotgun fire five weeks earlier and the second adjoins a restaurant where a dynamiting had been attempted a few days earlier. Six weeks earlier the home of a Negro teacher was fired upon. The Chattanooga Times said editorially the incidents "undoubtedly are connected with racial feeling by a tiny, moronic few." (Aug. 13, 1957—D)

Knoxville, Tenn.: Three white men were convicted of firing a shotgun into a Negro home in June during a racial disturbance which died down after all available city policemen were called out. They were accused of firing a steel ball from a shotgun into the home after two Negro boys scooped up a stray baseball from a white game and ran to the home with it. Negro and white games had been in progress on adjoining diamonds. After the shotgun blast, about 2,000 whites and Negroes, armed with clubs, sticks and other weapons converged in the area. No one was injured. (Oct. 5, 1956—B)

Bessemer, Ala.: A dynamite blast damaged the home of a Negro attorney who is attempting to open two public parks in Bessemer to Negroes. Windows in the home of David Hood Jr. were shattered and he said some of the glass fell on him as he slept on a living room couch with a loaded rifle nearby.

Hood said he had received telephone threats against his life and only two nights earlier he had dismissed three guards who had protected his home for three weeks. The house is circled with floodlights. Hood recently was convicted of violating the state firearms law by carrying a pistol. He said he had a permit which expired and that he had been unable to get it renewed. (Nov. 1, 1957—B)

Nashville, Tenn.: A blast caused major destruction to one wing of the Hattie Cotton school in East Nashville. The school reopened the next week, but without the six-year-old Negro child who had been admitted as part of the city's first step toward an integrated school system. (Oct. 1957—A)

Clinton, Tenn.: In February, a suitcase loaded with dynamite exploded in the heart of the town's Negro district. Windows in 30 homes were shattered and windows were blasted from a restaurant operated by the foster father of a Negro student expelled from Clinton High School, scene of turmoil when the school was integrated the previous fall. White residents of Clinton launched a fund drive to help Negroes restore property damaged by the blast. (March 1957—A)

Clinton, Tenn.: One man was convicted, one acquitted and the state dropped charges against a third in a case involving charges of conspiring to dynamite integrated Clinton High School. The charges were filed after two sacks of dynamite were found across a river from the school last fall. Investigators said they learned the three had planned to blow up the school at night. Two of the men told the sheriff they were offered $500 to blast the school. (Feb. 13, 1958—C)

Little Rock, Ark.: Fire destroyed the gymnasium of the Arkansas Baptist College for Negroes and an anonymous telephone caller boasted to newsmen that segregationists set the fire. A nearby house, ignited by the wind-whipped fire, burned to the ground and three other houses were damaged. The Rev. O. A. Rogers, Jr., president of the college, estimated damage at $80,000. He said he couldn't believe segregationists had set the fire, for "everyone in Little Rock is sympathetic towards our school." (Feb. 8, 1958—B)

Memphis, Tenn.: Fire destroyed a $150,000 Negro church, one week after a cross was burned in the front yard of the pastor, whose home is in a white neighborhood. Fire Marshall Edgar Lovell said the fire looked "suspicious... This could have been caused by two things—it could have been burning a long time or it could have been set."

Austin, Texas: Three students from a white high school which this year admitted its first Negro students were arrested for throwing rocks, eggs and water filled ballonns at a Negro housing project. No damage was done and the boys were released after a warning from police. (April, 1956—A)

Alexandria, Va.: The night after a Negro family moved into an all-white residential block a rock was thrown through the dining room window while the family ate. About six weeks later a bullet ripped through a front window. A few weeks later the mother and her daughter were sleeping in a second floor bedroom when a shotgun explosion awoke them; pellets sprayed the walls above their heads. The police promised them protection and they planned to stay, the Evening Star (Washington, D. C.) reported. (April 1, 1958)

Yorktown, Va.: About 20 white men tossed stones and fired at the home a Negro widow recently rented for her family in a previously all-white section of York County. (Nov. 9, 1957—B)

Lake City, S.C.: Walter Scott, head of the NAACP chapter here, said two shotgun blasts ripped into his home. Two weeks earlier Scott reported a similar incident to police. (March 4, 1956—B)

Ringgold, Ga.: Police said an attempt to dynamite the tenant home of a Negro World War I veteran failed when an 18-inch fuse burned out before reaching the explosive. Seven sticks of dynamite were found under the front poarch. The Negro, Phillip Huggins, said his farm home was visited two months earlier by a group of robed men who kicked him and ordered him to leave the county. (Nov. 29, 1957--B)

Ringgold, Ga.: A Negro tenant, Jim Reynolds, was told to leave the county by a group of robed men Aug. 16, the same night another Negro was threatenedd. (see above) Police said he refused. On Aug. 18 his home burned. (Nov. 29, 1957--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A bomb which exploded at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader in the fight against bus segregation, blew out windows and damaged the front porch. Mrs. King, their daughter and a visitor were in the house but were uninjured. (Jan. 31, 1956--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A second attempt to blow up the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King misfired. Twelve sticks of dynamite tied around a metal tube were tossed on the porch but the bomb failed to explode. (Jan. 27, 1957--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A bomb tossed between a Negro house and a filling station exploded, damaging both buildings. Three Negroes suffered cuts and scratches. This, along with the attempted bombing of the King home (see above) were another in a series of outbreaks of violence which began shortly after bus segregation was ended by Federal Court order in December. (Jan. 27, 1959--B)

Tallahassee, Florida: For the second time, rocks have smashed windows in the homes of the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of this city's bus integration movement. Earlier, a cross was burned on the lawn. (Jan. 14, 1957--B)

Tallahassee, Florida: A shotgun was fired into a Negro grocery store, during the period of unrest caused by bus integration troubles. (Jan. 1957--B)

Beaumont, Texas: An explosion at a Negro residence in an integrated neighborhood ripped a hole in the lawn and shattered front windows. Another explosion damaged the sidewalk in front of the home of a Negro physician, and former NAACP official. Both explosions happened within a week. (Jan. 10, 1957--B)

Beaumont, Texas: In November, 1956, bricks and stones were thrown through windows of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, where an annual youth rally of white and Negro students was in session. During the week church members had received telephone calls protesting the integrated meeting, although no protest had been made before during the several years the rally had been held. The incident followed disturbances during the integration of Lamar State College of Technology in Beaumont (see Crowd and Mob action). (From a field study by Dr. Warren Breed of Tulane Univ.)

Americus, Ga.: Shortly after the Supreme Court's school decision, troubles, heretofore minor, began in earnest for Koinonia Farm, an interracial religious cooperative founded in Sumpter County by a group of Southerners in 1942. Merchants in nearby communities refused to buy the farm's products or sell it anything (see reprisals). But acts of violence began after the Rev. Clarence Jordan, a Baptist minister, co-founder of Koinonia and a resident of the farm, announced in April, 1956, he was willing to sign an entrance application to a state white college for two Negroes. Later in the month, pistol shots were fired at the roadside produce stand. On July 23, the farm's roadside market was dynamited, causing an estimated $3,000 in damage. The following November, several rounds of buckshot were fired into the market, ruining a refrigerator case valued at $300. In December, shots were fired into the community's electric gas pumps, destroying the mechanism; a sign was riddled by bullets from a speeding car on New Year's day. On Jan. 14, a charge of dynamite destroyed the entire market, valued at $7,000. On Jan. 17, an anonymous phone call advised the community to be on watch that night; about 2 a.m. flames leaped from a vacant house on the farm. Other mysterious fires have occurred from time to time in the buildings of neighbors who have befriended members of the community, one loss amounting to $30,000. On Jan. 30, a submachine gun was fired from an auto into the side of one of the community's residences, the bullets missing people there by inches. At 9:15 p.m. on Feb. 1, a dozen shotgun blasts from speeding cars peppered a volley ball court where children were playing under lights. One shot went through a residence window, barely missing an 11-year-old child. Two weeks later two flood lights at the entrance to the farm were shot out. On March 5, 1957, an unarmed Koinonia guard was fired on, the light he was carrying was shattered and two bullets struck a car by which he was standing. Meanwhile, so many crosses have been burned no one could keep count. In October, 1957, shots again were fired from a speeding car into the farm area. (Christian Science Monitor, March 1, 1957, and other sources.)

Montgomery, Ala.: Acid was thrown on 10 cars within the past week. All but one belonged to Negroes. The exception was a car-trailer owned by a white minister from Atlanta who participated in a Negro-sponsored racial institute. He reported that his parked vehicle, emblazoned with slogans of brotherhood, was struck by acid on two successive nights. (Dec. 10, 1956--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: Acid was thrown on the car of a bus boycott leader. The complaint was made to police by the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church. (Dec. 19, 1956--W)

Beaumont, Texas: Three homemade bombs caused damage estimated at several thousands of dollars. One exploded under a truck owned by State Sen. Rufus Kilpatrick. A second bomb was aimed at the home of a retired car dealer, who said he believed it was because of his "middle of the road" stand on integration. A third damaged the entrance at St. Michael's Orthodox Church. The Rev. Daniel Montgomery, pastor, said he had taken no stand on integration but that he had been warned by an anonymous woman telephone caller that "we want to get the foreigners." (March 1957--A)

A white baseball player rides with white and Negro teammates....

A Negro urges other Negroes to register and vote....

A white band leader stops to change a tire....

A Negro preacher drives along a lonely country road....

A white woman walks to church to recite a rosary....

Innocent, every day events these seem. But they ended in death for one and bullets or beatings for the rest.

Throughout the South some men have placed themselves above the law. Some have set out to administer punishment to those whose views and actions they dislike. Others are bent only on violence as a means of intimidation and their victims are selected for no apparent reason.

In the period surveyed, at least 25 Negroes have been beaten, 19 of them in Alabama. Four Negroes have been killed and 14 wounded by gunfire. One was emasculated and charges of police brutality against two Negroes appeared in public print.

The violence did not always stay within racial bounds. Four white men were shot and wounded and four white persons beaten, in all but one instance in white-against-white action, for some racial reason.

In addition, a gun battle which grew out of racial tensions left one Negro dead, another injured and six white men wounded, one critically.

A total of 78 persons suffered in the attacks listed.

Some of the cases have been in the national headlines—the emasculation of a Birmingham Negro, an attack on singer Nat King Cole and the beating of a white band director in South Carolina. The widely publicized trial of two men in Mississippi for the slaying of a Negro boy, Emmett Till, although it ended in acquittal, is listed not only because of the wide publicity it received but because of the racial tension it reflected and engendered. Some other cases are listed because they seem to be part of the current picture of racial antagonisms.

The details:

Fort Deposit, Ala.: A young Negro, Rogers Hamilton, 19, was found shot to death near his farm home. Lowndes County Sheriff Frank Ryals said that according to the youth's mother, two unidentified men "called at the house for the boy and took him away in a truck." She told officers she followed the truck for a short distance and saw her son shot to death, but that she was some distance away and could not identify the men. The sheriff said the mother first claimed the men were white, then changed her story; he said she also thought her son might have been attacked as a result of an argument over a woman. "Reports reaching the Northern press tagged the death last October 22 a lynching," the sheriff said. "However, our investigation has revealed nothing that leads us to believe these reports." (Nov. 13, 1957—G)

Marion, Ala.: A Bibb County white man was shot in the arm during a nightrider raid on the home of a part-time Negro preacher. Circuit Solicitor Blanchard McLeon said Nathaniel Benson, 40, the Negro whose home was raided told this story: Robed white men in three cars tossed sulphur bombs in his house at midnight and then shot at him when he went outside with his shotgun. Benson said he went out the back door shooting his shotgun "in the air" and ran into woods nearby. The incident came to light when the white man was admitted to a hospital. (Aug. 31, 1957—G)

Dade City, Fla.: A white player for the Tampa baseball team was wounded slightly by birdshot fired at an automobile carrying two other white players and three Negro members of the Florida State League team. The shooting occurred soon after the car was moved from in front of a drive-in at the request of an employee because it carried both white and Negro men. (Aug. 9 —B)

Umatilla, Fla.: A union official charged that four hooded men fired shotgun blasts into a labor rally and wounded 12 Negroes in this former KKK stronghold. Gov. LeRoy Collins called on Sheriff Willis V. McCall for an investigation of the shots fired through the windows of a Masonic Lodge where 26 Negroes were listening to a labor organizer. A deputy reported earlier that McCall had left on a three-day cruise down the Kissimmee River and told his aides not to disclose the violence to reporters until he returned. (Oct. 22, 1955—C)

Sumner, Miss.: Elmore O. Kimbell, white cotton gin operator, was acquitted of murder charges in the shotgun slaying of a Negro service station attendant. Kimbell swore he shot Clinton Melton in self-defense at a Glendora filling station in December, 1955, after three shots were fired at him. Three witnesses testified that Kimbell had threatened Melton, that he drove away and returned in 15 minutes with his shotgun and killed the Negro. Lee McGarrh, Melton's white employer, swore the Negro had no gun. He told investigators that after Melton sold gasoline to Kimbell the white man argued about getting a full tank when he ordered only a few gallons. McGarrh said Kimbell complained the Negro "acted smart" and then drove away with a promise to return. McGarrh said he warned Melton to flee and then he was in his car about to do so when Kimbell returned and opened fire. (March 13, 1956—B,C)

Sumner, Miss.: A case that captured headlines across the nation and stirred racial antagonisms North and South ended with the acquittal of two white half-brothers in the slaying of a Negro boy, Emmett Till. The defendants, Roy Bryant and John W. Milam, were accused of the August 28, 1955, kidnap-slaying of the vacationing 14-year-old from Chicago, in what became known as the "wolf whistle" case. Till was kidnapped from his uncle's cottonfield shack. Four days earlier, Mrs. Bryant said, a Negro had tried to date her, uttered an obscenity and wolf-whistled at her. In pre-trial statements, authorities offered the incident at the Bryant store in the hamlet of Money as a motive for the murder. The defense at the trial cast doubt that a body taken from the Tallahatchie River three days after the abduction was Till's. The jury foreman said the issue of the body's identification was the chief motive behind its verdict. Bryant and Milam maintained they released young Till after his abduction because he was not the boy who did the whistling. In November, a Leflore County grand jury declined to indict the two men on charges on kidnapping Till. (Sept. 23, 1955, Nov. 9, 1955--B)

Clanton, Ala.: Armed with hand grenades, rifles and tear gas, sheriffs and highway patrolmen from eight counties, accompanied by 150 to 200 white townspeople, converged at a barricaded Negro home. One Negro was killed and two others captured. They moved on the house the day after a deputy sheriff and another white man were wounded by gunfire from ambush. The affair began one Thursday night in November, 1957, when a cross was burned near the Negro section in Lomax, a small community three miles from the Central Alabama town of Clanton, Then, according to police, some of the Negroes armed themselves Friday and Saturday night in fear of Klan violence. They were watching the hill in Lomax when Deputy Sheriff Floyd Porter stopped a white motorist to make a routine driver's license check. Suddenly, a shotgun blast ripped over the car and several pellets struck a passenger. (One officer later speculated the deputies might have been mistaken for Klansmen.)

Porter gave chase through an open field and as he rounded a small Negro church he was struck by a shotgun blast which almost tore off a hand and punctured his left lung. Authorities borught bloodhounds from the state prison to the church and followed a trail to the home of Willie Dunigan, 43-year-old Negro farmhand. In the subsequent gun battle, Dunigan was killed, his wife wounded seriously and four deputies suffered minor wounds. Later, police reported they were holding at least eight Negroes for questioning. Sheriff Hugh Champion denied there was evidence of any basic racial trouble and said, "It was just an unfortunate in cident arising out of a tense atmosphere." (Nov. 18, 21, 1957—B, G, G)

Birmingham, Ala.: A city bus with 30 passengers aboard was hit four times by gunfire. Six Negro boys were arrested in connection with the shooting. Earlier, shots were fired into the Negro section of a bus and two white youths were reported seen fleeing from the scene. (Jan. 1957—A)

Belzoni, Miss.: Gus Courts, Negro grocer, was shot and seriously wounded by a gunman who fired through his store window from a car. Courts said the violence came after an unsuccessful drive by the Citizens Council in Belzoni to force him out of business by economic pressure. Courts added that this was because of his efforts to persuade Negroes to registed to vote in this delta town of 4,000. "We haven't even mentioned integration," Courts said. He was president of the local NAACP chapter at the time of the shooting. His predecessor as NAACP president in Belzoni, the Rev. George Washington Lee, was killed the previous year after he refused a request to remove his name from the voters registration list, newspapers reported. (Nov. 28, 1955—B)

Brookhaven, Miss.: Lamar Smith, Negro reported to have urged other

Negroes to cast absentee ballots in a gubernatorial race, was shot to death on the courthouse lawn. Three white men were charged with his murder but a grand jury failed to indict them. (Aug. 17, 1955--B)

Selma, Ala.: Four white persons forced a Negro porter into a car and drove 10 miles into the country before releasing him. The abductors apparently believed him to be another individual accused of insulting a white woman. (Oct. 23, 1955--D)

Prattville, Ala.: Three Negroes were beaten by a robed KKK group during a Klan rally here. Police Chief O. C. Burton said the beatings occured after the Negroes "shouted and cursed" during a talk by one of the speakers. He said one of the Negroes then claimed about "25 or 30" Klansmen attacked him and his companions. The men required medical treatment but were not seriously hurt, the police chief added. No arrests were made and Burton said the Klansmen he questioned denied any knowledge of the beatings. (May 23, 1957--C)

Evergreen, Ala.: Four Negroes were beaten by a mob in Klan regalia. The victims said the robed men accused them of NAACP membership. Two of those beaten were ministers. They apparently were chance passerbys at a spot where Klansmen were gathered. The other two were accused of neglecting their children. (Sept. 1957--A)

Birmingham, Ala.: Two young Negro men told of being kidnapped, taken into a woods and beaten with rubber hoses. Harold Cunningham, 19, and Henry Silent, 21, said they were beaten after being questioned about where they were "two Saturdays ago." Cunningham said, "I don't know what they were talking about. Henry and I were working together for a paper company two Saturdays ago." The young men and their dates said they went to a white drive-in ice cream stand, but left becasue it was too crowded. Then, the girls told police, they were followed by two cars, which forced their automobile to stop in a section of north Birmingham. Four white men were in each car and they had "some pistols." The men forced the Negro youths to get down on the floor of a car and told them, "One of you is going to talk before you leave." After being beaten and threatened with hanging and shooting, the Negroes escaped when all but one of the men returned to the cars. (June 11, 1957--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: A Negro school janitor said he was abducted and beaten Tuesday night by a group of white men who identified themselves as Ku Klux Klansmen. Woodrow Johnson told school authorities three white men ordered him into a car in Bessemer, telling him he was under arrest. He became suspicious when they drove into a woods instead of to jail. The men asked him if he were working for racial integration and also if he were the Rev. (Martin Luther) King. Johnson said he was struck from behind and knocked unconscious and during this time was hit in the eye. The janitor said the men put him back in the car and drove him part way back to Bessemer. He said the first three men were joined by at least five others in the woods. (Dec. 7, 1957--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: James Henry Brock, 27, a Birmingham Negro, told police he was abducted by a group of hooded white men and beaten near Prattville, about 20 miles north of Montgomery. Brock was hospitalized with multiple bruises and cuts over his face and body which he said were caused by whips trimmed from trees. Brock said he and his wife were visiting his parents in Autauga County when two carloads of white men drove behind a car in which he sat with three other Negroes in Prattville late Saturday night. The Negro said the men, who were wearing coveralls with hoods over their heads, told them, "Don't move--stand still or we'll shoot." The other Negroes ran and "the men started shooting at them with shotguns and pistols." Apparently none was injured. Brock said he was pulled from the car, beaten and kicked, then driven into woods where he was beaten again. He quoted one of the assailants as saying finally, "Run if you want to live--and if you get back to Brimingham, tell those niggers this is what we do to them down here." Brock ran and walked about five miles to a farm homo and the owner took him to a hospital. The Autauga County sheriff said he was making a full investigation and promised Negroes would be given "full protection" against any such future incidents. Later, he indicated some doubt the whipping had occurred. (July 8, 1957--C,G)

Birmingham, Ala.: Two discharged Brimingham police officers and a city jail warden were acquitted in federal court of depriving a Negro prisoner of his civil rights. Indictments were brought against the three men after Charles Patrick claimed he was beaten by the officers in the jail while the warden was present. He had been jailed after the wife of one of the policemen complained the Negro had threatened her during an argument over a parking space. He later was cleared of the charges. The warden was suspended from his post for 10 days. (April 18, 1955--B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Nat King Cole, Negro singer and pianist, was attacked by a group of white men as he played for a white audience in Municipal Auditorium. Six white men rushed the band leader, knocking Cole and the microphone to the floor. Police rushed from the wings, grabbed the attackers and took them to jail. Cole apparently was not injured, only stunned. Later, police said they had learned that it had been planned that 100 or 150 white men would meet at the auditorium, infiltrate the audience, overpower the band, the police and anyone else who interfered. "But the expected mob failed to show," Detective C. B. Golden said. About a week later Recorders Court Judge Ralph E. Parker imposed maximum jail sentences on four of the attackers, members of the White Citizens Council; two others were fined. (April 10, April 18, 1957--B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A group of Negroes beat a 20-year-old white man after a Negro woman was struck by a car he was driving, the highway patrol reported. Six or seven Negro men pulled Jimmy B. Rigsby of Montgomery from his car following the accident, beat him about the head and kicked him in the ribs, the patrol said. The report said the Negro woman apparently got out of a car and was searching for a loose part when she was struck by an outside rear-view mirror on the Rigsby car. She suffered a broken arm and abrasions. The attackers had fled when patrolmen arrived. (Dec. 13----B)

Centreville, Ala.: White men horsewhipped a Negro preacher north of here. Bibb County Sheriff Carl A. Griffin said the Rev. T. D. Wesley gave this account: After preaching at a Negro church, he was driving along a country road when men in two or three cars stopped him, handcuffed him and tied him with rope. They drove him up a side road and beat him with a horsewhip, then left him, still bound, in the unlocked truck of his car. He managed to free himself and drive to Centreville, where he was taken to a Selma Hospital. Wesley said one of his assailants wore a kind of hat or hood which came over his face. The sheriff said no explanation for the beating had been uncovered. He added that he was informed Wesley was threatened once before and that his assailants vowed to get him if he talked. (Nov. 5, 1957—W)

Birmingham, Ala.: A mob of rock-throwing whites, yelling threats attacked a white integration leader who later was fined $30 for reckless driving in making his escape. Lamar Weaver, the victim, had just left the Terminal Railroad Station where a Negro couple had tested the integration policy in a waiting room, when he was slugged with a suitcase and stoned. He was convicted at a special hearing of running a red light and reckless driving as he drove his damaged car from a parking lot through a gauntlet of his tormentors. (March 6, 1957—C)

Maplesville, Ala.: Six Negroes were beaten in what a newspaper account said appeared to be a senseless outrage. The six men, one a soldier on leave, were watching television in the home of one of them when Ku Klux Klansmen arrived. The masked men beat the Negroes from the rear, using rubber hoses or blackjacks; four of the victims then were taken out into the road and started running, while four or five shots were fired. They hid in a wooded area. Earlier in the evening, 22 carloads of Klansmen pulled up in front of the town hall, donned robes and marched through town. After the beatings, two of the Negroes left town. Apparently the only thing which prevented a mass exodus of other Negroes from the small town was that several solid citizens, like Raymond Stremming, operator of a veneer company, promised there would be no repitition of the Klan incident. "It is going to be easier to run the Klan off than it is for the Klan to run the Negroes off," said Stremming. Later, Stremming was threatened and warned to leave town, The town police chief, a county deputy sheriff and several of his employees stood armed guard after the threat, Stremming said. (August, 1957—B,G)

Stanton, Ala.: The Saturday night flogging of a white sawmill worker spurred a county-wide investigation of possible connection with recent Klan activities in the area. The victim, a 37-year-old father of six, told county authorities he was beaten by 12 or 13 white men, strangers to him, in the front yard of his home after his assailants told him, "we're tired of the way you're been treating your wife and family and we're tired of you associating too freely with Negroes. The flogging came three weeks after the beatings in Maplesville (see above), six miles to the north.

Birmingham, Ala.: A 34-year-old Negro was kidnapped and emasculated by a group of white men wearing hoods and robes. The man, Judge Aaron, was taken to a Veterans Administration hospital, where doctors said he had been severely beaten and "100 percent" emasculated. Two months later, two members of the Ku Klux Klan, Bart Floyd and Joe Pritchett, both 31, were convicted of mutilation and sentences to 20 years, the maximum punishment provided in Alabama. A Third Klansman, Jesse Mabry, later also was sentenced to 20 years. Witnesses said Pritchett commanded a night-riding detail which set out to prove the worthiness of Floyd, who was to be promoted to captain in the Klan lair. Floyd was described as the Klansman who mutilated Aaron. In sentencing Floyd, Circuit Court Judge Alta L. King said the deed was the "most cowardly, atrocious and diabolical crime ever to come to my attention." (Sept. 4, Nov. 7-8, 1957--C,B)

Little Rock, Ark.: Six white teen-agers were attacked by a group of 15 to 20 Negro youths, police said. The white boys suffered cuts and bruises. Officers said the white boys reported they were walking home when the Negroes attacked, armed with clubs and bricks. Police believed they were the same Negroes who, about two hours earlier, ganged two other white youths a block away. About 12 Negroes were picked up on police but the victims couldn't identify them as the assailants. (Nov. 1, 1957--F)

Suwannee County, Fla.: A Negro farmer was kidnapped and flogged and an expectant Negro Mother beaten. In an editorial, the Tampa Morning Tribune, attributed lack of action by law enforcement agencies to resentment over the Supreme Court school ruling. (June 6, 1955)

Erath, La.: Bishop Jules B. Jeanmard excommunicated three Roman Catholics for beating a woman teacher who instructed Negro and white children in the same catechism classroom. The bishop said the decree was directed at three women who attacked the lay teacher as she was on her way to recite a rosary. (Nov. 27, 1955--B)

Clarksdale, Miss.: A Negro citizens organization charged Clarksdale police with "physical and verbal abuse" of Negroes in enforcement of a curfew and an investigation of recent criminal assaults on white women. The mayor denied the charge and said policemen had been instructed to "defent themselves" but were told not to beat anyone. Negro spokesmen said members of their race had been subject to both "physical and verbal abuse" in connection with investigations of a series of rape cases. A Negro bricklayer charged police beat him into unconsciousness; he said the alleged beating occured in connection with the curfew ordered the previous month after three rape cases were reported in the city. (Oct. 26, 1956--X)

Old Fort, N. C.: Albert Joyner, who had attempted to enroll five Negro children in a local elementary school, was knocked into thecity fountain by a white railroad employee. (Sept. 6, 1955--O)

Camden, S. C.: Guy Hutchins, director of the Camden High School band, was beaten by hooded men. Hutchins said he was surrounded by four or five men while he was changing a tire, that they pulled a sack over his head, drove him around and then tied him to a tree while each hit him a half dozen times with a board. He said he felt a pistol at his neck several times and that one of the men had a shotgun. Hutchins was hospitalized with severe bruises. He said the attackers falsely accused him of making a pro-integration speech to a civic club. Subsequently, the Kershaw County grand jury refused to indict six men in the flogging. The grand jury first heard Judge G. Duncan Bellinger spend more than an hour denouncing the U. S. Supreme Court for "asinine" decisions and the outlawing of school segregation. He said the segregation decisions were "devoid of intellectual and judicial integrity." (Dec. 28, 1956--B; June 24, 1957--C)

Camden, S. D.: A 65-year-old-man was shot in the arm and chest by four or five hooded men who criticized his personal conduct. The attack preceded by about a week the beating of a band director (see above). Officers and the hospital where the shooting victim was treated would not identify him. (Dec. 28, 1956--B)

Greenville, S.C.: Four admitted members of the Ku Klux Klan were convicted for conspiring to flog a Negro, Claud (sic) Cruell, at his home July 21, 1957. Two also were convicted for flogging the 58-year-old Negro landowner and Baptist deacon because of his association with a white family who rented a house on his 100-acre farm. Cruell and his wife were caring for the seven children of the white tenant when a group of white men stormed into the house. They wrapped a chain around Cruell's arm, dragged him to another room and beat him. The white tenant had left the children with the Negro couple while he visited his wife in a hospital. The leader of the attackers was given six years, another three years and the other two a year each. Two others were acquitted and charges were dismissed against five. (Jan 23, 1958--B; Feb. 3, 1958--G)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: A Negro man reported to police that he and his sister-in-law were kidnapped and beaten by white men. The man said he was stopped by two men while he was driving on a surburban street and forced into their car and that his sister-in-law was picked up by the men as she was walking along the street. The man, Lemmie Henderson, said they were transferred into two of four cars in which 11 men were riding, taken to a remote section where they were beaten with a rubber hose and his clothes were slashed with a knife. Henderson said that the men, before abandoning them, asked if he or the woman were associated with the NAACP. Henderson told them he was not a member. The incident was the second of its kind reported to police in recent months. (Dec. 1, 1957--B)

Houston, Texas: A white oilman punched a Negro attorney who tried to buy a cup of coffee in the Harris County courthouse. The lawyer was testing a federal court order which held the cafeteria could not continue to refuse service to Negroes. After the assault, the cafeteria was closed.(1956--C)

Henderson, Texas: An African ministerial student, hit by a blackjack by a policeman after he refused to move to rear of a bus, was released from jail after an official of the college he is attending paid his $25 fine. The officer said he was investigating reports a Negro refused to move back in the bus. The officer said when the student, a native of Nigeria, told him in a British accent he did not understand the order, he grabbed him by the arm and took him to the rear. Then, when he reached in his pocket, "I had to tap him with a slapjack," the policeman said. The student said he was reaching for his passport to show the officer. (Aug. 25, 1957--B)

Prattsville, Ala.: A Negro minister reported to the Autauga County sheriff that two gunshots were fired into his car as he drove from a regival in Prattville. The Rev. J. W. Bonner, pastor of the First Christian Methodist Episcopal church in Montgomery, said neither he nor any of his three passengers were injured. A bullet was recovered from the upholstery of Bonner's automobile. The minister said the shots were fired from a car which "contained six or seven white people" as it passed him on the highway. During the boycott of city buses in Montgomery, the minister was one of 90 Negroes charged with violating Alabama's anti-boycott law. (Sept. 6, 1957--G)

Dora, Ala.: Walker County deputies sought three to five white men for questioning in the shotgun wounding of a Negro man. Deputy Alvin Phillips said Joe Harris was taken to a doctor in Praco after being wounded in the arm and side. Three other Negroes sitting in a car with Harris in front of a store in downtown Dora gave this account: The four Negro men were talking when a car carrying theee to five youths between 18 and 21 years old pulled alongside Harris' car. One of the white youths pulled out a shotgun and fired one blast. The pellets struck Harris. (April 14, 1958--H)

Carrollton, Ala.: Three white men were charged with a misdemeanor in the kidnapping of a 21-year-old Negro, who was hit with a shotgun in a mistaken identity reprisal. Pickens County Sheriff R. R. Shields said he arrested the men on a highway last night after they had released the beaten and frightened Negro, Mutt Jones. Shields described the three white men as "being well thought of around here." Asked why the men had kidnapped Jones,

Shields explained, "It was just a case of mistaken identity. A Negro hit one of the men's father with a blackjack and they thought it was Jones." Shields described Jones as an ex-convict and added, "Jones didn't have a mark on him. They did hit him two or three times on the head and shoulder with an automatic shotgun, though." (Sept. 13, 1955—C)

Bushnell, Fla.: Seven white men were acquitted of flogging Jesse Woods, a Negro, when the state's case collapsed and the chief prosecutor complained his main witnesses changed their stories. Circuit Judge T. G. Futch ordered the acquittal after State Attorney A. P. Buie asked that four of the seven be freed. The judge said the state failed to prove the men were guilty of aggravated assault and false imprisonment of Woods, who was taken from the nearby Wildwood city jail and flogged Nov. 28. The Negro had been arrested on city charges and police said he made a "hello there, baby," remark to a white school teacher. The state's case cracked open when Buie said soon after court opened, "I have sworn testimony from these witnesses sufficient to make a strong prima facie case against every defendant we have charged. These same witnesses who named these defendants have changed their stories. I do not know why." (Dec. 12, 1956—B)

Greenville, S.C.: A free-lance photographer was roughed up and another cameraman had his film confiscated by the Klan at a rally near Greenville. Several Klansmen grabbed Joe F. Gordan, who was representing the United Press and a Spartanburg television station, and threatened to drag him off the field where the rally was being held. Jordan had snapped a picture of robed, but unmasked, Klansmen confiscated film exposed by James P. Burns of Greenville station WFBC-TV. Jordan later demanded and received an apology from one of the Klan leaders. (Aug. 31, 1957—C)

Birmingham, Ala.: Hooded Klansmen slugged a television newsman and knocked him to the ground when he attempted to take pictures at a public rally. Leo Willette, news director for WBRC-TV, arrived at the rally in East Lake Park as some 500 Klansmen listened to a speaker denounce the press as "Communist inspired." Four or five men grabbed Willette. By the time police dispersed the crowd around him his camera was missing. Willette's face was bruised and his clothing muddied. (An announcement was made at the end of the rally that the camera had been turned over to policemen and would be returned to the newsman. (March 23, 1957—B,C)

VIOLENCE: MOB ACTION

Twenty-four towns and cities across the South have faced the danger of mob passions and violence since 1955.

The incidents ranged from comparatively minor clashes between white and Negro youths, a type of delinquency with racial undertones but not confined to the South, to alarming outbreaks of violence before newly integrated schools.

The 10 most serious instances of mob action all stemmed from school integration or the expectation of it and at least four others were connected.

In effect, the mob won in Mansfield, Texas, where white and Negro students continued to attend separate high schools, and achieved a temporary victory not entirely of its own making at the University of Alabama. It has managed to hold the segregation line in Birmingham public schools.

However, despite mob violence and demonstrations, some Negroes continued to attend school with white children, notably in Little Rock and Hoxie, Arkansas, Nashville and Clinton, Tennessee, and at a college in Beaumont, Texas.

The details:

Hoxie, Ark.: This is one of the towns in the South which operates a summer session for its pupils, then recesses for a period in the fall for cotton picking. In July, 1955, 25 Negroes for the first time went to Grammar and high school with 1,000 white students. All went fairly well for about three weeks until protests started rolling in. School officials said the protest campaign began with the arrival of letters and literature from Citizens Council groups in Mississippi and other Southern states. Soon, the town was ripped apart emotionally. Bitter arguments, two-way economic boycotts, a boycott of the school and petitions that the school board restore segregation followed. The turmoil led the school board to end the summer session two weeks early to let the situation cool off. Schools were reopened in October on the same integrated basis and with officials armed with a temporary restraining order to keep pro-segregation forces from interfering with the operation of schools. The reopening was without incident but with a high rate of absenteeism. In January, 1956, U. S. District Judge Albert L. Reeves in Jonesboro ruled for the Hoxie school board, holding that the U. S. Supreme Court had in effect nullified Arkansas segregation laws. (Sept.,Nov.; Jan., 1955-56--A)

Pompano Beach, Fla.: A rumor that Negro students would attempt to enroll in the high school caused police to throw a barricade around the building. The tense situation eased shortly but the Fort Lauderdale Daily News reported both white and Negro students were carrying concealed weapons. All students driving or riding to school were required to leave their cars and walk the final block through police lines. When no Negro students showed up at the white school, the barricades were removed but police continued to patrol the area. Police Chief James Boggs said his men were not ordered to keep Negro children from the school but to "keep the peace." Later, police said they were investigating reports that a "prominent white man" was encouraging Negroes to enroll in the white school and that if the report could be substantiated the individual would be charged with inciting to riot. (Oct. 1957--A)

Birmingham, Ala.: The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth was beaten and threatened with death by an angry mob when he attempted to enroll four Negro children at all-white Phillips High School. Police arrested three white man and battled a dozen more until the Negro minister could escape. Two hours later four Negro men drove by the school and tossed rocks at a window. The next day Phillips was evacuated after a bomb threat which proved to be a hoax. The same day crowds gathered around Phillips, Woodlawn High and Graymont elementary school. Police kept order except for a demonstration at Woodlawn, where the crowd threw rocks at passing cars and busses occupied by Negroes. The three schools were the ones to which eight Negro children had asked admittance. The following day, 76 Negro high school pupils were taken from their bus and questioned by police after rock throwing incidents. Later, one was convicted of throwing a soft drink bottle at a car and sentenced to six months in jail and fined $100, the maximum sentence. Six others were turned over to juvenile authorities. Three white men were charged with assault with intent to murder in the beating of the Negro minister. Shuttlesworth is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a pro-integration group formed in Birmingham. (Sept. 10,11,14, 1957--B)

Wadley, Ala.: An integrated meeting at Southern Union College was broken up by 30 men who threatened that if the Negroes did not leave, "we'll blow up the place." College President Clyde C. Flannery said all those at the meeting were Southerners and members of the Congregational Christian Church, which operates the college. He said there was a widespread belief in town the delegates were to discuss school segregation but that actually they met to talk about international relations and primarily the menace of Communism. Flannery said he could identify six of the 30 men but would consult his attorney to decide whether legal action should be taken. Apparently, the men were not identified publicly nor was any action brought. (July 22, 1955--C)

Tuscaloosa, Ala.: After a three-year court fight, a young Negro woman, Autherine Lucy, was admitted to the University of Alabama in February, 1956. Friday, February 3, she went to her first class as campus police manned the corridors. That night, a crowd of 1,200 students attracted by a burning cross assembled on University Avenue but after exploding firecrackers, singing"Dixie" and marching through a women's dormitory area, they dispersed. The next night students massed before the Student Union Building. Outsiders were noted, trying to whip the crowd into action. The University News Bureau director said three or four outside groups were in evidence--high school pupils, workers from a nearby plant and members of an extreme pro-segregation group from Birmingham. Monday, a crowd of about 3,000 roamed the campus, jeering and cursing university officials accompanying Miss Lucy and pelting them with eggs, rocks and mud. She was removed from the campus under heavy police escort. With demonstrations reaching uncontrollable proportions, University officials suspended Miss Lucy indefinitely, expressing fear for her life. In mid-February, two Negro brothers were arrested for kicking and beating a University student in what one said was an attempt to "get even" for "the way they treated Miss Lucy." At the end of the month, U. S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms ordered she be readmitted. Hours later, the University Board of Trustees expelled her permanently because of her "outrageous, false and baseless accusations" in allegations that the university had "conspired" in the violent demonstrations which resulted in her temporary suspension. Later, the board announced a student leader in the campus riots had been expelled, four suspended and 25 students disciplined. Judge Grooms denied Miss Lucy's petition to re-enter the university and ruled the expulsion was justified. (March, April, Sept., 1956--A)

Crestwood, Fla.: A crowd of 100 gathered at the Crestwood High School near Eglin Air Force Base when Sheriff Ray Wilson received a call asking protection for Negro children who wanted to enroll. When no Negroes appeared, Wilson said the call apparently was a hoax. He added he would consider any attempts to desegregate the schools as "inciting a riot." (Nov. 1957--A)

Little Rock, Ark.: In September, 1957, the city school board began putting into effect its gradual desegregation program by admitting nine Negro students to Central High School. The result has been told by the press around the world. In brief, on the opening day of school, Sept. 4, the nine Negroes were prevented from entering by state guardsmen under orders of Gov. Orval Faubus, who said he was acting to maintain order. Leter that month a federal court directed that the nine children must be admitted, On Sept. 23, a mob of 1,000 whites cursed, fought and wept outside the school as the nine entered a side door of Central High. By noon, the Negroes were removed for their safety. The next day President Eisenhower ordered the guardsmen federalized and sent a thousand men of the 101st Airborne Division from Camp Cambell, Ky., to Little Rock to rout the mob, and guard the Negro pupils. Since that time, the federal troops have been withdrawn and only a token number of federalized National Guardsmen remained until the end of the school year. The situation remains uneasy. A hard core of white students operates a systematic campaign of intimidation and coercion aimed both at the Negroes and the white students and teachers who are trying to abide peacefully, and gracefully, by the federal court ruling. The Negro pupils have been spat upon, tripped, called names, pushed downstairs, shoved and kicked. One Negro girl retaliated and was expelled permanently. A white girl was expelled for have attacked a woman vice principal physically and circulating inflamatory cards. She denounced police and the school over a statewide television hook-up paid for by adult segregationists. She was readmitted to Central High. In the city itself there have been numerous instances of intimidation and some businesses have suffered. Central High has been plagued by a rash of bomb scares. Harry Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, which has fought for law and moderation, summed up the current situation: "This is an intolerable situation....The local people are cowed. They have no support from the city government, strong opposition from the state government, and no support from the Federal Government. What can the decent,law-abiding people do...? Today, the small, militant, bitter minority is in complete control..." (March 23, 1958--K)

North Little Rock, Ark.: Thirty white pupils bombarded Negroes with snowballs near North Little Rock High School, causing an eye injury to a 58-year-old woman. An elderly Negro man fled, crying for help. Police broke up the fracas but made no arrest. One white boy was suspended from classes for four days. North Little Rock's school board planned to start gradual integration this fall but postponed the program indefinitely after white pupils blocked the attempted entry of several Negroes. (Nov. 23, 1957--B)

Atlanta, Ga.: A crowd of Georgia Tech students demonstrated before the Executive Mansion in protest against Gov. Marvin Griffin's attempt to prevent the Sugar Bowl Football game between Tech and the University of Pittsburgh, because the latter had a Negro player. Another crowd of about 2,500 students marched on the State Capitol and left considerable damage. Three days later, on December 5, the State Board of Regents decided to allow Tech to play in the Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans. (Jan. 1956--A)

Maxton, N. C.: A Klan meeting with robed Klansmen and spectators scrambling for safety broke up as hooting Indians emptied rifles, shotguns and rifles into the meeting field. The Indians were outraged by reports the Klan intended to warm them against "race mixing" and by the burning of two crosses near Indian homes the previous week. Four men were wounded, none seriously. There are about 40,000 whites, 30,000 Lumbee Indians and 25,000 Negroes here in Robeson County. One Klansman was convicted of public drunkeness and carrying a concealed weapon. He was given a suspended sentence upon payment of a fine and court costs. Klan Wizard James Cole of Marion, S.C., leader of the Klan meeting, was sentenced to serve 18 to 24 months in prison for inciting a riot. (Jan. 20, 23, March 14, Jan. 23, 1958--B.C.)

Greensboro, N.C.: For the third time, eggs were tossed at Josephine Boyd, only Negro in Greensboro High School. She also has been the victim of tuants and obscene remarks since entering the school. She was one of six Negroes admitted to Greensboro white schools this year. (Sept. 17, 1957--B)

Tchula, Miss.: Two men accused of favoring "racial mingling" heard a suggestion from their neighbors that they move from this little Mississippi town. About 700 white men and women packed into a high school gym, adopted a resolution expressing the community's "opinion" that Dr. D. R. Minter, a physician who devoted much of his time to helping low income groups, and A. E. Cox, cooperative farm manager, should leave the area. "We don't want a Sumner here," said State Rep.-elect J. T. Love in a reference to the Emmett Till murder trial 55 miles from here. The meeting was called to discuss reports that Minter and Cox favored racial "mingling" and that Negroes and whites went swimming together at Providence Farms, Cox's 2700-acre plantation near here. Mintner said there had been "no mixed swimming to my knowledge" at the cooperative, where four white families and two Negro families lived. He added that neither he nor Cox had any immediate plans for leaving the cooperative. (Since that time, however, both men have left.) (Sept. 29, 1955--C)

Charlotte, N.C.: Dorothy Counts, the first and only Negro student to enroll in white Harding High School, was greeted with insults, tossed pebbles and was spat upon as she registered. The next week the 15-year-old girl again was spat upon and hit by objects thrown by fellow students. An object hurled from a crowd of white youths broke the rear window of her brother's car as he picked her up at the school at noon. By the end of the month, after more taunts and shoves, she left for Philadelphia to attend a private, interracial school. She was one of four Negro pupils assigned to four different white schools for the first time this fall. (Sept. 11--B; Sept. 30, 1957--C)

Anderson, S. C.: Police reported they have had to break up rock fights and other violent actions between youthful groups because of Negro-white friction in the community. (Dec. 1957--A)

Spartanburg, S. C.: The City Council passed an ordinance in November requiring municipal approval for outdoor public meetings. The action came after fights broke out between whites and Negroes during a streed "rock and roll" party sponsored by a local radio station. (Dec. 1957--A)

Nashville, Tenn.: The day before schools were to open under the city's new first-step integration program, the police chief announced he would arrest anyone who tried to intimidate children or parents. The next day, 115 policemen were on guard or on call as 19 Negro 6-year-olds appeared at seven previously all-white schools. Pickets soon appeared, there was some scuffling and the beginnings of a school boycott by white parents. That night there were sporadic racial incidents. Segregationist John Kasper appeared at several schools and spoke to a downtown rally. Then, shortly after midnight, the Hattie Cotton school was dynamited. At dawn, Police Chief Douglas E. Hosse told police detachments, "This has gone beyond a matter of integration. These people have ignored the laws and they have shown no regard for you or any citizen." Police then deployed before the desegregated schools and dealt sternly with any who could not explain their presence. Barricades were errected a block from each school; police kept crowds dispersed and their leaders were arrested. Squad cars transported 19 persons, white and Negro to police headquarters. Kasper was arrested on four charges. By mid-September, attendance in the desegregated schools had returned to normal. As the month ended, there were 11 Negroes attending five formerly all-white schools. (Oct. 1957--A)

Clinton, Tenn.: Following a federal court order, 12 Negro pupils entered Clinton High School with about 800 white students in August, 1956. All the children thus were thrown into a community crisis that probably brought more violence and mob action than any other crisis in the post-school decision South. The Saturday before school opened, John Kasper, who identified himself as executive secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council from Washington, D. C. arrived in town. For the next several days he seemed perpetually engaged in going from house to house urging school picketing, conducting meetings, or going to or from jail. Meanwhile, mobs and crowds grew daily and violence increased. A Negro boy was chased by a mob and struck repeatedly, two others were rescued by two members of the school football team. Cars of Negro tourists passing through town were attacked, along with local ones. A mob threatened to dynamite the mayor's home; reporters and photographers were attacked; five dynamite blasts were set off in a Negro section of a neighboring community and Negroes in an automobile were fired upon. Police arrested several attackers, a mob demonstrated at the jail. On one occasion the sheriff slipped the Negro students out a back door of the school to keep them from harm. During all this time, heckling and fist fights continued at the school. A Baptist minister who escorted Negro children to school was badly beaten. On Saturday, Sept. 1, city officials declared Clinter in a state of emergency and called on the governor for help. That night, 110 Highway Patrolmen began arriving, to be joined the next day by 600 Tennessee National Guardsmen. By September 11, they had withdrawn. In November, a cheering courtroom greeted the acquittal of John Kapper in Anderson County criminal court on charges of sedition and inciting to riot, but he still was under appeal bond on a federal conviction for violating an injunction. That month, parents of Negro pupils at Clinton High demanded protection against new racial outbursts at the school. By the following fall, eight Negro students could enter school without a jeer or taunt and join white classmates, while a long policeman guarded the school. John Kasper was sentenced to six-minths in federal prison and six others were placed on probation in a trial in August, 1957, on charges of violating a federal injunction prohibiting interference with peaceful integration at Clinton High. Earlier, Kasper was sentenced to a year in jail for contempt of court. When last seen in Tennessee, Kasper was being escorted to a federal prison in Florida, carrying a copy of "Mein Kampf." (1956-57--A, B, C.)

Rock Hill, S. C.: Police confirmed reports of a clash between about 30 Negroes and a smaller group of whites at the York County Fairgrounds. (Nov. 1957--A)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: At a band concert, white 'teen-agers in a balcony started throwing pop bottled and chairs on Negroes below. Before the melee was over, six persons were in the hospital and 10 persons had been taken to jail. (Jan. 31, 1956--Washington Daily News)

Trenton, Tenn.: About 300 Negroes gathered in the streets late at night and milled about for nearly four hours. Alarmed police called in all off-duty officers and sheriff's deputies and alerted the Tennessee State Patrol. The crowd gathered after hearing police had shot a Negro in the leg while trying to arrest him for drunkenness. Officers said the man fled from three policemen who had been summoned to a Negro cafe and that in the ensuing struggle when they overtook him he was shot in the leg.

Texarkana, Texas: A crowd of men and boys gathered on the Texarkana Junior College campus early in September when two Negro girls and one Negro boy tried to enroll. Four Texas Rangers were on hand to maintain order. Seven Negro boys were arrested for throwing rocks at a car carrying white youths. During the unrest, an effigy of a Negro was hanged on the campus and a cross burned. A shotgun blast was fired at a filling station owned by a Negro integration leader. U. S. District Judge Joe Sheehy later dismissed a contempt action against two officials of the college after the Negro applicants at the school told the court they did not ask for the suit to be filed. The judge reprimanded an NAACP lawyer. (Oct. 1956--A)

Dallas, Texas: Gunfire and knife fights erupted among some of the 6,000 white and Negro rock 'n roll fans outside an auditorium. Six persons were stabbed or beaten. Three white summer students from North Texas State College at Denton were slashed. Police said the students were attacked by a Negro after an argument. In another case a Negro boy suffered severe stab wounds. A girl also was slashed. Police said a 17-year-old white youth suffered face and eye injuries when he and his companions were accosted by a carload of Negro youths some distance from the auditorium after the show. Three bullet holes were found in the white boy's car. (July 16, 1957--B)

Beaumont, Texas: In September, 1956, for the first time Negroes---26 of them---entered Lamar State College of Technology as a result of a Federal District Court order. During the first week of school, a small group of whites picketed peacefully in protest but by the end of the second week violence and intimidation erupted. A taxi bearing Negro students was reported pushed into a ditch and bottles were thrown at taxis carrying other Negro students. Pickets also began using threats in attempting to recruit white students, but only two joined the protest movement. Cars were stopped at campus entrances, whether driven by Negro or white persons. White students and faculty were jeered by pickets. Then the morning newspaper, the Enterprise, asked in an editorial, "Who is running our city --- the legally constituted authorities or a handful of the fringe of the citizenry?" That day the college president called on the editor and the mayor. By afternoon, the mayor ordered police to stop non-peaceful picketing. They arrested two men and a woman. Pickets then marched peacefully for a few days until they were pulled off by a Citizens Council official from Kilgore. ("College Desegregation Without Popular Support," a field study by Dr. Warren Breed of Tulane University, 1956)

Mansfield, Texas: In the summer of 1956, as the city awaited final court word on integration of Mansfield schools, two crosses were burned in the Negro community, an effigy of a Negro was hung over the main street and a Negro leader reported telephone threats. On Aug. 30, U. S. District Judge Joe Estes ordered Mansfield to admit Negroes to its high school. Mansfield had lost its court effort to prevent integration when both the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court rejected a plea for a one-year postponement. Three Negro children had been reported ready to register for the 1956-57 term. As the school opened, a crowd estimated at from 200 to 400 gathered in front of the school. Merchants were asked by the protest leaders to cooperate by closing their businesses and appearing at the school. Most, if not all, complied. The sheriff and some of his men joined local police at the school. The second day the crowd hung an effigy of a Negro from the school flagpole. An observer from the Tarrant County district attorney's office was kicked by the mob until rescued by police and a minister was jeered. Vigilante squads stopped all cars coming into town and turned back those suspected of being sympathetic to the Negro cause. Gov. Allan Shivers sent two Texas Rangers to Mansfield with orders to arrest anyone, white or Negro, who threatened the peace. He gave the school board authority to transfer out of the district any student whose presence might prompt a riot. No Negroes appeared at the school to register that fall or the next and those of high school age continued to attend school at nearby Fort Worth Negro junior and senior high schools.

(Sept., Oct. 1956, Sept., 1957--A; various)

CODE

A --- Southern School News

B --- Associated Press

C --- United Press

D --- Chattanooga Times

E --- Atlanta Constitution

F --- The Arkansas Gazette

G --- Montgomery Advertiser

H --- Birmingham News

I --- Wall Street Journal

J --- Jackson (Miss.) Clarion Ledger

K --- New York Times

L --- Jackson (Miss.) State Times

M --- International News Service

N --- Columbus (Ga.) Ledger

O --- Twin City (Winston-Salem) Sentinel

P --- Charlotte Observer

Q --- Orangeburg (S. C.) Times and Democrat

R --- Rock Hill (S. C.) Evening Herald

S --- Washington Post and Times Herals

T --- Winston Salem Journal

U --- Nashville Tennessean

V --- The State (Columbia, S. C.)

W --- Birmingham Post Herald

X --- Delta Democrat-Times

Atlanta, Georgia
January 20, 1959

Mr. Harold C. Fleming, Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Sir:

An examination has been made of the books and records of the Southern Interagency Conference-Joint Fact-Finding Project for the year ended December 31, 1958.

The following Exhibit and Schedule, with comments, are submitted herewith:

EXHIBIT A - Statement of Receipts and Disbursements

SCHEDULE 1 - Reconciliation - Citizens Trust Company

COMMENTS

The Southern Regional Council, Inc., acting as coordinator and secretariat of the Southern Interagency Conference-Joint Fact-Finding Project, agreed to serve as custodian of funds for a joint fact-finding project on Intimidation and Violence. Exhibit A shows the receipts and disbursements of those funds for the year ended December 31, 1958.

Receipts were traced to bank deposits. All disbursements were made by check. The bank balance was confirmed by correspondence with the depository.

Respectfully,

L. E. Campbell

L. E. Campbell, C.P.A.

SOUTHERN INTERAGENCY CONFERENCE--JOINT FACT-FINDING PROJECT

STATEMENT OF RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS

January 1, 1958 to December 31, 1958

RECEIPTS

Southern Regional Council, Inc.	$ 500.00
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People	500.00
Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith	500.00
United Automobile Workers of America	250.00
Americans Friends Service Committee, Southeastern Regional Office	250.00
Americans Friends Service Committee, National Office	250.00
National Council of Churches	300.00
American Jewish Committee	250.00
Total Receipts		$ 2,800.00

DISBURSEMENTS

Salary, Project Director	$ 772.50
Salary, Special Clerical Assistant	151.15
Travel	215.99
Supplies	104.66
Social Security Taxes	20.77
Telephone and Telegraph	13.92
Postage	17.17
Office Expense	20.00
Total Disbursements		1,316.16
Balance, December 31, 1958		$ 1,483.84

EXHIBIT A

SOUTHERN INTERAGENCY CONFERENCE--JOINT FACT-FINDING PROJECT

Reconciliation--Citizens Trust Company

December 31, 1958

Balance per bank and per books	$ 1,483.84

SCHEDULE 1

rec'd

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
63 Auburn Ave., N.E.
Atlanta, Georgia

MEMORANDUM

March 24, 1959

To: Mr. Tartt Bell
Mr. Will Campbell
Mrs. Ruby Hurley
Mr. Arthur J. Levin
Mr. William Oliver
Mr. Charles Wittenstein

From: Harold C. Fleming
Executive Director

Re: Publication of Report on Violence, Intimidation and Reprisal.

It was the consensus of the participating groups that we should proceed with the printing of the above report under the joint imprint of the Southeastern Office of the American Friends Service Committee, the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches, and the Southern Regional Council.

Accordingly, the manuscript was put into the hands of the printer; galley proofs should be ready by next Monday. The report has been updated to January 1, 1959.

The total amount of project funds remaining is $1,426.59. (A 1958 audit is attached.) The proposed printing of 4,000 copies will cost $1,450, which will more than exhaust the balance. Postage, promotion, and whatever other expenditures we decide upon will have to be met otherwise — unless we get enough advance orders to lower the unit cost substantially.

If 500 copies are set aside for promotion and publicity, and the rest are evenly divided among us, each agency will get 500 copies. SRC is considering ordering additional copies on its own hook. If you are also interested, let me know as soon as you conveniently can, so that we can get the financial benefit of as large an initial printing as possible.

We will have a very few extra sets of galley proofs for non-participating agencies that may want to place orders. Your help on this is also solicited.

P. S. (To Will Campbell and Tartt Bell): Attached is a draft of a news release. Please give it the benefit of your scrutiny and whatever else is necessary for agency approval. We probably should confer about publicity and promotion before the booklet is released.

H.C.F.

NEWS RELEASE

In the past four years, the South has experienced widespread erosion of individual liberties, a report released today asserted.

It listed 531 specific cases of violence, reprisal and intimidation in the 11 Southern states during the four-year period from January 1, 1955, to January 1, 1959.

The report was issued jointly by the Southeastern Office of the American Friends Service Committee, the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches and the Southern Regional Council.

The cases were drawn from the general press of the nation and in large part from Southern newspapers. The list was confined to occurrences attributable to the increased racial tensions of the past few years. Crimes which are part of continuing social and legal problems were not used.

The sponsoring agencies emphasized that while the report dealt only with the angry, violent reactions to the desegregation decisions, another account could be given of patience, responsibility, courage and good will by both whites and Negroes.

However, it was added, "We feel an obligation to call attention to the dangers posed by the record--dangers for which all of us, through silence or inaction, must share the responsibility."

The record, cited as evidence of the deterioriation of law and order in the South since the 1954-55 school

Sent to Will Campbell & Tartt Bell
3/24/59 re: Report of Violence...

desegregation decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, includes:

6 Negroes killed.

29 individuals, 11 of them white, shot and wounded in racial incidents.

44 persons beaten.

5 stabbed.

1 Negro emasculated.

30 bombings of houses (in one of these incidents, at Clinton, Tenn., 30 homes were damaged by a single blast); attempted blasting of 5 other homes.

15 homes struck by gunfire and 7 homes stoned.

4 schools bombed, in Jacksonville, Nashville, Chattanooga, and Clinton, Tennessee.

2 conspiracies to bomb schools, in Charlotte and Clinton.

7 churches bombed, one of which was for whites; an attempt made to bomb another church.

1 church burned, in Memphis, and another church stoned.

4 synagogues or Jewish centers bombed, in Miami, Jacksonville, Nashville, and Atlanta.

3 bombing attempts on Jewish buildings, in Gastonia, N. C., Birmingham and Charlotte.

1 YWCA building in Chattanooga and an auditorium in Knoxville dynamited.

2 schools burned.

Also, at least 20 towns and cities in the South were threatened in varying degree by mob action.

In all, the violence section of the report listed 226 acts against individual liberties and public peace. Included were the widely publicized incidents involving the appearance of Negroes at formerly white schools and colleges -- the stories of Little Rock; the University of Alabama; Hoxie, Ark.; Clinton, Tenn., and Mansfield, Texas. Here, too, the Klan-Indian fight at Maxton, N.C., and the multiple attacks on Koinonia Farm in Georgia were recounted.

The section dealing with reprisals covered 95 cases. It was pointed out that this figure, as well as the overall total of 531 cases, could not tell the whole story for some of the instances counted as a single item involved untold hundreds of men and women. For example, listed as one item were the voting purges of Louisiana, where names of thousands of Negroes were removed from registration lists.

Also, city-wide protest movements were counted as units. These include the stories of the bus boycott in Montgomery; economic protest movements in Tallahassee; Tuskegee, Ala., and Orangeburg and Rock Hill, South Carolina.

On a more widespread practice, the report commented:

"Some Southerners since 1954 have elaborated and organized the methods of economic reprisal until a recognizably new and modern instrument has taken form. Most commonly associated with the White Citizens Council, the weapon of reprisal has deprived Negroes and non-conforming whites of jobs, of credit, of supplies for their businesses."

The 210 instances of intimidation include mail and telephone threats, and at least some of the rash of bomb scares, Klan meetings and cross burnings. They range also from the arrest of Negro ministers in Alabama to police detention of a white Methodist minister who lectured on peaceful means to attain civil rights. Negroes seeking their rights under law and some white persons who have voiced their support of this Negro move for legal equality; churches; ministers, priests and rabbis; Negroes who have bought homes in predominantly white neighborhoods--all were among the victims.

The report said that while there have been men and women across the South who have expressed anger and disapproval over the intimidation, "too many of them since 1954 have acquiesced."

:

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
63 Auburn Ave., N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia

MEMORANDUM

June 10, 1959

To: Mrs. Ruby Hurley
B. Tartt Bell
Arthur J. Levin
Charles Wittenstein
William H. Oliver
Will D. Campbell

From: Harold C. Fleming

Re: RELEASE OF VIOLENCE REPORT

:

Inconceivable as it seems, the joint report on violence, intimidation, and reprisal is in print, copy enclosed. If your copies (500 each) haven't reached you yet, they should shortly; the printer was instructed to deliver or mail direct.

Also enclosed is the news release for next Monday morning papers, which we are distributing to the wire services, major dailies, news magazines, and so on. This is the release agreed upon by the three publishing agencies.

In addition to the pro-rata share of 500 copies each, SRC printed at its own expense another 1,000 copies from which we can fill any quantity or individual orders that arise.

Once the public release is out of the way, we should coordinate our plans for promotional mailings, transmission to government agencies, and the like. Let me have your ideas.

Best regards.

:

File copy

NEWS RELEASE

FOR MORNING PAPERS
MONDAY, JUNE 15, 1959

Southeastern Office
American Friends Service Committee
Department of Racial and Cultural Relations
National Council of Churches
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia

JA. 2-8764

In the past four years, the South has experienced widespread erosion of individual liberties, a report released today asserted.

It listed 530 specific cases of violence, reprisal and intimidation in the 11 Southern states during the four-year period from January 1, 1955, to January 1, 1959.

The report was issued jointly by the Southeastern Office of the American Friends Service Committee, the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches, and the Southern Regional Council.

The cases were drawn from the general press of the nation and in large part from Southern newspapers. The list was confined to occurrences attributable to the increased racial tensions of the past few years. Crimes which are part of other continuing social and legal problems were not used.

The sponsoring agencies emphasized that while the report dealt only with the angry, violent reactions to the desegregation decisions, another account could be given of patience, responsibility, courage and good will by both whites and Negroes.

However, it was added, "We feel an obligation to call attention to the dangers posed by the record--dangers for which all of us, through silence or inaction, must share the responsibility."

The record, cited as evidence of the deterioration of law and order in the South since the 1954-55 school desegregation decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, includes:

6 Negroes killed;

29 individuals, 11 of them white, shot and wounded in racial incidents;

44 persons beaten;

5 stabbed;

1 Negro emasculated;

30 bombings of houses (in one of these incidents, at Clinton, Tenn., 30 homes were damaged by a single blast); attempted blasting of 5 other homes;

15 homes struck by gunfire and 7 homes stoned;

4 schools bombed, in Jacksonville, Nashville, Chattanooga and Clinton, Tennessee;

2 conspiracies to bomb schools, in Charlotte and Clinton;

7 churches bombed, one of which was for whites; an attempt made to bomb another church;

1 church burned, in Memphis, and another church stoned;

4 synagogues or Jewish centers bombed, in Miami, Nashville, Jacksonville and Atlanta;

3 bombing attempts on Jewish buildings, in Gastonia, N. C., Birmingham, and Charlotte;

1 YWCA building in Chattanooga and an auditorium in Knoxville dynamited;

2 schools burned.

Also, at least 17 towns and cities in the South were threatened in varying degree by mob action.

In all, the violence section of the report listed 225 acts against individual liberties and public peace. Included were the widely publicized incidents involving the appearance of Negroes at formerly white schools and colleges--the stories of Little Rock; the University of Alabama; Hoxie, Ark.; Clinton, Tenn., and Mansfield, Texas. Here, too, the Klan-Indian fight at Maxton, N. C., and the multiple attacks on Koinonia Farm in Georgia were recounted.

The section dealing with reprisals covered 95 cases. It was pointed out that this figure, as well as the overall total of 530 cases, could not tell the whole story, for some of the instances counted as a single item involved hundreds of men and women. For example, listed as one item were the voting purges of Louisiana, where names of thousands of Negroes were removed from registration lists.

Also, city-wide protest movements were counted as units. These include the stories of bus boycott in Montgomery; economic protest movements in Tallahassee; Tuskegee, Ala., and Orangeburg and Rock Hill, S. C.

On a more widespread practice, the report commented:

"Some Southerners since 1954 have elaborated and organized the methods of economic reprisal until a recognizably new and modern instrument has taken form. Most commonly associated with the White Citizens Council, the weapon of reprisal has deprived Negroes and non-conforming whites of jobs, of credit, of supplies for their businesses."

The 210 instances of intimidation include mail and telephone threats, and at least some of the rash of bomb scares, Klan meetings and cross burnings. They range also from the arrest of Negro ministers in Alabama to police detention of a white Methodist minister who lectured on peaceful means to attain civil rights. Negroes seeking their rights under law and some white persons who have voiced their support of this move for legal equality; churches; ministers, priests and rabbis; Negroes who have bought homes in predominantly white neighborhoods--all were among the victims.

The report said that while there have been men and women across the South who have expressed anger and disapproval over the intimidation, "too many of them since 1954 have acquiesced."

-END-

Intimidation Reprisal and Violence

in the South's Racial Crisis

Intimidation Reprisal and Violence

in the South's Racial Crisis

Published Jointly by:

SOUTHEASTERN OFFICE, AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE
1818 South Main Street, High Point, N. C.

DEPARTMENT OF RACIAL AND CULTURAL RELATIONS,
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST
IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E.,
Atlanta 3, Georgia

introduction

This is a report of racial violence, reprisal and intimidation in eleven Southern states from Jan. 1, 1955 to Jan. 1, 1959. Altogether, 530 cases, taken from the general press of the South and the nation, are listed.

They are evidence of the deterioration of law and order within the South since the school desegregation decisions of 1954 and 1955 by the Supreme Court of the United States.

They are reports of actions taken by private groups and individuals, and sometimes by mobs, who have wielded violence and economic power in a bitter and defiant protest against a new order of race relations.

Resistance groups, typified by the White Citizens Council born in Mississippi in 1954, have spread across the South. By 1956 they had an estimated 300,000 members. Their characteristic tactics have been economic pressure, propaganda and lobbying.

Other groups, such as a revivified but disjointed Ku Klux Klan, and some extremist off-shoots of the Citizens Councils, have advocated and participated in cruder methods of intimidation. Gunpowder and dynamite, parades and cross burnings, anonymous telephone calls, beatings and threats have been the marks of their trade. These attacks have been directed not only at Negroes, but at some white persons who have strayed from local customs. Also, overt anti-semitism flared, and synagogues have been attacked.

This record is one aspect, and the ugliest, of the intolerance of dissent, the dedication to conformity which has pervaded the South these last few years. It points to a widespread erosion of individual liberties. Although the political leaders of Southern states have declared their opposition to lawlessness, one may fairly ask whether legislative and executive policies of evasion and defiance of decisions of the federal courts have not set an example whose contagion is uncontrollable. A prominent lawyer and civic leader, Mr. Marion A. Wright of Linville Falls, N. C., has said:

> Now, our political leaders without exception deplore violence such as this. They have no truck with the Ku Klux Klan. But my contention is they set in motion forces which bred the Klan and the very violence they now condemn. What they advocate, in essence, is disrespect for law. They choose to limit such advocacy to one law—that relating to the public schools. But when you enter the area of disrespect there is no such thing as limited infection. It spreads. What right have they to tell me what laws I shall observe? My right of choice is fully as good as theirs. They choose to flout school law. I may with as much right choose to flout the law which protects the life and property of the man who disagrees with me. They seek to get results by chicanery. Men less subtle and sophisticated may perforce get their results by violence.

This report classifies and numbers the losses of civil liberties. It cannot show the coincident erosion of patience, of good nature, of relaxed social atmosphere. It recounts 530 cases. One tells of the school bombing in Clinton, Tenn., another of the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., a third of Little Rock. These stories are known by all the world, but there are 527 others within the time-span of this record. Though most have been less publicized, in their cumulative force they are just as indicative of the weakness of discipline and the strength of lawlessness menacing the South today.

The list is derived from the pages of the general press of the country. Other reports, however reliable the source, have not been used. The list is confined to occurrences attributable to increased racial tensions after the Supreme Court's school decisions; other cases of alleged or proven murder, rape, theft, juvenile delinquency and police brutality, that are part of a general social problem, have not been included.

An alphabetical system is used to denote the source of each item; a key, giving the names of the newspapers and wire services, is at the end of the report. The date given for each item is that of publication; the event may have occurred on an earlier day. One periodical, Southern School News, is issued monthly, and therefore only the month is noted for items taken from it. In two instances, field studies of academic researchers have been drawn on for details.

Finally, this is not a comprehensive survey of Southern reactions to the desegregation decision. It describes only their angry, violent side. Another accounting could be given of patience, responsibility, courage and good will by both Negroes and whites. Though this aspect of the South is not in view in the report, it is an authentic and undimmed face of the South, to which each of the sponsoring agencies has paid tribute more than once. But we feel an obligation to call attention to the dangers posed by the record that follows—dangers for which all of us, through silence or inaction, must share the responsibility.

PART ONE | INTIMIDATION

There is a Southern tradition which equates "preserving order" with "keeping the Negro in his place." During Reconstruction and for many years afterwards, it was almost the "law of the land" in the region. Even respectable people could believe in it, though usually its enforcement was delegated to men lower in the social structure. The "law" is no longer so openly proclaimed, but neither has it been finally repealed. And though respectable Southerners do not actively encourage its enforcement, too many of them since 1954 have acquiesced in it. However, throughout the South, others have shown anger and disapproval over the intimidation of Negroes.

In any event, intimidation has continued. The old methods have had, however, a new refinement. Roving troublemakers have appeared, perhaps an expected development in this age of specialization. This group has included even a few inverted carpetbaggers, of whom John Kasper has been the most notorious.

During his period, there has been a growing number of bomb threats, particularly to schools and other public institutions. Police have been called to search an untold number of buildings throughout the South, usually without finding any trace of a bomb. A sampling of these threats is included in this report. Those without any obvious racial connotation, even though they may stem from the climate of defiance, have been eliminated.

The Ku Klux Klan, dormant for years, has made disorganized efforts at revival. It has been badly led, often merely ridiculous and ludicrous in its actions; it has been unpopular and unwelcome in most communities. Nevertheless, its very recklessness earns it the distinction of being taken seriously. In April 1958 the Anti-Defamation League estimated the membership of the U.S. Klan, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, headed by Eldon Edwards of Atlanta, at between 12,000 and 15,000; the North Carolina Klan was thought to have between 2,000 and 5,000 members, and each of the seven other Klan organizations not more than 1,500. The ADL said the South has responded to them with "intense hostility" and aversion, but added that, "as a breeder of violence and an incitement to the worst criminal elements in society, the KKK is not to be dismissed or taken lightly." The Klan of the 1950's has obstacles which did not exist in earlier years. Several states have anti-mask laws (sometimes Klansmen now wear dark-rimmed eyeglasses without lenses along with their robes and hoods), and many towns and cities enforce against it their ordinances regulating demonstrations and incitement to riot.

The question arises whether a mere Klan meeting comes within the scope of this report, for it is impossible to assess the degree of implied intimidation in an ostensibly peaceful gathering. Some meetings are listed where a note of intimidation seems clear, where something out of the ordinary occurred or a particularly inflammatory statement was made. For the rest, a quick sampling gives an idea of the scope of the Klan.

In Florida, at least 1,000 attended a Klan meeting near Jacksonville in September 1956, jamming suburban traffic for hours; the same month, Klan leaflets were distributed at Tarpon Springs on the west coast, where tension existed over reports that Negroes planned to use a beach. In February 1957, about 4,000 gathered at a private ranch outside Gainesville and heard one hooded speaker declare, "We are not a violence organization. But we are not a social club, either. We are not pussy-footing around." In August 1957, Klansmen paraded at a downtown theater in Jacksonville protesting showing of the movie, "Island in The Sun," starring white and Negro actors. (A,G)

At Stone Mountain, Ga., long-time Klan meeting place outside Atlanta, an estimated 1,200 cars brought KKK members from five states for a rally in September 1956. The same month about 300 members gathered in Macon. In November, about 3,500 persons again met at Stone Mountain, with the leader angered by the refusal of Atlanta police to provide an escort. About the same time, the mayor of Savannah denied the Klan use of the city park. In December 1956, a "gigantic" rally brought only 40 Klansmen from four states to Columbus, where 50 city policemen turned them away from the baseball park; by the time they moved to a vacant lot to burn a cross, only three Klansmen were on hand and they had to saw the cross to a size they could handle, while amused spectators watched. Knights of the KKK met at Warner Robins, near Macon. Maj. Gen. A.V.P. Anderson, commander of nearby Warner Robins Air Materiel Area, had warned earlier that the Air Force would initiate "additional security investigation" of any Robins AFB personnel identified as members of any Klan group. (A,E,D)

In Ozark, Ala., the city council on Dec. 13, 1957, refused to let the KKK use the city park for an organizational meeting. Mayor Douglas Brown said, "We haven't had any trouble with the Negroes and the people here all get along. We hope we can get by without trouble if we don't have a Klan or a White Citizens Council." The Klan had earlier appeared in Tuscaloosa, scene of mob rioting when Miss Autherine Lucy enrolled at the University of Alabama in February 1956. Hooded men paraded the streets the next month, and in April about 75 burned a cross six miles from town. (A, B)

The Klan also turned up again in North and South Carolina. Many in those states thought the KKK had been stamped out between May 1952 and December 1954, after its activities in southeastern North Carolina and northeastern South Carolina which resulted in the prosecution of 101 persons in flogging and kidnapping cases. (B).

Nevertheless, in October 1956 a "motley crowd of nearly 1,000 gathered, some out of curiosity" to watch for the first time a Klan meeting in Concord, N. C., according to the Charlotte Observer. The sheriff and his 15 deputies were on guard. In December, about 300 attended a Klan meeting in Greensboro to hear a speaker standing on a flatbed truck with no license plates. At Statesville, a Klan "wizard" received only scattered applause and some heckling from a group of young people in August 1957. (C, O)

KKK activity began again in the eastern part of South Carolina in August 1955, with a small group burning a cross in Florence County and about 1,000 converging at Manning. The following February, the first public Klan rally at Orangeburg in many years began with a motorcade of about 55 robed figures. In mid-June, some 1,000 attended a meeting staged by 75 robed Klansmen in the up-country area between Greenville and Pickens. The next month, hooded and masked Klansmen sought $3.00 memberships from a crowd of 2,000 at Camden and claimed they signed up 800. In September, at least three Klan meetings were held—at Dillon, Gaffney, and near Hartsville. The largest Klan rally in South Carolina in years was held in Spartanburg in October; a Greenville News reporter estimated the crowd at from 6,000 to 10,000. That month smaller meetings were held near Pomaria and Rock Hill. In January 1958, more than 200 robed Klansmen formed a human cross on the Statehouse steps to advertise a rally. (A,Q,B)

In April 1957, approximately 1,500 gathered, about 500 in white robes, in Cleveland, Tennessee, for a rally of the Knights of the KKK. Speakers denounced both Negroes and Jews. (A)

Following is a list of additional meetings and action by resistance groups, telephone and mail threats and other instances of intimidation. The list, including the 27 Klan meetings mentioned above and those which follow, add up to a total of at least 210 instances. (In some cases an individual may have been threatened more than once but this is counted as a single instance.)

ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala.: Two effigies were hanged in the court square, one representing a Negro labeled "NAACP" and the other a white man tagged "I talked for integration." Police and several hundred spectators milled around the gallows. (August 5, 1956-M)

Tuscaloosa, Ala.: Angry white men watching a Ku Klux Klan rally caught a Negro man and tossed him in the air "like a baby," Police Captain J. P. West said. Another Negro told police he was injured by one of the robed Klansmen. During the program about 25 Negroes approached the rear of a burning cross and shouted profanity, witnesses said. Unrobed white men chased them. State Sen. Albert Davis of Pickens County was applauded loudly when he said, "Give me segregation or give me death." (August 26, 1956—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: John Kasper, jailed for his part in the Clinton, Tennessee, race riots, applauded the appearance of Ku Klux Klansmen at a Citizens Council rally and said, "We need all the rabble rousers we can get." Kasper told the rally of about 500 persons that pro-segregation groups must use every means available to stop integration and said, "We want trouble and we want it everywhere we can get it." (September 13, 1956—C)

Mobile, Ala.: About 100 robed Klansmen burned a cross on the property of Mrs. Dorothy DaPonte, wealthy Mobile widow. Mrs. DaPonte had tried unsuccessfully to enter a 12-year-old Negro girl, whom she raised and had been educating in Europe, into a white school. (September 18, 1956—C)

Montgomery, Ala.: About 1,200 attended a Klan rally and heard one speaker accuse "Catholics, Jews, Communists, Negroes and Northern agitators" of threatening the "destruction of the white heritage." Following the rally the Montgomery Ministerial Association passed a resolution registering "disapproval of undisciplined and intolerant remarks and acts at public meetings at which different groups of our citizenry, including religious groups, are slanderously set upon as targets for hatred and violence." (October 1956—A)

Montgomery, Ala.: About 1,000 persons, some 350 in robes, attended a KKK rally. Explosion of a firecracker started a stampede in an unsuccessful effort to catch the person who set it off; after a second explosion, one youth was searched roughly, but unsuccessfully. Alvin Horn, grand dragon of the Alabama Klan, told the crowd the way he felt about Negroes "who want to integrate is this: they don't want an education, they want a funeral." Earlier in the day about 100 robed klansmen walked up and down Dexter Avenue; city authorities had refused permission for a Klan parade. (November 25, 1956—B)

Opelika, Ala.: A cross was burned in front of the home of the Rev. W. F. Wagner, white Baptist minister, after his church admitted a Negro high school group to hear the church's presentation of "The Messiah." (January 1957—A)

Montgomery, Ala.: The FBI disclosed that a cross was burned on a federal judge's lawn the night Montgomery city buses were integrated on a court order the judge signed. Two boys, 16 and 17, whom the FBI declined to identify were charged with the cross burning on the lawn of U.S. District Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr. Fred Hallford, FBI agent in Mobile, announced that the boys were charged with obstruction of justice by trying to intimidate a federal judge in the discharge of his duties. (Jan. 28, 1957—B)

Mobile, Ala.: White college students at Spring Hill College, a Jesuit school, disbanded a group attempting to set fire to a cross in front of a dormitory. The Catholic college opened its doors to Negroes three years ago and now has about 40 in the student body. (February 1957—A)

Tuscaloosa, Ala.: A group of about 70 robed Klansmen gathered at the Methodist Student Center to protest against a meeting called to discuss racial relations. Gathered inside were members of the Open Forum, a faculty-student group at the University of Alabama, to discuss "The Impact of Segregation on the South." Two months later Klansmen again gathered outside a church-owned student center where members of the Open Forum had assembled to discuss "Academic Freedom." The University group was meeting at Canterbury Chapel, an Episcopal student center adjoining the campus. Following the first Klan demonstration, the University Student Legislature recalled the charter of Open Forum. (March 14—B; May 10, 1957—G)

Sylacauga, Ala.: The Rev. Dan Whitsett reported a death threat was made against the family of a young minister who kicked over a KKK cross. Crosses were burned near the First Methodist Church, of which Whitsett is pastor, and the First Baptist Church as Klansmen rallied at the high school football stadium. Whitsett, who was out of town, said the Rev. Newton Maloney, his associate pastor, kicked over the cross and stood briefly in front of a car occupied by Klansmen. Later, Mrs. Maloney received a telephone call and heard a man warn that unless the Maloneys and Whitsetts were out of town in 10 days "your house and your child will be blown to bits." Whitsett speculated that the Baptist church was a target because of the recent Southern Baptist Convention stand for elimination of racial barriers among its churches. Whitsett's endorsement of moderation in race relations has made him a frequent subject for KKK criticism and his family has received a number of threatening telephone calls. (June 9, 1957—B)

Pratt City, Ala.: A cross was burned in front of a fireman's house. Police said the cross was found at the new home of Daryel H. Leatherwood. Leatherwood advertised his old home as being in a Negro neighborhood, neighbors said, after he had been unable to sell it to a white purchaser. (July 20, 1957—W)

Montgomery, Ala.: A legislator said he had reliable information that some white planters in Alabama held Negroes in bondage by paying them with welfare funds. State Sen. George Little of Barbour County said he had been told at least three big landowners encouraged unwed Negro mothers to qualify for aid to dependent children, threatening at the same time to have the payments stopped unless their families continued working. Little said the practice amounted to "peonage, pure and simple." He added that the landowners paid "little or no wages." State welfare authorities said there was no legal way a landowner could have a tenant cut off the welfare rolls unless he could show the Negroes refused to accept suitable work. But Little said an influential plantation owner could "get around that by claiming the Negroes refused to work or that they stay drunk." (Aug. 8, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Three of nine Negro families who signed a petition requesting integration of Birmingham schools reported they have been receiving threatening telephone calls. Another Negro, who said he had nothing to do with the petition, said he and his wife also had been threatened. (August 26, 1957—B)

Mobile, Ala.: A five-foot cross was burned beside Alba High School in Bayou La Batre, a fishing community near the Gulf. No Negroes had tried to enter the school. It was the third such incident in a week at Mobile County schools. Earlier, a small cross was burned on the campus of Vigor High School and a similar one was burned at the entrance to Murphy High School. (Oct. 2, 1957—B)

Mobile, Ala.: Seven crosses, planted in different sections of the city, were burned in Mobile within an hour. Most were near Negro homes. (Oct. 25, 1957—B)

Prattville, Ala.: Six crosses have been burned in the Negro section. As a result, reporters found some Negroes who said they felt their lives were in danger and had armed themselves with shotguns. (October 27, 1957—G)

Birmingham, Ala.: The KKK demonstrated throughout Jefferson county and distributed pamphlets calling on white employers to discharge all Negroes and warning businessmen that the Klan would boycott them if they continued to employ Negroes. (November 15, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Crosses were burned at 18 all-white schools the week-end before the beginning of the fall term. Police said the cross burnings apparently were well organized; all were set afire at about the same time. Although a school integration suit was pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, there had been no official reports of planned attempts to enroll Negro children in white schools. (Sept. 2, 1958—Y)

Montgomery, Ala.: The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. accused police of brutality after he was arrested on a charge of loitering. The Negro leader of the local bus boycott was jailed for 15 minutes after two officers said he had refused to move when they ordered a crowd to disperse. King was allowed to sign a $100 bond for his release. He said police had "tried to break my arm. They grabbed my collar and tried to choke me, and when they got me to the cell, they kicked me in." Police Commissioner Clyde Sellers denied this and said the minister was "treated as anyone else would be." The commissioner, a member of the pro-segregation Citizens Council, described the minister's charge as "just the kind of statement I would expect from King." The minister was arrested at the courtroom entrance at City Hall where he had gone to attend a hearing for a Negro accused of attacking the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, an integration leader. The courtroom was filled and King, with about 50 other Negroes, waited on a sidewalk outside. Two days after the arrest, King was fined $14 for refusing to obey a police officer. When he refused to pay the fine, Sellers paid it so the defendant would not go to jail a "martyr." (Sept. 3-5, 1958—B)

Mobile, Ala.: A fourth arrest has grown out of a cross-burning in front of the home of a Mobile minister who was one of a group urging bus integration. Three other men were arrested earlier. Sheriff Ray D. Bridges said the fourth man arrested was a Klansman. (Oct. 1, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Three Montgomery Negro ministers, who were leaders in the bus boycott in their home city, were arrested after visiting at the home of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro minister of Birmingham. They were arrested for vagrancy, questioned and later released without charge. The Montgomery ministers were identified as the Rev. S. S. Seay, executive secretary of the Montgomery Improvement Association, the Rev. A. W. Wilson and the Rev. H. H. Hubbard. Following their arrest, Public Safety Commissioner Eugene Connor warned that "outside agitators coming to our city and dabbling in our affairs" face arrest. (Oct. 28, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers asked a Federal Grand Jury in Birmingham to investigate the arrest of three Negro ministers on vagrancy charges. (See above.) Rogers told a news conference he had ordered the United States Attorney to present known facts to the jury and to ask that it make a vigorous investigation of its own after Birmingham's Police Commissioner Eugene Connor had refused to discuss the incident with the FBI. (Nov. 14, 1958—S)

Birmingham, Ala.: After being held for five days, two ministers were handed jail terms and 12 other Negroes suspended sentences for violating Birmingham's bus seating law. Recorders Court Judge William Conway sentenced the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth to 90 days and fined him $100. The Rev. J. S. Phifer was given 60 days and fined the same amount. The Negroes were charged with violating a new ordinance adopted in an effort to preserve segregated buses in Birmingham. It authorized bus drivers to tell passengers where to sit and replaced the old ordinance requiring segregated seating. Later, Birmingham Circuit Court Judge George Lewis Bailes upheld the bus-seating law in affirming the convictions. The Negroes gave notice of further appeal. (Oct. 28, Dec. 3, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: A Negro minister was arrested and charged with urging a bus boycott. The Rev. Calvin W. Woods, pastor of the East End Baptist Church, was released several hours later under $500 bond. Another Negro previously arrested was fined $1,000 and sentenced to six months in jail after he was convicted of distributing boycott literature. The Negro, John Harvey Kelly, gave notice of appeal. (Nov. 25, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: A white Methodist minister charged that Birmingham police detained him against his will, fingerprinted him, photographed him and took personal papers from him without a warrant. The Rev. Glenn Smiley, field secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, made his charges in Nyack, N. Y. He said he had conducted several workshops for Negro groups in connection with the Montgomery bus boycott and had been invited to Birmingham to lecture before the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights. He added that he had lectured Birmingham Negroes on previous trips on how to resist segregation without violence. Birmingham Commissioner of Public Safety Eugene (Bull) Connor confirmed that Smiley had been questioned, fingerprinted and photographed and commented: "I've said before and I repeat, we're not going to stand for anybody, white or black, coming into this city and stirring up trouble between our people by trying to create a boycott." The minister said Police Capt. George Pattie and an unidentified detective called on him Dec. 14 at his room in the Redmont Hotel. He said Pattie insisted that he go with him to a police station, although the minister demanded a warrant. Smiley quoted Pattie as saying, "We will use whatever force necessary to see your file." He said the police refused to allow him to call a lawyer. The minister said the officers took several letters from a file he kept in a suitcase and later photostated them. The letters were returned to him. Smiley said he was questioned for about two hours. He said he had reported the incident to the FBI. (Dec. 21, 1958—B)

ARKANSAS

Jonesboro, Ark.: At a hearing on the Hoxie school integration case (see Violence), a Negro told of threats. Clarence Braxton, 73, testified he sent his son Joseph, 16 to Pasco, Washington, to live because he had received a letter which contained a clipping on the Emmett Till slaying in Mississippi and a note which said, "Your boy can get the same thing." The son had been enrolled in the Hoxie schools. (January 1956—A)

Little Rock, Ark.: A cross was burned October 27 at the home of Mrs. L. C. Bates, state NAACP president. Mrs. Bates received several anonymous telephone calls during the day. Another cross had been burned at her home October 11. (December 1957—A)

FLORIDA

Lakeland, Fla.: As Klansmen burned a large cross and vowed to maintain segregation, a few miles away a Negro church offered prayers for them. (July 21, 1956—B)

Miami, Fla.: Four members of the Seaboard Citizens Council who tried to burn a cross on the lawn of a Negro living in a white Miami neighborhood were found guilty of unlawful assembly and intimidation. Municipal Court Judge Mitchell Goldman told them, "This is a heinous offense. Certainly we get enough trouble in this world without having something like this. You gentlemen have struck at the basis of our democracy." Three were sentenced to 60 days and fined $500 on each of two charges; the fourth was given a suspended 30 day sentence and fined $100. All appealed. (March 7, 1957—B)

Miami, Fla.: Six white persons were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct for marching in front of the home of Frank Legree, a Negro entertainer who lives in an all white section. They carried signs saying "We intend to keep this neighborhood white," and "Did Clinton get too hot for you?" Several protest meetings had been held since the Legrees moved into the section. (March 24, 1957—B)

Bradenton, Fla.: The KKK asked permission for a motorcade through the city; Bradenton police agreed only if Klansmen remained unmasked, stayed out of the Negro area, and passed through the city quickly. However, Sheriff Roy Baden provided an escort for the parade and his men were at the head of the line as it passed through the Negro section. After an investigation, Gov. LeRoy Collins wired Baden, "Your conduct and that of your deputies cannot be approved or condoned. Your actions gave the appearance of 'shepherding or leading the parade' and granted to it the apparent sanction of the law." The governor said the KKK is "a symbol for intolerance, to riot and disorder . . . . law enforcement officers should prohibit to the utmost of their authority demonstrations by this organization." (April 1958—A)

St. Petersburg, Fla.: A cross was burned near the city-owned Spa Beach. It was closed after eight Negro college students swam there. It was the first time Negroes had taken advantage of a Federal Court decision the previous year which officially desegregated the beach. City Manager Ross Windom closed the beach in accordance with a prearranged plan. (June 7, 1958—Y)

Tampa, Fla.: Negro students were evacuated from Blake High School because of a bomb threat, the second such incident in Tampa in a week. Police found no sign of a bomb. (Nov. 8, 1958—Y)

Miami, Fla.: Anonymous callers threatened four more Miami area establishments with bombings. The new threats, to a Roman Catholic church, two Miami Beach hotels and a restaurant which serves Negroes at the back door, brought to eight the number of establishments receiving bombing threats in a two day period. Two Protestant churches, which had been visited by uninvited Negroes, a Catholic church and a Catholic hospital were threatened the previous day. (Nov. 19, 1958—Y)

GEORGIA

Atlanta, Ga.: Police reported a Negro family living in a white section received a threatening letter; it contained a newspaper clipping showing the picture of a home damaged by dynamite and the notation in red ink, "take warning from this." The family had rented an apartment in a vacant building between white residences. (March 30, 1956—E)

Summerville, Ga.: About 100 cars bearing license plates from Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama moved through the city, past a section of Negro homes and to the nearby county fairgrounds for a rally. One robed participant in the parade displayed a breeched shotgun. (November 20, 1956—B)

Gray, Ga.: The local theater manager was threatened with a Klan visit because he allowed Negroes to sit in the balcony on a segregated basis. Later, Klansmen from neighboring Bibb County rode down the main street. They denied any connection between the threats and the night ride, declaring the group was only advertising a future rally. (July 8, 1957—N)

Atlanta, Ga.: Two crosses were burned in front of Negro homes, and gasoline was burned in the street in front of one during October. (October 14, 1957—E)

Atlanta, Ga.: A total of 11 bomb threats aimed at six schools and one against Grady Hospital were among those reported to police. In each case, a search was made but no bombs were found. At the height of the bomb threats, however, officers did find a dynamite cache in a suburban area about 10 miles from the synagogue which was bombed Oct. 12. (Oct. 25, 27, 1958—Atlanta Journal, B)

LOUISIANA

New Orleans, La.: Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia was the main speaker at a Citizens Council rally in Pelican Park May 17. An audience of 4,000 heard speakers attack the Supreme Court, Urban League, the "soft on integration" policies of Louisiana State University and Catholic Archbishop Joseph Rummel of New Orleans. Shortly after the rally a wooden cross was burned outside the Archbishop's residence. (June 1956—A)

New Orleans, La.: A Catholic priest, the Rev. Eugene McManus, was threatened after he appeared as a speaker at a meeting on integration. An anonymous caller threatened "to get" the priest and used "unprintable language." (March 22, 1956—M)

New Orleans, La.: A cross was burned on the lawn of U.S. District Court Judge J. Skelly Wright, who signed orders to end segregation on New Orleans buses. The incident occurred during the first hours the bus integration order went into effect. Judge Wright attributed the incident to "just someone looking for publicity" but said that, "I figured it had to be a Ku Klux Klan thing. It wasn't done by an amateur." (May 31, 1958—B)

New Orleans, La: A 23-year-old white draftsman, Elster Besselle, Jr., was convicted of assault in the first racial incident reported since court-ordered integration began on the city's transit system two weeks previously. Municipal Court Judge Andrew G. Bucaro ruled that Besselle was guilty of pushing a Negro woman out of the seat when she sat down beside him on a bus. She had said he pushed her from the seat and tried to strike her. The man testified he brushed against her accidentally and denied that he tried to strike her. The judge said he doubted that the incident was an outgrowth of the decision of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation on city transportation. He said he doubted that Besselle tried to hurt the woman, "but I have no doubt he intended to push her out of the seat." (June 14, 1958—B)

MISSISSIPPI

Jackson, Miss.: W. D. Mangrum, a Jackson Negro, reported that several white boys tossed a stone through the windshield of his car on September 14, believing it to be the car of a Negro editor. (September 15, 1955—J)

Jackson, Miss.: A crudely made cross was burned in front of a Catholic Church, Christ the King. The Rev. P. H. Boer, pastor, learning of it later, commented, "That's the way they operate; they haven't got the guts to come out in the open and do it." He said the burning may have been because of a Negro school the church operates on the rear of its property. Several years before rotten eggs were thrown at the church entrance. (March 26, 1957—L)

NORTH CAROLINA

Montgomery County, N. C.: Elsie Horn, who with six others withdrew from a suit against the Montgomery County Board of Education, said she had been asked if she would like it if she sent her "kids to a white school and they came up missing or didn't come back at all." (October 13, 1955—T)

Greensboro, N. C.: The Rev. Julius T. Douglas, who heads an organization which offered defense for six Negroes charged with trespassing on Gillespie Park Golf Course, said he was informed indirectly his home would be bombed. "The lady next door received an anonymous call saying that she should get out because my house was going to be bombed during the night," he related. (December 21, 1955—B)

Hillsboro, N. C.: A cross was burned before a home in which Dr. Frank Graham, special United Nations representative and former president of the University of North Carolina, was visiting. A 25-year-old student was arrested and paid a $10.00 fine. (February 1957—A, March 1957—A)

Raleigh, N. C.: Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Holt Sr., parents of a Negro youth seeking admission to an all-white high school, received telephone threats their home would be bombed "if you don't quit sending messages to the school board," the Raleigh Times reported. Letters containing veiled threats were sent the Raleigh School Board and Holt and were signed, "Executive Committee, Wake County Patriots of North Carolina," according to the Raleigh News and Observer. The Patriots were formed in 1955 to maintain "the purity and culture of the white race and of Anglo-Saxon institutions." (July 1957)

Statesville, N. C.: Police guarded the vacant home of two white sisters officers said were found in a car with two Negro men. A crowd of between 500 and 600 demonstrated before the house the previous night. At the same time, police said that 14 Negroes were arrested downtown for disorderly conduct because they were crowding white persons off the sidewalk and making insulting remarks. (November 16, 1957—B)

Charlotte, N. C.: A bomb scare at Mecklenburg County Negro grammar school proved a dud. Police Capt. G. A. Stevens said an anonymous caller warned police that a bomb was set to explode in a school at Paw Creek, about five miles away. Officers searched the school but found no bomb, although they did find a cross burning in the school yard shortly after the call. Stevens said both incidents were acts of intimidation. (February 6, 1958—B)

Charlotte, N. C.: Harding High School, scene of integration incidents last year, was evacuated after an anonymous caller telephoned that a bomb was hidden in the building. No bomb was found. Police said the warning apparently was a follow-up by a prankster to the previous day's bomb scare at Mount Pleasant High School near Concord, N. C., some 20 miles away. (Nov. 25, 1958—Y)

SOUTH CAROLINA

Elloree, S. C.: L. A. Blackman, contractor and president of the Elloree chapter of the NAACP, said friends told him speakers at a Klan rally had said it was "up to the colored people to see that Blackman gets out of town." Blackman said he had no intention of leaving. He was active in distributing petitions seeking integrated schools in Elloree. (December 7, 1955—B)

Williamsburg County, S. C.: Firearms and firecrackers were discharged on June 12 when a group of white Catholic priests and assistants presented a film on the life of Christ for an all-Negro audience of about 200. Father Patrick Walsh, head of Our Lady of Springbank Dominican Friary, reported to police that he had been stopped and cursed for some 15 minutes while enroute to the film showing. Four white youths in a pickup truck stopped him, he said, and told him, "We run our own neighborhood and to hell with all authorities." Thereafter, the priest reported a pickup truck sped up and down the road alongside the area where the film was being shown. Firecrackers were discharged and several shots fired; several bullet holes were found in the projection screen. Three young men were held temporarily but released later in the absence of formal charges. (July 1956—A)

Camden, S. C.: Anonymous threats to destroy the buildings of Mather Academy forced Methodist officials to remove a group of young white and Negro church workers from the campus of the Negro school. Earlier, a cross was burned. Camden Mayor Henry Savage said he "certainly thinks" the threats came from a newly organized KKK Klavern in the Camden area. A cross was burned in front of the Mayor's home later, presumably, he said, because he had indicated he would call on the governor for troops if needed to prevent the bombing or burning of Mather school. The mayor and city council had provided what protection they could but had asked the group to abandon its integrated work project in the interest of preserving good order. (July 12, 1956—B; September 1956—A)

Hartsville, S. C.: A crowd of 2,000 jammed a field to hear a speaker denounce President Eisenhower and shout, "Moderation has never been the answer to anything. It is the extremists—you and me—who are going to have to solve this problem." (July 28, 1956—B)

Rock Hill, S. C.: A wooden cross was burned in front of St. Anne's Catholic school, the only desegregated one in the state and in its third year of integrated operation. Two months earlier a series of cross burnings in the area caused the Rock Hill Ministerial Union to pass a resolution unanimously saying, "Such acts . . . are the work of men of ill will and ought to be opposed by all right-minded citizens." (February 1957—A; November 8, 1956—R)

Orangeburg, S. C.: Mrs. H. F. Pierce, vice president of the local NAACP chapter, reported threatening telephone calls and a letter with the words "you will die" pencilled across a torn piece of newspaper. She turned over the letter to the FBI. Other Negroes have received threatening letters, presumably in connection with an economic battle over segregation issues. (December 10, 1956—B)

Columbia, S. C.: Six white teen-agers were freed, with a warning, after they were arrested for burning a cross in front of a gate to Benedict (Negro) College. (February 1957—A)

York County, S. C.: At a Klan meeting near Fort Mill, the principal speaker denounced Billy Graham, the President and Vice-President and other government officials. He also listed local and national products and firms, which he said contributed to the NAACP or other pro-integration causes, and suggested they be boycotted. (July 1957—A)

Greenwood, S. C.: Two white teen-aged boys had their probation revoked for burning a cross at a rural home and were sent to the State Industrial School. A third youth was placed on probation and a 22-year-old man was fined $50 in magistrate's court. (August 1957-A)

Union, S. C.: The legislative delegation of Union county announced it was arming against enforced integration. The delegation said it had ordered $1,000 worth of sub-machine guns—nine of them—and $300 worth of ammunition, or a thousand rounds. State Sen. John D. Long of Union said the weapons, for the sheriff and his eight deputies, were to be used to "repel any invasion by Federal troops or anyone else violating our laws." He explained that by "our laws" he meant those calling for separation of whites and Negroes in schools and elsewhere. (October 17, 1957—B)

Charleston, S. C.: A cross was burned in front of the home of a Negro candidate for the House of Representatives, John H. Wrighten, about a week before the election. It drew statements of condemnation from all three white candidates in the race. Wrighten ran second in a field of four but trailed far behind the leading candidate. (January 1958—A)

TENNESSEE

Nashville, Tenn.: Parents of six of the 13 Negro first graders enrolled for integrated classes for the first time reported telephone threats of harm to their children on the eve of registration. Assistant School Superintendent W. H. Oliver said his family also was threatened. (August 28, 1957—B)

Nashville, Tenn.: At least 12 crosses have been burned in or near Negro neighborhoods, according to police records. (November 1957—A)

Knoxville, Tenn.: Efforts were made to intimidate Mrs. Sarah Patton Boyle, an officer in the Virginia Council on Human Relations, when she appeared in Knoxville for a speaking engagement. Several telephone calls were made to her and her hostess by callers who identified themselves as members of the White Citizens Council. At midnight an ambulance driver appeared in answer to a fraudulent call from an unidentified person. (Charlottesville-Albemarle Tribune, November 22, 1957)

Nashville, Tenn.: Mrs. Mary Staton, whose family purchased a home in a previously white neighborhood, found cards in her yard carrying KKKK labels, one with the notation, "Your days are numbered. Move now." The president of the Knights of the KKK denied his group had anything to do with it, and said, "Some people have us confused with the old KKK (three Ks)." (January 24, 1958—U)

Nashville, Tenn.: Chester Mason, chairman of the Parents School Preference Committee, told police he had received two anonymous calls threatening him. The committee opposed integration of Nashville schools and has proposed a three part system, providing all white, all Negro, and integrated schools for those who choose them. (March 21, 1958—U)

TEXAS

Tahoka, Tex.: The school board ruled that a 16-year-old Negro boy, Andrew Nance, could attend the white high school as a junior because the Negro school offered only 10 grades. A few hours after he entered the school his white classmates elected him vice-president of the junior class. However, he later was accosted by three Tahoka men who threatened him with personal harm if he continued to attend the school. Subsequently, the Lynn County grand jury investigated the threats but failed to indict anyone. (September 18 and 23, 1955—B)

Dallas, Tex.: A cross was set afire on the lawn of Dr. Cosette F. Newton's home, which was offered for sale to a Negro. The cross was doused with water by the fire department before any damage was done to the home, or to a backyard pavilion ship which had set off a bitter neighborhood feud. Doctor Newton offered to sell her fashionable home to a Negro after losing a battle fought to the Texas Supreme Court to keep her ship, which neighbors called an eyesore. (January 26, 1956—C)

Bonham, Tex.: Police said a man who planted a burning cross in the driveway of House Speaker Sam Rayburn's home did not do it as a joke, that it was carefully made by an experienced carpenter. Bonham residents were mystified as to why Rayburn's two-story colonial mansion was selected as a target. The Speaker's brother and his wife, and his sister were in the house at the time. (July 27, 1956—C)

Beaumont, Tex.: A 12-foot cross was burned on the campus of Lamar State College of Technology, after the school had been ordered to open its doors to Negroes in the fall. (August 2, 1956—B)

Hillsboro, Tex.: A cross was burned and in Leroy, small town near Waco, the effigy of a Negro was strung across the highway. (October 1956—A)

Wichita Falls, Tex.: Classrooms were evacuated briefly at integrated Midwestern University after the second threatening telephone call in two weeks. A man called a university telephone operator and told him to "get everybody out of there by 11 o'clock." Dr. Travis White, president of the city-owned school, said Negroes have attended the school for five years without previous incidents. (Oct. 22, 1958—B)

Houston, Tex.: A cross was burned in the front yard of Mrs. Charles White, who was elected as the first Negro member of the Houston School Board the previous week. Mrs. White's husband, an optometrist, quickly extinguished the blaze. Mrs. White ran on an integration platform, urging an orderly program. No school desegregation steps have been made in Houston. (November 11, 1958—B)

Houston, Tex.: Mrs. Charles E. White (see above) told police today that air pellets struck the windshield of her automobile. The car was parked at a church. (Dec. 9, 1958—B)

Houston, Tex.: While they searched for a bomb, police barricaded for 20 minutes the Houston music hall where Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus was scheduled to speak. No bomb was found. Police said they had received a call that a bomb had been planted and was timed to explode while Faubus spoke on a "bill of rights" program. (Dec. 13, 1958—Y)

VIRGINIA

Fairfax County, Va.: Police placed a 19-year-old white girl in protective custody because, when she sought refuge with a Negro family, a cross burning and exchange of shots resulted. The girl said she moved into the home because she had no place else to go. The night after a cross was burned unidentified persons drove in front of the house and fired five shots; a member of the Negro family fired one shot into the air. No one was injured. The girl later was released unconditionally. (She had been a ward of the county for 10 years, had served a vagrancy sentence and been released.) (August 11, 16, 1956—S)

Charlottesville, Va.: The fourth cross since mid-August was burned on a local lawn, apparently in protest against the activities of the local chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations. The latest blazed on the lawn of Dr. Frank D. Daniel, financial chairman of the group; another was burned at the home of Mrs. Sarah Patton Boyle, officer of the state group, and one at the home of Mrs. Morris Brown, vice president of the local chapter. The first cross was burned before the Westminster Presbyterian Church during a meeting of the Council. It was this meeting John Kasper, ex-secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council, invaded to say his group had "declared war on you people" and would "run you out of town." (December 9, 1956; August 30, 1956—S)

Charlottesville, Va.: Asa Carter, executive secretary of the North Alabama Citizens Council, told an audience of about 250 that Southerners could not look to their politicians or their courts for a solution of the segregation problem. "This is not a legal problem," Carter said. "It won't be settled in the courts. It is up to you to say the Negro is not going to your schools and it is up to you to keep him out." (September 3, 1956—B)

Arlington County, Va.: A burning cross was found in a cemetery adjoining a Negro church. The Rev. John F. Monroe, pastor of the Calloway Methodist Church, reported the incident to police, who found the smoldering cross when they arrived about 2:15 a.m. (June 23, 1958—S)

Arlington County, Va.: The ninth Arlington County case growing out of Virginia's controversial segregated seating law was thrown out of court. Mrs. Robert A. Eldridge Jr., a Negro who refused to leave her white friends at a Unitarian Church picnic at a park, was cleared of disorderly conduct charges. She was arrested after police received a telephone complaint from an unidentified person that the seating law was being violated. Members of the church posted collateral and some critics termed her arrest harrassment. Mrs. Eldridge's son was one of seven Negro children who applied for entry to white schools the previous fall. County officials, who said they must respond to complaints of racial seating law violations, have been unable to win a conviction in any of nine cases where arrests were made in the previous two years. Arlington County circuit court judges have differed on the constitutionality of the seating law but the question has not been resolved by higher courts. Most of the cases were dismissed on technicalities. In the case of Mrs. Eldridge, County Court Judge Paul D. Brown held there was no disorderly conduct because "the defendant was seated with persons of her own Unitarian Church, present under a permit, and who did not object to her presence." In an editorial (June 13, 1958), the Washington Post and Times Herald said, "... let any arrests in this controversial area (segregated seating) be made under the law itself rather than under such subterfuge as disorderly conduct and let the application of the law receive a fair court test. Either there ought to be a chance to appeal, or there ought to be no arrests of this nature. What has been happening in Arlington amounts to a runaround that involves a substantial denial of justice." (June 10, 1958—S)

Arlington County, Va.: A bomb threat suspended Sunday services at the Arlington Unitarian Church. Rabbi Emmett A. Frank of Alexandria, Va., who previously had criticized Virginia's "massive resistance" policies, was to have appeared at two services. The first service went off without incident but about 15 minutes before the second, a caller telephoned the church office to warn, "You better clear the children out of the building. We are going to blow up the place." Rabbi Frank's talk at the first service had been a general discussion of Judaism, with no mention of politics or integration. The Rev. Ross A. Weston, minister of the church, said the Rabbi would be invited back the next Sunday. (Oct. 20, 1958—Z)

Richmond, Va.: An anonymous bomb threat preceded the season's opening performance of the Richmond Symphony Orchestra at the Mosque Auditorium. Police found no trace of a bomb. It was the fourth bomb scare in Virginia within a week. Previous threats involved a synagogue in Bristol, a Unitarian Church in Arlington (see above) and a Negro school in Richmond. The threat to the auditorium was reported to police a few hours before Gov. Lindsay Almond in a speech in Richmond assailed those who would bomb churches, synagogues and other buildings. (Oct. 21, 1958—B)

PART TWO | REPRISALS

Intimidation is a technique more natural to a rural than an urban, industrialized society. Perhaps the changed economic life of the South has been the principal reason articulate Southerners have condemned the crude methods of repression, although without succeeding in stamping them out. However, one of the old methods has had more currency among leaders and other respectable elements of the white community. This is the employment of superior economic strength to discipline the Negro. There is nothing new in this practice; even in slave times it was used against free Negroes, and Negroes ever since have known well the conditions for credit or land tenure. Some Southerners since 1954 have, however, elaborated and organized the methods of economic reprisal until a recognizably new and modern instrument has taken form. Most commonly associated with the White Citizens Council, the weapon of reprisal has deprived Negroes and non-conforming whites of jobs, of credit, of supplies for their businesses.

The policy of reprisal against whites was perhaps most clearly stated by Roy Harris of Augusta, Ga., president of the Citizens Councils of America, Inc., at a Citizens Council rally in Orlando which attracted 600 segregationists from Florida, Georgia, Alabama and Mississppi. Amid shouts of "amen, brother," Harris called for:

1. Reduction of all political campaign issues in all state and local elections to a single question, "who's the strongest man for segregation?"
2. A boycott of merchants who fail to join and actively support racial segregation.
3. A "straightening out" for clergymen who preach "the brotherhood of man."
4. Chasing Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, "clean out of the state of Georgia."
5. A fight against all agencies of mass communication—newspapers, magazines, radio and television stations.
6. Absolute defiance of all federal court rulings favoring racial integration "by every means and at every cost."

Harris labelled all persons who disagreed with his views as "traitors and quislings." (September 22, 1958—E, F)

Reprisal is, of course, a weapon which Negroes now have the strength also to wield, and they have done so. The pages which follow include descriptions of the bus boycott of Montgomery, the virtual strangulation of Tuskegee, and such other widely reported stories as those of Orangeburg, S. C., Tallahassee, Fla., and Rock Hill, S. C.

In short, it is necessary to reckon with the determination that inspires both whites and Negroes. For twelve months the world saw a rare portrayal of the resources of human fortitude, as day after day 50,000 Negroes walked in Montgomery during their bus boycott. The fact is sometimes overlooked that the boycott did not defeat the city of Montgomery; segregation was maintained on the buses, until a federal court outlawed it. Nor has the boycott of Tuskegee merchants led to their capitulation: here is a town apparently preferring financial suicide to reform of its racial policies. And the determination of the Negroes of Tuskegee to have reform seems equally strong.

It is, then, a deeply disturbing history which this section of the report sketches.

The following list covers 95 cases. This figure, however, does not tell the whole story for some of the instances counted as a single item involve untold hundreds of men and women, since they cover city-wide protest movements. Listed as one item, also, are the voting purges in Louisiana, where names of several thousand Negroes were removed from registration lists.

ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala.: State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County reported to the State Senate Education Committee, "We've got 196 colored teachers in Macon County and the board tells me they'll fire every one of them that takes part in this agitation for integration." (July 21, 1955—D)

Selma, Ala.: Economic reprisals against the signers of school desegregation petitions were reported in three counties—Dallas (65 per cent Negro), Bullock (74 per cent) and Butler (45 per cent). In Selma, seat of Dallas County and site of the first White Citizens Council to be organized in Alabama, WCC County Chairman Alston Keith estimated that of the 29 Negroes signing a desegregation petition in August, "about 16" had been fired by September 7. "Probably all of them who had jobs were fired," Keith said, explaining that some were self-employed. When the Dallas County WCC was formed, Keith announced that economic sanctions against Negroes favoring integration would be the prime weapons of the group. He claimed the 16 firings were "spontaneous," however, and that the WCC would accept neither "credit nor censure." Several petition signers in the three above mentioned counties later withdrew their signatures, explaining they misunderstood the purpose of the documents. (September 7, 1955—B; October 1955—A)

Birmingham, Ala.: "The Southerner", edited by Ace Carter of the North Alabama Citizens Council, carried a column headed, "To Buy Or Not To Buy (There should be no question)" and listing Ford, for its "vicious program of using dollars to integrate," and citing the Ford-Mercury sponsored Ed Sullivan program for "insistence" that certain Negro entertainers "be showcased frequently." It also listed Phillip Morris and Marlboro cigarettes, accusing the company of contributing to the Urban League, and Kraft, because some of its television programs were "interracial and have sold the idea that the white Southerner is a bully, coward or something very distasteful." (September-October 1956)

Choctaw County, Ala.: On September 21, 1956 Life Magazine carried another story in its series on segregation. Included was an account of the life of a Negro couple, Willie and Allie Lee Causey, in the 95 per cent Negro community of Shady Grove. It told how Causey earned a good living as a woodcutter and farmer, running a small but successful business with a truck, power tools and his own work crew. It also told how Mrs. Causey taught school in a ramshackle building and quoted her opinion on racial problems: "Integration is the only way through which Negroes will receive justice. We cannot get it as a separate people . . ." Life, in an issue the following December, reported the consequences. Causey's truck was confiscated, merchants refused to sell the family anything, Mrs. Causey was fired. The Causeys had to move from the community and, with the help of Life, resettle in another part of the South. (Life Magazine—1956)

Montgomery, Ala.: On December 1, 1955, a bus carrying white and Negro passengers made a downtown stop. The driver asked four Negroes to give up their seats. Three did but Mrs. Rosa Parks, a seamstress, refused. The driver called a policeman who took Mrs. Parks to the police station, where she was charged with violating city segregation laws. Almost overnight word flashed through the Negro community: Support Rosa Parks. Printed leaflets were circulated Saturday, December 3, asking Negroes to stay off the buses Monday, the day of Mrs. Parks trial. Almost 90 per cent of them did. They went to work in private automobiles, Negro taxis, in wagons, on foot or bicycle. Mrs. Parks that day was found guilty and fined $14. That night, 5,000 Negroes crowded into the Holt Street Baptist Church and by the end of the evening the Montgomery Improvement Association was formed and the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. was named president.

It was the beginning of a year-long boycott which was to make the name Martin Luther King the symbol of nonviolent resistance to his followers. At first, the Negroes asked only that Negro passengers be treated more courteously, that seating be on a first-come, first-serve basis, and that Negro bus drivers be employed on predominantly Negro runs. Negotiations on these points failed and the boycott continued. The mayor and city commissioners joined the White Citizens Council; the Negroes operated a car pool; businesses were damaged by rumors circulated among white buyers that they had contributed to the NAACP or by rumors among Negroes they had contributed to the Citizens Council. King's home was bombed, and a dynamite cap exploded in the yard of another leader. More than 100 Negroes were indicted on charges of violating Alabama's anti-boycott laws. Meanwhile, suit was filed in federal court, which eventually on November 13, brought a unanimous ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that Montgomery's bus segregation laws were unconstitutional. In December, Negroes called off the boycott and resumed riding on the newly de-segregated buses. The months following were not smooth. Four Negro churches, the homes of two ministers and a taxi stand have been bombed. (Two white men were acquitted of charges of bombing one of the churches.) A white man was fined for hitting a Negro woman passenger; a Negro school girl was convicted of striking a white girl on another bus. Vandals sabotaged a local telecast of a national program featuring the Rev. Mr. King. Snipers have fired at city buses, in one instance wounding a Negro woman.

A 15-year-old Negro girl was beaten by several young white men near a city bus stop. She suffered head injuries. A white man on the bus said he saw the girl on her knees on the pavement with upraised arms trying to protect herself. In April, 1958, a scuffle with a white passenger over a seat on a city bus sent a Negro woman to jail for several hours before she was released on $200 bond. (1956-57-58—A, B)

Auburn, Ala.: An Assistant professor at Alabama Polytechnic Institute charged he was dismissed "for exercising his right of free speech." Bud R. Hutchinson declared he had been notified that he would not be reappointed for the coming college year because of a letter he wrote to the school paper concerning segregation. Hutchinson disagreed with an editorial in The Auburn Plainsman critical of integration moves in New York. Dr. Ralph B. Draughon, Auburn president, said, "I felt that Mr. Hutchinson could not expect to advance in his career at this institution. Since he is in his first year, I felt it would be better for him and the institution that he seek employment elsewhere. . . The decision in no way reflects upon his character or his professional status." As a result, Auburn was one of five colleges censured by the American Association of University Professors, which claimed they had infringed upon academic freedom by dismissing teachers. (May 16, 1957; May 26, 1958—B)

Tuskegee, Ala.: A struggle over Negroes' right to vote has brought lasting repercussions to this home of Tuskegee Institute, famed Negro college. Tuskegee is in Macon County, which has the highest percentage (85%) of Negroes of any county in the nation. Nevertheless, there have been only 1,100 Negroes registered to vote in the county and 2,700 white citizens registered. The bulwarks of Macon County's economy have been Tuskegee Institute, with an annual payroll of $2.5 million, and a Veterans Administration hospital, with an annual payroll of $6.5 million. All the patients and most of the staff at the hospital are Negro. In June 1957, the Alabama legislature gerrymandered Tuskegee's city limits, cutting the town in half, redrawing its boundaries and in the process thrusting out of the town about 410 of the city's 420 Negro voters. Sam Engelhardt, Macon County state senator and executive secretary of the Citizens Council of Alabama, was author of the bill designed to prevent Negroes from registering enough voters to gain control of the local government. Engelhardt spoke proudly of gerrymandering the Negroes out of the town and indicated he was motivated by the new Civil Rights Act. "If that Civil Rights Commission comes down here and forces mass registration of unqualified Negroes, there'll be bloodshed," he predicted. A prominent Negro leader denied the Negroes wanted to take over local affairs and said that if Negroes could have had one representative out of five on the school board, one out of five on the city council, one out of seven on the county board of revenue, "I think we'd have bragged of this community as a model one in race relations."

In any event, what began as a move to limit voting by Negroes, quickly became an economic battle. Negroes in the town simply began in large part to shop elsewhere. How effective has this movement against white merchants been? A dry goods store owner reported his business was down 35 per cent, an auto dealer 40 to 60 per cent below the previous year. The town's only movie theater has closed. A number of white businesses have folded. Charles Gomillion, head of Tuskegee Institute's social science division and president of the Tuskegee Civic Association, a Negro group leading the resistance, has said, "If white citizens here feel Negroes shouldn't vote, then Negro citizens feel their money should not be spent with these folks." Negro leaders avoid use of the word boycott; they prefer to talk of "spontaneous reaction." The reason is the state's anti-boycott law. The state attorney general has had a temporary injunction issued against the Civic Association to stop fostering boycott. Merchants have said the move has not brought back their Negro customers. Pending is a move to abolish the county and divide it among the surrounding counties. (November 5, 1957—I; August, October 1957—A)

ARKANSAS

Pine Bluff, Ark.: Fifty members of a railroad metal crafts union announced a boycott of the Pine Bluff Community Chest because it supports the Negro Boys' Club. (October 9, 1957—F)

Little Rock, Ark.: Advertisers threatened to boycott the Arkansas Gazette because of its support of the school board's plan of gradual integration of schools in Little Rock. A bakery was boycotted because the high school-age daughter of its owner was quoted as favoring integration in the schools and because a member of the Little Rock school board worked there. Business dropped off in a men's clothing store owned by James T. Karam, a friend of Governor Orval Faubus and described in some quarters as a leader in the violence at Central High School. His store once did a thriving business with Negro customers. These and other measures and counter-measures grew out of the crisis at Central High School. (March 1958—A)

North Little Rock, Ark.: The mother of one of eight Negro students attending integrated Little Rock Central High School was told her teaching contract at a North Little Rock Negro elementary school had not been renewed. Mrs. Lois Patillo, mother of 15-year-old Melba Patillo, taught at the Jones elementary school for seven years. The school superintendent said Mrs. Patillo was one of several teachers whose contracts were not renewed because of "problems" which he said were strictly personal matters. An NAACP official quoted Mrs. Patillo as saying the superintendent told her he should have been consulted about the enrollment of her daughter at Central High last fall. (May 8, 1958—M)

FLORIDA

Miami, Fla.: Charges that he was too outspoken on the issue of segregation caused the dismissal of Florida's only Negro assistant state attorney. A leader of a segregation group had furnished State Atty. George A. Brautigam with a tape recording of a radio speech in which the Negro in question, Henry Arrington, said his work was not necessarily confined to Negro cases. Brautigam demanded his suspension on charges of "breach of confidence and misconduct." Gov. LeRoy Collins complied on the ground that Arrington had made "public statements in derogation of, and repugnant to, the duties imposed upon him." Arrington said the issue may have been created by "someone who wanted to make a political issue out of segregation." (April 1956—A)

Tallahassee, Fla.,: On May 27, 1956, two girls from Florida A and M. University, a Negro school, boarded a crowded city bus and sat in the only two vacant seats in the front of a bus, next to a white woman. The driver asked them to move to the rear. The girls declined but offered to leave if the driver would refund their fare. He refused and called the police, who arrested the girls. They were released under bond. (The charges later were dropped.) That night a cross was burned in front of the girls' home. The next day, the student body at the college decided in a mass meeting to refrain from riding the city buses for the two weeks remaining in the term. By mid-afternoon, Negroes in town joined the movement. On May 29, Negro citizens met in the Bethel Baptist Church and organized the Inter-Civic Council, with the Rev. C. K. Steele at its head. Since that time, the situation has been complex. Bus service has been discontinued and resumed. Police arrested drivers in the Negro car pool on charges they were violating the state's "for hire" laws. Businesses have suffered. The Inter-Civic Council accused the police of intimidating Negroes by taking them from their homes at all hours for questioning. Threats have been made, crosses burned, rocks and bricks thrown through windows of homes and cars. After the Supreme Court ruled bus segregation in Montgomery was unconstitutional, the Tallahassee boycott was ended officially. However, the majority of the Negroes still do not ride the buses, apparently awaiting the outcome of several pending court cases. (B, and "The Tallahassee Bus Protest," a field report by Charles U. Smith of Florida A. & M. University and Lewis M. Killian of Florida State University.)

Monticello, Fla.: Dr. Deborah Coggins was dismissed as health officer of three north Florida counties because she had a business lunch with a Negro nurse. One of her defenders, Robert H. Browning, health educator who worked with Dr. Coggins, lost his job. The Jefferson County Commission simply abolished the post. Browning transferred to Palm Beach County. He had urged the county commission to "practice the kind of Christianity you profess" and retain Dr. Coggins. Mrs. Flo Way was asked to resign from the Jefferson County school system because she had defended the health officer in a public meeting. Mrs. Way refused to resign as a fifth grade teacher and since she had job tenure, she continued in her work. (October 4, 1956—B; November, December 1956—A)

Jacksonville, Fla.: The Community Chest United Fund withdrew support from the local chapter of the National Urban League. Officials of the League asserted the action was caused by pressures from the Ku Klux Klan and the White Citizens Council. The executive director of the Chest denied this and said it was because the League had entered "into politics." The Urban League has been forced out of United Fund or Community Chest drives in Ft. Worth, Texas, and three others have withdrawn under pressure—in Little Rock, New Orleans and Richmond. (1956—K, various)

Tallahassee, Fla.: John M. Boardman, white graduate student at Florida State University, was refused permission to continue his studies after the present semester because he entertained Negro students from neighboring Florida A & M on the campus. Boardman was one of six students—three of them Negro—arrested for sitting together on a Tallahassee bus in violation of a driver seating assignment. (March 1957—A)

GEORGIA

Shellman, Ga.: A Baptist minister who publicly backed the Supreme Court ruling on school segregation was ousted from his church. The board of deacons demanded the resignation of the Rev. Henry A. Buchanan. The church secretary said the minister was not being cast out but that the church needed a change of leadership. "Why quibble with words?" was Buchanan's reaction. (January 1955—A)

Atlanta, Ga.: Dr. Guy H. Wells was stripped of his honorary title of President Emeritus of Georgia State College for Women because of his racial views. Wells was executive director of the Georgia Council on Human Relations, an affiliate of the Southern Regional Council. The State Board of Regents withdrew the honorary title it had bestowed upon him two years before, shortly after he resigned as head of the college to accept a position with the federal government. The same day, the State Board of Education asked the Teacher Retirement Board to discontinue Wells' monthly pension. Trustees of the retirement system rejected the request as unconstitutional. (April 1956—A)

Gwinnett County, Ga.: The State Board of Education ordered the pay of Mrs. Colleen M. Wiggins, a teacher at the Bethesda school, withheld pending an investigation of her racial views. About 150 persons had signed a petition asking her discharge because of her views on segregation. Mrs. Wiggins said she was asked to sign a statement saying she does not believe in racial integration but had refused. She explained that she obeyed Georgia laws on segregation but thought her own views were a private matter. She had told her high school class she would not object to teaching white and Negro students together if that were the practice. The County Board of Education held that Mrs. Wiggins "probably made unwise or indiscreet expressions" but that evidence did not justify her dismissal. This decision was appealed to the state board but before it could act Mrs. Wiggins resigned because she was expecting a baby. (November, December 1956—A)

Lakeland, Ga.: Mrs. A. B. Baskin, who had taught in Lanier County schools for 17 years, was forced to resign because she allowed a white school boy, whose own bus had gone, to ride home in a Negro school bus. Mrs. Baskin emphasized that she believes in segregation and had suggested that the schoolboy take the Negro bus only as a final resort. The County Board of Education later ordered her reinstatement on the recommendation of state school officials. (April 9, 1958—Atlanta Journal)

Columbus, Ga.: The pastor of the First Presbyterian Church was demoted because of his racial stand. A commission appointed by the Presbytery of southwest Georgia said the Rev. Robert B. McNeill, pastor of the church, would have powers of an evangelist, limited to the reception of new members. The action resulted from an investigation into what the commission termed a "condition of disharmony." It said opposition to the pastor became evident after McNeill wrote a magazine article calling for "creative contacts" between white persons and Negroes. (Dec. 1, 1958—B)

LOUISIANA

Claiborne, La.: School boards in Claiborne and Bossier ordered Time, Life and Look magazines banned from high school libraries, charging they "distorted" racial news. (June 1956—A)

Louisiana: Early in 1957, the Justice Department in Washington made public some FBI findings on registration of Negroes in Louisiana. Asst. Atty. Gen. Warren Olney III said the FBI investigated the handling of voter registration in 10 Louisiana parishes and found that 8,552 Negroes were challenged when they tried to register in 1956. Louisiana Atty. Gen. Jack P. Gremillion had told a House Judiciary Subcommittee that when a registered voter was challenged, the registrar sent a record of the challenge to the registrant, including a reply form, giving him 10 days to appear and establish his right to remain on the rolls by presenting statements from three voters living in the same parish. Olney said this did not appear to be the general practice in the parishes investigated. In six, he added, registrars did everything to discourage the filing of reply affidavits and generally refused them when offered. Olney also said there had been in 1956 a successful effort by White Citizens Councils in Louisiana to get Negro registrants off the rolls and to prevent their registration. (Feb. 27, 1957—B)

MISSISSIPPI

Jackson, Miss.: The Rev. Roy C. Delamotte, white Methodist minister, was not accepted by any Mississippi congregation after protesting a resolution in the Mississippi Annual Conference calling for continued segregation. (June 21, 1955—Jackson Daily News)

Yazoo City, Miss.: The White Citizens Council published a full-page advertisement in a local paper carrying "an authentic list of the purported signers to an NAACP communication to our school board." Many of the signers lost their jobs and under this pressure the majority removed their names from the petition. A plumbing contractor was taken off two construction jobs he had underway and refused plumbing supplies by a wholesale house. (Journal and Guide, September 24, 1955)

Durant, Miss.: The Rev. Marsh Calloway reported that elders of the Durant Presbyterian Church fired him because he spoke against the Citizens Councils. (November 30, 1955—J)

Jackson, Miss.: Ellis Wright, president of the Jackson Citizens Council, said a letter from the Falstaff Brewing Co. probably would end a scattered boycott of Falstaff beer in Mississippi. Sales had dropped after a pro-segregation pamphlet accused the company of contributing to the NAACP. A letter to Wright from a company official, the CC official said, explained that the company had made a single contribution as a life membership fee for one of its Negro salesmen and that "in error, apparently, the membership was issued in the name of Falstaff Brewing Corp." (December 1, 1955—B)

Lexington, Miss.: The husband of a crusading weekly newspaper editor lost his job as administrator of the Lexington Community Hospital. Walter D. Smith, husband of Mrs. Hazel Brannon Smith, who criticized the alleged mistreatment of a Negro prisoner, was fired by the hospital board of directors. In an editorial, the Delta Democrat-Times in Greenville, Miss., commented, "Smith was ousted not because he was incapable but because some of the views of his vigorous newspaperwoman wife were unpopular. . . . She had the guts to criticize the then sheriff for shooting a Negro in the back for no good reason." Mrs. Smith is editor of the Lexington Advertiser and The Durant News. (January 11, 1956—X)

NORTH CAROLINA

Guilford, N. C.: A letter to the school board signed by 34 persons saying it would be "just and wise . . . to admit Negro pupils (to white schools) . . . if and when they make individual application" caused one white man to lose a part-time job. Another white signer resigned from a full-time job because of protests received by his employer, although the latter indicated that so far as he was concerned the man could continue on the payroll. (September 6-7, 1955—T; September 5, 1955—B)

Greensboro, N. C.: The furniture business of a couple signing a petition advocating compliance with the Supreme Court school ruling was boycotted. (September 6, 1955—B)

SOUTH CAROLINA

Clarendon County, S. C.: Three Negro teachers said they were not rehired by the Summerton School District of Clarendon County because their father and the husband of one signed an integration petition. (August 25, 1955—O)

Orangeburg, S. C.: Boycotts have cut both ways in this town of 17,000. Here the economic struggle began with a petition by 57 Negroes to the school board in July 1955, asking that immediate steps be taken to "reorganize the public schools on a non-discriminatory basis." White residents responded by organizing a Citizens Council and reprisals began against petitioners and their families and members of the local NAACP. Those who worked for white employers were fired; those who rented from white landlords were evicted. Credit was denied by white suppliers and merchants. Some no longer could buy, even for cash. Mayor R. H. Jennings, who was president of the local Coca-Cola bottling company, a bakery and the Orangeburg Ice & Fuel Co., cut off supplies to three Negro grocers and a gas station owner. The Coble Dairy stopped delivery of milk to the grocers and all the petitioners on its routes. A service station operator was forced out of business by the owner-distributor. The Negro residents retaliated with their own boycott. They stopped using products of the dairy and the Mayor's enterprises. They obtained the names of local merchants who belonged to the Citizens Council and someone distributed a list of the 23 firms at Negro meetings. They started shopping in Columbia or by mail. Students at South Carolina State College (Negro) quietly supported the boycott. A white grocer was forced out of business and other merchants suffered. Still other firms joined the reprisal movement against the Negro—the Pepsi Cola, Royal Crown and Dr. Pepper bottlers, another bakery and another dairy.

Because of the college students' action, Gov. George B. Timmerman, Jr., ordered the State Law Enforcement Division to place the college under surveillance; 1,200 students staged a four-day walkout until they were promised a discussion of their grievances on one hand and threatened with expulsion on the other. By the end of the school year, the student council president and 15 other students had been expelled and five faculty members dismissed for their part in the boycott. The fall and winter of 1955-56 was a difficult time for the petitioners in Orangeburg and those in nearby Elloree and Summerton, where similar reprisals were taken. Various appeals brought in contributions of food, money and clothing from many sections of the country. During all this time, only one local white person openly joined the fight alongside the Negroes in Orangeburg, a Catholic priest. By the spring of 1956, some disenchanment with the Citizens Councils was felt; pressures slackened somewhat but the basic controversy over school segregation remains unsolved. Both sides seem to agree that the reprisals and counter-boycotts have not been a satisfactory way of solving the problem. (September 1955—A; The Reporter Magazine, January 21, 1957)

Batesburg, S. C.: The Rev. George Jackson Stafford's resignation as pastor of the First Baptist Church was accepted because his liberal racial views differed from those of some in his congregation. The move was reported to have been spearheaded by Federal Judge George B. Timmerman, father of the governor. (November 1, 1955—V)

Columbia, S. C.: The Rev. John Murry, Methodist minister, transferred from Orangeburg County to Gilbert, S. C., because some of his parishioners protested his support of a resolution deploring economic sanctions against Negroes with integrationist views. (November 1, 1955—V)

Columbia, S. C.: Dr. Chester C. Travelstead, dean of the school of education at the University of South Carolina, disclosed he had been dismissed "in the best interest of the university" after making a speech calling for an end to public school segregation. Travelstead had told a campus gathering, "It is my firm conviction that enforced segregation of the races in our public schools can no longer be justified on any basis . . . (The) fact that we have practiced segregation on the assumption that it was right and just does not make it right and just." Travelstead, a native of Kentucky, left to become dean of the School of Education at the University of New Mexico. (November 24, 1955—P; November 25, 1955—D)

Columbia, S. C.: A 23-year-old English major was fired as a legislative telephone page after writing an article in the Gamecock, student weekly at the University of South Carolina. His article said the State Senate was "intent on circumventing" integration and that Southern legislators and governors were "embarrassing sound trucks for the South." (March 14, 1956—V)

Florence, S. C.: After two years of threats and pressure, the Florence Morning News, which repeatedly appealed for moderation and good will in solving segregation problems, banned the subject from its editorial page. For its views, the News had drawn violent abuse, reader complaints, circulation losses. The city editor had been struck while covering a Klan meeting; the church editor, a minister, had his tires slashed and two cars had tried to run him off the road. Editor John H. O'Dowd, 29, native of Florence and son of the owner-publisher, had been threatened and chased at night by a car. Finally, O'Dowd announced a "retreat from reason" and wrote, "We have . . . sought men of good will . . . but men seeking the fair solution have not, in two years, come forward." He announced segregation stories would continue to be printed in the news columns. Later, O'Dowd left Florence to take a job in a northern city on a larger newspaper. (Time magazine, April 2, 1956)

Elloree, S. C.: Twenty-four Negro school teachers in the Elloree School District either resigned or their contracts were not renewed for refusal to sign a statement inquiring into NAACP membership. (July 1956—A)

Rock Hill, S. C.: A Negro woman refused to give up her seat by a white woman on orders from the bus driver; she said it was the only vacant one on the bus and the white passenger had invited her to take it. The incident touched off a boycott of the bus line by Negroes and brought threats to a Negro minister and others. A few months later, the bus line stopped operating. (August 3, 1957—O; January 1958—A)

Columbia, S. C.: Three white professors at Benedict College for Negroes were told they would not be rehired. One of them, Lewis Smith, chairman of the Humanities Department, told reporters, "This is a capitulation to the Dixiecrat forces that have been persecuting the white professors because of their pro-integration stand." Also released were J. Spencer Kennard, a Baptist minister, and Mrs. Marian Davis. J. A. Bacoats, president of the college, said after a meeting of the Board of Trustees, "Their presence here is not in the best interests of the college." (May 9, 1958—B)

TENNESSEE

Jackson, Tenn.: M. C. Jolly, operator of the Dr. Pepper Bottling Co., said 12 or 13 Negro merchants had cancelled accounts with his firm after he joined in a suit seeking to bar state aid to a college which had admitted two Negroes. Later, he said increased business from white merchants offset the Negro cancellations. (February 1-2, 1956—B; March 1956—A)

TEXAS

Lubbock, Tex.: Segregation viewpoints figured in the removal of two faculty members at Texas Technological College. Dr. Byron R. Abernethy, professor of government, and Dr. Herbert M. Greenberg, assistant professor of psychology, were notified that the Board of Directors in executive session refused to renew their contracts. The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal said that Greenberg, who is blind, apparently was removed because of his publicly-stated views backing integration. The school's president protested the closed-door procedure and said he had found no fault with the two professors' academic ability. The college has no Negro students, and so far as is known, none have applied. (August 1957-A)

VIRGINIA

Appomattox County, Va.: The school board refused to renew the contracts of two eighth grade teachers. One said she believed it was because she voted in 1954 against an "inflammatory resolution" favoring segregation; she added that she didn't consider herself an integrationist but did believe the public school system should be preserved. The other said she was "falsely accused of being an integrationist." Eighteen of 19 teachers in the school protested to the board. Commenting on the case, the Richmond Times-Dispatch said, "The impression has been created . . . that it is becoming dangerous in Virginia for teachers to express even a mild dissent from majority community opinion on the race problem." (June 1956-A)

PART THREE | VIOLENCE

There is no simple way to distinguish the events noted in this section from those earlier reported under the heading "Intimidation" except to say that these are bigger, and if anything more purposeless. This list of 225 acts against private liberties and public peace includes:

6 Negroes killed;

29 individuals, 11 of them white, shot and wounded in racial incidents;

44 persons beaten;

5 stabbed;

30 homes bombed; in one instance (at Clinton, Tenn.) an additional 30 houses were damaged by a single blast; attempted blasting of five other homes;

8 homes burned;

15 homes struck by gunfire, and 7 homes stoned;

4 schools bombed, in Jacksonville, Nashville, and Chattanooga, and Clinton, Tenn.

2 bombing attempts on schools, in Charlotte and Clinton;

7 churches bombed, one of which was for whites; an attempt made to bomb another Negro church;

1 church in Memphis burned; anther church stoned;

4 Jewish temples or centers bombed, in Miami, Nashville, Jacksonville, and Atlanta;

3 bombing attempts on Jewish buildings, in Gastonia, N. C., Birmingham, and Charlotte;

1 YWCA building in Chattanooga and an auditorium in Knoxville dynamited;

2 schools burned;

In addition, 17 towns and cities were threatened by mob action.

The list also has an item which tells of the persecution of Koinonia Farm in Georgia.

At the time of the bombings in Jacksonville, Ralph McGill wrote in the Atlanta Constitution:

> The mayors of a number of Southern cities have organized to try and prevent further such outrages. This is a good move.
>
> But let us not overlook the fact that these bombings are the fruit of the tree of defiance of law and of orderly process. In all the cities represented at the conference of disturbed mayors, there had been leaders in the press, and in public life who had attacked the Supreme Court, the President of the United States, and the U. S. Attorney-General in the most reckless and abusive terms. That this inspired the criminal fringe to action cannot be denied.
>
> It is one thing strongly to exercise the unquestioned American principle of dissenting from court and political decisions. But to abuse the institutions on which our country is based in violent, defiant terms cannot do otherwise than to encourage lawlessness and to excite the criminal fringe.
>
> Irrational abuse and preachments of defiance of due process by persons in public life constitute a tree which bears the bitter fruits of bombings of churches and schools.
>
> We should not blind ourselves to this fact. To do otherwise is to engage in self-deceit.

It has been frequently said that violence and direct action never have been far from Southern folkways. This may be correct. There are also, however, other characteristics woven closely into Southern culture: graciousness, good manners, relaxed living, and political sagacity. There would be little point in compiling the record set out in the following and preceding pages unless we believed that these latter qualities will in time prevail.

ALABAMA

Birmingham, Ala.: Two discharged Birmingham police officers and a city jail warden were acquitted in federal court of depriving a Negro prisoner of his civil rights. Indictments were brought against the three men after Charles Patrick claimed he was beaten by the officers in the jail while the warden was present. He had been jailed after the wife of one of the policemen complained the Negro had threatened her during an argument over a parking space. He later was cleared of the charges. The warden was suspended from his post for 10 days. (April 18, 1955—B)

Wadley, Ala.: An interracial meeting at Southern Union College was broken up by 30 men who threatened that if the Negroes did not leave, "We'll blow up the place." College President Clyde C. Flannery said all those at the meeting were Southerners and members of the Congregational Christian Church, which operates the college. He said there was a widespread belief in town the delegates were to discuss school segregation but that actually they met to talk about international relations and primarily the menace of Communism. Flannery said he could identify six of the 30 men but would consult his attorney to decide whether legal action should be taken. Apparently, the men were not identified publicly nor was any action brought. (July 22, 1955—C)

Carrollton, Ala.: Three white men were charged with a misdemeanor in the kidnapping of a 21-year-old Negro, who was hit with a shotgun in a mistaken identity reprisal. Pickens County Sheriff R. R. Shields said he arrested the men on a highway after they had released the beaten and frightened Negro, Mutt Jones. Shields described the three white men as "being well thought of around here." Asked why the men had kidnapped Jones, Shields explained, "It was just a case of mistaken identity. A Negro hit one of the men's father with a blackjack and they thought it was Jones." Shields described Jones as an ex-convict and added, "Jones didn't have a mark on him. They did hit him two or three times on the head and shoulder with an automatic shotgun, though." (September 13, 1955—C)

Selma, Ala.: A white couple poured gasoline on a Negro woman's home and set it ablaze. (September 23, 1955—D)

Selma, Ala.: Four white persons forced a Negro porter into a car and drove 10 miles into the country before releasing him. The abductors apparently believed him to be another individual accused of insulting a white woman. (October 23, 1955—D)

Montgomery, Ala.: A bomb which exploded at the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., leader in the fight against bus segregation, blew out windows and damaged the front porch. Mrs. King, their daughter and a visitor were in the house but were uninjured. (January 31, 1956—B)

Tuscaloosa, Ala.: After a three-year court fight, a young Negro woman, Autherine Lucy, was admitted to the University of Alabama in February 1956. Friday, February 3, she went to her first class as campus police manned the corridors. That night, a crowd of 1,200 students, attracted by a burning cross, assembled on University Avenue but after exploding firecrackers, singing "Dixie" and marching through a women's dormitory area, they dispersed. The next night students massed before the Student Union Building. Outsiders were noted, trying to whip the crowd into action. The University News Bureau director said three or four outside groups were in evidence—high school pupils, workers from a nearby plant and members of an extreme pro-segregation group from Birmingham. Monday, a crowd of about 3,000 roamed the campus, jeering and cursing university officials accompanying Miss Lucy and pelting them with eggs, rocks and mud. She was removed from the campus under heavy police escort. With demonstrations reaching uncontrollable proportions, University officials suspended Miss Lucy indefinitely, expressing fear for her life. In mid-February, two Negro brothers were arrested for kicking and beating a University student in what one said was an attempt to "get even" for "the way they treated Miss Lucy." At the end of the month, U. S. District Judge H. Hobart Grooms ordered she be readmitted. Hours later, the University Board of Trustees expelled her permanently because of her "outrageous, false and baseless accusations" in allegations that the university had "conspired" in the violent demonstrations which resulted in her temporary suspension. Later, the board announced a student leader in the campus riots had been expelled, four suspended and 25 students disciplined. Judge Grooms denied Miss Lucy's petition to re-enter the university and ruled the expulsion was justified. (March, April, September 1956—A)

Montgomery, Ala.: The home of a young white minister who was active in Montgomery's bus boycott by Negroes was bombed. The Rev. Robert Graetz and his family were away from home at the time. Graetz, 27, the white pastor of the all-Negro Trinity Lutheran Church, has actively supported the boycott and been a member of the Montgomery Improvement Association. (August 25, 1956—B)

Prichard, Ala.: The Rev. Joshua Barney, 68-year-old preacher and carpenter, who sought a city council post, narrowly escaped harm when four shots were fired into his home. Barney was warned anonymously to get out of the race, as was another Negro running for the council in Huntsville. Both Negroes were defeated. (September 7, 1956—B)

Mobile, Ala.: A Negro's home in a white section was damaged by fire, less than 24 hours after it was peppered by a shotgun. Fire Inspector J. B. Foster said it apparently was arson. Booker T. Gulley, the owner, said windows had been smashed frequently by bricks and he had received threatening telephone calls since moving into the house a few weeks earlier. He said that he had used all his money as a downpayment for the house after a Negro real estate agent told him, "The white people are going to move out and the colored people move in." Nevertheless, after the fire, Gulley said he would move out as soon as he could sell the house. ((September 27, 1956—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: Acid was thrown on 10 cars within a week. All but one belonged to Negroes. The exception was a car-trailer owned by a white minister who participated in a Negro-sponsored institute. He reported that his parked vehicle, emblazoned with slogans of brotherhood, was struck by acid on two successive nights. (December 10, 1956—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: Acid was thrown on the car of a bus boycott leader. The complaint was made to police by the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church. (December 19, 1956—W)

Carrollton, Ala.: Robed nightriders fired into the home of a Negro tenant and ordered him to move within 48 hours. Sheriff R. R. Shields waited at the house, which is near Palmetto in north Pickens County, as the deadline approached but the men did not reappear. The sheriff said he had been told of a false rumor that the Negro's children were going to ride a white school bus. (January 5, 1957—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: Four Negro churches and the home of a Negro minister, in addition to the home of a white minister (see Graetz, above) were bombed, less than 12 hours after a racially integrated city bus was ambushed with gunfire. No injuries were reported. (January 10, 1957—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A second attempt to blow up the home of the Rev. Martin Luther King misfired. Twelve sticks of dynamite tied around a metal tube were tossed on the porch but the bomb failed to explode. (January 27, 1957—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A bomb tossed between a Negro house and a filling station exploded, damaging both buildings. Three Negroes suffered cuts and scratches. This, along with the attempted bombing of the King home (see above), was another in a series of outbreaks of violence which began shortly after bus segregation was ended by Federal Court order in December. (January 27, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: The home of the Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth, Negro minister and leader of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, which staged a one-day defiance of city bus segregation laws, was heavily damaged by dynamite on Christmas night. (January 1957—A)

Birmingham, Ala.: A city bus with 30 passengers aboard was hit four times by gunfire. Six Negro boys were arrested in connection with the shooting. Earlier, shots were fired into the Negro section of a bus and two white youths were reported seen fleeing from the scene. (January 1957—A)

Birmingham, Ala.: A mob of rock-throwing whites, yelling threats, attacked a white integration leader who later

was fined $30 for reckless driving in making his escape. Lamar Weaver, the victim, had just left the Terminal Railroad Station where a Negro couple had tested the integration policy in a waiting room, when he was slugged with a suitcase and stoned. He was convicted at a special hearing of running a red light and reckless driving as he drove his damaged car from a parking lot through a gauntlet of his tormentors. (March 6, 1957—C)

Birmingham, Ala.: Hooded Klansmen slugged a television newsman and knocked him to the ground when he attempted to take pictures at a public rally. Leo Willette, news director for WBRC-TV, arrived at the rally in East Lake Park as some 500 Klansmen listened to a speaker denounce the press as "Communist inspired." Four or five men grabbed Willette. By the time police dispersed the crowd around him his camera was missing. Willette's face was bruised and his clothing muddied. (An announcement was made at the end of the rally that the camera had been turned over to policemen and would be returned to the newsman.) (March 23, 1957—B, C)

Mobile, Ala.: The fifth of a series of recent bombing attempts in the city was reported by Walter Johnson, Negro cook. He said he supposed the small bomb, thrown by a white boy on a bicycle, was the result of his living "in a mixed neighborhood." Little damage was done. (March 1957—A)

Montgomery, Ala.: A white man and three Negro women were arrested after an argument over integrated seating on a Boylston bus. Detective Captain E. P. Brown said there were "several entirely different stories" but the only point of agreement seemed to be that several blows were struck. The Negroes said the white man cursed and hit two of the women with a wrench after one refused to move to the rear of the bus. The man said he asked one of the Negroes to move and she slapped him across the face. All were charged with assault and battery and released on their own bonds. (April 17, 1957—G)

Birmingham, Ala.: Nat King Cole, Negro singer and pianist, was attacked by a group of white men as he played for a white audience in Municipal Auditorium. Six white men rushed the band leader, knocking Cole and the microphone to the floor. Police rushed from the wings, grabbed the attackers and took them to jail. Cole apparently was not injured, only stunned. Later, police said they had learned that it had been planned that 100 or 150 white men would meet at the auditorium, infiltrate the audience, overpower the band, the police and anyone else who interfered. "But the expected mob failed to show," Detective C. B. Golden said. About a week later Recorders Court Judge Ralph E. Parker imposed maximum jail sentences on four of the attackers, members of the White Citizens Council; two others were fined. (April 10, 18, 1957—B)

Bessemer, Ala.: A dynamite explosion knocked out windows and the side of a Negro church during a service and another blast damaged the home of a Negro civic leader and union officer. No one was injured, although there were 200 persons inside at the time the explosive was ignited in an alley behind the Allen Temple Methodist Church. Police knew of no motive. Neither the minister nor the man whose house was bombed had been active in any integration drive. (April 29, 1957—C)

Prattville, Ala.: Three Negroes were beaten by a robed KKK group during a Klan rally here. Police Chief O. C. Burton said the beatings occurred after the Negroes "shouted and cursed" during a talk by one of the speakers. He said one of the Negroes then claimed about "25 or 30" Klansmen attacked him and his companions. The men required medical treatment but were not seriously hurt, the police chief added. No arrests were made and Burton said the Klansmen he questioned denied any knowledge of the beatings. (May 23, 1957—C)

Birmingham, Ala.: Two young Negro men told of being kidnapped, taken into a woods and beaten with rubber hoses. Harold Cunningham, 19, and Henry Silent, 21, said they were beaten after being questioned about where they were "two Saturdays ago." The young men and their dates said they went to a white drive-in ice cream stand, but left because it was too crowded. Then, the girls told police, they were followed by two cars, which forced their automobile to stop in a section of north Birmingham. Four white men were in each car and they had "some pistols." The men forced the Negro youths to get down on the floor of a car and told them, "One of you is going to talk before you leave." After being beaten and threatened with hanging and shooting, the Negroes escaped when all but one of the men returned to the cars. (June 11, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: James Henry Brock, 27, a Birmingham Negro, told police he was abducted by a group of hooded white men and beaten near Prattville, about 20 miles north of Montgomery. Brock was hospitalized with multiple bruises and cuts over his face and body which he said were caused by whips trimmed from trees. Brock said he and his wife were visiting his parents in Autauga County when two carloads of white men drove behind a car in which he sat with three other Negroes in Prattville late Saturday night. The Negro said the men, who were wearing coveralls with hoods over their heads, told them, "Don't move—stand still or we'll shoot." The other Negroes ran and "the men started shooting at them with shotguns and pistols." Apparently none was injured. Brock said he was pulled from the car, beaten and kicked, then driven into the woods where he was beaten again. He quoted one of the assailants as saying finally, "Run if you want to live—and if you get back to Birmingham, tell those niggers this is what we do to them down here." Brock ran and walked about five miles to a farm home and the owner took him to a hospital. The Autauga County sheriff said he was making a full investigation and promised Negroes would be given "full protection" against any such future incidents. Later, he indicated some doubt the whipping had occurred. (July 8, 1957—C, G)

Birmingham, Ala.: A Negro, George Johnson, reported four white men attempted to burn his home by throwing two homemade incendiary bombs on his porch. Witnesses said they saw four young white men just before the bombs were thrown and that one left the car in which they were riding and threw milk bottles filled with gasoline on the porch. One set fire to the house. Johnson, an employee of a construction company, said he knew of no reason for anyone trying to burn his house. (July 27, 1957—W)

Bessemer, Ala.: Two Negroes taken into protective custody were released after police officials warned them against attempted violations of the city's segregation ordinances. Blevins Stout and William Thomas were held without charge during an investigation of their attempt to enter municipal Roosevelt Park. The two men, officers of the Alabama Association for Human Rights, had asked permission to use the tennis court at the park but were denied entry by an officer at the admission office. The two were met at the park by a group of irate white citizens who warned them against attempting to enter. The Negroes left without argument. They later were escorted to City Hall by a motorcycle scout when several of the white men pursued their cars. While officers questioned Stout and Thomas about their motives, members of the white protesting group milled about the corridors of City Hall. (Aug. 11, 1957—H)

Stanton, Ala.: The Saturday night flogging of a white sawmill worker spurred a county-wide investigation of possible connection with recent Klan activities in the area. The victim, a 37-year-old father of six, told county authorities he was beaten by 12 or 13 white men, strangers to him, in the front yard of his home after his assailants told him, "We're tired of the way you've been treating your wife and family and we're tired of you associating too freely with Negroes." The flogging came three weeks after the beatings in Maplesville (see below), six miles to the north. (August 27, 1957—G)

Maplesville, Ala.: Six Negroes were beaten in what a newspaper account said appeared to be a senseless outrage. The six men, one a soldier on leave, were watching television in the home of one of them when Ku Klux Klansmen arrived. The masked men beat the Negroes from the rear, using rubber hoses or blackjacks; four of the victims then were taken out into the road and starting running, while four or five shots were fired. They hid in a wooded area. Earlier in the evening, 22 carloads of Klansmen pulled up in front of the town hall, donned robes and marched through town. After the beatings, two of the Negroes left town. Apparently the only thing which prevented a mass exodus of other Negroes from the small town was that several influential citizens, like Raymond Stremming, operator of a veneer company, promised there would be no repetition of the Klan incident. "It is going to be easier to run the Klan off than it is for the Klan to run the Negroes off," said Stremming. Later, Stremming was threatened and warned to leave town. The town police chief, a county deputy sheriff and several of his employees stood armed guard after the threat, Stremming said. (August 1957—B, G)

Marion, Ala.: A Bibb County white man was shot in the arm during a nightrider raid on the home of a part-time Negro preacher. Circuit Solicitor Blanchard McLeon said Nathaniel Benson, 40, the Negro whose home was raided, told this story: Robed white men in three cars tossed sulphur bombs in his house at midnight and then shot at him when he went outside with his shotgun. Benson said he went out the back door shooting his shotgun "in the air" and ran into woods nearby. The incident came to light when the white man was admitted to a hospital. (August 31, 1957—G)

Birmingham, Ala.: A 34-year-old Negro was kidnapped and emasculated by a group of white men wearing hoods and robes. The man, Judge Aaron, was taken to a Veterans Administration hospital, where doctors said he had been severely beaten and "100 per cent" emasculated. Two months later, two members of the Ku Klux Klan, Bart Floyd and Joe Pritchett, both 31, were convicted of mutilation and sentenced to 20 years, the maximum punishment provided in Alabama. A third Klansman, Jesse Mabry, later also was sentenced to 20 years. Witnesses said Pritchett commanded a night-riding detail which set out to prove the worthiness of Floyd, who was to be promoted to captain in the Klan lair. Floyd was described as the Klansman who mutilated Aaron. In sentencing Floyd, Circuit Court Judge Alta L. King said the deed was the "most cowardly, atrocious and diabolical crime ever to come to my attention." (September 4, November 7-8, 1957—C, B)

Prattville, Ala.: A Negro minister reported to the Autauga County sheriff that two shots were fired into his car as he drove from a revival in Prattville. The Rev. J. W. Bonner, pastor of the First Christian Methodist Episcopal church in Montgomery, said neither he nor any of his three passengers were injured. A bullet was recovered from the upholstery of Bonner's automobile. The minister said the shots were fired from a car which "contained six or seven white people" as it passed him on the highway. During the boycott of city buses in Montgomery, the minister was one of 90 Negroes charged with violating Alabama's anti-boycott law. (September 6, 1957—G)

Birmingham, Ala.: The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth was beaten and threatened with death by an angry mob when he attempted to enroll four Negro children at all-white Phillips High School. Police arrested three white men and battled a dozen more until the Negro minister could escape. Two hours later four Negro men drove by the school and tossed rocks at a window. The next day Phillips was evacuated after a bomb threat which proved to be a hoax. The same day crowds gathered around Phillips, Woodlawn High and Graymont elementary school. Police kept order except for a demonstration at Woodlawn, where the crowd threw rocks at passing cars and buses occupied by Negroes. The three schools were the ones to which eight Negro children had asked admittance. The following day, 76 Negro high school pupils were taken from their bus and questioned by police after rock throwing incidents. Later, one was convicted of throwing a soft drink bottle at a car, sentenced to six months in jail and fined $100, the maximum sentence. Six others were turned over to juvenile authorities. Three white men were charged with assault with intent to murder in the beating of the Negro minister. Shuttlesworth is president of the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights, a pro-integration group formed in Birmingham. (September 10, 11, 14, 1957—B)

Evergreen, Ala.: Four Negroes were beaten by a mob in Klan regalia. The victims said the robed men accused them of NAACP membership. Two of those beaten were ministers. They apparently were chance passersby at a spot where Klansmen were gathered. The other two were accused of neglecting their children. (September 1957—A)

Leeds, Ala.: About 50 carloads of parents showed up at Moody Junior High School in St. Clair County after a rumor spread that Negroes would attempt to enroll. When no Negroes appeared, the parents left. The school is at Moody Cross Roads, about five miles north of Leeds. (September 17, 1957—W)

Bessemer, Ala.: A dynamite blast damaged the home of a Negro attorney who was attempting to open two public parks in Bessemer to Negroes. Windows in the home of David Hood, Jr., were shattered and he said some of the glass fell on him as he slept on a living room couch with a loaded rifle nearby. Hood said he had received telephone threats against his life and only two nights earlier he had dismissed three guards who had protected his home for three weeks. The house is circled with floodlights. Hood recently was convicted of violating the state firearms law by carrying a pistol. He said he had a permit which expired and that he had been unable to get it renewed. (November 1, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Four homes purchased by Negroes in the once all-white section of Fountain Heights were dynamited over a period of several months. One of the homes later was damaged by fire which police blamed on arsonists. White property owners in the area have formed an association designed to prevent sales of homes to Negroes. (November 2, 1957, December 7, 1957—B)

Centreville, Ala.: White men horse-whipped a Negro preacher north of here. Bibb County Sheriff Carl A. Griffin said the Rev. T. D. Wesley gave this account: After preaching at a Negro church, he was driving along a country road when men in two or three cars stopped him, handcuffed him and tied him with rope. They drove him up a side road and beat him with a horsewhip, then left him, still bound, in the unlocked truck of his car. He managed to free himself and drive to Centreville, where he was taken to a Selma hospital. Wesley said one of his assailants wore a kind of hat or hood which came over his face. The sheriff said no explanation for the beating had been uncovered. He added that he was informed Wesley was threatened once before and that his assailants vowed to get him if he talked. (November 5, 1957—W)

Fort Deposit, Ala.: A young Negro, Rogers Hamilton, 19, was found shot to death near his farm home. Lowndes County Sheriff Frank Ryals said that according to the youth's mother, two unidentified men "called at the house for the boy and took him away in a truck." She told officers she followed the truck for a short distance and saw her son shot to death, but that she was some distance away and could not identify the men. The sheriff said the mother first claimed the men were white, then changed her story; he said she also thought her son might have been attacked as a result of an argument over a woman. "Reports reaching the Northern press tagged the death last October 22 a lynching," the sheriff said. "However, our investigation has revealed nothing that leads us to believe these reports." (November 13, 1957—G)

Clanton, Ala.: Armed with hand grenades, rifles and tear gas, sheriffs and highway patrolmen from eight counties, accompanied by 150 to 200 white townspeople, converged at a barricaded Negro home. One Negro was killed and two others captured. The crowd moved on the house the day after a deputy sheriff and another white man were wounded by gunfire from ambush. The affair began one Thursday night in November 1957, when a cross was burned near the Negro section in Lomax, a small community three miles from the Central Alabama town of Clanton. Then, according to police, some of the Negroes armed themselves Friday and Saturday night in fear of Klan violence. They were watching the hill in Lomax when Deputy Sheriff Floyd Porter stopped a white motorist to make a routine driver's license check. Suddenly, a shotgun blast ripped over the car and several pellets struck a passenger. (One officer later speculated the deputies might have been mistaken for Klansmen.) Porter gave chase through an open field and as he rounded a small Negro church he was struck by a shotgun blast which almost tore off a hand and punctured his left lung. Authorities brought bloodhounds from the state prison to the church and followed a trail to the home of Willie Dunigan, 43-year-old Negro farmhand. In the subsequent gun battle, Dunigan was killed, his wife wounded seriously and four deputies suffered minor wounds. Later, police reported they were holding at least eight Negroes for questioning. Sheriff Hugh Champion denied there was evidence of any basic racial trouble and said, "It was just an unfortunate incident arising out of a tense atmosphere." (November 18, 21, 1957—B, G, G)

Birmingham, Ala.: A Negro school janitor said he was abducted and beaten Tuesday night by a group of white men who identified themselves as Ku Klux Klansmen. Woodrow Johnson told school authorities three white men ordered him into a car in Bessemer, telling him he was under arrest. He became suspicious when they drove into a woods instead of to jail. The men asked him if he was working for racial integration and also if he was the Rev. (Martin Luther) King. Johnson said he was struck from behind and knocked unconscious and during this time was hit in the eye. The janitor said the men put him back in the car and drove him part way back to Bessemer. He said the first three men were joined by at least five others in the woods. (December 7, 1957—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A group of Negroes beat a 20-year-old white man after a Negro woman was struck by a car he was driving, the highway patrol reported. Six or seven Negro men pulled Jimmy B. Rigsby of Montgomery from his car following the accident, beat him about the head and kicked him in the ribs, the patrol said. The report said the Negro woman apparently got out of a car and was searching for a loose part when she was struck by an outside rearview mirror on the Rigsby car. She suffered a broken arm and abrasions. The attackers had fled when patrolmen arrived. (December 13, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: The home of a Negro family who had moved into a white neighborhood and ignored a warning fiery cross was damaged by a bomb explosion. The house, in East Birmingham, was occupied by the Otis Flowers family. The blast blew out a wall of the house and Arthur Flowers, 12, suffered a cut hand. Detectives said it was the second bombing of a Negro home within a week. (December 31, 1957—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: A newspaper carrier boy underwent a nose operation after being hit by a brick he reported was thrown at him by Negroes. Tim Knight, 14, said he had dropped his papers and was picking them up when he was struck by the brick thrown from a bus carrying Negro children. The incident occurred in a white neighborhood. (March 12, 1958—B)

Dora, Ala.: Walker County deputies sought three to five white men for questioning in the shotgun wounding of a Negro man. Deputy Alvin Phillips said Joe Harris was taken to a doctor in Praco after being wounded in the arm and side. Three other Negroes sitting in a car with Harris in front of a store in downtown Dora gave this account: The four Negro men were talking when a car carrying three to five youths between 18 and 21 years old pulled alongside Harris' car. One of the white youths pulled out a shotgun and fired one blast. The pellets struck Harris. (April 14, 1958—H)

Birmingham, Ala.: Fifty-four sticks of dynamite left in a satchel at Temple Beth-El failed to go off when a fuse went out. The dynamite sticks had enough power to demolish the synagogue. Harry Horwitz, administrative director of the Temple, said he could offer no explanation. (April 28, 1958—B)

Bessemer, Ala.: A dynamite blast shattered windows in a house where seven Negro children were sleeping, but none was injured. Mrs. Dora Mauldin said several windows were broken, boards were knocked off the house and a large hole was found near the foundation. Mrs. Mauldin said she knew of no reason for anyone to throw the dynamite at the house, which is in an all-Negro district. (May 12, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Police investigated the collapse of the broadcasting tower of Negro-operated radio station WEDR. Perry L. Thompson, an announcer at the station, said the guy wire had been cut. Thompson entered the May 6 Democratic primary race for lieutenant governor but later withdrew. When the station went on the air three years earlier, the tower was damaged by vandals. (May 17, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: The church of a Negro leader was saved from destruction when a volunteer guard moved dynamite away from the building moments before it exploded. The Rev. F. L. Shuttlesworth said the bomb would have demolished his Bethel Baptist Church if it had not been for the "heroic deed" of Will Hall. A retired coal miner, Hall is one of six volunteers who had guarded the church each Saturday night since it and the adjoining home of the minister were damaged heavily by bombing in December, 1956. The minister said Hall found a smoking can containing dynamite against a wall of the church. He moved it to the edge of the street 30 feet away about a minute before the blast, which shattered windows and cracked plaster in the church. Following the explosion, police said the only clues were a few pieces of the metal can which held the dynamite and a vague description of a carload of white men seen passing the church shortly before the bomb was found. (June 30, 1958—B)

Birmingham, Ala.: Three white men faced charges of bombing the home of a Negro. The blast shattered the porch and front wall of William Blackwell's house. One child suffered a neck cut but two others escaped injury. Police said Negroes caught and beat two of the white men until the latter were rescued by officers. A third man was picked up later. The police said the suspects apparently had planned to bomb four or five Negro homes but their plan went awry when the first bomb exploded prematurely. (July 18, 1958—Y)

Birmingham, Ala.: A jeering, milling crowd of white men and teenagers chased Negroes from the vicinity of Phillips High School. The crowd, apparently standing guard against any attempts of Negroes to enroll in the white school, grew to more than 150 and remained at the scene for more than four hours until dispersed by police. A white boy suffered a head injury when, he said, he was struck by a rock thrown by a Negro youth. Police arrested three white men who, they said, refused to move on. Negroes had attempted to enroll at Phillips a year ago, but made no attempt this year. The Negroes chased away apparently were only pedestrians passing through the area. (September 3, 1958—B)

Maplesville, Ala.: A Negro pulpwood worker who reportedly was kidnaped by armed white men returned home safely several hours later, Police Chief Aubrey Morrison said. A search by deputies and the highway patrol began after a report that Robert Clint Warks, 24, was kidnaped. Officers said three Negroes reported seeing Warks forced into a car by four white men, three of whom had pistols. Morrison said Warks' family "wasn't talking much" and he didn't know any details of the incident. He said he was told that the Negro was unable to identify any of the white men. About an hour and a half after the alleged kidnaping, the Associated Press in Birmingham received an anonymous telephone call from someone who said, "There has been a Negro kidnaped at Maplesville. I thought you might want to know about it," and then hung up. (Sept. 20, 1958—B)

Montgomery, Ala.: A heavy chain was thrown across power lines serving television station WSFA, knocking it off the air minutes after the Steve Allen Show began. One of Allen's guests was Negro star Harry Belafonte. It was the second time in less than a year that the station had been knocked out. The station was blacked out the previous time just before it was to telecast an interview with the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., Negro leader in Montgomery. In the latest incident, power was restored after an hour. Last August a mob of about 100 white men forced the shutdown of a drive-in theater at nearby Wetumpka when it scheduled a movie in which Belafonte played opposite a white actress. (Nov. 10, 1958—Y)

Birmingham, Ala.: An admitted Ku Klux Klansman was convicted of bombing a Negro home and sentenced to 10 years in prison by a jury which recommended probation. Judge Wallace Gibson said he would formally pass sentence for Hubert Eugene Wilcutt on Jan. 9. Defense Attorney George Rogers told the jury if it returned a guilty verdict, "you'll see Negroes spreading out like a cancer into every white community." (Dec. 5, 1958—B)

ARKANSAS

Hoxie, Ark.: This is one of the towns in the South which operates a summer session for its pupils, then recesses for a period in the fall for cotton picking. In July 1955, 25 Negroes for the first time went to grammar and high school with 1,000 white students. All went fairly well for about three weeks until protests started rolling in. School officials said the protest campaign began with the arrival of letters and literature from Citizens Council groups in Mississippi and other Southern states. Soon, the town was ripped apart emotionally. Bitter arguments, two-way economic boycotts, a boycott of the school and petitions that the school board restore segregation followed. The turmoil led the school board to end the summer session two weeks early to let the situation cool off. Schools were reopened in October on the same integrated basis and with officials armed with a temporary restraining order to keep pro-segregation forces from interfering with the operation of schools. The reopening was without incident but with a high rate of absenteeism. In January 1956, U. S. District Judge Albert L. Reeves in Jonesboro ruled for the Hoxie school board, holding that the U. S. Supreme Court had in effect nullified Arkansas segregation laws. (Sept., Nov. 1955; Jan. 1956—A)

Little Rock, Ark.: Six white teen-agers were attacked by a group of 15 to 20 Negro youths, police said. The white boys suffered cuts and bruises. Officers said the white boys reported they were walking home when the Negroes attacked, armed with clubs and bricks. Police believed they were the same gang who, about two hours earlier, attacked two other white youths a block away. About 12 Negroes were picked up by police but the victims couldn't identify them as the assailants. (November 1, 1957—F)

North Little Rock, Ark.: Thirty white pupils bombarded Negroes with snowballs near North Little Rock High School, causing an eye injury to a 58-year-old woman. An elderly Negro man fled, calling for help. Police broke up the fracas but made no arrest. One white boy was suspended from classes for four days. North Little Rock's school board planned to start gradual integration this fall but postponed the program indefinitely after white pupils blocked the attempted entry of several Negroes. (November 23, 1957—E)

Little Rock, Ark.: Fire destroyed the gymnasium of the Arkansas Baptist College for Negroes and an anonymous telephone caller boasted to newsmen that segregationists set the fire. A nearby house, ignited by the wind-whipped fire, burned to the ground and three other houses were damaged. The Rev. O. A. Rogers, Jr., president of the college, estimated damage at $80,000. He said he couldn't believe segregationists had set the fire, for "everyone in Little Rock is sympathetic towards our school." (February 8, 1958—B)

Little Rock, Ark.: Mrs. L. C. Bates, state president of the NAACP, reported an attempt to bomb her home on New Year's Eve. The bomb, a crude device in a bottle, went off in the driveway and caused no damage. Two weeks later someone threw a rock through a bedroom window. (February 1958—A)

Little Rock, Ark.: In September 1957, the city school board began putting into effect its gradual desegregation program by admitting nine Negro students to Central High School. The result has been told by the press around the world. In brief, on the opening day of School, September 4, the nine Negroes were prevented from entering by state guardsmen under orders of Gov. Orval Faubus, who said he was acting to maintain order. Later that month a federal court directed that the nine children must be admitted. On September 23, a mob of 1,000 whites cursed, fought and wept outside the school as the nine entered a side door of Central High. By noon, the Negroes were removed for their safety. The next day President Eisenhower ordered the guardsmen federalized and sent a thousand men of the 101st Airborne Division from Camp Campbell, Ky., to Little Rock to rout the mob, and guard the Negro pupils. Later, the federal troops were withdrawn and only a token number of federalized National Guardsmen remained until the end of the school year. The situation remained uneasy. A hard core of white students has operated a systematic campaign of intimidation and coercion aimed both at the Negroes and the white students and teachers who treated the Negro pupils in a friendly manner or favored compliance with the court ruling. The Negro pupils were spat upon, tripped, called names, pushed downstairs, shoved and kicked. One Negro girl retaliated and was expelled permanently. A white girl was expelled for having attacked a woman vice principal physically and circulating inflammatory cards. She denounced police and the school over a statewide television hook-up paid for by adult segregationists. She was later readmitted to Central High. In the city itself there have been numerous instances of intimidation and some businesses have suffered. Central High has been plagued by a rash of bomb scares. Harry Ashmore, executive editor of The Arkansas Gazette, which has advocated law and moderation, summed up the current situation in early 1958: "This is an intolerable situation . . . The local people are cowed. They have no support from the city government, strong opposition from the state government, and no support from the Federal Government. What can the decent, law-abiding people do . . .? Today, the small, militant, bitter minority is in complete control . . ."

As the 1957-58 school year ended, the first Negro, Ernest Green, was graduated from Central High. There was at least one racial incident at the baccalaureate, which was patrolled by 120 armed National Guardsmen and 100 policemen. Outside the stadium where the ceremony was held a white youth spat at one of the Negro visitors. He was arrested by city police, charged with disturbing the peace and released on $200 bond. An hour before the baccalaureate, seven Negroes were arrested in a car a few blocks from the stadium. All were booked for disturbing the peace and two were charged with carrying concealed weapons —a gun and a knife. All were released under bond. A reporter at the scene said he heard one of the Negroes say that they were on the way to the stadium to protect young Green. (March 23, 1958—K; May 26, 1958—B) (The school was closed in the fall of 1958.)

Little Rock, Ark.: Four teen-age white boys charged that 15 or 16 Negroes jumped them near a junior high school and beat them with cleated football shoes. Billy Gene Smith, 15, one of the white boys, collapsed into the arms of a reporter. "They clubbed, stomped and beat him," said Jimmy Overton, 15. Police did not immediately identify the other two white boys. The principal of Dunbar Junior High, which the Negroes attend, said he had gotten "a somewhat different version" of the incident than that related by the two white boys but would not release it. (Sept. 25, 1958—Y)

FLORIDA

Suwannee County, Fla.: A Negro farmer was kidnaped and flogged and an expectant Negro mother beaten. In an editorial, the Tampa Morning Tribune, attributed lack of action by law enforcement agencies to resentment over the Supreme Court school ruling. (June 6, 1955)

Umatilla, Fla.: A union official charged that four hooded men fired shotgun blasts into a labor rally and wounded 12 Negroes in this former KKK stronghold. Gov. LeRoy Collins called on Sheriff Willis V. McCall for an investigation of the shots fired through the windows of a Masonic Lodge where 26 Negroes were listening to a labor organizer. A deputy reported earlier that McCall had left on a three-day cruise down the Kissimmee River and told his aides not to disclose the violence to reporters until he returned. (October 22, 1955—C)

Sorrento, Fla.: The father of children whose right to attend white schools was upheld by a circuit judge reported several men tried to burn his rural home with gasoline bombs. The family put out the fire. Lake County Sheriff Willis McCall, who contends the children have Negro blood, commented, "Anybody could have done this. The people are mad about the court's ruling." The father denied that the children were part Negro and said he and his wife were of Cherokee Indian and Irish descent. The children were admitted to a private church-supported white school. (November 12, 1955—B)

Bushnell, Fla.: Seven white men were acquitted of flogging Jesse Woods, a Negro, when the State's case collapsed and the chief prosecutor complained his main witnesses changed their stories. Circuit Judge T. G. Futch ordered the acquittal after State Attorney A. P. Buie asked that four of the seven be freed. The judge said the state failed to prove the men were guilty of aggravated assault and false imprisonment of Woods, who was taken from the nearby Wildwood city jail and flogged November 28. The Negro had been arrested on city charges and police said he remarked, "Hello there, baby," to a white school teacher. The state's case broke down when Buie said soon after court opened, "I have sworn testimony from these witnesses sufficient to make a strong prima facie case against every defendant we have charged. These same witnesses who named these defendants have changed their stories. I do not know why." (December 12, 1956—B)

Tallahassee, Fla.: For the second time, rocks have smashed windows in the home of the Rev. C. K. Steele, leader of this city's bus integration movement. Earlier, a cross was burned on the lawn. (January 14, 1957—B)

Tallahassee, Fla.: A shotgun was fired into a Negro grocery store, during the period of unrest caused by bus integration troubles. (January 1957—B)

Dade City, Fla.: A white player for the Tampa baseball team was wounded slightly by birdshot fired at an automobile carrying two other white players and three Negro members of the Florida State League team. The shooting occurred soon after the car was moved from in front of a drive-in at the request of an employee because it carried both white and Negro men. (August 9, 1957—B)

Pompano Beach, Fla.: A rumor that Negro students would attempt to enroll in the high school caused police to throw a barricade around the building. The tense situation eased shortly but the Fort Lauderdale Daily News reported both white and Negro students were carrying concealed weapons. All students driving or riding to school were required to leave their cars and walk the final block through police lines. When no Negro students showed up at the white school, the barricades were removed but police continued to patrol the area. Police Chief James Boggs said his men were not ordered to keep Negro children from the school but to "keep the peace." Later, police said they were investigating reports that a "prominent white man" was encouraging Negroes to enroll in the white school and that if the report could be substantiated the individual would be charged with inciting to riot. (October 1957—A)

Crestwood, Fla.: A crowd of 100 gathered at the Crestwood High School near Eglin Air Force Base when Sheriff Ray Wilson received a call asking protection for Negro children who wanted to enroll. When no Negroes appeared, Wilson said the call apparently was a hoax. He added he would consider any attempts to desegregate the schools as "inciting a riot." (November 1957—A)

Miami, Fla.: The school-recreation annex of Temple Beth El was dynamited, causing at least $30,000 in damage. The incident was the first of its kind in Miami since a wave of terrorism in 1951 when several synagogues and Negro homes were bombed and dynamite was found at a Catholic church. (March 17, 1958—B)

Jacksonville, Fla.: Dynamite explosions damaged a Negro school and synagogue. The blasts at the two buildings, about four miles apart, occurred within a half hour. Police estimated damage to the James Weldon Johnson High School at $20,000. The explosion blew in windows and doors of the Jewish center and shattered windows of homes two blocks away. The Florida Times Union received a call from a man who said he was a member of the "Confederate Underground" and that there would be three bombings. He said, "We want no more Jews in Florida except at Miami Beach." Rabbi Sydney M. Leftkowitz reported a call from a man who said, "This is the Confederate Center of Information. We have just blown up your Jewish center. All integration in the South must stop." (April 28, 1958—B)

Jacksonville, Fla.: A dispute over serving a Negro in a white restaurant led to the shooting of the Negro, Herbert Torrence, 26, who was critically wounded. He was charged with assault with intent to murder. No charge was filed against the proprietor of the restaurant, Roy R. Guthrie. Police said Guthrie told them he refused Torrence's demands to be served and the Negro left, but later returned and started to pull a pistol from his pocket. Guthrie said he leveled a rifle at Torrence, who went outside and fired a shot through the window. Guthrie told police he then began firing the rifle at Torrence through the windows. (May 31, 1958—B)

GEORGIA

Atlanta, Ga.: A crowd of Georgia Tech students demonstrated before the Executive Mansion in protest against Gov. Marvin Griffin's attempt to prevent the Sugar Bowl football game between Tech and the University of Pittsburgh, because the latter had a Negro player. Another crowd of about 2,500 students marched on the State Capitol and caused considerable damage. Three days later, on December 7, the State Board of Regents decided to allow Tech to play in the Sugar Bowl game in New Orleans. (January 1956—A)

Atlanta, Ga.: An explosion damaged a home into which a Negro family moved a few days earlier and caused minor damage to a neighboring home owned by a white man. The blast shattered a corner foundation, tore a hole in the living room and a piano toppled into the cavity. Five Negroes in the house escaped injury. (March 25, 1956—B)

Atlanta, Ga.: An explosion heavily damaged a Negro-occupied house in a predominantly white neighborhood and broke six windows in a white-occupied house next door. The Negro couple, who had rented the house recently, escaped injury. The blast ripped off portions of the front porch and the walls of two front rooms shortly before dawn. About 45 minutes after the explosion, the woman occupying the damaged house next door received an anonymous call telling her, "You will be next." (July 2, 1956—B)

Rossville, Ga.: A one-room frame shack, center of a rural racial dispute, was in ashes, destroyed by an unexplained fire. The owner of the place, who had moved to the farm a week earlier, planned to let a Negro man live in the shack while working as a laborer. Then a man drove into his yard and told the Negro he had better not be working at the place the next day. The following night a crowd of about 300 converged on the farm; finally, after a 40-minute talk, the white owner agreed he would not allow the Negro to live on the farm. The crowd dispersed. Two hours later the shack was in flames. The Walker County sheriff's office said no investigation was being made, that the incident had not been reported to him. (January 9, 1957—B)

Americus, Ga.: Shortly after the Supreme Court's school decision, troubles, heretofore minor, began in earnest for Koinonia Farm, an interracial religious cooperative founded in Sumter County by a group of Southerners in 1942. Merchants in nearby communities refused to buy the farm's products or sell it anything (see reprisals). But acts of violence began after the Rev. Clarence Jordan, a Baptist minister, co-founder of Koinonia and a resident of the farm, announced in April 1956, he was willing to sign an entrance application to a state white college for two Negroes. Later in the month, pistol shots were fired at the roadside produce stand. On July 23, the farm's roadside market was dynamited. causing an estimated $3,000 in damage. The following November, several rounds of buckshot were fired into the market, ruining a refrigerator case valued at $300. In December, shots were fired into the community's electric gas pumps, destroying the mechanism; a sign was riddled by bullets from a speeding car on New Year's day. On January 14, a charge of dynamite destroyed the entire market, valued at $7,000. On January 17, an anonymous phone call advised the community to be on watch that night; about 2 a. m. flames leaped from a vacant house on the farm. Other mysterious fires have occurred from time to time in the buildings of neighbors who have befriended members of the community, one loss amounting to $30,000. On January 30, a submachine gun was fired from an auto into the side of one of the community's residences, the bullets missing people there by inches. At 9:15 p.m. on February 1, a dozen shotgun blasts from speeding cars peppered a volley ball court where children were playing under lights. One shot went through a residence window, barely missing an 11-year-old child. Two weeks later two flood lights at the entrance to the farm were shot out. On March 5, 1957, an unarmed Koinonia guard was fired on, the light he was carrying was shattered and two bullets struck a car by which he was standing. Meanwhile, many crosses were burned. In October 1957, shots again were fired from a speeding car into the farm area. (Christian Science Monitor, March 1, 1957, and other sources.)

Atlanta, Ga.: A 51-year-old white man was sentenced to six months in jail after a court was told he threw a rock, and paid to have another one thrown, into the home of a Negro who moved into a white neighborhood. (June 6, 1957—E)

Ringgold, Ga.: Police said an attempt to dynamite the tenant home of a Negro World War I veteran failed when an 18-inch fuse burned out before reaching the explosive. Seven sticks of dynamite were found under the front porch. The Negro, Phillip Huggins, said his farm home was visited two months earlier by a group of robed men who kicked him and ordered him to leave the county. (November 29, 1957—B)

Ringgold, Ga.: A Negro tenant, Jim Reynolds, was told to leave the county by a group of robed men August 16, the same night another Negro was threatened. (See Above) Police said he refused. On August 18 his home burned. (November 29, 1957—B)

Dawson, Ga.: Fear and shock spread through the Negro community of this south Georgia town in the spring of 1958. A Negro had been beaten in his front yard by police. Hauled into court, he died five days later of a crushed skull. Police had shot to death another Negro and shot and wounded a third. A Negro mother was locked in jail when she went to visit her son there. During the same period, about 25 Negroes, many of them teachers, tried to register to vote; all failed. The episodes began Sunday, April 20. A 31-year-old Negro, James Brazier, found police arresting his father, Odell Brazier, on a charge of drunken driving. He asked the officers to stop beating his father. Police Chief Howard L. Lee said the son tried to interfere with the arrest of his father, who was resisting. The younger Brazier drove his father's car to their home and Odell Brazier was taken to jail. Later, police went to young Brazier's home to arrest him for interfering with his father's arrest. A Negro witness said two policemen grabbed James, dragged him to their car and kicked him twice. His 10-year-old son ran up crying, "Don't you hit my Daddy like that," and one of the officers hit the boy, according to the witness. James was struck on the head with a gun and slapped across the face. The police chief said he "put up a scuffle and they had to hit him on the head with a blackjack." The next morning the elder Brazier was led to the weekly Mayor's Court but the son was senseless, unable to speak or support himself. The mayor told the family of the injured man to bring him back the next week. Meanwhile, he was rushed to the Columbus, Ga., Medical Center for immediate brain surgery. He was operated upon but never regained consciousness. He died April 25. His death certificate stated he died of a skull fracture caused by a blow from a blunt instrument.

The day of his funeral Odell Frazier was arrested again and forfeited $25 collateral for running a stop sign.

The week-end of May 23, Tobe Lattimer, 48, a Negro electrician and plumber, was shot by Police Officer W. B. Cherry, who was identified by witnesses as a participant in the Brazier beating. Cherry reported that he answered a call that Latimer was creating a disturbance in a juke joint, that he found Latimer drunk and disorderly and shot him only after he grabbed the officer and refused to let go. Negro witnesses claimed that Cherry warned Latimer not to break a whisky bottle he was carrying but that Latimer did break it and was shot. Latimer was hospitalized, forfeited $25 collateral and faced a charge of possessing moonshine whisky.

Two nights later, Cherry shot Willie Countryman, 32, Negro driver for a bottling company. The shooting occurred in Countryman's back yard. He died on the way to a hospital. The police chief said Cherry and a fellow officer, making a routine cruiser check of the Negro area, heard "whooping and hollering." Cherry walked toward Countryman's back porch and when the Negro jumped at him with a switch-blade knife felled him with one shot, the police chief said. Negroes insisted they had heard no disturbance as reported by the police, that the only gathering in the area was at another house where women were baking cookies for a church affair.

The next morning police arrested Billy Flagg, 21, as he played ball with other Negroes. The officers said he had made believe he had a gun, and aimed the imaginary weapon at a police patrol car. When the youth's mother came to see him in jail, she was locked up also, Police Chief Lee explained, because "she was carrying on about her boy being locked up. We put her in there to cool her down." Negroes said Billy Flagg was roughed up when arrested; Lee denied this. Subsequently, Cherry was cleared by a coroner's jury of the Countryman death. Negroes said the violence during the several weeks' period was only a climax to rough treatment in recent years. (June 8, 1958—S)

Columbus, Ga.: A Negro's frame house on the fringe of a white neighborhood was blasted but none of the five occupants was hurt. Detective Capt. C. R. Adair said an explosive, probably dynamite, was thrown against the house, doing considerable damage. All windows in the house and numerous windows in nearby dwellings were shattered. Mrs. Essie Ellison said she bought the house from a white owner and moved in a month ago. Earlier the same night an anonymous telephone caller profanely told newsmen of plans to bomb the Masonic Temple where the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., Negro minister, later addressed a Masonic fellowship rally. No disturbance occurred, however. (July 2, 1958—B)

Atlanta, Ga.: A dynamite blast ripped a gaping hole in a wall of a Jewish temple, causing damage estimated at $200,000. The tremendous explosion shook houses a half-mile away. The blast wrecked a church office and the study of the rabbi, severely damaged an auditorium used for religious education and social activities, and left the main sanctuary littered with stained glass. About the time of the blast United Press International received an anonymous phone call from a person who identified himself as "general Gordon of the Confederate Underground." The caller informed the UPI that "we have just blown up a temple" and said other such incidents would follow. (Oct. 12, 1958—S)

LOUISIANA

Erath, La.: Bishop Jules B. Jeanmard excommunicated three Roman Catholics for beating a woman teacher who instructed Negro and white children in the same catechism classroom. The Bishop said the decree was directed at three women who attacked the lay teacher as she was on her way to recite a rosary. (November 27, 1955—B)

New Orleans, La.: Students at the integrated New Orleans branch of Louisiana State University faced expulsion for unruly conduct. Dean Homer Hitt issued a statement after two successive days of incidents involving Negroes attending the school under a United court order. The statement said LSU officials "expect a halt to the congregating and milling about, shouting and name calling and all acts of physical violence." A Negro student was expelled for carrying a knife on the campus. The dean said all students, white or Negro, would be expelled immediately if weapons of any kind were found on them. (Sept. 18-20, 1958—B, Y)

New Orleans, La.: A Negro boy and girl were arrested in connection with a fight over seating on a bus in which a white man was beaten and stabbed. Charles Roof, Jr., 22, was given hospital treatment for multiple stab wounds and lacerations. He said he was seated in the front of the bus of the newly desegregated New Orleans transit system and arose to offer his seat to a woman passenger. Then a Negro man approached, they had words, according to Roof, who said he then was attacked by some Negro men and women. Roy Gonzales, 18, who was booked along with a 17-year-old girl companion, said they were enroute home from a football game and when he started for one of the seats, Roof pushed him and a fight began. He said he did not know how Roof was stabbed. One witness said she saw a Negro woman stab Roof. (Oct. 6, 1958—B)

MISSISSIPPI

Brookhaven, Miss.: Lamar Smith, Negro reported to have urged other Negroes to cast absentee ballots in a gubernatorial race, was shot to death on the courthouse lawn. Three white men were charged with his murder but a grand jury failed to indict them. (August 17, 1955—B)

Jackson, Miss.: The home of Dr. A. A. McCoy, NAACP leader, was fired upon. (September 15, 1955—J)

Sumner, Miss.: A case that captured headlines across the nation and stirred racial antagonisms North and South ended with the acquittal of two white half-brothers in the slaying of a Negro boy, Emmett Till. The defendants, Roy Bryant and John W. Milam, were accused of the August 28, 1955, kidnap-slaying of the vacationing 14-year-old from Chicago, in what became known as the "wolf whistle" case. Till was kidnaped from his uncle's cottonfield shack. Four days earlier, Mrs. Roy Bryant said, a Negro had tried to date her, uttered an obscenity and wolf-whistled at her. In pre-trial statements, authorities offered the incident at the Bryant store in the hamlet of Money as a motive for the murder. The defense at the trial cast doubt that a body taken from the Tallahatchie River three days after the abduction was Till's. The jury foreman said the issue of the body's identification was the chief motive behind its verdict. Bryant and Milam maintained they released young Till after his abduction because he was not the boy who did the whistling. In November, a Leflore County grand jury declined to indict the two men on charges of kidnaping Till. (September 23, 1955, November 9, 1955—B)

Tchula, Miss.: Two men accused of favoring "racial mingling" heard a suggestion from their neighbors that they move from this little Mississippi town. About 700 white men and women packed into a high school gym, adopted a resolution expressing the community's "opinion" that Dr. D. R. Minter, a physician who devoted much of his time to helping low income groups, and A. E. Cox, co-operative farm manager, should leave the area. "We don't want a Sumner here," said State Rep.-elect J. T. Love in a reference to the Emmett Till murder trial 55 miles from here. The meeting was called to discuss reports that Minter and Cox favored racial "mingling" and that Negroes and whites went swimming together at Providence Farms, Cox's 2,700-acre plantation near here. Minter said there had been "no mixed swimming to my knowledge" at the co-operative, where four white families and two Negro families lived. He added that neither he nor Cox had any immediate plans for leaving the cooperative. (Since that time, however, both men have left.) (September 29, 1955—C)

Belzoni, Miss.: Gus Courts, Negro grocer, was shot and seriously wounded by a gunman who fired through his store window from a car. Courts said the violence came after an unsuccessful drive by the Citizens Council in Belzoni to force him out of business by economic pressure. Courts added that this was because of his efforts to persuade Negroes to register to vote in this delta town of 4,000. "We haven't even mentioned integration," Courts said. He was president of the local NAACP chapter at the time of the shooting. The Rev. George Washington Lee was killed the previous year after he refused a request to remove his name from the voters registration list, newspapers reported. (November 28, 1955—B)

Sumner, Miss.: Elmore O. Kimbell, white cotton gin operator, was acquitted of murder charges in the shotgun

slaying of a Negro service station attendant. Kimbell swore he shot Clinton Melton in self-defense at a Glendora filling station in December 1955, after three shots were fired at him. Three witnesses testified that Kimbell had threatened Melton, that he drove away and returned in 15 minutes with his shotgun and killed the Negro. Lee McGarrh, Melton's white employer, swore the Negro had no gun. He told investigators that after Melton sold gasoline to Kimbell the white man argued about getting a full tank when he ordered only a few gallons. McGarrh said Kimbell complained the Negro "acted smart" and then drove away with a promise to return. McGarrh said he warned Melton to flee and that he was in his car about to do so when Kimbell returned and opened fire. (March 13, 1956—B, C)

Clarksdale, Miss.: A Negro organization charged Clarksdale police with "physical and verbal abuse" of Negroes in enforcement of a curfew and an investigation of recent criminal assaults on white women. The mayor denied the charge and said policemen had been instructed to "defend themselves" but were told not to beat anyone. Negro spokesmen said members of their race had been subjected to both "physical and verbal abuse" in connection with investigations of a series of rape cases. A Negro bricklayer charged police beat him into unconsciousness; he said the alleged beating occurred in connection with the curfew ordered the previous month after three rape cases were reported in the city. (October 26, 1956—X)

Greenwood, Miss.: Police reported a rifle shot was fired into the home of a Greenwood woman who is a member of the Mississippi Council on Human Relations. Mrs. Elizabeth Wheatley and her husband, D. S. Wheatley, Sr., cotton buyer, were at home but neither was injured. (March 13, 1957—B)

Water Valley, Miss.: An all-white jury acquitted Sheriff J. G. Treloar of a manslaughter charge in the beating of a Negro prisoner. Four of Treloar's prisoners testified that the 36-year-old sheriff beat Negro deliveryman Woodrow Wilson Daniels, 37, with a heavy blackjack the night of June 21. Daniels had been jailed on a charge of reckless driving and possession of whisky. Daniels' white employer, grocer Maury Fly, said he went to the jail shortly after his employee of 15 years was arrested in order to bail him out but the sheriff said, "you can't get him out now." Fly said he stood outside the jail and heard noises that sounded like blows. Daniels was released the following day, bloody and bruised, and died in a Memphis hospital July 1. A Memphis physician, Dr. Walter Scott Gilmer, testified that Daniels died of an externally caused brain injury. The sheriff denied striking Daniels on the head and said he hit him elsewhere in defense of himself and other prisoners. (Aug. 6-8, 1958—B, Y)

NORTH CAROLINA

Old Fort, N. C.: Albert Joyner, who had attempted to enroll five Negro children in a local elementary school, was knocked into the city fountain by a white railroad employee. (September 6, 1955—O)

Charlotte, N.C.: Dorothy Counts, the first and only Negro student to enroll in white Harding High School, was greeted with insults, tossed pebbles and was spat upon as she registered. The next week the 15-year-old girl again was spat upon and hit by objects thrown by fellow students. An object hurled from a crowd of white youths broke the rear window of her brother's car as he picked her up at the school at noon. By the end of the month, after more taunts and shoves, she left for Philadelphia to attend a private, interracial school. She was one of four Negro pupils assigned to four different white schools in Charlotte for the first time in the fall of 1957. (September 11—B; September 30, 1957—C)

Greensboro, N. C.: For the third time, eggs were tossed at Josephine Boyd, only Negro in Greensboro High School. She also had been the victim of taunts and obscene remarks since entering the school. She was one of six Negroes admitted to Greensboro white schools this year. (September 17, 1957—B)

Greensboro, N. C.: An explosion at the home of a Negro man whose two children attend a previously all-white school was reported. Police first said it was dynamite, then that it could have been a large firecracker. Mud and small rocks were thrown on the porch and a small piece of siding was knocked off the house; the noise was heard five blocks away. (October 2, 1957—B)

Charlotte, N. C.: Police Chief Frank N. Littlejohn disclosed that an unsuccessful attempt was made to dynamite a synagogue and that after 10 days of intensive investigation the KKK "is definitely suspected." Littlejohn said six unexploded sticks of dynamite with a partially burned 14-foot fuse were found outside the Temple Beth-El November 12. (November 22, 1957—C)

Maxton, N. C.: A Klan meeting with robed Klansmen and spectators scrambling for safety broke up as hooting Indians emptied shotguns and rifles into the meeting field. The Indians were outraged by reports the Klan intended to warn them against "race mixing" and by the burning of two crosses near Indian homes the previous week. Four men were wounded, some seriously. There are about 40,000 whites, 30,000 Lumbee Indians and 25,000 Negroes in Robeson County. One Klansman was convicted of public drunkenness and carrying a concealed weapon. He was given a suspended sentence upon payment of a fine and court costs. Klan Wizard James Cole of Marion, S. C., leader of the Klan meeting, was sentenced to serve 18 to 24 months in prison for inciting a riot. (January 20, 23, March 14, 1958—B, C)

Gastonia, N. C.: Thirty sticks of dynamite were found at a synagogue. A fuse had burned to within 1½ inches of the dynamite, then gone out. (February 9, 1958—B)

Greensboro, N. C.: A five-pound rock was thrown through the window of City School Supt. Ben L. Smith's home. It was one of a series of incidents since Greensboro admitted six Negroes to white schools in the city last year. (February 1958—A)

Greensboro, N. C.: A Klansman, C. A. Webster, was sentenced to six months for tossing a bottle through the window of a Negro lawyer's office. A 17-year-old youth was given a 90-day suspended sentence after admitting he drove a car from which Webster threw the bottle into the office of J. Kenneth Lee, the attorney. (Oct. 9, 1958—Y)

Charlotte, N. C.: Three members of a KKK klavern, which was broken up by a police undercover agent, began serving prison sentences for plotting to plant a homemade bomb at a Negro school February 15. Two others were acquitted. (March 21, 1958—B)

Monroe, N. C.: Reports of the stoning of the car of a Negro leader led to the cancellation of his automobile insurance. The Nationwide Insurance Co. dropped machinist Robert F. Williams' collision and comprehensive coverage. The firm first cancelled all of the auto insurance of Williams, president of the Union County chapter of the NAACP, but reinstated his liability and medical payments coverage, thus allowing Williams to retain his auto license. "The affiliation of Mr. Williams with the NAACP, as such, was not a factor," said Elton Parker, personnel and public relations manager of the insurance company's Raleigh office. Parker said that Nationwide's agent in Monroe reported "that rocks had been thrown at his (Williams') car several times by people driving by his home at night. These incidents just forced us to get off the comprehensive and collision portions of his policy." Williams commented, "These things have happened. Police . . . try to make it appear that I have been exaggerating and trying to stir up trouble. If police tell me I am in no danger and they can't confirm these events, why then has my insurance been cancelled?" (May 12, 1958—B)

Wadesboro, N. C.: Police and school officials suspected arson in the burning of two rural schoolhouses, formerly used for white pupils, but scheduled for occupancy by Negroes. "Racial reasons appear to be the most likely cause of arson," said J. O. Bowman, superintendent of county schools. An eight-room classroom building valued at $150,000 was destroyed by fire, one night after a four-classroom building and auditorium valued at $90,000 burned. Both schools were at Deep Creek, about 10 miles south of Wadesboro. Sheriff H. E. Rayfield said the county school board had heard rumors of discontent among both the white and the Negro population about the racial redesignation of the schools. He said the whites objected to losing their community schools and the Negroes feared there might be white resentment of Negro use of the school. Dwindling numbers of white pupils prompted the redesignation. (Aug. 26, 1958—B)

SOUTH CAROLINA

Manning, S. C.: Billy Fleming, 33-year-old Negro leader, reported that his home was hit with buckshot for the second time in two months. He believed the attacks stemmed from his NAACP activities. (November 30, 1955—B)

Lake City, S. C.: The Rev. J. A. DeLaine, one of the Negroes who helped organize the original Clarendon County school suit, reported to police that his home had been the target three times of rocks and empty bottles. He also turned over a letter warning him to get out of the state. Later, DeLaine admitted firing upon a passing car, maintaining he did so to "mark the car" after his house was fired upon from the vehicle. Four white occupants insisted they had not discharged any shots and were fired upon without cause. The minister was charged with assault and battery and three days later a bench warrant was issued for his arrest. However, he had fled to New York, where the governor refused to permit extradition. (November 1955—A)

Columbia, S. C.: A dozen buckshot pellets were fired into the home of James M. Hinton, state NAACP president. Mrs. Hinton, who was home alone, reported she was not injured. The shots smashed a mirror and pierced potted plants, walls and the stairway. The Hintons said that in previous months they had received "a lot of threats over the phone." (January 20, 1956—V)

Lake City, S. C.: Walter Scott, head of the NAACP chapter here, said two shotgun blasts ripped into his home. Two weeks earlier Scott reported a similar incident to police. (March 4, 1956—B)

Camden, S. C.: Guy Hutchins, director of the Camden High School band, was beaten by hooded men. Hutchins said he was surrounded by four or five men while he was changing a tire, that they pulled a sack over his head, drove him around and then tied him to a tree while each hit him a half dozen times with a board. He said he felt a pistol at his neck several times and that one of the men had a shotgun. Hutchins was hospitalized with severe bruises. He said the attackers falsely accused him of making a pro-integration speech to a civic club. Subsequently, the Kershaw County grand jury refused to indict six men in the flogging. The grand jury first heard Judge G. Duncan Bellinger spend more than an hour denouncing the U. S. Supreme Court for "asinine" decisions and the outlawing of school segregation. He said the segregation decisions were "devoid of intellectual and judicial integrity. (December 28, 1956—B; June 24, 1957—C)

Camden, S. C.: A 65-year-old-man was shot in the arm and chest by four or five hooded men who criticized his personal conduct. The attack preceded by about a week the beating of a band director (see above). Officers and the hospital where the shooting victim was treated would not identify him. (December 28, 1956—B)

Greenville, S. C.: A free-lance photographer was roughed up and another cameraman had his film confiscated by the Klan at a rally near Greenville. Several Klansmen grabbed Joe F. Jordan, who was representing the United Press and a Spartanburg television station, and threatened to drag him off the field where the rally was being held. Jordan had snapped a picture of robed, but unmasked, Klansmen confiscating film exposed by James P. Burns of Greenville station WFBC-TV. Jordan later demanded and received an apology from one of the Klan leaders. (August 31, 1957—C)

Rock Hill, S. C.: Police confirmed reports of a clash between about 30 Negroes and a smaller group of whites at the York County Fairgrounds. (November 1957—A)

Gaffney, S. C.: Five men identified by police as members of the KKK were charged with bombing the home of a white physician whose wife wrote an article urging a "moderate" approach to the racial integration crisis. (Only two of the five were brought to trial and they were acquitted.) No one was injured in the blast at the home of Dr. and Mrs. James H. Sanders November 16. Mrs. Sanders, a native of Charleston, contributed to a publication entitled "South Carolinians Speak—a Moderate Approach to Race Relations." The Rev. John B. Morris of Dillon, S. C., one of the publishers, reported that former Rep. James Richards (D-S.C.) praised the publication as a "real contribution" to freedom of expression. (December 7, 1957—B)

Cowpens, S. C.: A blast damaged the dwelling of a Negro tenant farmer. The white owner of the house could give no reason. The Spartanburg Herald-Journal announced it would pay $2,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of person or persons responsible. The following day, the Gaffney City Council added $500 reward for information about the blast at neighboring Cowpens. Early the next morning a cross was burned near the home of one councilman. (December 1957—A)

Anderson, S. C.: Police reported they have had to break up rock fights and other violent actions between youthful groups because of Negro-white friction in the community. (December 1957—A)

Spartanburg, S. C.: The City Council passed an ordinance in November requiring municipal approval for outdoor public meetings. The action came after fights broke out between whites and Negroes during a street "rock and roll" party sponsored by a local radio station. (December 1957—A)

Greenville, S. C.: Four admitted members of the Ku Klux Klan were convicted for conspiring to flog a Negro, Claud Cruell, at his home July 21, 1957. Two also were convicted for flogging the 58-year-old Negro landowner and Baptist deacon because of his association with a white family who rented a house on his 100-acre farm. Cruell and his wife were caring for the seven children of the white tenant when a group of white men stormed into the house. They wrapped a chain around Cruell's arm, dragged him to another room and beat him. The white tenant had left the children with the Negro couple while he visited his wife in a hospital. The leader of the attackers was given six years, another three years and the other two a year each. Two others were acquitted and charges were dismissed against five. (January 23, 1958—B; February 3, 1958—G)

TENNESSEE

Chattanooga, Tenn.: At a band concert, white teenagers in a balcony started throwing pop bottles and chairs on Negroes below. Before the melee was over, six persons were in the hospital and 10 persons had been taken to jail. (January 31, 1956—Washington Daily News)

Trenton, Tenn.: About 300 Negroes gathered in the streets late at night and milled about for nearly four hours. Alarmed police called in all off-duty officers and sheriff's deputies and alerted the Tennessee State Patrol. The crowd gathered after hearing police had shot a Negro in the leg while trying to arrest him for drunkenness. Officers said the man fled from three policemen who had been summoned to a Negro cafe and that in the ensuing struggle when they overtook him he was shot in the leg. (July 22, 1956—B)

Knoxville, Tenn.: Three white men were convicted of firing a shotgun into a Negro home in June during a racial disturbance which died down after all available city policemen were called out. They were accused of firing a steel ball from a shotgun into the home after two Negro boys scooped up a stray baseball from a white game and ran to the home with it. Negro and white games had been in progress on adjoining diamonds. After the shotgun blast, about 2,000 whites and Negroes, armed with clubs, sticks and other weapons converged in the area. No one was injured. (October 5, 1956—B)

Clinton, Tenn.: Following a federal court order, 12 Negro pupils entered Clinton High School with about 800 white students in August 1956. All the children thus were thrown into a community crisis that probably brought more violence and mob action than any other crisis in the post-school decision South. The Saturday before school opened, John Kasper, who identified himself as executive secretary of the Seaboard White Citizens Council from Washington, D. C., arrived in town. For the next several days he went from house to house urging school picketing and conducting meetings. Meanwhile, mobs and crowds grew daily and violence increased. A Negro boy was chased by a mob and struck repeatedly; two others were rescued by two members of the school football team. Cars of Negro tourists passing through town were attacked, along with local ones. A mob threatened to dynamite the mayor's home; reporters and photographers were attacked; five dynamite blasts were set off in a Negro section of a neighboring community and Negroes in an automobile were fired upon. Police arrested several attackers; a mob demonstrated at the jail. On one occasion the sheriff slipped the Negro students out a back door of the school to keep them from harm. During all this time, heckling and fist fights continued at the school. A Baptist minister who escorted Negro children to school was attacked and beaten. On Saturday, September 1, city officials declared Clinton in a state of emergency and called on the governor for help. That night, 110 Highway Patrolmen began arriving, to be joined the next day by 600 Tennessee National Guardsmen. By September 11, they had withdrawn. In November, a cheering courtroom greeted the acquittal of John Kasper in Anderson County criminal court on charges of sedition and inciting a riot, but he was still under appeal bond on a federal conviction for violating an injunction. That month, parents of Negro pupils at Clinton High demanded protection against new racial outbursts at the school. By the following fall, eight Negro students could enter school without a jeer or taunt and join white classmates, while a lone policeman guarded the school. John Kasper was sentenced to six months in federal prison and six others were placed on probation in a trial in August 1957, on charges of violating a federal injunction prohibiting interference with peaceful integration at Clinton High. Earlier, Kasper was sentenced to a year in jail for contempt of court. When last seen in Tennessee, Kasper was being escorted to a federal prison in Florida, carrying a copy of "Mein Kampf." (1956-57—A, B, C)

Knoxville, Tenn.: A dynamite explosion reverberated through a municipal building where Louis Armstrong's band was playing for a segregated audience. The blast, apparently from a single stick of dynamite tossed from a passing car, tore a four-foot hole in the ground about 200 feet from the building. As for Armstrong, the Negro trumpeter merely remarked, "That's all right, folks. It's just the phone." (February 19, 1957—B)

Clinton, Tenn.: In February, a suitcase loaded with dynamite exploded in the heart of the town's Negro district. Windows in 30 homes were shattered and windows were blasted from a restaurant operated by the foster father of a Negro student expelled from Clinton High School, scene of turmoil when the school was integrated the previous fall. White residents of Clinton launched a fund drive to help Negroes restore property damaged by the blast. (March 1957—A)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: A small charge of dynamite damaged a house owned by R. H. Craig, Negro lawyer who recently appeared before the County Council to urge more jobs for Negroes in county government. Earlier, two crosses were burned on the property and the house was shot into. Craig said the house, inherited by his wife, always had been owned by Negroes although it was in a section otherwise white. The Craigs continued to live in their own home and only visited the house which was bombed. (May 25, 1957—D)

Jersey, Tenn.: The home of a Negro couple was dynamited and a shotgun fired into the home of another. The first was the target of shotgun fire five weeks earlier and the second adjoins a restaurant where a dynamiting had been attempted a few days earlier. Six weeks earlier the home of a Negro teacher was fired upon. The Chattanooga Times said editorially the incidents "undoubtedly are connected with racial feeling by a tiny, moronic few." (August 13, 1957—D)

Nashville, Tenn.: The day before schools were to open under the city's new first-step integration program, the police chief announced he would arrest anyone who tried to intimidate children or parents. The next day, 115 policemen were on guard or on call as 19 Negro 6-year-olds appeared at seven previously all-white schools. Pickets soon appeared, there was some scuffling and the beginnings of a school boycott by white parents. That night there were sporadic racial incidents. Segregationist John Kasper appeared at several schools and spoke to a downtown rally. Then, shortly after midnight, the Hattie Cotton school was dynamited. At dawn, Police Chief Douglas E. Hosse told police detachments, "This has gone beyond a matter of integration. These people have ignored the laws and they have shown no regard for you or any citizen." Police then deployed before the desegregated schools and dealt sternly with any who could not explain their presence. Barricades were erected a block from each school; police kept crowds dispersed and their leaders were arrested. Kasper was arrested on four charges. By mid-September, attendance in the desegregated schools had returned to normal. As the month ended, there were 11 Negroes attending five formerly all-white schools. The Hattie Cotton school reopened, but without the six-year-old Negro child who had been admitted as part of the city's first step toward an integrated school system. (October 1957—A)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: Police investigated the third dynamite incident in Negro sections in less than two weeks. In the latest explosion, a vacant house was practically destroyed and several hundred dollars damage done to another. The houses were in a new subdivision designed exclusively for Negroes. None of the 65 houses was occupied. On October 27 an explosion ripped a hole in a field near a Negro area and the following night a house rented by a Negro couple was damaged by a dynamite blast in the front yard. Officers said they had no theories. (November 5, 1957—B)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: A Negro man reported to police that he and his sister-in-law were kidnapped and beaten by white men. The man said he was stopped by two men while he was driving on a suburban street and forced into their car and that his sister-in-law was picked up by the men as she was walking along the street. The man, Lemmia Henderson, said they were transferred into two of four cars in which 11 men were riding, taken to a remote section where they were beaten with a rubber hose and his clothes were slashed with a knife. Henderson said that the men, before abandoning them, asked if he or the woman were associated with the NAACP. Henderson told them he was not a member. The incident was the second of its kind reported to police in recent months. (December 1, 1957—B)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: An explosion was set off outside the Phyllis Wheatley branch of the YWCA, a community building for Negroes. The blast was the second in eight days near a Negro institution. (January 27, 1958—B)

Clinton, Tenn.: One man was convicted, one acquitted and the state dropped charges against a third in a case involving charges of conspiring to dynamite integrated Clinton High School. The charges were filed after two sacks of dynamite were found across a river from the school last fall. Investigators said they learned the three had planned to blow up the school at night. Two of the men told the sheriff they were offered $500 to blast the school. (February 13, 1958—C)

Memphis, Tenn.: Fire destroyed a $150,000 Negro church, one week after a cross was burned in the front yard of the pastor, whose home is in a white neighborhood. Fire Marshal Edgar Lovell said the fire looked "suspicious . . . This could have been caused by two things—it could have been burning a long time or it could have been set." (February 15, 1958—B)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: One of the largest Negro schools in the state was rocked by a blast from a homemade bomb. Damage to the $3 million dollar Howard school was estimated at $1,000. (February 1958—A)

Nashville, Tenn.: A dynamite explosion at the Jewish Community Center ripped down the ceiling of the reception hall and broke windows, causing damage estimated at $6,000. Almost as soon as the roar of the explosion ended, Rabbi William B. Silverman of the Jewish Temple received a call from a man identifying himself as a member of the "Confederate Underground" who warned that the "Temple is going to be next" and that a Federal judge "would be shot down in cold blood." The latter threat was against District Judge William E. Miller whose orders brought first-step desegregation to Nashville schools. Guards were posted at the Temple and Gov. Frank Clement offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to arrest and conviction. The city of Nashville offered a $1,000 reward and other rewards were offered by citizens. The Associated Press said that "so far as is known, none of Nashville's Jewish citizens has been active on either side in the school desegregation issue. The center has been used freqently for interracial meetings, chiefly by agencies of the United Givers Fund." (March 17, 1958—B)

Memphis, Tenn.: Police were investigating the bombing of the Mt. Moriah Baptist Church, headed by the Rev. R. W. Norsworthy, Negro. Although the bomb caused no damage, it jarred windows in the neighborhood. (Aug. 7, 1958—Memphis Commercial Appeal)

Clinton, Tenn.: Three pre-dawn dynamite explosions wrecked the interior of desegregated Clinton High School. Police Chief Francis Moore said, "It was a professional job," and added, "There's no doubt that this dynamiting is connected with the integration of the school." It was the first sign of violence at the school in this town of 4,000 since sporadic disturbances broke out when nine Negroes were admitted along with white students two years ago. The explosions ripped apart 16 of the classrooms. District Attorney General J. H. McCartt estimated the damage at $300,000 and school officials put the replacement cost at $800,000. (Oct. 5, 1958—B)

Chattanooga, Tenn.: Two white men, one a city employe, were charged with arson in a fire which damaged a vacant,

Negro-owned house on the edge of a white district. City Fire Marshal Mike Quinn said the men told him they set fire to the house because they heard Negroes were going to move in. They were identified as Herbert A. Gray, 51, a city playground director, and Ray Skinner, 21, a tree trimmer. (Dec. 27, 1958—B)

TEXAS

Houston, Tex.: A white oilman struck a Negro attorney who tried to buy a cup of coffee in the Harris County courthouse. The lawyer was taking advantage of a federal court order which held the cafeteria could not continue to refuse service to Negroes. After the assault, the cafeteria was closed. (April 12, 1956—C)

Austin, Tex.: Three students from a white high school which this year admitted its first Negro students were arrested for throwing rocks, eggs and water-filled balloons at a Negro housing project. No damage was done and the boys were released after a warning from police. (April 1956—A)

Mansfield, Tex.: In the summer of 1956, as the city awaited final court word on integration of Mansfield schools, two crosses were burned in the Negro community, an effigy of a Negro was hung over the main street and a Negro leader reported telephone threats. On August 30, U.S. District Judge Joe Estes ordered Manfield to admit Negroes to its high school. Mansfield had lost its court effort to prevent integration when both the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court rejected a plea for a one-year postponement. Three Negro children had been reported ready to register for the 1956-57 term. As the school opened, a crowd estimated at from 200 to 400 gathered in front of the school. Merchants were asked by the protest leaders to cooperate by closing their businesses and appearing at the school. Most, if not all, complied. The sheriff and some of his men joined local police at the school. The second day the crowd hung an effigy of a Negro from the school flagpole. An observer from the Tarrant County district attorney's office was kicked by the mob until rescued by police and a minister was jeered. Vigilante squads stopped all cars coming into town and turned back those suspected of being sympathetic to the Negro cause. Gov. Allan Shivers sent two Texas Rangers to Mansfield with orders to arrest anyone, white or Negro, who threatened the peace. He gave the school board authority to transfer out of the district any student whose presence might prompt a riot. No Negroes appeared at the school to register that fall or the next and those of high school age continued to attend school at nearby Fort Worth Negro junior and senior high schools. (September, October 1956, September 1957—A; various)

Texarkana, Tex.: A crowd of men and boys gathered on the Texarkana Junior College campus early in September when two Negro girls and one Negro boy tried to enroll. Four Texas Rangers were on hand to maintain order. Seven Negro boys were arrested for throwing rocks at a car carrying white youths. During the unrest, an effigy of a Negro was hanged on the campus and a cross burned. A shotgun blast was fired at a filling station owned by a Negro integration leader. U. S. District Judge Joe Sheehy later dismissed a contempt action against two officials of the college after the Negro applicants at the school told the court they did not ask for the suit to be filed. The judge reprimanded an NAACP lawyer. (October 1956—A)

Beaumont, Tex.: In September 1956, for the first time Negroes—26 of them—entered Lamar State College of Technology as a result of a Federal District Court order. During the first week of school, a small group of whites picketed peacefully in protest but by the end of the second week violence and intimidation erupted. A taxi bearing Negro students was reported pushed into a ditch and bottles were thrown at taxis carrying other Negro students. Pickets also began using threats in attempting to recruit white students, but only two joined the protest movement. Cars were stopped at campus entrances, whether driven by Negro or white persons. White students and faculty were jeered by pickets. Then the morning newspaper, the Enterprise, asked in an editorial, "Who is running our city—the legally constituted authorities or a handful of the fringe of the citizenry?" That day the college president called on the editor and the mayor. By afternoon, the mayor ordered police to stop non-peaceful picketing. They arrested two men and a woman. Pickets then marched peacefully for a few days until they were pulled off by a Citizens Council official from Kilgore. ("College Desegregation Without Popular Support," a field study by Dr. Warren Breed of Tulane University, 1956)

Beaumont, Tex.: In November 1956, bricks and stones were thrown through windows of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, where an annual youth rally of white and Negro students was in session. During the week church members had received telephone calls protesting the integrated meeting, although no protest had been made before during the several years the rally had been held. The incident followed disturbances during the integration of Lamar State College of Technology in Beaumont. (From a field study by Dr. Warren Breed of Tulane University)

Beaumont, Tex.: An explosion at a Negro residence in an integrated neighborhood ripped a hole in the lawn and shattered front windows. Another explosion damaged the sidewalk in front of the home of a Negro physician and former NAACP official. Both explosions happened within a week. (January 10, 1957—B)

Beaumont, Tex.: Three homemade bombs caused damage estimated at several thousands of dollars. One exploded under a truck owned by State Sen. Rufus Kilpatrick. A second bomb was directed at the home of a retired car dealer, who said he believed it was because of his "middle of the road" stand on integration. A third damaged the entrance at St. Michael's Orthodox Church. The Rev. Daniel Montgomery, pastor, said he had taken no stand on integration but that he had been warned by an anonymous woman telephone caller that "we want to get the foreigners." (March 1957—A)

Dallas, Tex.: Gunfire and knife fights erupted among some of the 6,000 white and Negro rock and roll fans outside an auditorium. Six persons were stabbed or beaten. Three white summer students from North Texas State College at Denton were slashed. Police said the students were attacked by a Negro after an argument. In another case a Negro boy suffered severe stab wounds. A girl also was slashed. Police said a 17-year-old white youth suffered face and eye injuries when he and his companions were accosted by a carlcad of Negro youths some distance from the auditorium after the show. Three bullet holes were found in the white boys' car. (July 16, 1957—B)

Henderson, Tex.: An African ministerial student, hit by a blackjack by a policeman after he refused to move to the rear of a bus, was released from jail after an official of the college he is attending paid his $25 fine. The officer said he was investigating reports a Negro refused to move back in the bus. The officer said when the student, a native of Nigeria, told him in a British accent he did not understand the order, he grabbed him by the arm and took him to the rear. Then, when he reached in his pocket, "I had to tap him with a slapjack," the policeman said. The student said he was reaching for his passport to show the officer. (August 25, 1957—B)

Beaumont, Tex.: A flaming bottle of kerosene hurled at the home of a college professor narrowly missed the window of a bedroom occupied by two small children. Police said the bomb was tossed at the house of Dr. Russell Long, a biology professor at Lamar State College of Technology. Long and his wife extinguished a small fire with a garden hose; the siding on the front of the house was scorched. Neither Long nor his wife, who teaches in a Beaumont high school, could think of a motive for the action. (June 20, 1958—B)

VIRGINIA

Yorktown, Va.: About 20 white men tossed stones and fired at the home a Negro widow recently rented for her family in a previously all-white section of York County. (November 9, 1957—B)

Alexandria, Va.: The night after a Negro family moved into an all-white residential block a rock was thrown through the dining room window while the family ate. About six weeks later a bullet ripped through a front window. A few weeks later the mother and her daughter were sleeping in a second floor bedroom when a shotgun explosion awoke them; pellets sprayed the walls above their heads. The police promised them protection and they planned to stay. (April 1, 1958—Z)

CODE

A—Southern School News
B—Associated Press
C—United Press
D—Chattanooga Times
E—Atlanta Constitution
F—The Arkansas Gazette
G—Montgomery Advertiser
H—Birmingham News
I—Wall Street Journal
J—Jackson (Miss.) Clarion Ledger
K—New York Times
L—Jackson (Miss.) State Times
M—International News Service
N—Columbus (Ga.) Ledger
O—Twin City (Winston-Salem) Sentinel
P—Charlotte Observer
Q—Orangeburg (S.C.) Times and Democrat
R—Rock Hill (S.C.) Evening Herald
S—Washington Post and Times Herald
T—Winston-Salem Journal
U—Nashville Tennessean
V—The State (Columbia, S. C.)
W—Birmingham Post Herald
X—Delta Democrat-Times
Y—United Press International
Z—Evening Star (Washington, D. C.)

June 15, 1959

The Honorable Thomas C. Hennings
Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C.

My dear Senator Hennings:

We thought you would be interested in seeing the enclosed report on "Intimidation, Reprisal, and Violence in the South's Racial Crisis."

You will note that the report is jointly sponsored by this organization, the S. E. Office of the American Friends Service Committee, and the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming
Executive Director

HCF/mf

Enclosure - 1.

Distribution of Violence Report - June 15, 1959

The Hon. Thomas C. Hennings, Jr.	All with attached ltr.
The Hon. John A. Carroll
The Hon. Jacob R. Javits
The Hon. Clifford P. Case
The Hon. John F. Kennedy
Rep. Emanuel Celler
Rep. Richard Bolling
Mr. Gordon Tiffany
Mr. J. Edgar Hoover
The Hon. W. Wilson White
Mr. Harris Wofford	Both with "Thought You'd Be Interested" slips
Mr. Henry Shine

Via air Special:
Mr. Jim Mathis
Houston Post
Washington

Mr. Herbert J. Blitz - 2 copies
Rm 326
Senate Bldg.
Wash.

Embassy of Union of S.A.
3101 Mass. Ave
Wash. attn: Press Attaché

Chas. Goodum
Lib. of Congress - 6 copies w/release
Washington

SOUTHWEST REGIONAL OFFCE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

Of B'nai B'rith

SUITE 209, 2405 SAN JACINTO STREET, HOUSTON 2, TEXAS

Art Levin is handling this himself HCF

REGIONAL BOARD

MAURICE N. DANNENBAUM
Honorary Chairman

DR. E. ERNEST GOLDSTEIN
Chairman

THEODORE FREEDMAN
Regional Director

NATIONAL COMMISSION

HENRY EDWARD SCHULTZ
Chairman

MEIER STEINBRINK
Honorary Chairman

BARNEY BALABAN
A. G. BALLENGER
HERBERT H. LEHMAN
LEON LOWENSTEIN
WILLIAM SACHS
BENJAMIN SAMUELS
MELVIN H. SCHLESINGER
JESSE STEINHART
Honorary Vice-Chairmen

JOSEPH COHEN
JEFFERSON E. PEYSER
MAX J. SCHNEIDER
Vice-Chairmen

BENJAMIN GREENBERG
Treasurer

HERBERT LEVY
Secretary

BENJAMIN R. EPSTEIN
National Director

BERNARD NATH
Chairman, Executive Committee

PAUL H. SAMPLINER
Vice-Chairman, Executive Committee

STAFF DIRECTORS

NATHAN C. BELTH
Press Relations

OSCAR COHEN
Program

ARNOLD FORSTER
Civil Rights

ALEXANDER F. MILLER
Community Service

J. HAROLD SAKS
Administration

LESTER J. WALDMAN
Executive Assistant

June 18, 1959

RECEIVED JUN 22 1959

Mr. Harold Fleming
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E.
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Harold:

At Art Levin's suggestion I am submitting the names of persons in the Oklahoma - Texas area, that you should consider sending the publication "Intimidation, Reprisal and Violence."

Mr. John Rogers (He is state chairman of the Civil Rights Box 911 Advisory Commission)
Tulsa, Oklahoma

Texas Legislators: (Send to State Capitol, Austin, Texas)

SENATORS

Robert W. Baker	Houston
Wm. S. Fly	Victoria
Henry B. Gonzalez	San Antonio
Frank Owen, III	El Paso

REPRESENTATIVES: (Send c/o State Capitol, Austin, Texas)

R. H. Cory	Victoria
Roger Daily	Houston
Eligion De La Garza	Mission
Bob Eckhardt	Houston
Dean Johnston	Houston
Bill Kilgarlin	Houston
Oscar M. Laurel	Laredo
Rufus Kilpatrick	Beaumont
Will Z. Smith	Beaumont
Wade F. Spilman	McAllen

Attorney General Will Wilson, State Capitol, Austin, Texas

Kindest regards.

Cordially,

Ted

Theodore Freedman

TF:es
cc: Mr. Arthur Levin

FLORIDA REGIONAL OFFICE

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE

Of B'nai B'rith

330 SEYBOLD BUILDING, MIAMI 32, FLORIDA, FRANKLIN 3-6306

REGIONAL BOARD

LEONARD L. ABESS
Honorary Chairman

PAUL SEIDERMAN
Chairman

SAM A. GOLDSTEIN
BENJAMIN MEYERS
Vice Chairmen

JUDGE MILTON A. FRIEDMAN
Treasurer

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

BURNETT ROTH
Chairman
HON. ABE ARONOVITZ
HON. RICHARD E. GERSTEIN
MRS. PETER GLAZER
HARRY GOODMARK
DAVID GORMAN
PAUL JEFFREY
FRANK G. KLEINFELD
GEORGE KRONENGOLD
DR. IRVING LEHRMAN
E. ALBERT PALLOT
LEONARD PEPPER
A. DAVID RAYVIS
AL L. SCHNEIDER
JUDGE SAM I. SILVER
MRS. BERNARD SUPWORTH
SANFORD M. SWERDLIN
GEORGE J. TALIANOFF

GEORGE J. TALIANOFF
National Commissioner

NATHAN PERLMUTTER
Executive Director

ARTHUR SPIEGEL
Program Director

NATIONAL COMMISSION

HENRY EDWARD SCHULTZ
Chairman
MEIER STEINBRINK
Honorary Chairman
BARNEY BALABAN
A. G. BALLENGER
HERBERT H. LEHMAN
LEON LOWENSTEIN
WILLIAM SACHS
BENJAMIN SAMUELS
MELVIN H. SCHLESINGER
JESSE STEINHART
Honorary Vice-Chairmen
JOSEPH COHEN
JEFFERSON E. PEYSER
MAX J. SCHNEIDER
Vice-Chairmen
BENJAMIN GREENBERG
Treasurer
HERBERT LEVY
Secretary
BENJAMIN R. EPSTEIN
National Director
BERNARD NATH
Chairman, Executive Committee
PAUL H. SAMPLINER
Vice-Chairman, Executive Committee

STAFF DIRECTORS

NATHAN C. BELTH
Press Relations
OSCAR COHEN
Program
ARNOLD FORSTER
Civil Rights
ALEXANDER F. MILLER
Community Service
J. HAROLD SAKS
Administration
LESTER J. WALDMAN
Executive Assistant

Art Levin handled this himself HCA

RECEIVED JUL 13 1959

July 8, 1959

Mr. Harold Fleming
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue NE
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Mr. Fleming:

Art Levin has indicated to our office your willingness to send copies of "Intimidation-Reprisal and Violence" to "moderate" legislators in the state of Florida.

I am therefore listing below a select group of Floridians that should receive copies of the publication:

James A Boyd Jr.	Box 901 Leesburg
Doyle E. CarltonJr.	Box 385 Wauchula
Fred Dickinson Jr.	Harvey Building West Palm Beach
Joe Eaton	1136 DuPont Building Miami
Sam M. Gibbons	Box 1363 Tampa
E.William Gautier	310 Bank Building Smyrna Beach
S. Frank Houghton	401 Florida Theater Building,St.Petersburg
J. Harry Kicliter	Okeechobee Roadn and 37th St.Ft.Pierce

All of the aboves should be addressed as Senator

Emerson Allsworth	205 Television Bldg. Ft. Lauderdale
Ruebin Askew	504 Florida National Bank Building Pensacola
J. Dempsey Baron	210 Harrison Avenue Panama City,
Ralph J. Blank Jr.	326 Pan American Building Palm Beach
Mack. N. ClevelandJr.	Box 220 Sanford
Doyle E. Conner	136 West Call St. Starke
John J. Crews Jr.	Macclenny
Osee R. Fagan	212 SE 1st Avenue Gainesville
W.C. Herrell	201 Curtiss Parkway Miami Springs
George L. Hollahan Jr.	7210 Red Road Miami
Mallory E. Horne	102½ S. Monroe Tallahassee
Jack C. Inman	913 Florida National Bank Building
Mrs. George W. Johnson	505 Peachtree Road Orlando

continued on page 2

Woodie A. Liles	209 W. Reynolds St.	Plant City
Robert T. Mann	703 Wallace Building	Tampa
John E Mathews Jr.	Lynch Building	Jacksonville
Richard O. Mitchell	107 Midyette-Moor Building	Tallahassee
Emmett S. Roberts	Box 488	Belle Glade
A. J. Ryan	Dania Bank Building	Dania
John S. Shipp Jr.	Box 897	Marianna
J. Rupert Smith	209 Raulerson Building	Fort Pierce
Ralph D. Turlington	113 N Main St.	Gainesville
Charles F. Usina	Box 177	St. Augustine
L.B. Vocelle	Box 488	Vero Beach

All of above are to be addressed as Rep.

Please excuse the delay in providing these names for you. However, I have been out of town a good deal at our University of Florida workshop which was co-sponsered by the ADL and the Florida Council on Human Relations and the College of Education. This was a "first" and so you can well imagine the time and effort that was put in by all of us. Next week we are holding another workshop which will be jointly sponsered by the Student Religious Association, the ADL and the Florida Council on Human Relations. Brochures of both workshops are attached for your information. Bill Williams assistance has been most invaluable and played a very important role in making our first one a most successful one.

I do hope that we have the opportunity to meet in person one of these days.

Sincerely,

Arthur Spiegel

Arthur Spiegel
AS:ns

cc: Art Levin

Lessons 1-18 rec. 8-28-6

MA

CITY OF LEXINGTON

KENTUCKY

E. C. HALE
Chief of Police

WHEN ANSWERING PLEASE REFER TO FILE NO._____

June 29, 1961

Mrs. Ed A. Albright
Administrative Secretary
Research
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mrs. Albright:

In accordance with your request, we are enclosing copies of Lessons 1 through 10 on Socio-Legal Problems which are being used in our Administrative In-Service Seminar. In the future, lessons will be forwarded to you as they are issued.

We appreciate your interest.

Yours very truly,

E. C. Hale

Chief of Police.

ECH:WMcM:ec

Note: Lessons 7-10 from our Racial Violence + Law Enforcement publication.

Hard Thinking Needed

B'ham News - Nov. 12, 1961

Some facts to face

Ways of living, customs and attitudes that have existed for generations, centuries and millenniums cannot and should not be changed overnight.

Difficult problems are presented by recent court decisions and federal agency regulations and orders. The best solution to these problems requires intense study, understanding, tolerance and good will on the part of every element of the population.

Fortunately, the police commissioner of Birmingham has pledged himself and the Police Department, in the strongest terms, that no lawlessness will be tolerated from Negro or white, local residents or outside meddlers, irresponsible juveniles or self-seeking inspirers of hate.

IN THIS HE MUST have the strong support of the entire City Commission, the County Commission, all municipal governments, the sheriff, the solicitor, the schools, the pulpit, the press, the radio, the television, civic organizations of all kinds and every thoughtful citizen.

We want no federal marshals sent into Jefferson County and we must see to it that no acts or utterances on the part of our citizens or our officials invite their interference.

We must do some hard thinking now as just how we can meet the necessities of court decisions and agency orders within the framework of law observance.

Submitted by these citizens

Thomas W. Martin
William Mitch Sr.
Dr. Leslie Wright
Dawson Franklin
Hugh Dominick
Dr. Allen N. Kaplan
Clyde V. Sellers
John M. Gallalee
William P. McGough
Glenn Ireland II
Douglas Arant
Dr. Tinsley R. Harrison
E. Drew Redden
K. D. Mosley
John D. Jemison Jr.
Claude Eubank
Ellis C. Pittman
Mrs. Henry Edmonds
Phil Dean
E. D. McCuen
Elo Bashinsky
Dr. Ross M. Earle
George A. Mattison Jr.
Fred Moytie
Mildred Hallums
Roy P. Ray
M. W. Bryant
Wilson Smith
Hugh Rimbrough
C. Julian Lackey
Liam Barr
Paul H. Earle
Darius A. Thomas
William S. Pritchard
Eugene Daughtry
W. W. French
Milton Grafman
John C. Yerbrough
James A. Head
Mrs. Joseph H. Eskelmen
William P. Bagby
Dr. Louise Breckenridge
William P. Lathrop
W. G. Musgrove
Rev. Ben Gaston Stokes
Charles Eubanks Jr.
Leo C. Bradley Jr.

Bryce Thrasher
Hugh Daniel
Dr. Hassell G. Dash
Mrs. Monaghan
Mrs. Hubert B. McWhorter
Winston Price Jr.
Murphy H. Reeves
E. T. Williams Jr.
O. B. McCullough
Hazel Gerald
Andrew Thomas
Burgess
Richard T. Eastwood
Otto School
T. L. Ogle
Thomas E. Bradford
A. Mitchell
Brady
Dr. G. J. Reeves
John Terry Badham
Dr. Henry King Stanford
Gibson
Z. Hall
William C. Ireland
Dr. John E. Bryan
Frank Spain
Elton E. Stephens
Phil Friedman
Clyde H. Wade
G. C. McCullough Sr.
Fred Sherkelford
Donald S. James
G. S. Puckett
Mary O. DeMoll
James A. Venn Jr.
Campbell Blake
James J. Monaghan
Bryan Jackson
S. U. Newfield
Fred Sington
Frank Lankford
George Klein
Dale LeCluse
Theodore Pratts
Harvey Sullivan
Everett Flanigan

Arthur V. Wadell
Lamar Jackson
Donald D. Stafford
Gould Center Sr.
Howard Strong
J. Tucker, Archbishop
Frank P. Samford
V. Ramage
Claude Lagnes
William E. Mitch Jr.
Andrews
Roper Dial
Wilbur W. Sokes
E. Friend
Edith D. Underwood
Arthur A. Adams Jr.
Goldberg
C. J. Carpenter, Bishop
Henry R. Nowes
H. Sternberg Sr.
Baker
T. M. Barry
H. Borders Jr.
R. M. Goodall Jr.
Robert L. Mills
W. Sayer Sr.
Paul J. Young
M. I. Cleveland
Roger Roach
Donald Fullbright
Edna Myers
Mary C. Goodrich
Max Layton
Henry L. Cox
H. McCrummen
Donald F. Lanier
Hugh Franklin Jr.
Hydinger
Frank Brank
Ruth F. Fullerton
Sidney Sayer Jr.
William Shadine
W. Sayer Jr.
Jackson
Wilford Wolf
Alfred M. Burge

Ruben E. Fore
Frank Plummer
William Yielding
Hugh Kind
W. E. Reed
Lottie Rushton
Mark Rude
Crawford Johnson III
Frank Newton
Edward Newton
David Cody Wright
T. A. Durick, Bishop
Hugh Bigler
Donald Stone
Amos G. Smith
Virginia S. Dorsey
Raymond
Mrs. Esther Patrick
Frank Pastor
H. Thompson
Hugh Comer Nabors
Ben J. Lewis
Hughes Kennedy Jr.
D. Hill
Mary Norris
Mary J. Burchfield
Robert Jowlson III
Robert E. Garrett
Fred O. Myers
Evelyn E. Hughes
John C. Turner
William S. Fuller
L. Watkins
Walter S. Horrell
Mrs. Sidney Sayer Sr.
Wood Dunn
W. L. Fullerton
George M. Murray
Nathan Bentley
Thomas N. Crawford
C. W. Gillian
C. H. Glass
Victor McClendon
E. G. Gisbon
Edward A. Cooper

REPRINT FROM THE ATLANTA JOURNAL AND CONSTITUTION
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1962

PERKINS SAYS IQs OF RACES ABOUT SAME

THE CHAIRMAN OF EMORY UNIVERSITY'S PSYCHOLOGY DEPARTMENT SAYS IT'S SCIENTIFICALLY IMPOSSIBLE TO VOICE ANY FIRM CONCLUSIONS ON INHERITED MENTAL DIFFERENCES BETWEEN RACES.

"NO DIFFERENCES HAVE EVER BEEN COMPETENTLY DEMONSTRATED," SAID DR. CHARLES C. PERKINS, JR. HE BLASTED A REPORT ISSUED LAST WEEK HOLDING THAT NEGROES ARE 200,000 YEARS BEHIND WHITES IN EVOLUTION.

THE REPORT WAS MADE BY DR. W. C. GEORGE, AN EMERITUS PROFESSOR OF ANATOMY AT THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA. ALABAMA GOVERNOR JOHN PATTERSON PAID $5,000 FOR THE STUDY.

A GREAT NUMBER OF NEGROES HAVE LESS INTELLIGENCE THAN WHITES ON A BIOLOGICAL BASIS, DR. GEORGE'S STUDY ASSERTED. IT BLAMED STRUCTURAL DIFFERENCES IN THE BRAIN.

THE EMORY PROFESSOR DEPLORED THE REPORT AND CHARGED THAT IT WOULD TEND TO REINFORCE FALSE BELIEFS ON THE PART OF THE GENERAL PUBLIC.

"IN THE WHOLE BUSINESS OF RACE RELATIONS IT IS IMPORTANT THAT THE FACTS BE KNOWN AS WIDELY AS POSSIBLE," DR. PERKINS SAID. AND ONE OF THE FACTS IS THAT THERE JUST AREN'T MANY FACTS THAT ALLOW POSITIVE CONCLUSIONS.

THERE'S REALLY NO FIRM BASIS FOR ANYONE TO ISSUE POSITIVE, SURE STATEMENTS ABOUT RACIAL MENTAL CHARACTERISTICS. NO ONE CAN SCIENTIFICALLY STATE THAT NEGROES ARE INEVITABLY DUMBER THAN WHITES, DR. PERKINS SAID.

ONE OF THE MAIN REASONS WHY SCIENCE HAS NOT FOUND ANY REAL EVIDENCE TO SUBSTANTIATE INHERITED RACIAL MENTAL DIFFERENCES IS BECAUSE IQ-TYPE TESTS OF A PERSON'S MENTAL POWER DO NOT ELIMINATE A PERSON'S ENVIRONMENT, AND THAT HAS A LOT TO DO WITH INTELLIGENCE.

THERE ARE ALL SORTS OF MENTAL TESTS OF RACIAL MENTAL DIFFERENCES, AND THE RESULTS VARY WIDELY. IN FACT, THERE IS ONE WIDESPREAD TEST - THE ALPHA EXAMINATIONS GIVEN TO SOLDIERS IN WORLD WAR II - THAT INDICATES THE "AVERAGE" NORTHERN NEGRO IS SMARTER THAN THE "AVERAGE" SOUTHERN WHITE MAN.

BUT THIS ISN'T SCIENTIFIC PROOF OF INNATE, INHERITED, HEREDITARY INTELLIGENCE, DR. PERKINS SAID. THE EMORY PROFESSOR'S MAIN POINTS TO REFUTE DR. GEORGE'S REPORT WERE:

- - - EXCEPT IN CASES OF EXTREME ABNORMALITY, THERE IS NO EVIDENCE THAT BRAIN SIZE HAS ANYTHING WHATSOEVER TO DO WITH INTELLIGENCE. (DR. GEORGE HAD CLAIMED BIGGER FRONTAL BRAIN LOBER MADE WHITES SMARTER.) IF SIZE HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH IT, DR. PERKINS DECLARED, THE AVERAGE WOMAN WOULD BE DUMBER THAN THE AVERAGE MAN BECAUSE THEIR BRAINS ARE ALMOST ALWAYS SMALLER. AND WAY BACK IN 1909 THERE WAS A TEST IN WHICH BRAINS WERE SEPARATED BY SUPPOSED "INTELLIGENCE" WITHOUT THE SEPARATORS KNOWING OF RACIAL DIFFERENCES. THE PROPORTION OF WHITES AND NEGROES WAS EXACTLY THE SAME IN THE SUPPOSEDLY "LOW-INTELLIGENCE" AND "HIGH INTELLIGENCE" GROUPS.

- - - DIFFERENCES IN HEREDITARY INTELLIGENCE DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE RACES CANNOT BE DETERMINED BECAUSE THERE IS SIMPLE NO MEASURE.

- - - AND IT CAN'T BE DETERMINED WHETHER EARNED DIFFERENCES IN FAVOR OF WHITES DISAPPEAR WHEN NEGROES GAIN SOCIAL AND ACADEMIC EQUALITY. (DR. GEORGE SAID THEY DIDN'T.) DR. PERKINS SAID THERE IS CLEARLY NO "SOCIAL AND ACADEMIC EQUALITY" AS LONG AS PREJUDICES EXIST BETWEEN THE RACES.

- - - IMPORTANTLY, DR. PERKINS SAID TESTS OF LEARNED (NOT HEREDITARY) INTELLIGENCE SHOWED MUCH GREATER INDIVIDUAL MENTAL DIFFERENCES WITHIN A RACE ITSELF THAN BETWEEN THE RACES.

THE EMORY PROFESSOR SAID DR. GEORGE'S REPORT APPEARED AS THOUGH HE STARTED WITH HIS CONCLUSIONS AND SELECTED FACTS TO SUPPORT THEM, RATHER THAN STARTING WITH A CONSIDERATION OF ALL THE EVIDENCE AND DEVELOPMENT OF CONCLUSIONS FROM IT.

"NO MODERATELY REPUTABLE PSYCHOLOGIST COULD COME UP WITH THESE CONCLUSIONS, " DR. PERKINS SAID.

AS A MATTER OF FACT, THE EMORY PROFESSOR ADDED, THERE ARE SEVERAL FIELDS OF STUDY WHICH WORK MUCH CLOSER TO RACIAL QUESTION THAN DOES DR. GEORGE'S FIELD OF ANATOMY.

GENETICS, PHYSIOLOGY, ANTHROPOLOGY, SOCIOLOGY AND PSYCHOLOGY ALL DEAL MORE CLOSELY THAN ANATOMY WITH THE SORT OF STUDY WHICH DR. GEORGE CONDUCTED, DR. PERKINS SAID.

DR. GEORGE HAS LONG EXPRESSED RACIAL VIEWS WHICH MADE HIM A CONTROVERSIAL FIGURE IN ACADEMIC CIRCLES. HIS INSISTENCE THAT THERE ARE INHERENCE RACIAL MENTAL DIFFERENCES HAVE BEEN CRITICIZED BEFORE.

HE SAID HE WORKED ON HIS REPORT TO GOVERNOR PATTERSON FOR ALMOST TWO YEARS AND THAT HE RELEASED IT NOW IN CASE IT MIGHT BE OF USE "IN THE PRESENT CRISIS."

THIS WAS AN APPARENT REFERENCE TO THE CRISIS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Response to a Panel on "The Church in a Valley of Decision"

By

Rev. Vincent Harding

To: The Workshop of The Fellowship of The Concerned - October 30-31/62

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

I speak for Father John Morris as well as for myself when I seek to offer this response to yesterday's panel presentation on "The Church in a Valley of Decision."

Our first response was this: God bless the women! God bless the women for their deep concern. God bless the women for their searching and sensitive spirits. God bless the women for so often being so far ahead of the men in the joyful, agonizing search for the way of discipleship in the midst of our nation's racial conflicts.

After having said that, it would be tempting for me to sit down, and for all of you to sit up and pat yourselves on the back and say "how good we are." We must not yield to this temptation, though, for self-congratulation and the easy offering of undeserved praise are among the besetting sins of the church. Rather, let us look and see what we have not done, what we have yet to do before we may even claim the title to "unworthy servants."

Actually, the panel left many things to be desired --- partly, of course, because of the meagre allotment of time that was made to each speaker. On the topic itself, "The Church in a Valley of Decision," little was really said. The nature of the decision was not defined in any way, and this omission was unfortunate, to say the least. For the title was no mere playing with words; the church is indeed faced now with a decision that is focussed on this matter of race. It is a great decision. It must choose to be or not to be the Church. It must choose to be the Church or a social club. It must choose to be the Church or another variety of white citizens' council. It must choose to be the Church or to be a Negro haven of rest. It must choose to be the Church or a Colored fashion show. Ultimately, of course, the choice before the Church now is to respond to God's challenge on the issue of race, or to die of abject fear. Here is the valley.

Perhaps it was because of this lack of a central definition that I found so little of a sense of urgency about the entire presentation. But a sense of urgency is greatly needed, for the context of the title words, as they are found in the book of Joel, is this: "Multitudes, multitides, in the valley of decision! For the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." This is the point: the day of God's judgement is no less near to us, for a revolution now sweeps around us, the world is passing us by, as schools, restaurants, bars all move ahead; and day by day, a silent, segregated church becomes more and more irrelevant to the new society. Soon, before very long, separate but equal churches will be antiquated anachronism, fit only for the dung heap.

Somehow, the panel needed to say more about our need to face the church fully and honestly with this time of decision. In some way we must help it to cease evading the moment of truth when it must decide to be God's people or to remain a white people and a colored people. We must bring it to the time when it will see no path but the path of decision between being the Body of Christ or being permanently split into white and non-white bodies. At the same time we must call the church to a new understanding of who it belongs to. Again and again, we heard the panel members speak of opening "our church" to the Negroes. Instead, we must cause men to know that our great calling may well be to get out of the way and let Christ open His church to all people. For it is His church, you know. Unless it is his, unless it follows his command to make disciples of all men, wherever they are found, unless it is open to all men, then it has not yet come near the fullness of his calling. Indeed, if this is not its stance, there may be great reason to question its credentials as a church under his Lordship.

Throughout the panel discussion, it was possible to sense an uncomfortableness not dissimilar to that which has been experienced in the nation at large of late. Just as men and women grew uneasy with the lack of local action to implement the 1954 Supreme Court decision and the 1961 Interstate Commerce Commission ruling, so, too, has our uneasiness increased over the plethora of church pronouncements on race in the face of so little local congregational implementation. And as I think of the action we need, I remember a lady from Virginia who approached me at the recent World Mennonite Conference and asked: "Are you starting a new colored work in Atlanta?" My response to her was: "Sister, what we are really trying to do is to get all of the colored people out of the colored churches, and all of the white people out of the white churches, and put them together into one true Christian church." For in a real sense, this is our goal; not to integrate the churches, as some ladies said. No, our goal is to help create a fully Christian church, a church that refuses to let the walls of the world be built up in the church, a church which preaches and practices, "whosoever will, may come."

Now, how shall this necessary action come? How shall the church be brought to its hour of decision? How shall the volumes of pronouncements become flesh and live in deeds among us? The answers to this are not simple, but perhaps a direction may be seen. Just as the 1954 court decision and the 1961 ICC ruling did not bring (and have not brought) voluntary corrective action without some real stimulation in most cases, so we must not expect church pronouncements to bring action without similar stimulation. Is this not in keeping with our Protestant, crisis-centered theology? Rarely, for instance, do we expect a man to become a Christian only by reading volumes of documents about conversion. In our tradition -- for better or worse -- we look for a crisis experience, a sharp encounter with the truth, which may in turn lead to a turning from old ways and a commitment to the new. Is this not what our churches need in order to become truly inclusive fellowships? Do they not need to be faced with an inescapable crisis of decision?

How shall we do this? There are many ways. On the political level it took men and women who were willing to grasp Negro children by the hands and lead them to principals and school boards -- then the issue could not be avoided. It took courageous young men and women to enter the restaurants and sit at the counters, facing the owners with the reality of their presence and the necessity of a choice. What does it take in the church?

Now, we may sit back and wait, perhaps, for some of these same young persons to enter the church without invitation and thus stimulate our decision-making. This is not a wise way, though, for many of them will never bother to come to our churches -- for a host of good and bad reasons. More importantly, though, this is not a wise way because it removes the initiative from our hands, and it is in our hands that it belongs. We are the people of the church. There are many ways in which we can grasp the chance (Miss Mears of United Church Women's "Project: Race" has a host of ideas). However, I should like to offer one suggestion which seems to me to be faithful both to the theme of this conference and to the life of the church. I would suggest that we give up those feelings of self-righteousness which so easily overcome us when we attend regional and statewide conferences like this. I would suggest that we grow dissatisfied with talk about the hands we have shaken and the tables we have shared at this level. The time has come for us to move down (or up!) to the level of our local congregations, to take our sister of another color by the hand, a and to walk by her side into our church sanctuary. Take her, and walk with her, and say to any who ask: "This is my sister in Christ; if this is Christ's church, then she belongs here as fully as I do." Indeed, we might be called upon to add the words: "If she does not belong here, then neither do I." In our hands -- there is the initiative. Joined hand in hand we may face the church with its choice.

Obviously, this is no easy way for us to go; but that is good. It is good because this issue of race, this frightening, shaking issue may finally bring us to our senses: at last it may break down our frantic efforts to be Christ's disciples and socially acceptable at the same time. In moments of the church's crisis, this kind of double life is rarely possible or even desirable. Thus the valley of our decision on race may be a place in which we discover anew that following Christ still brings with it the joyful agony of the cross.

Only briefly was this alluded to yesterday, when one of the panel members reported on the difficulty Albany's leading Baptist minister is having in finding a place to have his hair cut. (Actually, the barbershop problem is only a symptom of the greater trials this man faces.) He simply spoke for the openness of Christ's church, and has been granted the provilege of a glimpse at the cross. In Montgomery and New Orleans, some ladies now present have been faced with rejection by their husbands as a price for their own decision. Such experiences remind us that we too must be ready for this at every moment if we would really take the present opportunity in our own hands. We must be ready to be taken off the best invitation lists. We must be ready to be socially ostracised, intimidated and reviled. This was the way of our Master; why should his followers ask for a more pleasant path?

(At this moment I remember an example given by Archbishop Fulton Sheen illustrating the difference between Christianity and Communism.

He said that the communists have marched up to the Christ of the cross, torn him from the cross, cast him aside, and have marched off bearing the cross -- the cross of suffering, ridicule and rejection for their cause. On the other hand, we of the western world, said the Bishop, have walked up to the cross, taken Christ off, and have walked off with a gentle Jesus, meek and mild, leaving the cross and its costliness behind. Neither of these is the true faith, of course. For just as there is no real Christian cross without Christ, so, too, is there no true Christ without his cross. In our valley of decision on race, each of us must make our own choice.)

Here, then, is our response. And as I thought of the decision we now face -- a calling to open Christ's church to all men -- it seemed to me that T. S. Eliot was speaking to us all through his Murder in the Cathedral (and perhaps God was speaking through the poet). There, in his dramatic recounting of the life of Thomas Becket, 12th century Archbishop of Canterbury,Eliot often dwelt on the conflict between Thomas and the King, between the commands of God and the decrees of the state, between the way of our Master and the way of the world. Then, near the closing of Thomas' life in the play, Eliot portrays the priests of the Cathedral as they urge Thomas to lock himself in the sanctuary and to bar it against the King's knights who seek to kill him. They cry out:

Priests: Bar the door. Bar the door.
The door is barred.
We are safe. We are safe.
The enemy may rage outside, he will tire
In vain. They cannot break in.
They dare not break in. They have not the force.
We are safe. We are safe.

Thomas: Unbar the doors! Throw open the doors!
I will not have the house of prayer, the church of Christ,
The sanctuary, turned into a fortress.
The church shall protect her own, in her own way, not
As oak and stone; stone and oak decay,
Give no stay, but the Church shall endure.
The church shall be open, even to our enemies.
Open the door!

Priests: My Lord! these are not men, these come not as men come, but,
Like maddened beasts. They come not like men, who Respect the sanctuary, who kneel to the Body of Christ,
But like beasts. You would bar the door
Against the lion, the leopard, the wolf or the boar,
Why not more
Against beasts with the souls of damned men, against men
Who would damn themselves to beasts.
My Lord! My Lord!

Thomas: Unbar the door!
You think me reckless, desperate and mad.
You argue by results, as this world does,
To settle if an act be good or bad.
Unbar the door! Unbar the door!
We are not here to triumph by fighting, by stratagem,
or by resistance,
Not to fight with beasts as men.
We have fought the beast and have conquered.
We have only to conquer now, by suffering.
This is the easier victory.
Now is the triumph of the Cross, now
Open the door! I command it. OPEN THE DOOR!

The door is opened, and within a few minutes time, the King's knights murder Thomas (for God has never promised safety to those who do his will, only his eternal presence with them). However, in the final moments of the play, the people of Canterbury are granted that great vision which helps them to see that Thomas' death, resulting as it did from his refusal to close Christ's church to any man, was indeed a blessing upon them all. It had caused them to see God and themselves. Therefore they could sing out:

Chorus: . . . . . .

. . . O God, we thank Thee
Who hast given such a blessing to Canterbury.

Forgive us, O Lord, we acknowledge ourselves as type of the comman man,
Of the men and women who shut the door and sit by the fire;
Who fear the blessing of God, the loneliness of the night of God, the surrender required, the deprivation inflicted;
Who fear the injustice of men less than the justice of God;
Who fear the hand at the window, the fire in the thatch,
the fist in the tavern, the push into the canal,
Less than we fear the love of God.
We acknowledge our trespass, our weakness, our fault;
we acknowledge
That the sin of the world is upon our heads; that the blood of the martyrs and the agony of the saints
Is upon our heads.
Lord, have mercy upon us.
Christ, have mercy upon us.
Lord, have mercy upon us.
Blessed Thomas, pray for us.

Reverend Vincent Harding
Mennonite House
Atlanta, Georgia

The Justice Department also pushed its legal fight in Prince Edward County, Va., the only county in the Nation where there are no public schools. Last month Justice asked the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to order schools opened promptly without racial segregation.

Sit-ins: Justice has asked the Supreme Court to reverse convictions of more than 30 Negroes for sit-in violations in four states on the grounds the states foster the discrimination that led to the sit-ins.

Hospitals: The Department has asked to intervene in a North Carolina suit, seeking to declare unconstitutional the "separate-but-equal" provision of the Hill-Burton Act, which provides Federal funs hospital construction.

Police Brutality: During 1962, Justice brought 18 police brutality prosecutions, many of them in Northern States. One in Indiana led to the conviction of two Negro detectives on charges of beating a Negro defendent.

JM-SIZED BOOKCASES, RC

bookcase, room ou yourself de- ith Erecta-Shelf. black or gleam- you can build a s that will add me.

You can make it apart at with panels co tally . . . at any de hure. Filled with so many proc help you design the unit best sui

Smartest way to conquer

ε

Double Duty fr
Attractive, Free

DESK-CE

SALE $2
THRU THURSDAY

For the student . . . you room, living room or desk-chest of ready 48"x30"x16" unit h drawers for handy dou
it either on your He Credit Account or you count.

ETVE generously-sized drawers give at, compact storage in a handsome st of easy-to-finish knotty pine. Di-nsions are 48" wide, 14½" deep,
" high. Mechinger salesmen will hapy answer your questions on how to
ish. (17-930)

ecity of Easy-to-Find oom to Spare in this

2 DRAWER CHEST

LE $32.76
U
KSDAY

Employment Unit Director Quits Post

Wash Post 1/29/63

Employment Pres Comm.

John G. Feild is leaving his job as executive director of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, a high Government source said yesterday.

Feild has not tendered his resignation as yet and no indication was given as to why he is leaving or who his successor will be.

Feild, 39, who has held the post since April, 1961, could not be reached for comment.

It also was disclosed that he has had discussions with Department of Labor officials concerning another assignment with them.

The President's Committee is headed by Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson. Feild joined the staff after serving as legislative assistant to Sen. Philip A. Hart (D—Mich.).

Robert Kennedy Reports

Year of Rights Progress

C.R. Gen.

By Jean M. White
Staff Reporter

Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy reported yesterday on "a year of great progress in civil rights," with respect for the law by most Southerners far outweighing the violence at the University of Mississippi.

In a report to the White House, the Attorney General warned, however, that difficult problems remained and "ugly incidents like the Mississippi riot may occur again."

Kennedy noted major steps were taken last year in every area of civil rights—voting, transportation, education, employment, and housing. Progress, he emphasized, was due in large measure to the "emerging spirit of the South," with respect for the law and responsibility being shown by most of the citizens of the South.

Gains in Voting Rights

In reporting on the work of the Justice Department in the civil rights field, the Attorney General devoted nearby half of his seven-page summary to voting, which he called "the most significant civil rights problem." He indicated the Justice Department will seek additional legislation to insure equal voting rights.

Last year a literary bill died in Congress. The Attorney General has indicated that he now is more interested in equal application of literacy tests rather than a straight ban on such requirements.

Among gains in the area of voting rights, Kennedy listed these:

Negro registration has risen from 1100 to 3000 in Macon County, Ala., since a March 1961, court order; registration of 1100 previously rejected Negroes in Montgomery, Ala.; Negro registration up from 5 to more than 1000 in Bullock County, Ala., Negroes are being registered for the first time in decades in a number of counties, including East Carroll and Madison Parishes in Louisiana and Clarke and Tallahatchie Counties in Mississippi.

"Negroes' fear of attempting to register is, perhaps, as great a problem as their being prevented from registering," Kennedy noted in his report.

Example in Tennessee

He pointed to a "vivid example" in two Tennessee counties, where the Justice Department obtained assurances, by consent decrees, against economic intimidation. Since late 1960, Kennedy reported, Negro registrants have risen from none to more than 2000 in Haywood County and from 58 to more than 3000 in Fayette County.

The Attorney General's report also covered these other areas of progress:

Transportation: Systematic segregation in interstate transportation has "ceased to exist" under the Interstate Commerce Commission's new regulations. Only one city in the Nation—Jackson, Miss.—still is attempting to maintain systematic segregation of interstate rail and bus facilities, and this is under legal attack.

Schools: The number of desegregated Southern school districts rose from 912 to 972 without incident. Last year saw the first concerted action to desegrate schools that receive "impact area" funds.

Edward County Action

The Justice Department also pushed its legal fight in Prince Edward County, Va., the only county in the Nation where there are no public schools. Last month Justice asked the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to order schools opened promptly without racial segregation.

Sit-ins: Justice has asked the Supreme Court to reverse convictions of more than 30 Negroes for sit-in violations in four states on the grounds the states foster the discrimination that led to the sit-ins.

Hospitals: The Department has asked to intervene ...

The Washi
AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

W-Post 1/28/63

Civil Rights General

Civil Rights Progress

The Civil Rights Report which Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy has presented to the President has the especial value of putting into perspective the gains that were largely eclipsed by the spectacular events at Oxford, Mississippi.

Notwithstanding this untoward incident, it is plain that the year was one of achievement and one, moreover, in which the most notable progress was in the changing spirit of the South. The catalog of interventions to enforce voting rights, transportation rights and education rights makes reading of which the country has reason to be proud. If there still remains a great deal of discrimination in the land, it is discrimination about which the Government continues a persistent and serious effort to do something. There must be no slacking in this effort, for, as the Attorney General points out: "Substantial numbers of American citizens are being deprived of their right to vote because of race."

While progress sometimes seems slow, it is cheering to note, in the language of the report, that "there are no segregated airport facilities in the Nation" and that there is only one city in the Nation in which there still is segregation at interstate rail and bus facilities.

Prince Edward County, Virginia, continues to have the dubious distinction of being the only county in the Nation where there are no public schools. That nearly 1500 of the 1800 school children of that county have had no education in three years is, as the Attorney General puts it, "a disgrace to our country." It is to be hoped that the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit will order the schools there opened, in accordance with the plea of the Justice Department.

The Attorney General has been wise to acknowledge that difficult racial problems remain throughout the country. He also has been wise to point out that they exist not only in the South "but throughout the country where Negroes are victims of school resegregation, bias in housing, or employment or other facets of society."

The report will unnecessarily offend many objective people by an excessive effort to exhibit this Administration's comparatively greater zeal in the civil rights field. This repetition of comparative statistics on suits filed and actions undertaken introduces into the report a political note that might better have been omitted. If it had to be included, it would have been considerate and generous if the Attorney General had acknowledged that the Department of Justice under the administration of his predecessor pushed through to enactment in the face of great opposition the legislative foundation for many of the actions of this Administration. Whatever progress that has been made is the result of the efforts of public men in all parts of the country and both parties.

Per our discussion, Part 2 Hope you like it. Sam

For Release after 8 P.M., Friday, February 22, 1963.

ADDRESS BY SAM MASSELL, JR., Vice Mayor, City of Atlanta
Before the Mickve Israel Congregation in Savannah, Georgia
February 22, 1963
Title: "WHO IS OUR BROTHER?"

I was asked to come here tonight to speak on the subject of brotherhood, and I'm honored to be here. And, I am especially honored to have the opportunity of speaking on this particular subject.

Brotherhood is something I've thought about . . . . many times, for I truly believe it is just as important to our well-being as is our economy, our defense, and all of the other problems with which we constantly struggle. I'm afraid, however, that in this day and time the word -- brotherhood -- has come to be considered, in some cases, a corny word. Brotherhood and patriotism and love and fellowship . . . these are words which don't seem to be so often used anymore. Patriotism -- some say -- is for crackpots . . . . and brotherhood for do-gooders.

The word is much more meaningful than that to me, and it is far from being corny.

When I sat down one Saturday not long ago to assemble my thoughts for this speech, I turned first to the dictionary, hoping there to find a definition of the word which would give me a starting point, and perhaps a new idea.

But the dictionary was of little help, as Webster's definition of 'brotherhood' is simply -- "the condition of being brothers". I thought on that for awhile and realized that this is much less than what the word means to me.

I turned then to the little brochure put out by the National Conference of Christians and Jews . . . and there I found the real definition of this word. Here, it becomes a word which touches the human heart.

Brotherhood, it says, is "giving to others the rights and respect we want for ourselves".

Isn't that beautifully said? It brings the word into focus, so that you and I can have a feeling for it . . . so that it means something to us, personally.

The same thing has been said before, in another way . . . with other words . . . in another book. "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

That's the kind of brotherhood I want to talk about tonight.

As I go along it may appear that I'm mistaking the word for prejudice . . . and hatred . . . and bigotry. It may seem, in the beginning, that I don't see any signs of a true spirit of brotherhood in this world in which we live.

But that's not so. I do see love and compassion and brotherhood around me every day. Nevertheless, my eyes never close to the inhumanity which also surrounds us.

We are talking brotherhood . . . but before I finish this speech and sit down tonight, men will go to bed on a small island off the coast of Florida with fear in their hearts for what may happen tomorrow. It is fear of their own countrymen, fear of their Cuban brothers.

Before I'm done tonight, an elderly German couple, carrying all their worldly possessions in a paper bag, may steal through the night toward a high wall in Berlin, seeking freedom. If they are caught, they will die at the hands of their German brothers.

Tonight, in Mississippi, an American youth will go to bed in a college dormitory with guards standing at the door to protect him from his fellow Americans. He is not a criminal, nor a maniac dangerous to society . . . but an American Negro pursuing his God-given rights.

Tonight, here in Savannah or over in Macon, or somewhere -- two young boys may attack an old man in a service station and beat him unmercifully for the two dollars in his billfold.

Tonight, in Birmingham or Denver or Kansas City, a respected - - but Jewish -- citizen will discover that he can't buy the home of his choice because the neighborhood is "restricted".

Tonight, somewhere in this great land of ours, a man will check his fallout shelter before going to bed. He checks it every night, fearing that this might be the date when the brotherhood of man comes to an end forever. He will grumble at the prospect of such inhumanity, and righteously so. But in his own fallout shelter there is a rifle . . . put there to keep out the uninvited neighbor in case of disaster.

This, my friends, is the state of brotherhood in the world today.

Yet, man has come a long way in recent years. Today, the mind of man has created a machine which can answer almost any question. Man has built missiles which can travel the breadth of the globe in a matter of minutes, and has created warheads which can destroy whole nations in the time required to fix a flat tire. Man has found a cure for polio, and doctors in research laboratories around the nation are rapidly closing in on other dread diseases.

Very definitely, man has demonstrated that there is no limit to what the mind can achieve.

As I reflect on the accomplishments of mankind, I realize -- as you must -- that the mind has far outraced the heart. We can put a man in orbit, but we cannot yet guarantee every man his rights. We can solve the mathematical problems confronting the mind . . . but we still let prejudice and discrimination into our hearts.

We have, in Atlanta, a saying that I believe in very firmly. In the face of racial problems we say, and rightly, that we are too busy to hate. And we are. I think the feeling in Atlanta is that too much hard work has gone into building a great city to see it all destroyed or hindered at the hands of violence born of hatred.

I'd like to think there is more to it than that; to think it is more than just being too busy to hate. I'd like to believe that we simply have more love in our hearts than hate. And I hope that we never get so busy that we are too busy to love.

Perhaps I'm being overly optimistic about it, but I believe there is still hope for brotherhood in the South . . . and, for that matter, throughout the world. As Vice-Mayor of the city of Atlanta, I am in a position to see more prejudice than I care to see . . . but I also see progress. I see discrimination often . . . but I also see men of good will working together to get rid of it.

When a group of citizens, however small, work hand-in-hand to assure the rights of a single person . . . then that, in itself, is brotherhood and -- with time -- will foster further brotherhood.

We know that the seeds of prejudice are sown deeply in the South and cannot be uprooted overnight. It is extremely difficult to change a belief that one has held for all of one's life . . . beliefs held by one's parents and grandparents and their parents before them. There are in the South today honest, earnest, hard-working men and women who believe with all their hearts that integration is morally wrong. There are men - however wrongly - who would give up their lives before giving up segregation. Their backgrounds and training, and the traditions of their hometown are such that they may never be convinced that their racial or other prejudices are wrong. They've believed all their lives that every Negro is unclean . . . that every Jew is a merchant who will cheat you . . . that every Catholic is a heathen who worships the Pope instead of God . . . and that every Northener is a slick-talking Yankee who is not to be trusted.

It is important that we realize that these people's beliefs are sincere. We cannot change their views by putting them in jail . . . nor would we want to do such a thing. Our great hope lies in love and understanding. No man is born a bigot; bigotry must be learned. And what can be learned can -- through patience and understanding -- be unlearned. Love can overcome traditions. Compassion can rise above ignorance.

In Atlanta, we have had events develop which even the boldest would not have predicted fifteen years ago. Just recently, a young Atlanta Negro named Leroy Johnson ran for and was elected to the General Assembly of Georgia, from Fulton County. He ran first against white candidates and then, in the General Election, defeated a Negro Republican. He went to the Legislature, and still the few extremists cried: "Blood will flow in the streets. The white man won't stand for this!"

Well, the white man did stand for it. There were no incidents, no hatred -- and he is getting on very well with his white colleagues.

One advantage which accrues in every situation of this sort -- that of a single Negro (or single Jew, or single Japanese) -- in with a large number of whites (or Gentiles, or Americans) -- is that everyone soon learns that we are all pretty much alike. In fact, we sometimes discover that the supposedly inferior can turn out to be superior.

Senator Johnson is a case in point, for the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, an all-white organization of young men, has just honored this Negro by naming him as one of the city's "Five Outstanding Young Men of the Year". No federal troops, no federal rulings were involved in the decision to so honor him. It was not a forced decision, but an honest determination arrived at by reasonable men in a spirit of brotherhood and fair play.

Just who is our brother . . . and why don't we recognize him? I think first we need to understand what prejudice is, and what causes it. Some of it I feel I do understand. In a way, prejudice is another form of competition.

As a husband and father, I'm strongly prejudiced in favor of my family over any other. All the husbands and fathers on my block feel the same way about their families. But if a crisis comes up involving all of us, such as a detrimental change in zoning, prejudices are forgotten and the block stands together.

The same is true of cities. I am as strongly prejudiced in favor of Atlanta as you are in favor of Savannah. We have a rivalry of sorts going on all the time. But if a crisis arises involving us both, such as preservation of our University System, rivalries and prejudices are forgotten and the two cities stand together.

We want new industries to select Georgia over every other state, but all fifty states of the Union stand shoulder-to-shoulder in the face of a common problem, such as the threat of Communism.

If you have ever driven through the country on a clear, pretty day . . . you would have noticed the way cattle graze in the pasture. They're spread out all over everywhere . . . one here, one there . . . and only rarely will you ever see as many as two standing together.

But on a cold and windy day, things change. If the weather is bad, creating a common problem for all, they huddle together to help each other.

Humans are the same way. A young child can be stricken with a dread disease . . . a disease, say, which will be fatal before his next birthday. How many times have you seen such a story in the newspaper? Frequently, I believe. And the next day's paper always tells of great numbers of total strangers who have come forth to help the child or to offer gifts. The region is swept by a wave of compassion for the stricken youngster.

There are other examples. I remember once when an apartment building burned, leaving a good many people temporarily homeless. And immediately, others in the neighborhood began taking their helpless neighbors into their homes. These were people who had lived in the neighborhood for years without ever even getting to know the people next door. What brought forth their compassion in this case?

Did you ever attend a house of worship which was destroyed . . . by fire, by an explosion, or by some other means? If so, you may have been surprised to find men and women of all denominations and faiths working together to help restore the church. What makes them do it?

A common crisis seems to bind us together, overriding and overcoming all prejudices. In today's headlines we frequently read of the difficulties among France and England and this country. But the beaches of Normandy are lined with the blood of Frenchmen, Britons and Americans who died fighting for a common cause. Prejudices and problems were forgotten then.

The islands of the Pacific and the continent of Europe are dotted with the graves of brave American men who died fighting for the freedoms we enjoy in this country. The graves show no prejudice. There are Negroes in them, and white men; there are Southerners and Northerners, Republicans and Democrats -- Jews, Protestants, Catholics, athiests, and men of every faith. Prejudices were all forgotten on the battlefield.

Where is the solution to this problem of prejudice? I think the solution is understanding. Why do you think so many strangers come instantly to the aid of a stricken child? Or why were people who had been formerly aloof from their neighbors so compassionate and understanding in a time of crisis?

I think I know the answer.

Most of us have children. The child that was stricken could -- next time -- be our child. This is something we can understand.

We all have homes. We can all feel for the family whose home has burned. It could happen to us.

We can forget our prejudices anytime that we can have understanding. We can best understand when we can relate ourselves to the problem . . . when we can imagine having a personal stake in the problem.

Why then can't we understand the problems of a minority group?

Take the poor, sick individual who is prejudiced against every Negro and every Jew and every Catholic . . or every anybody. If, somehow, we can make him understand that someday he may be part of a minority . . . that someday he personally may be the victim of prejudice . . . then progress will have been made in the cause of brotherhood.

Perhaps we can remind him that right after the Civil War, during the bitter days of reconstruction, all Southerners were victims of unfair prejudice throughout the rest of the country. Or maybe we can make him realize that if the law breaks down and fails to protect one Negro at the University of Mississippi now, then one day the law will surely fail to protect him in another matter.

The history of mankind is replete with examples of prejudice . . and the tragedies which have followed closely on its heels. The people of Moses suffered from prejudice at every turn; both Jews and Christians suffered at the hands of Roman prejudice; for hundreds of years, black men and white men were sold into slavery by their own countrymen.

I could go on and on, for prejudice is very much a part of world history. But so is brotherhood.

There is still time. There is still hope for the cause of brotherhood in this country. Sometimes brotherhood must be worked at and perhaps we will have to work at it now to achieve it.

We all have lost loved ones and, later, reflected on how much more love we could and should, have bestowed upon them. Let us work at brotherhood and understanding, but let's not wait too late. Each man has the capacity. May God guide his children to be their brothers' brother.

#######

NATIONAL GUARDIAN
20 cents
the progressive newsweekly
VOL. 15, NO. 23 NEW YORK, MARCH 14, 1963

FINE PHRASES MASK FAILURE TO PROTECT NEGRO IN THE SOUTH

JFK rights message sounds big, means little

By Joanne Grant

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S first civil rights message, full of sound and fury signifying nothing, was sent to Congress Feb. 28, two years after his inauguration.

With high-sounding phrases Kennedy proposed several pieces of constructive legislation which have not the dimmest hope of passage. The sham battle to end the filibuster by a change in Rule 22 guaranteed that. William V. Shannon in the New York Post (March 5) said of Kennedy's approach to civil rights: "The President kept hands off [the rules fight]. Then last week he sent an eloquent, beautifully written message on civil rights legislation to Capitol Hill. The substantial recommendations in his message have no chance of passage because the liberal bloc lost the rules fight."

In one of the few instances in which the President took a moral stand on civil rights, the message said: "...It is not merely because of the Cold War, and not merely because of the economic waste of discrimination, that we are committed to achieving true equality of opportunity. The basic reason is because it is right."

The moral tone was there, but the moral leadership so long demanded by civil rights advocates was still lacking. Kennedy abandoned the attempt to curb the power of Dixiecrat senators, and therefore knows that civil rights bills cannot be adopted. Furthermore, if one can judge from the record of his past dealings with Congress, he will not even press for passage of the bills.

VOTING STRESSED: The most significant elements of the civil rights message dealt with voting rights. Kennedy proposed:

(1) Appointment of temporary federal voting referees in any county in which fewer than 15% of eligible Negro voters are registered to serve during litigation rather than, as at present, only after a court appoints them.

(2) Priority handling of voting suits.

(3) Specific statutory prohibition of the application of different procedures for different voting applicants.

(4) Substitution of a sixth-grade education for literacy tests as proof that the applicant is literate.

Kennedy also urged that state legislatures adopt the anti-poll tax amendment adopted by Congress last year.

Other recommendations were:

- Setting up a program of federal technical and financial assistance to school districts in the process of desegregating; and eliminating the phrase "separate but equal" in the Morill Land Grant College Act.
- Extending the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights for at least four years and empowering it to act as a national civil rights clearing house to provide information, advice and technical assistance to any private or public requesting agency.

TO MONITOR PACTS: On employment the President said that anti-discrimination provisions of Government contracts and voluntary "plans for progress" agreements signed under the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity would be "carefully monitored and strictly enforced." He announced that he had directed the Justice Department to enter cases of discrimination by labor unions and to urge the National Labor Relations Board to act on such cases.

Robert E. Baker said in the Washington Post March 3, that "laudatory" as the proposals are, they would not "strike at the crux of the matter" in hard-core areas of the South. Noting that a few hours after the President's message a voter registration worker in Mississippi (James Travis, 20, of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) was shot in the neck, Baker said: "It is the intimidation and violence which meets Negro voter efforts in such areas that must be dealt with . . ." The Kennedy message did not even mention the violence and brutality directed at Negroes in the South.

Only one recommendation of the Civil Rights Commission—the replacement of literacy tests by proof of a sixth grade education—was included in the message. The CRC had also recommended compilation of voting statistics by race by the U.S. Census Bureau, for use in forcing reapportionment under the 14th Amendment, and amendment of the criminal code to prohibit any arbitrary action to deprive Negroes of the vote. It emphasized that the 14th Amendment specifically provides enforcement power to protect the right to vote regardless of race.

GOP CRITICAL: Kennedy's proposals were criticized by Republicans as too little and too late. New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller said Congress should be asked to enact a fair employment practices act, to make the Civil Rights Commission permanent, and to empower the Attorney General to file civil actions to prevent the denial of voting rights. Rockefeller also scored Kennedy for his appointment of racist judges in the South. (Kennedy answered this criticism in a press conference March 6: "On the whole, I believe—and this is not true just of this administration—I think that the men that have been appointed to judgeships in the South, sharing, perhaps as they do, the general outlook of the South, have done a remarkable job in fulfilling their oath of office.")

Anthony Lewis in a New York Times News Service article March 7, said: "Justice Department officials, while not disagreeing with the President's view of the whole record, will admit privately that they are disappointed about the way some of the Southern appointments have turned out."

Rep. John Lindsay (R-N.Y.) who has introduced a civil rights package, criticized the President's proposal for not living up to the 1960 Democratic platform.

The NAACP said the program does not go far enough and pointed out there was no new proposal on discrimination in housing; no deadline for school desegregation and no fair employment practices law.

THE RECORD: Both the President and Attorney General Robert Kennedy, in a recent report on civil rights progress, extolled the administration's civil rights record.

The President said that as a result of the Interstate Commerce Commission order and Department of Justice suits against discrimination in interstate travel facilities, segregation has "virtually ceased to exist." He said "isolated instances of discrimination" no doubt would continue, but such discrimination would be dealt with promptly.

Actually, compliance with the ICC order has been far from general. Rather, the reverse is true. While "colored" and "white" signs have been removed from terminals for the most part, Negroes are harassed and threatened, sometimes arrested if they attempt to use "white" waiting rooms, ticket counters or rest rooms. Steps toward integration, especially in bus terminals, are the "isolated instances"; noncompliance is the general rule.

SOME FACTS: The President said: "For the first time the full force of executive authority is being exerted in the battle against race discrimination." But voter registration workers in Mississippi have repeatedly and vainly wired the President asking for federal marshals to protect their lives and the lives of Negro voting applicants. FBI "investigations" of police brutality and other violence against Negroes in Southwest Georgia have yielded no results. And Justice Department lawyers in cases before a Kennedy-appointed racist judge in Americus, Ga., even asked their Negro witnesses not to act "uppity."

Belland in the IUD Bulletin, Washington, D.C.
"How yuh spell 'flunk'?"

The Attorney General boasted that in 20 counties in four hard-core states voting records were made available voluntarily, in 50 counties discriminatory practices were "voluntarily abandoned," and 32 suits and 82 voting record inspections were undertaken by the Justice Department.

But the President cited a recent report that shows that in 200 counties less than 15% of eligible Negroes are registered. In these counties Negroes who attempt to register are thrown off the land, their insurance is canceled, their homes are shot into, their churches are burned. There is no evidence the "full force of executive authority" has been brought to bear on officials of Leflore county, Miss., where 22,000 Negroes were removed from the federal surplus commodity program after a voter registration campaign there.

ON INTEGRATION: The Attorney General reported that 972 Southern school districts are desegregated. The President declared that peaceful desegregation was effected in Dallas, New Orleans, Memphis and Atlanta. Both said desegregation took place frequently with the help of federal persuasion. Both neglected to note that the South has a total of 6,368 school districts, and that except for the District of Columbia, whatever integration has taken place is of the "token" variety. Neither the President nor the Attorney General pointed out that fewer than 8% of Southern Negro children attend schools with whites.

On employment, the President said that the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity had received more than 1,300 complaints in two years and has achieved corrective action on 72% of the cases handled. He did not say how many cases were handled. Figures released last November showed that of 1,263 complaints, corrective action was taken in 297.

The demand for civil rights legislation raised by the civil rights leaders and by some members of Congress has been answered from the White House with a recital of inflated "accomplishments" and a minimal legislative program which is certain to be filibustered to death.

REPRINTED BY:
THE STUDENT NONVIOLENT COORDINATING COMMITTEE

Cavalier

A
FAWCETT PUBLICATION
APRIL, 1963
50 CENTS

Eugene Burdick

NAT HENTOFF

INSIDE BOB NEWHART

Anthony Quinn

THE NUDE SUSAN HARRISON

FOOL'S PARADISE OF THE SOUTHERN WHITE BY GERALD WALKER

CAVALIER IN PERSON

Leading off the April CAVALIER on p. 10, Gerald Walker sharply satirizes Dixie's racist dogma in "The Fool's Paradise of the Southern White." A recent president of the Society of Magazine Writers, Walker, except for a freshman spell at the University of Georgia, was raised and educated in New York City where he was graduated from New York University and took postgraduate work at Columbia University. In addition to writing short stories, plays and libretti, Walker has had articles published in virtually every leading American magazine: Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan, Redbook, Esquire, Playboy, Good Housekeeping and Reader's Digest, to name a few. When not free-lancing, he serves as book reviewer for such publications as N. Y. Times, N. Y. Post and Saturday Review. Walker notes that he's met "quite a few White Northerners who would qualify as Honorary—if that is the word—White Southerners." The 35-year-old writer is married to actress Greta Markson and is the proud father of a year-old son.

Academy-award winner Anthony Quinn, one of America's most talented and busiest thespians, is currently on view in the films Lawrence of Arabia, Requiem For A Heavyweight and Barabbas, and in the Broadway production of Tchin-Tchin. H. E. F. Donohue, just signed to a two-book contract by Viking Press, caught Quinn between acts for a revealing dissertation on "The Success Thing," p. 13. In a lighter vein, humorist James Collier traces the off-color history of blue humor, p. 16, before Peter Basch introduces the girls of West Berlin, p. 18.

Novelist Eugene Burdick, author of The Blue of Capicorn and co-author of current best-seller Fail-Safe, draws from his South Seas experiences to fashion a fascinating tale, "The Second Life of Bony Bonaparte," beginning on p. 86. In "There Are No Atheists on the Stock Exchange," short story stylist Arthur Kaplan proves that even the facts of life can sometimes be refuted by feminine logic, p. 28. Flower Drum Song creator C. Y. Lee, doing research for his new novel, recently spent six weeks in Hong Kong and reports his visitation, beginning on p. 62. Lee's only Hong Kong complaint: "The food is so good that the town is a tough place for a man to try to reduce."

BURDICK

WALKER

LEE

At 19, Susan Harrison appeared on Broadway in The Cave Dwellers, then went on to co-star in the films Sweet Smell of Success and Key Witness. Now 24 and more concerned with her travels than an acting career, Susan Harrison owns the exciting face on p. 74.

After former newspaperman Roland A. Goodman, now a financial writer, puts in a call on The Wall Street Journal, p. 31, Television Age editor Don Dunn buttonholes the Ivy League manner of comedian Bob Newhart, p. 52. Artist Dick Shelton then introduces America's leading saber waver, Mike Dasaro, p. 34, before playwright Charles L. Mee, Jr., details the theatre's enterprising exodus to the hinterlands, p. 40. April's expanded fashion section features the latest in suede and leather looks, p. 56, and, beginning on p. 43, Date-of-the-Month Miss Vi Sexton should prove to be a TV treat well worth watching. Rounding out the April CAVALIER, other departments include CAVALIER Decameron, p. 67, and reports on sport (p. 6), jazz (p. 7), food (p. 36) and drink (p. 38).

Readers are invited to go a-Maying with us next month, when CAVALIER visits Paris in the springtime and Rome's raffish papparazzi. The continental air of the issue will be topped off with a daring photographic reprise of a life of leisure at St. Tropez, where the gilded set disports to the delight of the shutterbugs, to the dismay of the protectors of public morals and to the utter unconcern of themselves. Just flashing through Paris and its European environs has been known to be sufficient, but our distinguished board of contributors will include A. J. Liebling, William Saroyan, Joseph Wechsberg, Geoffry Bocca and photographer Dennis Stock, whose pictures give new meaning to the old cognomen—"City of Light." CAVALIER's itinerary for the coming months, in fact, will take the world for our province and then continue with the acquisition as part of our regular coverage. On the local scene, Alan Levy will portray the Young Man of Louisville. Himself an alumnus of that city, Alan discovers an amazing Southern-Midwestern dichotomy in its citizens. In fact, there is much of interest in Louisville besides the famed Derby Day.

RUSS HALFORD

Editor
FREDERIC A. BIRMINGHAM

Managing Editor
JOHN R. MULLIGAN

Art Editor
BILL PAGE

Associate Editor
HAMILTON PECK

Associate Editor
CHARLES L. MEE, Jr.

Assistant Editor
LAWRENCE D. LINDERMAN

Art Associate
RICHARD M. ZIMMERMAN

CAVALIER IS A FAWCETT PUBLICATION

Editorial Director
RALPH DAIGH

Art Director
AL ALLARD

Advertising Director
JAMES B. BOYNTON

Associate Art Director
RALPH MATTISON

Production Director
GEORGE H. CARL

Production Manager
E. C. HAGEN

CONTENTS FOR APRIL, 1963. VOL. 13, NO. 118

Cavalier

10 FOOL'S PARADISE OF THE SOUTHERN WHITE—satire.....Gerald Walker
13 THE SUCCESS THING—Anthony Quinn interview .....H. E. F. Donohue
16 A RISQUÉ WELL WORTH TAKING—humor.....James Collier
18 WEST OF THE WALL—pictorial.....Peter Basch
26 THE FACE OF MAN—humor.....J. G. Farris
28 NO ATHEISTS ON STOCK EXCHANGE—fiction....Arthur Kaplan
31 WALL STREET JOURNAL—profile.....Roland Goodman
34 MIKE DASARO: U.S. FENCING CHAMP—sport.....Dick Shelton
36 THE EGG AND YOU—cookery.....L. S. Tucker
38 HEARD ALONG THE GRAPEVINE—drink.....George Wiswell
40 HEYDAY FOR HAMS IN HINTERLANDS—theatre....C. L. Mee, Jr.
43 T-vi—Date-of-the-Month.....photos by William Graham
52 BOB NEWHART—Cavalier composite.....Don Dunn
56 THE OLD SKIN GAME—fashion.....Gerald McCann
62 HONG KONG: BIG AND BOOMING—travel.....C. Y. Lee
66 THE RAKE'S STRATAGEM—Cavalier Decameron .....Paul J. Gillette
74 SUSAN HARRISON—beauty of stage and film
86 SECOND LIFE OF BONY BONAPARTE—fiction..Eugene Burdick

REGULAR FEATURES

2 CAVALIER IN PERSON— notes on the issue
4 MAIL CALL
6 THE SOUNDING BOARD
6 SPORTS.....Robert L. Teague
7 RECORDS.....Nat Hentoff
8 FILM.....Andrew Sarris
9 OUR MAN IN MANHATTAN.....Bill Manville
94 A FUNNY ONE FOR THE ROAD—humor

CREDITS: HEYDAY FOR HAMS IN THE HINTERLANDS reprinted in part by permission of Playbill.
PHOTO CREDITS: pp. 13, 14, 15, Sam Shaw; pp. 36, 37, Arnold T. Rosenberg; pp. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, Galaxy/William Graham; pp. 57, 58, 59, Sid Latham; pp. 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, Reshovsky/Pix; p. 87, Sid Latham.

CAVALIER is published monthly by Fawcett Publications, Inc., Fawcett Bldg., Greenwich, Conn. President, W. H. Fawcett, Jr.; general manager, Roger Fawcett; secretary-treasurer, Gordon Fawcett; circulation director, Roscoe K. Fawcett; assistant general manager, Donald P. Hanson.

ADDRESS ALL MAIL: Subscriptions, change of address, Form 3579 to Subscription Dept., Fawcett Bldg., Greenwich, Conn.
Second-class postage paid at Greenwich, Conn., and at additional mailing offices.
EDITORIAL OFFICES: 67 W. 44th St., New York 36, N. Y. Return postage must accompany all manuscripts, drawings, and photographs submitted if they are to be returned and no responsibility can be assumed for unsolicited materials.
ADVERTISING OFFICES: 67 W. 44th St., New York 36, N. Y.; 612 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago 11, Ill.; 1659 Guardian Bldg., Detroit 26, Mich.; 2978 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles 5, Calif.; 681 Market St., San Francisco 5, Calif.; 123 S. Broad St., Philadelphia 9, Pa.; 1430 West Peachtree St., N.W., Atlanta, Ga.; Hale Printup & Associates, Langford Bldg., Miami 32, Fla.
Printed in U.S.A. Copyright 1963 by Fawcett Publications, Inc. Reprinting in whole or in part forbidden except by permission of the Publishers.
SUBSCRIPTION PRICE: $5.00 a year in U.S. and possessions. $5.50 a year in Canada. All other countries $7.50 a year. Foreign subscriptions and sales should be remitted by International Money Order in U.S. funds payable at Greenwich, Conn.

Permission hereby granted to quote from this issue of CAVALIER on radio or television, provided a total of not more than 1,000 words is quoted and credit is given to the title of the magazine and issue, as well as the statement, copyright 1963, by Fawcett Publications, Inc.

Member of: Audit Bureau of Circulations ABC Magazine Publishers Association, Inc. MPA

ALGREN OUTBURST

Nelson Algren's Schlepker (Feb.) was one of the funniest short stories I've read in years. I've labored under the impression that Algren was at his best only when dealing with tragedy, but his scene-stealing satire on Hollywood happily proved me wrong.

Ronald O'Hare
Los Angeles, Cal.

. . . It seems to me that Nelson Algren's Schlepker was not just a piece of amusing fiction, but a case of the writer ridiculing a Hollywood which has given him nothing but a hard time during his long, and occasionally brilliant, career.

It's fairly common knowledge out here that the character Schlepker bears more than a passing resemblance to Otto Preminger, who did the film version of Algren's The Man With The Golden Arm. Algren and Preminger didn't get along at all, differing on matters of money and taste. Algren claimed he was underpaid, that his screenplay wasn't used and that his realistic novel was emasculated as grist for Hollywood's run-of-the-mill tripe.

More recently, Algren's A Walk On The Wild Side was made into a film, also to the displeasure of the author. In Schlepker, Algren strikes back at the great stupidity and pompousness that still dominates the Hollywood scene.

Name Withheld
Los Angeles, Cal.

GLEASON: MELANCHOLY CAVALIER

Frederick Christian's revealing article on Jackie Gleason (Feb.) was most welcome and most readable. Gleason's incredible many-sided talents make him America's only performer capable of being a topnotch comedian and a highly competent actor.

George Folkins
Detroit, Mich.

. . . After Mr. Gleason's disgraceful behavior on David Susskind's television show some months ago, it is a wonder someone doesn't puncture this oversized blimp permanently.

Mrs. Jane Reed
Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

. . . Gleason is bigger than life and twice as much fun.

Noel Behrman
Madison, Wis.

Just a line to say that I enjoyed Frederick Christian's comprehensive study of Jackie Gleason and thought that the pictures accompanying the story were great.

Mike St. John
Terre Haute, Ind.

MISS FEBRUARY WEEKEND

CAVALIER's Dates-of-the-Month are the most sensational women I've ever seen in an American magazine. February's red-tressed Rita de Portago (somehow, "redhead" just wouldn't be apropos) had the high-style and elegance that CAVALIER is able to capture so well in its photography.

Norm Saxon
New York, N.Y.

. . . Rita de Portago will be CAVALIER's Date-of-the-Year.

Mike Carpenter
Cleveland, Ohio

. . . Zowie!

Steve Solway
Harrisburg, Pa.

. . . Peter Basch's photographs of Miss Rita de Portago were breathtaking.

Rod Tarkenton
Phoenix, Ariz.

I have a problem. Since CAVALIER presented its first Date-of-the-Month, Miss Denyse Turner, in September, I have carefully removed the fold-out sections from each succeeding issue and hung them up to admire. CAVALIER's young women not only brighten up the otherwise drab mien of my lowly college pad, but also allow me to completely relax during study breaks.

My problem is this: Since February's Date-of-the-Month, Miss Rita de Portago, took her place on the livingroom wall, I find myself unable to concentrate. Everytime I sit down to the books, I wind up gazing longingly at Miss de Portago, leaving my assignments undone. What can I do?

Chuck Johnson
University of Illinois
Urbana, Ill.

Study in the kitchen.

Some unpleasant truths re the racial inferiority of those somnolent citizens below that famous Line

FOOL'S PARADISE OF THE SOUTHERN WHITE

BY GERALD WALKER

Some of my best friends are White Southerners.

Personally, I feel only the greatest affection and respect for the White Southerner—in his place. The trouble is, however, that lately the White Southerner has shown all too little awareness of what and where his proper place is. I refer, of course, to his precipitous turning away from his traditional agrarian way of life and his rather pushy efforts in recent years to attract new industry below the Mason-Dixon Line.

Now, generally speaking, it is certainly commendable for a backward region to try to raise itself. But I must add in all candor that the impatient, not to say aggressive, manner in which a handful of White Southern agitators has gone about this task has sown the seeds of suspicion and competition between our two regions where previously there had been only harmony and understanding; indeed, inter-regional relations have deteriorated badly.

Moreover, it seems to me the real point is that perhaps it is time for the rest of the country to ask: Is the White Southerner really ready for progress? Is he trying to come too far too fast?

After all, the White Southerner is but one hundred years removed from practicing slavery. And while, admittedly, he has made rapid strides and come a long way since losing the Civil War to an adversary battle-proved to be his superior, has he yet earned the right of full participation in the industrialized mainstream of contemporary American life? Would it not be better for all concerned for the White Northerner to continue his stewardship of the South until such a time as there was not a shred of a doubt of the White Southerner's capacity to fend for himself?

For the plain fact of the matter is that there are vast areas of difference between the White Southerner and the White Northerner. These differences—in morality, in criminality, in temperament, in mentality, in ambition and, generally, in the ability to adapt to the ways of Western civilization—first became apparent to me when I was a carpetbagging freshman at the University of Georgia in 1945.

Since then, as a result of a number of return trips to the South, I have gotten to know the White Southerner well. I have lived close to them for long periods, observed their customs, visited in their homes, broken bread with them and gone to their social functions. Making due allowance for the White Southerner's good qualities —humor, hospitality, charm, chattiness—I soon came to realize that he was, in fact, a totally different and essentially inferior breed when measured against his neighbor, the White Northerner.

These firsthand observations have lately been substantiated by the impartial findings of modern science, as set forth most effectively by Carleton Putnam in his eye-opening work, Race and Reason. Mr. Putnam, whose extensive background as an airlines executive led him directly into becoming a noted amateur authority in the fields of anthropology, biology, psychology and anatomy, is primarily concerned with demonstrating the innate, hereditary factors which account for the observable inferiority of the average Negro to the average White. (Some indication of the brilliance with which he succeeded may be gathered from the wide circulation —over 100,000 copies sold—and enthusiastic reception that his book has enjoyed in Southern States since its publication in 1961. For example, Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett proclaimed October 26, 1961, as Race And Reason Day, capped by a $25-a-plate dinner in Putnam's honor, and the Louisiana State Legislature passed a resolution that same year ordering high schools throughout the state to assign the book for study to "selected mature students.")

Needless to say, valid scientific principles and procedures are applicable to more than one set of data and circumstances. Thus, a yardstick may be used to measure the length of an eel as well as a snake. And so it is only further proof of the ingeniousness and usefulness of the anthropological and cultural criteria developed by Mr. Putnam and his school if I now employ them in a painstaking, scientific comparison of the average White Southerner and the average White Northerner. As Mr. Putnam and similarly objective researchers might say, let the chips fall where they may, it is only the truth that we are after.

This specialized field is still too new for there to have been much extensive research yet on the comparative skull sizes and brain weights of White Southerners as opposed to White Northerners. However, there has been some very good work done in connection with the well known innate defect in the White Southerners' jawbone and larynx, by which he is prevented from speaking the English language properly.

According to Prof. W. A. Emerson, research director of the nonprofit Curtis Foundation's Center for Higher Learning and himself a White Southerner, the WS jawbone averages 1.6 centimeters longer that that of the typical WN specimen. Other investigators, building upon this discovery, have found that this additional length narrows the throat cavity, signally constricting the larynx and causing the congenital speech abnormality popularly known as a "Southern accent." In addition, particularly in the case of WS females and political figures, it seems to prevent the speaker from cutting off the flow of words until at least the better part of an hour has passed. This is the sad result of several centuries of inbreeding of regional stock that was poor to begin with.

Along these lines, it is of the highest significance that not one of America's first five astronauts was a WS. Naval Comdr. Alan Shepard, Jr. was born in New Hampshire, Maj. Virgil Grissom in Indiana, Marine Lt. Col. John Glenn in Ohio, Comdr. Malcolm Carpenter in Colorado and Comdr. Walter Schirra in New Jersey. In short, when the National Aeronautics and Space Administration was given every resource to comb this country for the cream of American manhood, the WS was bypassed in favor of the WN. Said an Air Force general at the time Project Mercury began, "What we're looking for is a group of ordinary supermen." NASA either did not look in Dixie; or if it did, none was found.

But the WS has never been much of a superman—not even an ordinary one. Frederick Law Olmstead, the distinguished 19th Century WN landscape architect, traveled throughout the entire Old South and in 1861, in The Cotton Kingdom, he reported on his interviews with five hundred WS men in their own homes and across their own tables.

". . . the proportion of the free white men," Olmstead wrote, "who live as well in any respect as our working classes in the North, on an average, is small, and the citizens of the cotton States, as a whole, are poor. They work little, and that little, badly; they earn little, they sell little; they buy little, and they have little—very little—of the common comforts and consolations of civilized life. Their destitution is not material only; it is intellectual and it is moral."

Said Henry Adams of Roony Lee, son of Robert E. Lee, and other Southern Bourbons he knew at Harvard from 1854 to 1858: "The habit of command was not enough, and the Virginian had little else. He was simple beyond analysis; so simple that even the simple New England student could not realize him. No one knew enough to know how ignorant he was, how childlike; how helpless before the relative complexity of a school. . . . Strictly, the Southerner had no mind; he had temperament. He was not a scholar; he had no intellectual training; he could not analyze an idea, and he could not even conceive of admitting two. . . ."

So much for the Old South, what of the New—the industrialized South prematurely announced in 1886 by Atlanta newspaper editor Henry W. Grady? Industrialization never fully "took," but it went far enough for the incisive WS historian, W. J. Cash, to include a memorable word-picture in The Mind of the South.

According to Cash, "By 1900 the cotton-mill worker was a pretty distinct physical type in the South; a type in some respects perhaps inferior to even that of the old poor white, which in general had been his to begin with. A dead-white skin, a sunken chest, and stooping shoulders were the earmarks of the breed. Chinless faces, microcephalic foreheads, rabbit teeth, goggling dead-fish eyes, rickety limbs, and stunted bodies abounded—over and beyond the limit of their prevalence in the countryside. The women were characteristically stringy-haired and limp of breast at twenty, and shrunken hags at thirty or forty. And the incidence of tuberculosis, of insanity and epilepsy, and, above all, of pellagra, the curious vitamin-deficiency disease which is nearly peculiar to the South, was increasing."

This is not the Snopes-haunted fiction of a Faulkner pursued by a vision of rapacious, termite-like subhumans taking over the South. These are the words of a WS historian, a man who deals in facts, not horrific fables.

Thomas Wolfe, another literary WS, has testified to his fellows' "hostile and murderous intrenchment against all new life . . . their cheap mythology, their legend of the charm of their manners, the aristocratic culture of their lives, the quaint sweetness of their drawl." Perhaps most disturbing to Wolfe was "the familiar rationalizing and self-defense of Southern fear and Southern failure . . . its inability to meet or to adjust itself to the conditions, strifes, and ardors of a modern life; its old, sick, Appomattoxlike retreat into the shades of folly and delusion . . . of florid legend and defensive casuistry. . . ." And finally Wolfe remarks of his autobiographical character, George Webber, "He was a Southerner, and he knew that there was something wounded in the South. He knew that there was something twisted, dark, and full of pain which Southerners (continued on page 68)

FOOL'S PARADISE

(continued from page 12)

have known all their lives—something rooted in their souls beyond all contradiction."

Of course, it may be objected that what we have just presented are but isolated impressions, albeit perceptive ones based on careful observation and investigation. What is needed, it might be said, is large-scale, objective, up-to-date evidence concerning the physical and mental makeup of the WS. For precisely this sort of data, let us now examine some Selective Service statistics from World Wars I and II.

In 1917, Army psychologists devised what they called the Beta intelligence test for inductees. A leading segregationist intellectual spokesman, Richmond News Leader editor James Jackson Kilpatrick cited a sampling of the Beta test results in his recent book, The Southern Case for School Segregation. Even the figures selected by him show the WS running a poor second to the WN, as can be seen from the following:

WHITE SOUTHERNERS AND WHITE NORTHERNERS
ARMY INTELLIGENCE TESTS, 1918

WS State	Median Score	WN State	Median Score
Mississippi	41.25	Pennsylvania	64.6
Kentucky	41.50	New York	64.0
Arkansas	41.55	Illinois	63.0
Georgia	42.12	Ohio	66.7

Oddly enough, although Mr. Kilpatrick used a similar differential between White Southerners and Negro Southerners as the basis for arguing the latter's inferiority and for justifying segregation, he did not feel logically impelled to draw the same conclusions about the WS in relation to the WN. This is a contemporary example of the WS's inability to conceive of admitting two ideas at once, first pointed out by Henry Adams a century ago.

In the two decades between World Wars I and II, the WS—thanks to prodigious efforts by the federal government and private foundations—experienced notable increases in health and in educational, cultural, economic and social opportunities. Surely, it might be supposed, these gains would have been reflected in his showing when tested for military service. No such improvement can be discerned.

During World War II, the Selective Service System divided the country into four regions: Region I, North; Region II, Midwest; Region III, Far West, and Region IV, South. For present purposes, let us limit our comparisons to Region I (Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York) and Region IV (Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Florida, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana).

General service acceptance rates and disqualification rates per 100 white registrants from November 1940 to December 1943 were:

REGION I (North)—59.4 accepted for general service; 25.8 disqualified.

REGION IV (South)— 57.3 accepted for general service; 31.9 disqualified.

(The difference between the sum of acceptances and rejections and the total of 100 per cent is accounted for by men admitted for limited service.)

During the above period, the acceptance rate of WS males was not only lower than that of WN males of Region I, but was lower than that of WN males in the other two regions as well: Region II, Midwest—60.9 accepted, 26.4 disqualified; Region III, Far West—58.6 accepted, 27.1 disqualified.

Nor did the relative discrepancy between acceptance and rejection rates for WNs and WSes change later in the war. From January 1944 to December 1944 the figures were:

REGION I (North)—54.9 accepted; 42.6 disqualified.

REGION IV (South)—48.6 accepted; 49.8 disqualified.

Infant mortality rates are another index of living conditions and a population's hardiness. Expressed as a rate per 1,000 live white births, latest government figures show:

New England, 22.1 (WN); Middle Atlantic, 22.2 (WN).

South Atlantic, 24.6 (WS); East South Central, 25.4 (WS): West South Central, 24.4 (WS).

The WS's poor showing physically and mentally is matched only by his moral deficiencies and criminal inclinations. Reported John Gunther in Inside U. S. A., "The kind of piquant sociological detail known to readers of William Faulkner still crops up in the news from day to day. While I was in Atlanta the papers printed a handsome little story about nine sisters, all of whom were prostitutes in the same room. Lillian Smith, the author of Strange Fruit, told me in Clayton, Georgia, of a recent case in which a baby died. The parents left it on the bed to rot. They were not rendered helpless by grief. They made no effort to bury the body because they simply didn't know any better."

Promiscuity and illegitimacy run 20 per cent higher among WSes than among WNs. The U.S. National Vital Statistics Division report for 1960 says that 27.35 out of every 1,000 live WS births took place out of wedlock; the comparable figure for WNs was 22.00. Another way of putting this is to state the White illegitimacy rate as a percentage of total White births. In 1956, Mississippi Representative John Bell Williams introduced on the House floor figures showing WS illegitimate births averaging 1.95 per cent of total WS births, and 1.45 per cent for WNs.

In the same speech, Representative Williams let slip another set of figures which pointed up the higher rate of crime among WSes compared with WNs. The figures revealed that in the thirteen Northern states he cited the rate of WN felony prisoners then in jail came to 21 per 100,000 WN population, but in the ten Southern states he selected, the WS rate was 29 per 100,000.

In particular, crimes of violence are an old Southern custom. Charlotte, North Carolina, was once known as "The Murder Capital of America." Writing in 1941, WS historian W. J. Cash said, ". . . long before hatred for the black man had begun to play any direct part in the pattern (of more than three hundred persons said to have been hanged or burned by mobs [in the South] between 1840 and 1860, less than ten per cent were Negroes) the South had become peculiarly the home of lynching." Cash then goes on to record that ". . . of the grand total of 3,397 Negroes lynched in the nation from the beginning of 1882 until the close of 1938, only 366 were lynched outside the former Confederate States, and of these 185 were lynched in the border states of Maryland, Kentucky, West Virginia and Missouri, themselves more than half Southern."

Although the WS constitutes 27 per cent of the country's white population, he is responsible for an alarmingly disproportionate share of American crime. Thus, the Justice Department's latest edition of National Prisoner Statistics indicates that of all prisoners executed under civil authority in the United States, 1930-1961, for murder, rape, armed robbery and kidnaping, 36.5 per cent were WSes.

Illiteracy is a longstanding WS tradition going back to Colonial days, but the WS has shown a remarkable ability to transmit this drawback from generation to generation. According to recent figures of the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, here is a breakdown of the percentage of the white population, 25 years or older, considered to be functionally illiterate:

Conn.	6.1	Ala.	9.4
Del.	4.2	Ark	10.6
Me.	4.5	Fla.	5.3
Md.	5.5	Ga.	10.3
Mass.	5.9	Ky.	13.1
N. H.	4.4	La.	13.6
N. J.	6.3	Miss.	7.1
N. Y.	7.4	N. C.	12.2
Pa.	6.3	Okla.	7.6
R. I.	7.4	S. C.	11.6
Vt.	3.8	Tenn.	12.7
		Tex.	12.0
		Va.	9.3

In an attempt to escape the crime, violence and primitive living standards which pervade their native region, over 4,000,000 Southerners—White and Negro—left Dixie during the 1950s, somewhat more than the number of persons who fled East Germany during a comparable period. Unhappily, the WS—not to mention his new neighbors—found that he carried these conditions right along with him.

Albert N. Votaw, in the February 1958 Harper's, described the prickly integration problem the WS presented to a typical Northern city. At that time there were 70,000 WS recent arrivals in Chicago. Settling in one South Side neighborhood, they presented the authorities with a number of difficulties. A police captain was quoted as saying, "They are vicious and knife-happy. They are involved in 75 per cent of our arrests in this district." Observed a municipal court judge, ". . . you'll never improve the neighborhood until you get rid of them."

Other comments on the transplanted WS during the course of the article: ". . . disorderly, untamed to urban ways . . . anti-social to the point of delinquency in the eyes of their neighbors . . . the [poor] domestic habits they bring from small backwoods communities . . . Their housekeeping is easy to the point of disorder . . . children play freely anywhere, without any supervision . . . when it comes to sex training, their habits—with respect to such matters as incest and statutory rape—are clearly at variance with urban legal requirements, and parents fail to appreciate the interest authorities take in their sex life . . . On the job they are said to lack ambition . . . considered poor tenants . . . [White] Southern [school] children are handicapped . . . They are too old for their grades and too mature physically for their classmates . . . Prone to disease . . . They are a disgrace to their race."

A South Side school principal has said that the average I. Q. of his 1,400 pupils, most of whom are WS, is only 87; moreover, only 16 of them had a rating of above 120.

The Chicago Sunday Tribune summed things up this way: "The Southern hillbilly migrants, who have descended like a plague of locusts in the last few years, have the lowest standard of living and moral code (if any), the biggest capacity for liquor, and the most savage tactics when drunk, which is most of the time."

Obviously, the WS isn't the same kind of person as the WN. He just isn't accustomed to, or perhaps capable of, living the same way the rest of us do, and we should make allowances for that fact. However, at the same time, we should put some sensible limit on the extent of the WS's participation in business, national affairs and inter-regional social contact. After all, as essayist Harry Golden, editor of the Carolina Israelite, has said, would you want your sister to marry a Governor Faubus?

WS and WN should each stick to his own kind, moving forward separately and harmoniously as in the past. The WS should have enough regional and racial pride to want to develop in his own way and at his own natural pace, not force himself in when and where he isn't wanted. Besides, geographical separation is a basic law of nature. If the good Lord had intended WSes and WNs to work and live in the same way and locale, He would not have created a North and a South in the first place.

Most important of all, we cannot risk jeopardizing the American way of life for the sake of the impulsive, impatient leaders of a minority; that would be a perversion of the true meaning of democracy. For although it would undoubtedly raise the WS if the standards of inter-regional intercourse were relaxed to permit him a larger role in the nation's affairs, it would at the same time inevitably lower the WN.

What, after all, has the WS contributed to American civilization? It is an extraordinary catalogue: hookworm, slavery, the filibuster, hominy grits, the Ku Klux Klan, pellagra, mint julips, lynching, the University of Mississippi and high treason in seceding from the Union. Sic transit gloria moonshine.

It would be patently unfair to leave the impression that all WSes are naturally primitive, violent, criminal, shiftless, promiscuous, uncultured and undistinguished. There have been a number, perhaps a hundred over the past three and a half centuries, who do not fall into those categories—but many of these had Northern blood.

Among more recent WS notables, Senator Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia and his brother, Admiral Richard Byrd, have a WN great-great-great-grandmother. The father of the late Josephus Daniels, North Carolina newspaper editor and statesman, was a Rhode Island ship's carpenter.

Zachary Taylor, twelfth president of the United States, had WN ancestry. Jefferson Davis, the president of the Confederate States, was the son of a WN. And WN blood flowed through the veins of such other stalwarts of the Confederacy as Maj. Gen. "Jeb" Stuart, Gen. James Longstreet, Gen. John Clifford Pemberton and John Slidell, appointed commissioner to France by Jefferson Davis. Even Daniel Boone was born in Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

Pure-bred WSes such as Robert E. Lee and John C. Calhoun are among the exceptions that prove the rule. However, a son of Richard Lee, the famous founder of the Lee family in America, married a WN and the socially prominent Ditchley branch of Lees is descended from a WN.

It should also be noted that the figure of the Yankee peddler was a familiar one throughout the South during the 18th Century. As he wended his way across the countryside selling his wares, it is not inconceivable that, in addition to calicoes, scissors and clocks, he may also have left behind here and there some WN genes. These might well have made their presence felt without ever showing up on an official genealogy.

It only needs to be said that the average rank-and-file WS today is well satisfied with things as they are, but is being goaded on by a handful of agitators and fomentors into making more demands than the country can safely meet, or than WSes as a whole could handle in their present stage of development. Who are these clandestine pressure groups and what are they really after?

A hint was provided in a New York Times dispatch of January 28, 1962, about the lures offered by the WS in his drive to attract new industry. "This stepped-up economic warfare," wrote Atlanta correspondent Claude Sitton, ". . . . poses a threat to areas in the North and Midwest in which rising costs and industrial strife have caused management to grow restless. It also has aroused concern in financial circles. Some securities experts contend that industrial subsidies being offered in both the South and the North are endangering the tax structure and municipal credit and carrying the nation toward state capitalism. A South Carolina legislative committee has termed these lures 'somewhat socialistic.'" [emphasis added]

Has the Kremlin taken over the WS equality movement? How sincere is the WS when it can be shown that he is playing directly into the hands of a foreign ideology? Are we being lulled by a pack of fine-sounding words into forgetting the WS's natural tendencies toward violence and lust? These are pressing questions for every WN American to keep in mind during the trying days ahead. □ problem," Newhart said, "in settling for the knowledge that all thirty-nine shows are not going to be great. Some weeks the show doesn't make it, and I die a little."

BOB NEWHART

(continued from page 55)

His attitude, professionals around him recognized, wasn't conducive to maintaining a star image for long.

For Newhart, the weekly deadline of television ended the weeks and months of taping and trying out a comedy routine over and over, polishing it until it was sure-fire. A dozen writers had to help him now—a fact revealed when the TV program got an Emmy nomination for "best comedy writing," and Newhart's name appeared with ten others as the recipient.

It was this nomination that triggered a blast from deposed writer Bob Kaufman. If Newhart went on the stage to accept an Emmy, the irate Kaufman told a Variety reporter, "I'll beat him up. This will be quite a scene in front of thirty million people . . . There is no physical possibility of Newhart's accepting an Emmy without my taking it away from him."

Kaufman and Roland Kibbee (who had created the show) maintained that Newhart had never actually written a single line on the series. They admitted that a Newhart monolog from one of his records had been used, as well as a few ideas which the comedian had thrown out for the others to write. But, Kaufman insisted, "He can't write. He can't even spell."

The headlines in the trade papers continued the Kaufman affair right up to the night of the awards. "Newhart destroyed the show," Kaufman Namee for the fire department's accomplishments "in reducing fires and fire losses" in 1962.

COUNCIL LAUDS CHAMBER

The councilmanic resolution citing the chamber for "stimulating and supporting fire activities in our city" was presented to Chamber President Richard V. Bond by council's majority leader, Councilman George X. Schwartz.

The chamber's award to the city was accepted by Mayor James H. J. Tate and Council President Paul D'Ortona. It praised council and the administration for "their diligent applications to the city's fire safety program."

Lyndon Johnson Delivers 20th Century Sequel to Gettysburg Address

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROMAN C. PUCINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 1963

Mr. PUCINSKI. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Memorial Day, May 30, 1963, Vice President LYNDON JOHNSON, delivered an oration in Gettysburg, Pa., which in my judgment shall stand for time immemorial as the 20th Century sequel to Abraham Lincoln's immortal Gettysburg Address.

In order for all Americans to see Mr. JOHNSON's profound announcement in its entirety, I am taking the privilege today to include it in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, Vice President JOHNSON's Memorial Day address follows:

REMARKS OF VICE PRESIDENT LYNDON B. JOHNSON, MEMORIAL DAY, GETTYSBURG, PA.

On this hallowed ground, heroic deeds were performed and eloquent words were spoken a century ago.

We, the living, have not forgotten—and the world will never forget—the deeds or the words of Gettysburg. We honor them now as we join on this Memorial Day of 1963 in a prayer for permanent peace of the world and fulfillment of our hopes for universal freedom and justice.

We are called to honor our own words of reverent prayer with resolution in the deeds we honor, serving to preserve peace and the hope of freedom.

We keep a world of peace around the world. Until the world knows no aggressions, until the sword of tyranny have been laid down, until freedom marches up to every door, we shall maintain our vigil to make secure our goals who believe, through deeds, that not [illegible] in vain.

[illegible] that justice is a vital force—a vital force that [illegible] in our own [illegible] and schools [illegible] our own people—we [illegible] yield up the civilizing [illegible] and Negro together—must be about the business of resolving the challenge which confronts us now.

Our Nation found its soul in honor on these fields of Gettysburg 100 years ago. We must not lose that soul in dishonor now on the fields of hate.

To ask for patience from the Negro is to ask him to give more of what he has already given enough. But to fail to ask of him—and of all Americans—perseverance within the processes of a free and responsible society would be to fail to ask what the national interest requires of all its citizens.

The law cannot save those who deny it but neither can the law serve any who do not use it. The history of injustice and inequality is a history of disuse of the law. Law has not failed—and is not failing. We as a Nation have failed ourselves by not trusting the law and by not using the law to gain sooner the ends of justice which law alone serves.

If the white overestimates what he has done for the Negro without the law, the Negro may underestimate what he is doing and can do for himself with the law.

If it is empty to ask Negro or white for patience, it is not empty—it is merely honest—to ask perseverance. Men may build barricades—and others may hurl themselves against those barricades—but what would happen at the barricades would yield no answers. The answers will only be wrought by our perseverance together. It is deceit to promise more—as it would be cowardice to demand less.

In this hour, it is not our respective races which are at stake—it is our Nation. Let those who care for their country come forward, North and South, white and Negro, to lead the way through this moment of challenge and decision.

The Negro says, "Now." Others say, "Never." The voice of responsible Americans—the voice of those who died here and the great man who spoke here—their voices say, "Together." There is no other way.

Until justice is blind to color, until education is unaware of race, until opportunity is unconcerned with the color of men's skins, emancipation will be a proclamation but not a fact. To the extent that the Proclamation of Emancipation is not fulfilled in fact, to that extent we shall have fallen short of assuring freedom to the free.

Communist Poland Blames United States for Increased Tension in Laos

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MICHAEL A. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 6, 1963

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the compromise action taken by Congress last year to deny favored-nation treatment to Communist-occupied Poland and Yugoslavia has been more than vindicated by subsequent events.

The basic argument presented by the special pleaders for these two Communist dictatorships was that treating them as friends and favored recipients of our largess would cause them to loosen the chains of Moscow. Members of Congress have heard that fable repeated so often that it sounds like a broken record. But relief is in sight. The fable has been put to rest by the Warsaw regime.

The Washington Post, in a story from Warsaw dated May 28, 1963, reports that the Communist regime in Poland blames the United States for increased tension in Laos. The International Control Commission charged with maintaining peace in Laos was made inoperative by the refusal of the Polish member on it to recognize Communist aggression against that country as an act of war. He was recalled to Warsaw for consultations and the Polish regime then charged the United States with subversion and aggression in all the countries of old Indochina. In the upside-down language of Moscow this means resistance against Communist efforts to liberate Laos and Vietnam into communism. But it also means removal of any doubts about the real character of the Warsaw regime—it is a loyal stooge of Moscow. This calumny laid upon the United States puts to rest the overworked fables about the character of the Warsaw regime.

I insert at this point the Warsaw report carried in the Washington Post on May 29, 1963:

COMMUNIST POLAND BLAMES UNITED STATES FOR INCREASED TENSION IN LAOS

WARSAW, Poland, May 28.—Poland charged tonight that Laotian rightwing elements and the United States are to blame for increased tension in Laos.

A government statement denied Western charges that Poland was obstructing efforts of the International Control Commission (ICC) to maintain the peace in Laos.

The statement, circulated by the official Polish Press Agency, in effect defended the actions of Marek Thee, Polish armistice commissioner recalled from Laos to Warsaw last weekend for consultations.

Representatives of Poland, Canada, and India make up the ICC. It was set up by the 14-nation Geneva conference on Laos, which nominally guarantee Laos' independence and neutrality, to police the truce among the warring right-wing, neutralist and pro-Communist factions.

However, the West has blamed Poland for ICC's inability to take effective action in the recent fighting between neutralists and the pro-Communist Pathet Lao.

The Polish representatives were accused of blocking efforts to place an ICC team in the Pathet Lao-controlled areas, and have refused to accompany Canadian and Indian ICC members on inspections of the neutralist-held areas.

The Polish statement said, however, that "attempts of certain Western circles to blame the Polish representative for the existing situation are futile.

"The machinations of the rightist Laotian circles, supported by reactionary imperialist centers, have threatened recently to annihilate the bases of the Geneva agreements."

It said that rightwing leader Phoumi Nosavan's staff, "with American help, has not ceased training and equipping subversive groups acting behind the Pathet Lao. Transfers of battalions of General Nosavan into the Plain of Jars are also taking place."

The Polish statement marks the first time the public has been told of Thee's split with the Indian and Canadian ICC members.

The United States, which repeatedly has been exerting pressure on the Poles to cooperate in Laos, was mentioned several times in the statement.

It declared that "an increase of tension is caused by U.S. military displays in the area of Indochina and weapon supplies to the rightist groups."

Communist China has made similar charges in recent months.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

LIFE

TIME & LIFE BUILDING
ROCKEFELLER CENTER
NEW YORK 20

JUDSON 6-1212

We are pleased to forward with the compliments of the Publisher the attached story from LIFE magazine which I believe may be of particular interest to you.

We should appreciate your comments.

Morton B. White

Morton B. White
Assistant to the Publisher

Gordon Parks: a talented Negro tells in fiction, fact and photograph

How It Feels

Gordon Parks, a Negro born in the border state of Kansas—neither north nor Deep South—spent a large part of his life fighting for a place in the white world. He won that place and became a famous photographer, a member of LIFE's staff. Now he has turned to writing and has produced his first novel, a violent and perceptive fictional autobiography.

To Be Black

His novel, The Learning Tree (Harper & Row), tells how it feels to grow up a Negro boy in America. On a recent visit home Parks took the photographs on these pages to evoke the book's mood; the little boy above, running for safety before a line storm, might be Parks himself, age 12. The novel ends while the hero is still a boy, but on the pages following his color pictures, Parks tells some of the things that happened to him in real life afterward and are still happening to him now.

On his return to Kansas, Parks found things much as they were in his boyhood. With his old friends and some new ones as his cast of characters, he recaptured scenes from his own early life and that of the little hero of his novel, Newt Winger. They appear here, accompanied by some brief passages from his novel.

"Newt dreamed swiftly to Flynn's River and the swimming hole [left]. Beansy, Jappy, Earl, Skunk and Marcus all took the dare—one—two—three—four—five—and, one after the other plunged from Rocky Ledge into the water far below. Now it was his turn—six and he leaped—and he heard Marcus laughing as he soared downward, and he was horrified, for suddenly there was no water and he kept falling toward the jagged rocks that Marcus had quickly placed there. But then, somehow, there was water again and he hit it clean and sharp, knifing almost to the bottom, and in good form, before he finally shot up, laughing at Marcus now, who was getting madder and madder. Then he nodded forward and jerked awake. The big hawk started up, a chicken in its claws [right], but too late. Newt brought the stick down over its head, and it dropped the fat hen to the ground. The hawk fluttered up, claws flying. Newt struck at it again, but the bird jumped backward and up to the top of the henhouse. It wobbled for a moment, regained composure and swooshed off into the sky.

The June bug lit on Newt's nose. He watched with crossed eyes [below] as it crawled up the bridge of his nose to his forehead, dragging the dirty string over his lips. Suddenly the bug took off with a jerk, leaving its leg on the string. Clint propped himself up on his elbows, watching the insect's crazy flight to freedom. Then he said, "If I was that goddam bug I'd fly straight to Chicago without stoppin'!"

A recaptured boyhood of joy, of longing and sudden violence

CONTINUED

Newt's mother, Sarah Winger, was the all-pervading influence in his life. In a long evening walk, like that at left, she tried to impart to him her deep sense of religion. When she died the Winger family broke up and Newt, terrified of death, faced with agony the sight of "withered posies" that lay in her rocking chair and the broken rose petals that fell from the preacher's black hands to her coffin.

Halfway home, he broke into his mother's humming.
"Momma, can I ask you somethin'?"
"Yes, boy. What you want to ask me?" Sarah slowed her pace...
"Well, after the storm,
Poppa said the storm and the people killed and everything was the doin' of God. You care if I ask you why he kills some people and not the others? . . .
Why did some of the town git torn up and the rest didn't?"
Sarah Winger came to a complete stop, and Newt was instantly afraid he had offended her. . . .
"Newt."
"Yessem."
"You know your poppa and me are religious people, don't you?"
"Yessem."
"Well, it would be real easy for me to say, you don't question the ways of God—and I was tempted to—but I know deep in my heart there's more to it than that.
It's true he guides us. But we cain't depend on him for everything.
We gotta do things for ourself.
If you got a battle to fight,
you cain't rightfully ask the Lord to help you and not the other fella. Now can you?"
"No ma'am."
"No, son, you got to fight and hope God likes the way you're using your fists. And that goes for the boy you're fightin'.
Ain't neither one of you got time for prayin' while you flingin' fists. Too many people, especially some of ours, boy, sit round waitin' when they should be out doin'. You got to remember that, boy, always."
"Yessem. Are we gonna live here all our life?" . . .
"I hope you won't have to stay here all your life, Newt.
It ain't a all-good place and it ain't a all-bad place. But you can learn just as much here about people and things as you can learn any place else. . . . Some of the people are good and some of them are bad—just like the fruit on a tree. . . . No matter if you go or stay, think of it like that till the day you die—
let it be your learnin' tree."
"Do we all have to die someday?"
"That's one thing we all have to do, boy. No matter who you are.
That's why it's so important to be ready when your time comes."
"I'm gonna hate dyin'."
"Won't none of us
like it, boy—none of us."

Quiet talks of God,

the sad lesson of death

CONTINUED

The mortal enemy of Newt's childhood was not white but a Negro. Marcus Savage, town bad boy, had no mother and a drunken brute for a father. From his bitter months in a jail cell to the vicious knife fight that ends the novel, he is Gordon Parks's symbol for the hopeless violence that can close in on an outcast of society who is also black.

"Merry Christmas—nigga," the guard said disdainfully, and turned back down the corridor. Marcus was silent. His head fell back in the shadows and he closed his eyes, trying to form the image of a God with black skin, thick lips and coarse hair like his—but he couldn't. The image on the torn card at the foot of his bed had been implanted much too long before. It was difficult to erase that image now, or even substitute another one for it.

Newt saw him pull his knife, flinched as the blade popped out. Newt backed toward the road as Marcus circled to the right. Marcus lunged. Newt swung the stick. The blow, aimed for Marcus' head, caught him on the shoulder, knocking him off balance; but the momentum of the charge brought them into contact, and the knife, aimed for Newt's heart, sliced his left shoulder instead. Newt felt the blade tear through his skin. He hollered, jumped back and frantically swung again. The stick found its mark this time, and Marcus dropped to his knees. But quickly he was up—blood running from his nose to his chin—stalking Newt like a wild animal. "You son-of-a-bitch! You gonna die! You gonna die!" Newt felt the warm blood at his elbow, but his eyes stayed on Marcus and the glistening blade."

A caged man, a savage climax at novel's end

Novelist carries o

The Long

by GORDON PARKS

A few days ago I walked through the worst of New York's Harlem and was jolted into a new appreciation of what 350 years of oppression have done to my people. The black ghetto has always swarmed with pain, poverty, despair and resentment, but now there was an exultant anger—clearly capable of erupting into open violence. The restless inhabitants, no longer afraid, no longer passively awaiting divine deliverance, crowded the street corners, listening to impassioned voices screaming invective.

In the midst of all this, disgruntled white policemen, sometimes 50 to a single square block—standing in doorways, hovering on rooftops or poised with their backs against the tired tenement buildings—listened to the diatribes.

One fiery little woman atop a soapbox was screaming: "We're on the move! We're crossing the line—even if some of us get killed! We'll keep comin' till you're ground to red dust under our black feet!"

She screamed on relentlessly: "To hell with your love for us! To hell with your pity for us! To hell with your anger at us! We don't want nothing from you but a chance to live better than the rats that share our homes! If you can't do anything about it, then go find some way to make the rats share the rent with us! . . ."

The crowd rallied to her words, raising their hands and voices in frequent approval.

"Tell 'em like it is, sister!"

"Give 'em hell, baby!"

"Preach on! Preach on!"

I lay in bed that night, moved by the black temper of our time, by the courage of that old woman on the soapbox. It was almost daylight before I finally slept, because I knew—and the knowing made my heart pound—that history had caught up with us.

The pain I experienced while growing up in Kansas was relatively small. I was the youngest of 15 children, born of parents who filled with love and a staunch Method religion. We were poor, but t rich soil surrounding our cl board house yielded enough fo for the family. In the early days, t warmth of our household help

the story into real life

Search for Pride

In Harlem, I saw the faces, intent and fearless, and heard the shrill new rallying cry from the fiery little lady on her soapbox: "We're on the move. We're crossing the line even if some of us get killed."

e to suffer the fate of being black. t I went to a segregated school. was warned to avoid white neighrhoods after dark. I had to sit in e peanut gallery when I went to e movies with my brothers and sters. I wasn't allowed to drink a soda in either of the two drugstores in town. I was called "nigger," "black boy," "darkey," "shine" and all those other names that arouse anger and humiliation. I was stoned and beaten. The indignities came so often that I soon began to accept them as normal. But I always fought back. In retrospect, I consider myself lucky to be alive—especially when I remember that three of my close friends died of senseless brutality before they were 21. I also

CONTINUED

In dreams I pulled on a white skin

BEING BLACK
CONTINUED

consider myself lucky that I didn't kill someone.

Until my mid-teens I lived in fear: fear of being shot, lynched or beaten to death—and not for any wrongdoing of my own. I could easily have been the victim of mistaken identity or of an act of terror by hate-filled white men.

In 1921, when I was 8, the Tulsa Riot took place. Whites invaded the Negro neighborhood, which turned out to be an armed camp. Many white Tulsans were killed and rumors swept through our community that the fury would spread into the state of Kansas and beyond. At this time a cousin of mine decided he would head south to work in a mill. My mother, knowing his hot temper, pleaded with him not to go, but he caught a freight south. Months passed and we had no word of him. Then one day his name flashed across the nation as one of the most wanted men in the country. He had killed a white mill hand who called him a "dirty nigger" and spat in his face. He had killed another while fleeing the scene.

I pestered my mother with questions she couldn't possibly have answered: Would they catch him? Would he be lynched? Where did she think he was hiding? How long did she think he could hold out? The only thing my mother knew was what all the rest of us knew. If it were humanly possible, he would make it back to her so that she might pray over him.

He came one night. I remember it was raining and I lay in the darkness of my room listening to it pounding on the roof. Suddenly the window next to my bed slid up and my cousin, wet and cautious, scrambled through the opening. I started to yell as he landed on my bed, but he quickly covered my mouth with his hand and whispered his name, frightening me into silence. He went straight to my mother's room and shook her awake. She prayed over him. Afterward she tried to persuade him to surrender. He refused. He went to our old icebox, filled a sack with food, and went out the same way he had entered.

None of us ever saw or heard of him again. But I had many sleepless nights wondering if the whites had killed my cousin. I prayed that they wouldn't—remembering the huge sacks of peanut brittle he used to bring me and the rides he so often gave me on the back of his old motorcycle. And my days for a long time were full of illusions in which I helped him escape imaginary white mobs.

I was only 12 when another cousin of mine, a fair girl with light red hair, came to spend the summer at our house. One day she and I ran, hand in hand, toward the white section of town to meet my mother, who worked there as a domestic. Suddenly three white boys, ranging from 12 to 15, blocked our path. I gripped my cousin's hand and we tried going around them, but they spread out across the walk before us.

"Where are you going with that nigger, blondie?" one of them said to my cousin.

We stopped. The youngest boy eased behind me and dropped to his hands and knees, and one of the others shoved me backward. Pain shot through my head as it bumped against the sidewalk, but I could hear my cousin screaming as she ran for help. Then someone spit in my face and kicked my neck from behind. I jumped up and started swinging, but they beat me down again. The third time I hit the ground, someone kicked me in the mouth. I grabbed the next foot that came in and upended its owner. Scrambling up, I tried to run. A fist sent me back down. But suddenly I realized that someone was helping me. A white boy I knew had rushed up and was hitting one of my attackers. Suddenly he was down beside me. He had been hit on the head with a stick. The three boys ran off.

"How did it all start?" my rescuer asked as we walked along nursing our bruises. I told him.

"Idiots!" he said. "Hell, I knew she was a nigger all the time."

I bit into my bleeding lip, knotted my fists and walked on in confused silence.

There were several similar incidents and my cousin decided to leave before her vacation was half over. She was never to come back and visit us again.

As my cousin's train pulled out, I asked my mother why white people hated us so much. She looked away from me for a few moments, trying—I'm now sure—to find an answer that would last me a lifetime. Finally she said with gentleness, "All whites don't hate you. And those that do are in such bad trouble with themselves that they need pitying—and they ain't worth worrying about."

Words, I decided. Just words. Somehow the fight because of my cousin was a turning point. The years of frustration had finally boiled into anger. Now every indignity pushed me to the edge of violence, creating one emotional crisis after another.

Some mornings I stood before the single cracked mirror in our house and asked God over and over again why He had made me black. I once even dreamed that I was white, but my skin seemed flabby and loose, so I kept trying to pull it into shape—trying to make it fit. I awoke and found I was clutching at my underwear. I lay there, admitting finally: I was black; I would always be black.

Where could I begin to build pride? In church, God and the angels and saints always were white. In school, the textbooks always showed my ancestors picking cotton, dancing a jig or strumming a banjo. Africans were always depicted as savages. My history books never mentioned such Negroes as Hiram Revels, Peter Salem, Benjamin Banneker or Harriet Tubman. I read Aleksander Pushkin and Alexandre Dumas, but not until years later did anyone tell me that they had black blood.

So, in a black and white world, anyone whiter than I became my enemy. I was 14 and I began strike out—suddenly, quickly, a at times without apparent reas One day, in a fit of temper knocked my 22-year-old inva brother to the floor. (He was a c ple of shades lighter than I.) I mediately ashamed, I reached do to help him. He smiled and wa me aside—and I ran from the ro crying. It hurt many times wo when I learned a few days la that he had known for months was incurably ill. Just before died the following winter, he cal me to his bedside.

"Pedro," he said, using his vorite nickname for me, "for life of me I don't know why you so mad at the world. You ca whip it the way you're going. too big. If you're going to fight use your brain. It's got a lot m power than your fists."

My mother died when I 16 and our family broke up. It decided that I should be sent no to live with relatives in St. Pa Minn. My older brothers and s ters scraped up enough money my coach ticket and, as the tr rolled across Kansas, I scann the prairies and cornfields w mixed emotions. I had a premo tion that I was escaping a do that would somehow certainly snare all my friends and relativ

When I went off on my ou was alone, hungry, homeless, b had a premonition that I was esc ing a doom that would certainly snare all my friends and relati

CONTINU

You get so used to trouble you sense it

Two days later I stepped awkardly onto the cold streets of St. aul. I stayed with my relatives r a little while, but it just didn't ork out. So I decided to go it one. I was to be hungry, homess and more alone than I had ever en in my life. But always there s that premonition of freedom. gave me an indefinable hope that s to carry me through a bitter ne. The longing for my family s often unbearable, yet I never ce wrote them.

In the succeeding years I bussed shes, waited table, tended bar, yed semi-professional basketll and football, and played piano roadhouses and inns throughout e Northwest. By 1937 photogray had become my profession and 1942 I became a Julius Rosenld Fellow. As a Fellow I worked th the Farm Security Adminisition under Roy Stryker, then as correspondent for the Office of ar Information, under Elmer Da. I spent the next five years with andard Oil Co. (New Jersey), aft which I joined the staff of LIFE agazine.

My assignments since have card me several times around the rld. And I have learned that the tle art of rejection, used with esse, can be every bit as abusive a punch in the face.

I remember that, just before ap ing for one job during my early ars in the "enlightened" north, I bed saliva into a single soiled t on my clothing, knowing I uld be closely inspected for an peccability I was too poor to intain. As I sat waiting, a white uth walked past me wearing a r of dirty jeans and was given job.

I feel, sometimes, that I finally ose photography as a profession rtly because it was something I uld work at without white con t. At the time I was a dining r waiter. The car steward, a white uthern gentleman, resented my dying after hours on the long nscontinental run. He began ating me so badly—insulting me front of passengers, assigning to a heavy load of extra duties, ce even "accidentally" bumping arm so that I spilled a tray of d on some passengers—that I ally tried to choke him. I was ed for that, but I swore that the ward would someday serve me a guest, and that I would enter e diner from the first-class end.

That day came. But I didn't gloat over it as I thought I would. Instead, I found myself pitying the smallness of this man who, I was told, was still trying to keep young Negroes "in their place."

If you are a Negro, you get so used to trouble that you can sense it before it actually strikes. So you stay prepared, as I was one evening in front of the Lowry Hotel drugstore in St. Paul, after sizing up three surly white youths who were passing out political handbills. As I approached them, I could feel their eyes on me. Their expression told me they were trouble.

"Here, boy," one said, "tell your pappy and mammy to vote like this thing says."

"You go to hell," I said, throwing the pamphlet to the sidewalk. When one of them kicked me, I jumped at them and knocked one of them backward through the window. He pulled me with him, and my body caught most of the falling glass. I was carried into the drugstore, bleeding profusely, a finger on my right hand hanging limply from its severed joint. The drugstore employes covered my wounds with wet towels.

The three white men were soon caught. The police came and the four of us were taken to jail. I was held as a "material witness." I stayed in jail until 11 o'clock the next morning, without a doctor or medical attention. The three white youths, I learned later, were released four hours after the incident, without bail or charges.

I still bear the scars of that experience: the last sliver of glass from the shattered window worked its way out of my eyelid only a few months ago.

There are other scars that have nothing to do with glass. I remember a night in northern Minnesota with a blizzard raging. I had looked for work for days without success. By 11 o'clock it was 30 below zero. The streets were deserted. Through the driving snow, I saw a red neon sign flickering the word EAT. Already weak, I felt faint as I was pushed along by the strong gusts. I reached the door and went inside.

"What do you want?" the waitress snapped.

I told her I wanted a cup of coffee, then collapsed on a stool. Three white men and a woman sat at a table alongside the wall. They

CONTINUED

by appointment to the neighborhood

Not very far from where you live is a selection of spirits that kings of old would have envied—in fact, could never have enjoyed. Domestic and imported spirits, aged and mellowed spirits, spirits for those very special occasions, spirits for any occasion—all are readily available through a reliable, licensed retailer who serves as personal "wine steward" to you and your neighborhood. His stock is not only more varied than kings could muster, it is also of eminently higher quality. For distillers, vintners and brewers today have perfected their art to control the character of their products far beyond the capabilities of even their most gifted predecessors. The most respected brands your licensed retailer handles—the more popular ones with you and your friends—are regularly Advertised-in-LIFE. Make it a habit to ask for these nationally known brands at your neighborhood store. Your pleasure is your beverage retailer's command.

ADVERTISED IN LIFE

WHEN

DRIVING STRAIN
TIRES YOUR EYES

REST YOUR EYES WITH MURINE

Murine gently cleanses, soothes and helps rest your eyes. It's an isotonic formula, made to blend perfectly with natural eye fluids. Use Murine every day to help your eyes feel good.

Murine comes in handy new squeeze bottle and in glass bottle with dropper.

The Murine Co., Inc., Chicago, U.S.A. Trademarks Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Brains and courage have never been enough

BEING BLACK
CONTINUED

had been drinking. "Well, Ah declare!" one of the men said in a heavy southern drawl, "Ah seen eva'thing now. A nigga eatin' in the very same place as white folks. Ain't nothin' gonna happen like that down where Ah come from."

I ignored him. He went on, "Black bastards'll be wantin' to git in our beds next!"

Suddenly my control was gone. I grabbed my cup and dashed the scalding coffee on him. He yelled. The woman next to him screamed. I began throwing sugar bowls, salt and pepper shakers, ketchup bottles, anything that I could get my hands on.

All at once the waitress shouted a warning, but it was too late. A chair knocked me unconscious. I came to while being hauled from the diner by two policemen. They took me to jail.

I learned. The years passed and as I pulled myself ahead, I learned the meaning of my dying brother's words. I came to know that they had worth but also that they were much too easy, much too pat. Brains and courage have never been enough.

I remember that, in Minneapolis, after I was married and had started a family, it was a big Saturday event for my 9-year-old son to go with me to a downtown lunch counter, eat a sandwich, wash it down with a huge malted milk and go to a picture show of his choosing. But in 1942 when we moved to Washington, D.C., we could no longer observe this ritual. I knew it was strictly prohibited. Yet I couldn't bring myself to expose so young a mind to the truth. Instead, I looked about for some other kind of enjoyment the two of us might share. This wasn't easy. There were no beaches, playgrounds or amusement parks we could attend—for the same reason. For nearly three months my son was morose, talking little to me, feeling it must be that I, his father, no longer enjoyed our regular man-to-man excursions. Finally, his mother convinced me that I should tell him the truth. And one Saturday morning I did. He listened carefully, puzzled, and after a while he asked me a question.

All our lives we have cloaked our feelings, bided our time, waited for the year, the month, the day and the hour when we could do without fear, at last, what we are doing just now.

"Does the President know about this, Dad?"

I remember a bus ride in 1944. Wearing the uniform of an OWI correspondent, I was sitting midway in the bus with two Negro friends, both pilots in the U.S. Air Force. Opposite us were a major and two colonels, whites. My friends and I were going from Washington, D.C. to Virginia to receive booster shots before shipping to the European Theater.

It was to be my first trip to the war zone—and their second. Flying fighter escort, their planes had been shot out from under them and they had bailed out. They landed miles apart but hooked up again. Together they stole their way back to Allied territory. After processing they were sent back to the States to recuperate. Eventually they were given the choice of staying to train other pilots or taking desk jobs. They asked to be sent back to action.

The door of the bus closed and the words came—harsh, unbelievable: "You niggers will have to move to the back!"

I looked up the aisle and saw the hatred in the white bus driver's face. Of course, we didn't move, despite the driver's angry threat of arrest. But neither did the bus, until the strong pleas of the white officers that they had "urgent business at their base" provided the driver with a patriotic excuse for starting up.

Several months later, en route to Godman Field, Ky., I watched a white restaurant owner at a railway station refuse food to Negro military police, then feed the Nazi prisoners of war whom the Negro MP's were guarding.

Yes, I have learned. And after all the distance I've come, after all the distance I've been, I can say that the only place where I have been excluded because of color from a hotel, restaurant, church or movie is right here at home.

Now when a maître d' approaches me with his icy what-can-I-do-for-you greeting, my usual answer is, "Show me a table, then give me a

CONTINUED ON PAGE 87

Nobody knows the Negro, not even Negroes

BEING BLACK

CONTINUED

nu." It is almost a pleasure to tch him hunt nervously for a le where even a waiter can't d me. Once I'm seated—behind post or next to the swinging chen doors—I demand a better le, though I know I'll be told t all those empty tables with signs on them are definitely eserved."

Next time I plan to dine there—d I do go back—I take the preution of telephoning in a "white ice" and demanding the table ft center, under the chandelier with flowers."

After a while, the maître d' gets ed of the cat-and-mouse game d begins treating me like any er paying guest—which is all e ever wanted.

I also know the clerk in the xclusive" store who deliberately ks off when I approach him, or o unhesitatingly announces he out of my size—without bother- to find out whether I want a , a suit, shirts or shoes. And now the hotel desk clerk who, er being told that he has a conned reservation for Mr. Parks, ndly looks over my shoulder d inquires as to when Mr. Parks l arrive.

I am 50 now, but I still get led "boy" and I know that some ites will call me "boy" until I 100 years old. I know that if m traveling by car, say, from w York to Kansas City or Chigo, I must reach some town be- e nightfall to give myself ample time to search out a hotel that might accept my family for the night. I know that, when I travel through some parts of the South, I must carry extra gasoline because there are some towns where they won't sell me any, especially if I drive a nice-looking car.

How often have I heard a white man suggest, "I know the Negro." Nobody knows the Negro, not even the Negro. Because all our lives we have cloaked our feelings, bided our time, waited for the year, the month, the day and the hour when we could do, at last, what we are doing just now—looking our white oppressors squarely in the eye and telling them exactly what we think, what we want and what we intend to get. And all this without fear.

Our young people tell us boldly: We will not go on suffering while the white man insists on slow surrender through law and time. If some speak to them of new laws and legislation, they answer: It's one thing to make a law and another thing to enforce it. If some speak to them of well-intentioned whites, they answer: If they are sincere, they will raise their voices above those of the racists. And if some tell them times are changing, they answer: We are changing the times. So, my generation yields to them—and in doing so finds pride.

Wherever and whenever Negro crowds gather, young and old are all raising their hands to be counted. "The time is now," they say. "You show us the way and we'll follow."

A RECIPE TO TREASURE
from Ann Page

CHILLED CRISPY-CRUST CHICKEN
(No frying needed)

To serve 4, purchase 1 broiler-fryer chicken cut up. Place chicken pieces on sheet of waxed paper. Season generously with salt and pepper on both sides and lightly with poultry seasoning to taste. With pastry brush or spatula, coat on all sides with 1 cup Ann Page Mayonnaise or Salad Dressing. In a paper bag place 1 cup corn-flake crumbs, 1 tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper, dash of paprika or cayenne; shake to mix. (Bread crumbs or flour may be substituted for corn-flake crumbs.) Drop chicken into bag, one piece at a time, close bag, shake to coat all sides. Arrange in shallow bake-and-serve dish or baking pan. Bake at 350° for 1¼ hours, or until tender. Serve chilled, with lettuce, tomatoes, cucumbers and additional Ann Page Dressing.

"Crispy Crust"...easy, exciting new flavor coat made with Ann Page Dressings

No pre-browning, no spattering grease . . . great fix-ahead dish for family or company. Delicious chilled or hot, it's the tastiest thing that ever happened to chicken . . . crispy-crusted and "oven-fried." It's crunchy, deftly spiced outside, tender and moist beneath. And so easy! Just season, brush chicken with flavorsome Ann Page Mayonnaise or Salad Dressing, dip in crumbs and bake. Costs only 29¢-31¢* a portion to serve.

Versatile Ann Page Dressings accent summer's favorite salads, cold platters and picnic foods with delectable flavor. They're made in A&P's own Ann Page plants, sold only at A&P. This eliminates needless in-between expenses and you share the savings. Once again, Ann Page proves fine foods needn't be expensive!

*Cost based upon A&P prices at press time.

ANN PAGE FOODS—SOLD ONLY AT YOUR A&P

NEW YORK
Herald Tribune
Friday, August 23, 1963 13

A Label for Goldwater

Is Sen. Barry Goldwater a segregationist? It depends on whom you ask. California's Gov. Pat Brown thinks he is. So does Georgia's Governor, Carl Sanders. But Gov. Rockefeller admits he really doesn't know whether the Senator "was or was not a segregationist." All of which has the Arizona conservative hopping mad. Why? See Roscoe Drummond's column on page 15.

JIMMY BRESLIN

Sit-Ins & Marchers

The Mayor started to walk around the guy, but the guy wouldn't get out of the way and now somebody bumped the Mayor and that did it. The big plainclothesmen who were assigned to Robert Wagner yesterday came through this little gate in City Hall and started to move these kids as they should always be moved.

There were 22 chanting, disheveled Sit-Ins who packed together in the lobby at City Hall yesterday afternoon and created a riot by trying to stop the conduct of the business of this city. They had the incredible nerve to physically interfere with Mayor Wagner, who runs a city that had 8 million people on its streets at the time this was happening.

Who were bothering him? The worst group of young bums you'll ever see outside Department of Corrections supervision. The ringleader inside City Hall yesterday was a guy with a black beret and a beard who said he was Nicasio Martinis. He said he was 25 and that he did not trust white people because of what happened to the American Indian.

"Commissions, meetings, resolutions, they mean nothing," he was saying. "That's just what they did to the Indians." He talked, as the lunatic fringe always talks, about history that cannot be defended nor ever paid for.

THE MARCH

Outside on the steps, demonstrators who had planned this thing for days were chaining themselves to the pillars. A crowd of 150 milled on the sidewalk. The police had to move in on them. It was an ugly thing to see. Then it became frightening, because all you could think of was what it would be like next Wednesday in Washington if something like this ever happens. There might be as many as 250,000 people demonstrating for civil rights on that day. If a flareup occurs in a crowd this large, and a crowd edgy from the heat and from lack of sleep, there will be a mess the likes of which this country has not seen.

But late yesterday afternoon, after the City Hall trouble was over, Bayard Rustin, who is national director of the march on Washington, sat in a hot, dingy office on 130th Street and said there was no chance of trouble.

"I would say we have done everything possible to prevent it," Rustin said. "The combined organizations participating in this march approved unanimously on June 2d a statement that they would not engage in civil disobedience in Washington. This includes no sit-ins and no march on Capitol Hill.

"And there are over 1,500 of our own marshals who shall discipline this march from within."

A cigarette burned right down to Rustin's long fingers as he spoke. He is a lanky, intense man of 53 who speaks in a British accent. His hair and mustache are graying. He had on a white shirt that was rumpled and grimy from working through a night and into the

After Heated Clash With Gross

Negro School Boycott Threat

5 BODYGUARDS BRING GALLO IN & 5 MARSHALS TAKE HIM AWAY

By Sam Rubenstein
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Larry Gallo, who is reported to be marked for death by rival Brooklyn mobsters, was taken out of circulation yesterday for at least four months.

Gallo drew an 18-month prison sentence in Brooklyn Federal Court for fraudulently obtaining a Veterans Administration mortgage on a house, since sold. But Judge Leo F. Rayfiel told Gallo he could go on probation after serving four months if he behaves himself.

Gallo's father, Albert Gallo sr., 62, drew a suspended sentence from Judge Rayfiel, who told him:

"Your part was a comparatively minor one and what you did was inexcusable but understandable. You tried to help your son."

His son, the mobster, is a leader of a gang that has been feuding with the Profaci mob in Brooklyn. The Profaci group does not like Larry Gallo. It is said that there is a $20,000 price tag each on the head of Larry and his brother, Albert jr.

Because of all this, there was a full retinue of newsmen, photographers, FBI men and U. S. marshals on hand in Brooklyn Federal Court when Larry Gallo emerged from hiding and stood with his father before Judge Rayfiel for sentencing.

With the younger Gallo were five bodyguard-type friends, who were carefully frisked before being allowed in the courtroom. They were proclaimed by marshals to be

Herald Tribune photo by IRA ROSENBERG

MUM'S THE WORD—Brooklyn mobster Larry Gallo has little to say yesterday as he leaves court after being sentenced to 18 months in jail on fraud charge.

VA mortgage application. He had stated that he was employed as manager of his father's restaurant in Flatbush. But the government charged he was unemployed at the time.

Judge Rayfiel did not agree with the contention of the Gallos' lawyer, Joseph Iovine, that the charge was based on a technical violation of the law. The lawyer contended that there was "no evil motive" in making the false would have no adverse affects on deportation proceedings against the elder Gallo. Judge Rayfiel did not buy that either. He said as far as he knew the deportation matter was still in the hands of the Attorney General.

The ranks of the Gallo gang have been thinning because of various violent and non-violent reasons. Another Gallo brother, Joseph, who is sometimes called "Crazy Joe," is serving a jail sentence for down to the relative security of a third-floor cell to start his sentence. His record shows two previous convictions, both in 1952—one year for criminally receiving stolen property, and three months for conspiracy. He served the sentences on Rikers Island.

When Gallo & Co. appeared in court last Monday there had been a lot of pushing and shoving, but yesterday things were more orderly as the reporters gathered

The Big Issue: Bus Shifts of White Pupils

By Terry Ferrer
Education Editor

A bitter public argument between School Superintendent Calvin E. Gross and a Negro CORE leader yesterday erupted in the hallway of the Board of Education building, with the two in a hot cross-fire about "ramming integration down white people's throats."

The argument was the climax to a firm declaration by civil rights leaders that a citywide boycott of schools be organized for the opening of the school year Sept. 9.

The hallway argument followed a 2-hour meeting between r. Gross and the civil rights leaders on how best to integrate the city schools. Dr. Gross conceded to reporters that "the specific issue" divindg him from the Negro groups is the "involuntary busing" of white children into largely Negro schools.

Dr. Gross said firmly that "we are not prepared to bus children involuntarily in a neighborhood switch. Our plan does not include that. We are not making plans to bus white children."

As Dr. Gross talked to reporters, Oliver Leeds, chairman of the Brooklyn chapter of the Congress of Racial Equality, broke into Dr. Gross's conversation and said: "We are convinced that sooner or later integration will have to be done. People in New York are basically good people. There is no reason for equivocation and experiment."

Dr. Gross snapped back:

Javits Plea —Mediate Pay Dispute

By Joseph Michalak
Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Sen. Jacob K. Javits last night urged that a mediator or task force of leading citizens be appointed to recommend a settlement of the teachers dispute.

Speaking to the convention of the American Federation of Teachers, parent union of the United Federation of Teachers, Sen. Javits said the task force "could include a representative of your organization and the city, and could be chaired by some distinguished leader in education, in business or in philanthropy."

In another development, the New York Central Labor Council voted yesterday to request a meeting with Mayor Wagner to head off the teachers' strike threatened for Sept. 9.

"And there are over 1,500 of our own marshals who shall discipline this march from within."

A cigarette burned right down to Rustin's long fingers as he spoke. He is a lanky, intense man of 53 who speaks in a British accent. His hair and mustache are graying. He had on a white shirt that was rumpled and grimy from working through a night and into the next day without a change of clothes.

"You see," Rustin said, "sits-ins are a strategy. This march in Washington is no place for strategy. Our image is enhanced by absolute order."

"What if anything goes wrong?" Rustin was asked. "One fist fight could turn it into a mess that sets everybody back 50 years."

"I understand your concern," Rustins said. "But nothing shall happen. We have seen to that."

HEADQUARTERS

The march on Washington for Civil Rights is being run out of a four-story brick building a few doors down from Seventh Avenue in Harlem. It is a series of makeshift offices and narrow, steep staircases. And Thursday afternoon the building was alive with the sound of mimeograph machines and typewriters and little kids who kept running in from the street for a drink of water from the cooler in the first-floor hall.

Dick Cohen of the American Jewish Congress and Calvin Banks of the NAACP were in an office in the back of the first floor. A door was opened onto the usual Harlem backyard, tin cans, makeshift wooden fences, an old soft drink machine, broken cement.

The two sat and talked about the meetings that were going to be held with President Kennedy and Vice-President Johnson on Wednesday. It seemed like a strange place for people to be talking about a date with a President, but this is not an expression of people who walk on carpet, this march in Washington next week.

Both Cohen and Banks are the kind of bright people you associate with an undertaking like this.

"Lunatic fringe," Banks said when he was told about the trouble at City Hall.

"The entire social thinking of a country is going to be shifted in one day," Banks said. "Quiet orderliness. Its impact will be tremendous."

"What do you think the impact will be if something goes wrong?" he was asked.

Banks didn't answer. It was too big even to think about.

© 1963, New York Herald Tribune Inc.

his father before Judge Rayfiel for sentencing.

With the younger Gallo were five bodyguard-type friends, who were carefully frisked before being allowed in the courtroom. They were proclaimed by marshals to be unarmed.

The Gallos interrupted their trial last June 14 and pleaded guilty to the charge of making a false statement on Larry's

Judge Rayfiel did not agree with the contention of the Gallos' lawyer, Joseph Iovine, that the charge was based on a technical violation of the law. The lawyer contended that there was "no evil motive" in making the false statement and that Larry had made substantial improvements on the house.

Mr. Iovine also wanted the Judge to say that the case

Attorney General.

The ranks of the Gallo gang have been thinning because of various violent and non-violent reasons. Another Gallo brother, Joseph, who is sometimes called "Crazy Joe," is serving a jail sentence for extortion.

And yesterday Larry Gallo was handcuffed and escorted by five marshals from the seventh - floor courtroom for conspiracy. He served the sentences on Rikers Island.

When Gallo & Co. appeared in court last Monday there had been a lot of pushing and shoving, but yesterday things were more orderly as the reporters gathered around and asked the sad-looking younger Gallo how he felt about the sentence.

"I don't know," he replied. That was all he would say.

Bad Debts Increasing in England

Our 'Amazed' State Betting Probers

From the Herald Tribune Bureau

LONDON.

Two investigators from a place called Albany, N. Y., told a news conference yesterday they understood that bad debts in England have increased by 20 per cent since off-track horse betting was legalized here in 1960.

Henry Paley and John Glendinning, staff aids of the N. Y. State Assembly, sent here to study off-track wagering in England, said they were "amazed at the amount of gambling here. It seems much larger than in New York."

The men, making their study in view of pressure in New York to legalize off-track betting, said they'd been told that Britons bet $2.8 billion a year at and off the track, and gamble $1.4 billion in other ways. This totals to 65 per cent of the country's defense budget.

It is estimated that billions of dollars are bet annually in the United States, one figure of $25 billion being advanced by Mortimer M. Caplin, director of the Internal Revenue Service.

The New Yorkers said they were not making moral judgments, merely gathering information for their superiors.

They said that the reason for increased gambling here seemed to be simply a greater availability of places in which to make bets. They added that they found the more profitable bookmaking stalls in the city's poorer districts.

It was bill collectors, they said, who told them that bad debts have shot up 20 per cent under off-track wagering.

Mr. Paley and Mr. Glendinning held their news conference in a church hall. They said that the Churches Council on Gambling seemed to be the only organization making an effort to determine the effects of off-track betting, and that the Council had helped them in their investigation.

While the two New Yorkers were conducting their study, the British Information Office, 845 Third Ave., in New York City, supplied reams of the comparative statistics on British gambling before and after the Betting and Gaming Act of 1960.

The act became effective January 1, 1961. The figures were based on surveys conducted by the Churches Council on Gambling.

They showed, for example, that betting on horse races increased, in estimated amounts, from $1.022 billion in 1959 to $1.078 billion in 1960. But in 1961, after the introduction of legalized off-track betting, the figure rose to $1.232 billion. In 1962 it jumped to $1.512 billion.

All forms of British gambling, in 1961, was set at a total $2.133 billion, an increase of $221.2 million above 1960, prior to legalization.

The latter figures were released by the Church Council in its report of May 11, 1962.

In 1960 Britons had bet a total of $1.913 billion on all forms of gambling, an increase of $100.8 million over 1959.

Thus, in the first year under legalized gambling, the national annual gambling figure more than doubled.

Last year, the totals continued to spiral. In 1962, Britons bet a total $2.388 billion, according to the Council. This was an increase of $254.8 million over the 1961 totals.

In one of its reports, the Council secretary drew attention to the fact that "the Betting and Gaming Act of 1960, though apparently reducing illegal betting, had also resulted in the emergence of new forms of commercialized gambling in bingo clubs and gaming clubs."

He also noted an "increase in turnover on betting on horse races," and a proportionate decline in greyhound races and football pools. Greyhound races drew bets amounting to $350 million in 1961, but dipped to $322 million in 1962. Football pools, correspondingly, nosedived from $284 million in 1961 down to $239.1 million in 1962.

Council figures note that all totals must be understood "not to include the amounts wagered in gaming clubs, which it is impossible to estimate."

On June 1, 1962, England by actual count had 13,340 licensed betting offices. That number has since risen to an estimated 15,000.

sooner or later integration will have to be done. People in New York are basically good people. There is no reason for equivocation and experiment."

Dr. Gross snapped back: "I don't think this is equivocation. It is not good to ram this (integration) down white people's throats."

Mr. Leeds came back: "We don't want to ram anything down people's throats. No child should be allowed to go to an inferior school."

Dr. Gross retorted: "We are just trying hard to make better schools. Some parents are just in terror of having their children plucked from their home school and sent to outside schools. I'm talking frankly. We just don't agree."

The CORE leader then said: "I know there is a problem of whites accepting this program. By integrating our schools now, white parent's objections will be instrumental in forcing better schools in Harlem."

Dr. Gross and the civil rights groups broke off without setting any future meeting. Mr. Leeds and representatives of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Urban League of New York, the Harlem Parents' Committee and the Parents Workshop for Equality agreed to "organize a boycott of the city school system."

The board which has its headquarters at 110 Livingston St., Brooklyn, must submit a plan to the State Education Department by Sept. 1 on racially imbalanced schools in the city and its plans to integrate them.

The civil rights leaders also said yesterday that they rejected Dr. Gross' proposal of a "free transfer" plan, outlined to them in a meeting on Monday. The plan, to take effect in February, would permit a child in any school that is racially imbalanced to transfer to any other school in the city.

thropy."

In another development, the New York Central Labor Council voted yesterday to request a meeting with Mayor Wagner to head off the teachers' strike threatened for Sept. 9.

It left unsettled, however, the question of a general strike of the city's 140,000 unionized city employees if the Condon-Wadlin Law is invoked against striking teachers.

The Central Labor Council's call for a meeting with the mayor was announced by its president, Harry Van Arsdale, after an emergency meeting with leaders of 31 organizations representing 140,000 city workers. He said the council wanted to discuss with the Mayor the problems of any civil service employees, including teachers, who "could be victimized by the Condon-Wadlin law."

He said the Council would be in "continuous session" on the situation, subject to call on short notice.

During the meeting John J. DeLury, president of the Uniformed Sanitation men's Association, asked for a general strike embracing all 1,000,000 union workers if the Condon-Wadlin law is invoked. The law calls for automatic dismissal of public employees who go on strike. It permits rehiring, but carries monetary and job-rights penalties.

UFT President Charles Cogen and Board of Education president Max J. Rubin viewed Sen. Javits' mediation idea coolly, at least for the present.

"Mediation would not be necessary until a few days before the deadline" Mr. Cogen said, "and we should be allowed to continue our bargaining so long as there still is hope."

Mr. Rubin said that "since the negotiations are proceedding, we agree with that view." He added that no mediator could do anything about the budget already adopted.

Batting for Crosby

The Way of a Coward

By Ed Begley

John Crosby is on vacation. In his absence his column will be carried on by guest writers.

I am a coward trying to prove myself a brave man—else why would I attempt to write a guest column. But that is only one item in the long list that proves my argument.

When I was 11, 12, and 13 years old in Hartford, Conn., I used to do an amateur act. I had to find ways to propel myself onto the stage. It was like diving off the high board. If you lived through it, it was fun, but, oh, the courage it took to leap.

* * *

When I was 18, I served in the U. S. Navy as a fireman. On the Naval Reservation was a towering mast rising 840 feet. The challenge to each man: "You have to climb the tower." The coward in me forced me to try, and that very same cowardice triggered me into venturing beyond the required limit. I ascended to the very pinnacle, climbing two beams having cross-pieces nailed on like rungs of a ladder. As I climbed up, one of the cross-pieces gave way beneath my feet. How I ever got back down is still a mystery.

After getting out of the Navy, there were numerable jobs, but always the urge for an acting career. For a while I managed motion pictures theaters in Philadelphia. A milestone was reached in 1931 when I made my debut as a radio actor. After 10 years of varied and interesting—yes, and remunerative—acting jobs, I stormed the citadels of Manhattan, working first in radio and shifted rapidly to the dubbing of foreign films. Then on to Broadway.

Next came live television and horrendous years for this coward, still trying to prove himself a brave man.

Now came another milestone in my career. The motion picture "Boomerang" was being made in Stamford, Conn. Elia Kazan wanted me for the film. Because of Kazan's interest in me and his great directorial ability, I was made to look very good. Then Kazan gave me the meaty role of Joe Keller in "All My Sons," Arthur Miller's first success, which won the Drama Critics' Award and established me in the theater.

* * *

Shortly thereafter, Hollywood beckoned and the trek West was made. I did 21 pictures between 1947 and 1951. Now to live television shows which came in rapid succession, with all the torture and fear that accompanied each and every one.

At this time, when friends feel that I could let down, take it easy, I find the greatest challenge of all.

I somehow feel that my brief occupation as night watchman, steamfitter's helper, hospital orderly, radio announcer, dishwasher, theater manager, all helped to bolster the courage of a coward trying to prove himself a brave man.

© 1963, New York Herald Tribune Inc.

The City Hall Chapel Opens on a Love Note

By William G. Wing

Of The Herald Tribune Staff

Advice to those about to get married: Go ahead. Green wall-to-wall carpeting, orange settees and a fused glass mural have replaced the old jailhouse drab in the chapel of the Marriage License Bureau in the Municipal Building.

The chapel was redecorated along with all of the other second - floor offices of the City Clerk. The job took 18 months and cost $118,000.

Yesterday, the new marriage chapel was opened. Fittingly, there was a love story to go with it.

Renovation of the second floor was done by an architect and an interior designer employed by the Department of Public Works, Eli Eisner and Mrs. Rosalind Clark.

Mrs. Clark, widow, plunged into her work as a labor of love for this reason:

"I was married here and it was so depressing that I never forgot it. That's why I went in for colors. I was principally concerned with color because it creates a mood."

The mood she created must have been a strong one because, as she and Mr. Eisner worked together they fell in love. Last May 9, they were married in the new chapel they were re-designing. That was by special dispensation, however. Other couples have been married across the street at 52 Chambers St. while the renovation was in progress.

Yesterday, as the new chapel opened for business for everyone, Mrs. Eisner said:

"I hope it makes the people who pass through here happy. The environment, as you start a new life, should reflect a moment of joy because when you are married, it is the greatest moment in your life."

Herald Tribune photo by MORRIS WARMAN

A CHAPEL AND A MARRIAGE were what the plans of Eli Eisner and Rosalind Clark came to. Designing this new city chapel, they fell in love and were married in it.

FOR RELEASE

TUESDAY September 3, 1963

Quotation of up to 500 words, or approximately one-third of the body of the text, whichever is less, from any item of literary and editorial material in this issue is permitted when accompanied by reference to the magazine and when published or broadcast within sixty (60) days of the release date. Use of additional material requires special permission.

Public Relations Office
THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
666 Fifth Avenue, New York 19, N. Y.
PLaza 7-9800 (Night Phone: Area Code 203; 327-0736)

WHAT ORTHERNERS REALLY THINK OF NEGROES

By Stewart Alsop
and Oliver Quayle

In Los Angeles, Alsop interviews a pair of house builders, Ward Peterson and Norman Larson.

Washington Editor Alsop and public-opinion-expert Quayle pooled their talents to discover the real reaction of the white North to the growing racial crisis.

The white North is no more ready to accept genuine integration and real racial equality than the deep South. This conclusion may seem sweeping. But it is based on a lot of legwork—specifically it is based on 500 lengthy interviews in 12 statistically typical voting districts in the East, the Middle West and the West Coast. The statistical results of these interviews, and the answers to a number of the key questions, accompany this report. But the conclusion stated above is not based on statistics alone. It also is based on the way people in the North talk about racial equality.

Here, then, is the way people talk. Here are the phrases you would hear again and again and again all across the North, if you spent many hours ringing doorbells and asking people for their views on the race problem:

"They been held down too long, but they're pushing too hard."

"The colored got rights, just like us whites, but I don't see why we got to mingle together."

"They're human beings just like the rest of us, but I wouldn't want one living next door."

Ray Yoshiyama of Gardena, Calif., feels Negroes "have not worked their way up."

Negroes are "Americans like the rest of us," according to Clay Thomason of Toledo, Ohio.

August de Santolo of Mount Vernon, N.Y., believes that hard work and not demonstrations is the way to get ahead in life.

"They're just human beings like the rest of us, but I wouldn't want one living next door."

"It says in the Constitution (or the Bible) that all men are equal, but they're not ready yet."

"There's some good, some bad, just like the rest of us, but I don't care for all this violence."

"Sure, they deserve a break, but look what happens to property values when they move into a neighborhood."

Each of the above sentences contains one small but significant word—"but." That word expresses the amazing and almost universal ambivalence of the northern white American's reaction to the racial crisis. The "but" neatly divides his mind into two parts.

One part of his mind mistily recalls that "all men are created equal"—it is surprising how many people use that phrase, or a variant. The other part of his mind insists that "some are more equal than others." If there had been no Negro drive for equality, there would have been no civil-rights bill. But what is very striking is the way in which the Negro drive—the demonstrations above all—has tended to alienate the northern white, to make him nervous and unhappy, to convince him that "the colored are getting out of hand." In case of widespread racial violence in the North, no matter who throws the first brick or draws the first blood, the alienation could very easily become total.

There are, of course, some whites in the North who have a one-part mind, an undivided mind. There are a good many people like Mr. Claude Tassell, of Toledo, Ohio, for example. "Boy, you fellows really want all the answers, don't you?" Mr. Tassell remarked to one of us. "OK, here goes. I think white people are a little superior. The Negroes are like savages. Have you seen them chanting and dancing in these demonstrations? Then you know how I feel. I believe in segregation really—now that you've asked. They should live by themselves and they should want to live by themselves. The trouble is, they don't want to. They want to feel equal to the whites."

Mr. Tassell is by no means alone. Of the people interviewed, a surprising 16 percent were convinced that whites are innately superior to Negroes—another 27 percent thought Negroes were inferior, but because of education and environment. (Two persons out of 500 thought the Negroes were superior. "The Negroes are physically superior," explained one. "When was the last white heavyweight champ? And the experts say there's no difference in intelligence. So the Negroes must be superior.") Like Mr. Tassell, the people of the 16 percent are, in general, unconditional segregationists.

There are also people like Mr. Clay Thomason, of Toledo, and Mrs. Marie Honcharik, an attractive housewife in Yonkers, N. Y. Mr. Thomason hails originally from Paducah, Ky., and he wants it clearly understood that "I'm no nigger-lover." But, he says, Negroes "are Americans like the rest of us." He admires President Kennedy for his civil-rights stand, and believes that it should be a Federal offense "to deny a person because his skin is black." Mrs. Honcharik recalls that "ever since I was a little girl I remember looking at colored people and feeling sorry for them." On every major civil-rights issue, she is on the side of the Negroes.

A minority of extremists

But Mr. Thomason and Mrs. Honcharik, as all-out integrationists, are in the minority too—a minority of 23 percent, according to our sample. Thus taken together, the people like Mr. Tassell, who say an unconditional "no" to Negro demands for equality, and the people like Mr. Thomason and Mrs. Honcharik, who say an unconditional "yes," comprise less than 40 percent of the northern white population. The rest, three people out of five, say "Yes, but . . ." And the more you talk to these people, the smaller the "yes" sounds, and the bigger the "but."

A couple of neighbors, Mrs. Clarence Main and Mrs. Nancy Kalk, both of Redondo Beach, Calif., are fairly typical yes-butters. Mrs. Main and Mrs. Kalk disagree on a number of points. Mrs. Main would vote for President Kennedy in 1964, while Mrs. Kalk prefers Barry Goldwater. Mrs. Main approves the accommodations section of the Kennedy civil-rights bill, and Mrs. Kalk is against it.

Mrs. Kalk believes that Negroes "should have more rights," but she is convinced that "they're just creating hate by the way they're pushing this," and she suspects that "it's pushed by the Communists." Mrs. Main feels that "these people deserve to be Americans—they pay their taxes and fight for their country the same as we do." But despite this she too thinks that "they're pushing too fast."

That curious phrase—"they're pushing too fast"—is a phrase the ringer of doorbells hears from coast to coast, and more than any other phrase it is the key to the white North's attitude toward the racial crisis. It is the key to what the present writers, about halfway through our project, began to call "the other side of the but." But first let us have a look at "this side of the but," the "yes" side. This is the side which is most easily reduced to statistics, which is one reason why the liberalism of the white North on the race question tends to be grossly overestimated by most people.

For example, those who were familiar with it (more than a third had no idea what it was about) approved Kennedy's civil-rights program by a two-to-one margin. They approved the key public-accommodations section by three to two. They agreed with Kennedy (as against Goldwater and the southern leaders) that civil rights is a matter for the Federal Government, rather than the states, to deal with. And they were in favor of the Supreme Court's school-integration ruling by a decisive three-to-one margin.

Public-opinion-sampler Oliver Quayle talks to Mrs. Marie Honcharik in Yonkers, N.Y. "Ever since I was a little girl," she says, "I remember looking at Negroes and feeling sorry for them."

Claude Tassell of Toledo, Ohio, says he believes in segregation, because "Negroes are like savages" and should want to live apart.

These figures seem to suggest that the white North is solidly liberal, tolerant and high-minded on the race question. And in one sense the figures are not lying. There is a basic difference of attitude between the white North and the segregationist South. The difference is most marked in the attitude of white northerners on the public-accommodations section of the civil-rights bill.

It was usually necessary to explain the accommodations section—"President Kennedy wants to make it against the law for the owner of a hotel, store or theater to deny service to a person because of race." Once explained, the reaction was very often the same—"That seems OK to me," or "I see nothing wrong with that." Often people sounded puzzled, as though wondering why the issue had ever been raised. Most white northerners, even passionate Negrophobes, take for granted the right of Negroes to be served in public places.

Many of the people we talked to also recalled going to school with Negroes—"never did me no harm," said one old lady, and several remarked that "that color don't rub off in school." These differences in attitude between the white North and the segregationist South are genuine, and they are important. But there are ways in which the white North and the segregationist South see eye to eye, and these similarities are also genuine and important.

Here we come to that phrase we heard again and again—"but they're pushing too hard." What does the phrase mean?

Many people, when they use the phrase, have the Negro demonstrations in mind. A great many people regard the demonstrations as somehow disgraceful, like a dirty house. "What must they think of us abroad?" several people asked. Mrs. Peterson, a housewife we interviewed in Southern California, feels that "the colored people are playing straight into Khrushchev's hands," by undermining the American position abroad.

In some people the Negro demonstrations have also created an underlying layer of simple physical fear. A lady in the Bronx was aghast when asked whether the Post could take her picture to go with her rather mild views on the race question. If her name were used, she said, "the colored will come and knife my kids."

The phrase also expressed another sort of fear—the fear that Negroes will "push" into white jobs, white schools, white neighborhoods; perhaps—for intermarriage is a widespread bugaboo—into white hearts.

This is the "other side of the but." And there is a very marked difference between the two sides of the but. On the "yes" side there is an abstract desire to see justice done to the American citizen whose skin happens to be black. But the desire is abstract; it is not deeply felt. On the other side there is the question: "How will it affect me?" And if the answer is that Negro advance may endanger social status, or a job, or the value of a house, the desire for abstract justice evaporates quickly, and the desire to "keep the colored in their place" appears instead. That desire can be very deeply felt.

The touchiest subject of all

If a politician's constituency is white by a big majority, and if he wishes to commit political suicide, there appear to be three easy ways to do so. One is to espouse the demands of some Negro organizations for exchanges of white and colored students by bus, to end "de facto segregation." When a lot of people in the New York area volunteered complaints about this scheme, we added a question about it to our interview. But we dropped the question later, because everybody, including those strongly pro-Negro on every other issue, denounced the idea. The feeling against job quotas for Negroes, we discovered, is almost as strong. But the touchiest subject of all, because it affects more people than any other, is the subject of housing.

Again and again we had the same experience. A person would seem a very paladin of racial tolerance. In favor of the accommodations section of the civil-rights bill—"How would you feel if you were turned out of a restaurant because of the color of your skin?" In favor of better treatment for the Negroes—"They been held down too long." In favor of the Supreme Court integration decision, and willing to have his or her children go to an integrated school—"That color don't rub off." And then the question about housing, and a pause, often embarrassed, and then, in the words of a kindly-faced man we talked to in a Los Angeles suburb: "Look, mister, the colored move into an area and values go down twenty percent, even more—I just can't afford that."

The statistics speak for themselves. Of those with an opinion in the matter, 77 percent of the people we interviewed, more than three out of four, believed that a white man should have the right to refuse to sell his house to a Negro on the basis of race. We found the same lopsided reply to our question everywhere we went, from coast to coast. It is remarkable that any politician who has favored anti-discrimination statutes in housing survives in office.

The motivation for this reaction is partly, but only partly, economic. Mr. H. Gene Creecy of Toledo pointed out that if he sold his house to a Negro "all the others in the neighborhood will automatically go down from $2,000 to $4,000." But he also said, "Personally, I don't want to live beside them—they're different, that's all."

Another Toledoan, Mr. Elmer Dowling, a retired accountant, considered the problem in terms of the life after death: "I wouldn't want to live near one, but of course if I die and go to Heaven I know I'll have to live with them then. I might feel the same way I do down here, but "Look, mister, the colored move into an area and values go down twenty percent, even more.

THE ALSOP-QUAYLE POLL

To produce this report, Oliver Quayle selected 12 "barometric" voting districts in the East, the Middle West and the West coast, for 500 interviews in depth. Alsop and Quayle were assisted by Quayle's staff of trained interviewers, but they did more than half the interviews themselves, since their purpose was to interpret, report and analyze, as well as to produce statistics. The statistical results of their project are also interesting, however, and in some cases startling. Here are the most pertinent ones—with "no opinion" responses eliminated in every instance:

What kind of a job do you think President Kennedy is doing? Robert Kennedy?

	President	Robert Kennedy
"Excellent" or "pretty good"	57%	48%
"Only fair" or "poor"	43%	52%

If the election were being held tomorrow, would you probably vote for:

Kennedy	64%	Kennedy	57%
Rockefeller	36%	Goldwater	43%

What do you think are the most important issues facing the United States?

Race 33% Foreign-policy problems 22% Taxes 16% (rest scattered)

What do you think of the President's civil-rights program?

Approve 63% Disapprove 37%

What do you think of accommodations section (explained by interviewer)?

Approve 61% Disapprove 39%

What do you think of the Supreme Court's decision on school integration?

Approve 75% Disapprove 25%

Is civil rights a matter for the states or the Federal Government?

States 36% Federal 64%

Suppose you yourself had school-age children, other things being equal, would you prefer that they went to integrated school, all white, or would it make no difference to you?

Integrated 17% All white 42% No difference 41%

Do you think a Negro should have the right to buy a home anywhere, or do you think a white man should have the right to refuse to sell to a Negro?

Negro should have right to buy 23%
White should have right to refuse 77%

Do you think there is a basic difference between the white and Negro races?

White superior innately 16%
White superior because of education 27%
Races about the same 57%

Do you think the Negroes in this country are treated too well, not well enough, or about right?

Too well 11% Not well enough 38% About right 51%

if the Lord says to me I have to make a choice, I'd live with them just to be with Him."

Some whites complain that anti-discrimination statutes really discriminate against whites. "Look," said a jaunty businessman in blue slacks, who lived in the Bronx and refused to have his picture taken, "suppose I won't sell you this house because I don't like the look of you. So you're white, so OK. Suppose you're colored. So if I refuse to sell it to you, I'm in trouble, maybe bad trouble. There really ought to be a National Association for the Advancement of White People."

Others complain that Negroes "don't keep up their places." There seems to be a widespread notion, easily disproved by a tour of any Negro middle-class area, that "the colored throw their garbage on the lawn." Such complaints are most likely to be voiced by sloppy housekeepers in rundown areas.

In fact, contrary to the mythology of the liberal intellectuals, on the race issue as on other issues, the poor are apt to be a lot more reactionary than the reasonably well off. A person with a neurotic hankering to hear rabidly racist views should avoid the comfortable suburbs with well-kept lawns, and he should not ring the doorbells of people with Jewish or Anglo-Saxon names.

He should go, instead, to the working-class areas, especially where Negroes are moving in, and especially where there are immigrants and minority races other than Jews. There is a widespread feeling among the minorities that the Negroes, in the words of Mr. Ray Yoshiyama, of Gardena, Calif., "haven't worked their way up." Mr. Yoshiyama spent his boyhood in a wartime detention camp, and he is proud that he now makes a decent living as a market gardener. Hard work, not demonstrations, he thinks, is the way to get ahead.

Mr. August de Santolo, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., who came over from Italy as a boy and is proud of his successful sons, feels much the same way. So do Mr. and Mrs. Leslei Toths. Mr. Toths is a refugee from Hungary, and he and his German wife are intensely proud of their $25,000 house in Culver City, Calif. The value of their previous house in another suburb depreciated badly when Negroes began to move in, and the memory rankles. "The Negroes are pressing too fast," complains Mr. Toths. He feels they should realize "that white people are a thousand years ahead in culture."

Northern whites, in short, are willing enough to share a restaurant or a hotel with Negroes, and they will even share their schools—although better than two out of five said they would prefer to send their children to all-white schools. But aside from the three sticking points mentioned earlier, there is also an underlayer of mixed fear and prejudice. This underlayer is far more prevalent in the white North than the writers of this report had realized before they set out on their tour. And for the first time, the racial issue has suddenly become the dominant issue in this country. Last year one of us asked 500 people, "What concerns you most?" Race was way down on the list. Now it easily leads all the other issues, including the survival issue of war and peace.

What, then, with a presidential election year coming up in 1964, is the probable political impact of the racial issue?

One of us recently asked that question of New York's shrewd Sen. Jacob Javits. Surely, the reporter said, in view of the way so many northern whites talked about the Negro question, it was a dangerous thing for a politician, like Javits himself, to be an all-out advocate of civil rights?

"Sure," said the senator, "I know they talk that way. But they don't vote that way."

This is the Javits Rule. Our sample strongly suggests that the Javits Rule remains valid. President Kennedy himself (belatedly, according to his critics) must now be counted an all-out advocate of civil rights. He must be counted with the one-in-four minority in the white North who say an unconditional "yes" to Negro aspirations, as against the three out of four who say "yes, but" or "no."

Logically, therefore, the civil-rights issue, as the dominant issue today, ought to hurt the President politically, perhaps even wound him mortally. But, at least in the north, the hurt to the President seems hardly more than a pinprick.

Seven percent of the people we talked to gave his stand on the race crisis as a reason for liking the President, against 11 percent who disliked him for the same reason. The spread in Robert Kennedy's case was markedly wider—5 percent to 12 percent—which suggests that the Attorney General acts as a useful lightning rod for his brother, where the race issue is concerned. Remember, moreover, that we interviewed only whites, and what the President has lost among whites has certainly been balanced at least in part by what he has gained among Negroes.

Kennedy is still popular

Moreover, in our sample, President Kennedy inflicted on both Sen. Barry Goldwater and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller a political "murder most horrible," although the murder of Goldwater was notably less horrible than Rockefeller's. In voting districts which voted 50 percent for Richard Nixon in 1960, in two states (Ohio and California) which Kennedy lost in 1960, and with the pro-Kennedy Negro vote excluded, Kennedy beat Rockefeller two to one, and Goldwater by a spread of 14 percentage points.

The real question, then, is not whether the racial issue has already hurt the President badly; it hasn't. The real question is whether the Javits Rule can be broken by circumstances and an astute opposition. Suppose, for example, that there is really bad racial trouble in the North before next year's election. This is not impossible, as anyone who has smelled the atmosphere in the streets of our big cities can attest.

Even bad racial trouble would not bring the white North to support a racist segregationist on the southern pattern. The real northern Negrophobes are so small a minority in the North that any candidate carrying the label "anti-Negro" would be doomed from the start among the majority of whites. But suppose Kennedy's opponent presented himself as a moderate, a middle-of-the-roader—a yes-butter, like the white majority. And suppose he succeeded in implanting in the minds of the yes-but majority the notion that on racial matters the President is an extremist, a Negro yes-man, indifferent to "the rights of the white majority," intent on forcing Negroes and whites to live together.

I just can't afford that."

Under these circumstances, is it possible that the Javits Rule might be broken, and that the racial issue might be used to encompass the defeat of an extremely popular President?

No one really knows the answer to that question, of course. But after all our walking and talking, the writers of this report are convinced that the racial issue is a sleeper—an unpredictable but potentially decisive political factor. The white North does not really feel strongly about such issues as the civil-rights bill or the Supreme Court's integration decision. The white North feels very strongly about such far more personal matters as housing and social integration. These are the kind of strong feelings that really can cause election upsets.

The writers of this report are convinced of something else as well. For the time being there is simply no way to reconcile the aspirations of the new generation of Negroes for real integration and true equality with the resistance to those aspirations of the majority of whites. For a time this country will simply have to live with the irreconcilable.

The finding that astonished us most—we went back and rechecked it to be sure it was correct—was that only 38 percent of the people we interviewed feel that the American Negro is treated "not well enough." More than six out of 10 feel that the Negro is being treated "about right," or even "too well."

These six people out of 10 have no understanding of the brutal meaning of the statistics cited by the President: "The Negro baby born in America today, regardless of the section or state in which he is born, has about one half as much chance of completing high school as a white baby, born in the same place, on the same day; . . . twice as much chance of becoming unemployed; about one seventh as much chance of earning $10,000 a year; a life expectancy which is seven years shorter and prospects for earning only half as much."

As long as six out of 10 northern whites are unaware of such facts or indifferent to them, the gulf between what the Negroes want and what the whites will accept will continue to be very wide. It is much wider today than most people realize, which is why the racial crisis in this country is more dangerous than most people have yet discovered.

The danger lies less in violent Negro action than in violent white reaction. It is easy to imagine the kind of political oratory, perhaps sweetly reasonable in seeming, which would ignite all the fears and prejudices which lie on "the other side of the but." The racial crisis today is like a controlled cancer. The excitements and temptations of a presidential election year might cause the issue to be exploited in such a way that the cancer might get out of control. That is a risk the responsible leadership of both parties should weigh most seriously. THE END Surrounded by his sons and farm equipment, truck-gardener Wayne Bressler of Monroe, Mich., sits for his interview by Washington Editor Alsop. Some 500 such interviews contributed to this report.

August Meier

New Currents In the Civil Rights Movement

Reprinted from
NEW POLITICS
Summer 1963

2-17-64

Pine Bluff

Dick Gregory at Pine Bluff:

'Now the Uncle Toms Have Got to Go'

By LEROY DONALD
Of the Gazette Staff

PINE BLUFF — Dick Gregory, the Chicago Negro comedian, who commands $5,000 a night to perform, came here Sunday night for free to tell Negroes of this community that the "ameners", the "uh-huhers" and the "Toms" have got to go.

"The days are over when these little kids are gonna fight your battles for you, old folks," Gregory told some 500 plus Negroes crowded into the Allen Temple AME Church.

He reminded the older Negroes that they were the ones who brought up the white man, nursed him from infancy, worked in his home and from this acquired his ways and learned how the white man thinks.

"Every Negro can think like a white man, but few white folks can think like us," he said. "The job's over now and you've done a good job and you don't have to keep on Tommin' no more.

"One of these days just stop shouting and hollering long enough to listen to those words (of freedom songs). Stop clapping long enough to listen to that prayer and you'll find out what you're committed to. You sing about 'You won't be moved' but if that white policeman come in here now and tell you go home, you go."

Pointing at a picture of Christ on a cross on the pulpit, Gregory said, "It's so easy, so cheap to sing a song 2,000 years later. How many of you would've been there?"

Then Gregory, sometimes funny, sometimes deadly serious, talked about the church's failure on the part of both white and black to aid in the civil rights cause.

"The church is the most segregated part of American life today," he said. "We've integrated pool halls, night clubs and prostitution houses, but if me and you walked into some white church with some white man, we'd go to jail."

"* * * Instead of saying 'Thank God we're saying 'Thank the Supreme Court.'"

He told the Negro elders if they couldn't do anything else to at least pray for the anti-segregation movement.

"It's an easy battle. Don't make it difficult." Referring to apathetic Negroes, he said, "You'd better get out of the way or you're going to get stomped to death accidentally. You do us more harm than the Ku Klux Klan. At least we know where they are."

He told the crowd that the Negro was the only one who could save this country. "We got a strange mind in this country, both white and black," he said. "This country got the sickest mind in the world * * *"

"Martin Luther King says love your brother, turn the other cheek. Malcolm X say don't love your brother, don't turn the other cheek. They put Martin Luther King in jail and Malcolm X can't even get arrested—you've got to save your white brother today because he's just out of it."

"You better know your strength and know your power. You brought us a long way. Well now, momma, come on join us. We control it now * * * You the No. 1 strong man.

"There's two things make a man strong — joy and pain. There's no race on the face of the earth today that's had as much of both as the American Negro * * * One Negro woman up in South Carolina went to go in swimming and they closed 17 swimming pools and she couldn't even swim—that's strength.

Talking about the march on Washington last summer in which he participated, Gregory said, "We, the Negro, had a 300-year-old gripe and we didn't fight. We proved that day that the American Negro is not mad, he's just tired. It's not love, baby, it's respect we're after. Every white person in the South got a nigger he loves but he don't respect you enough to let his kids go to school with yours. Love ain't nothing but passion, baby, that swings and sways with the wind."

Pointing to the picture of Christ, he said, "The only reason they got by with that is that you didn't show up.

"One hundred and fifty years ago I was the white man's slave and I hated his guts. He was the master and he loved me. Today he hates me and I don't hate him—now who's the slave."

Gregory said the white man didn't realize that the Negro is right in his anti-segregation movement and wants to go to jail to prove that he's right.

"He [the white man] is not aware that the harder the wind blows, the tighter I'll pull my coat," he said. "He's not aware that the only time I shed my garments is when the sun comes out."

"He [the white man] taught us about reaping and sowing. Now it's harvest time. And I got the sickle. He [the white man] didn't have sense enough to put me in the front of the bus so that he could watch me. He put me in the back where I could watch him."

Gregory's appearance here was sponsored by the Pine Movement, which has been here a little more than a year. The young members of the Movement, most of them teenagers, sat in the choir loft behind Gregory.

Gregory's talk lasted two and a half hours. He got a standing ovation when he appeared, accompanied by Bill Hansen, a white leader of the Movement and of the Student Non-violent Co-ordinating Committee.

Gregory has been involved in numerous civil rights demonstrations and has been arrested a number of times.

Microfilm Code No.
Demon 1
SERS Library
3
ARKANSAS GAZETTE p. 2A
Date FEB 17 1964

File Freedom Songs

(NOT PRINTED AT GOVERNMENT EXPENSE)

United States of America

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 88th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Freedom and Freedom Songs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM F. RYAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, February 25, 1964

Mr. RYAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, a fascinating article by Theodore Bikel appeared in the March 1964, issue of the national folk music magazine Hootenanny. The noted singer and actor eloquently describes the importance of folk songs and folk singing to the civil rights movement. Theodore Bikel has dedicated his time and talent to the struggle for equality, and his article provides much insight into the dynamic of the civil rights movement. I recommend it to my colleagues:

FREEDOM SONGS—FROM EGYPT TO MISSISSIPPI

(By Theodore Bikel)

A logical and obvious statement: "There would have been no contemporary 'freedom' songs but for the integration movement in the South."

A seemingly illogical statement: "There would have been no movement but for the songs."

Yet, for all its irrationality, the latter statement was made in complete seriousness by one of the leaders of the movement, the closer examination more than bears out his contention. It asserts, in fact, that the music emanating from the Southern streets, churches and jails is not merely a product but, rather, one of the prime causes of the demonstrations, the prayer vigils and the mass meetings.

It emphasizes that many of the so-called direct action undertakings could not have been conceived or carried out, that the beatings and the jailhouses might have stopped the movement in its tracks, that faith and courage would not have prevailed had it not been for the songs.

This, of course, may be fairly true of any liberation movement in history, but it is doubly true of the Negro movement, and for sound psychological reasons, I do not refer to mass psychology, which no doubt can easily explain crowd behavior and reaction to musical stimuli during times of stress and in a group's pursuit of a common ideal. I refer to psychology based upon the ethnic and social structure perculiar to Negro society, especially in the South, a society that is applying its own temperament and time-worn mode of behavior to this 20th century political movement.

One need be no ethnomusicologist or anthropologist (indeed, this writer lays no claim to any such scholarly distinction) to know that Negroes, by tradition and natural inclination, are incapable of conducting a gathering of any kind without punctuating and underlining what is being said with music and song. Speeches and even prayer in a Negro meeting must evoke the crowning experience of song, without which no feeling of mass communication is possible. Such was the trademark of the Negro church, and such is the trademark of the mass movement aimed at integration. Although this is a black-and-white-together movement, it takes its emotional shape from the Negro characteristics of mass dedication.

It should be noted that this obviously secular movement not only has insoluble ties with the various Negro churches, but also relies on religious traditions and practices in its everyday workings. The mass meeting—planning a sit-in, a freedom march, or a voter registration drive—is held in the church; the demonstrators, bleeding and weak from the beatings and the fasting in jail, make their way to the church; the local leader of the movement is more often than not the minister of the church; and many of the songs that are sung are the old spirituals and gospel tunes with new words.

Where yesterday the minister from the pulpit promised the congregation a slice of the Kingdom of God, and everyone answered, "Amen, hallelujah," he admonishes them today from the same pulpit to "go down and register to vote," and the answer is still, "Amen, hallelujah." For he is asking for an act of religious dedication, and they receive it as such.

Indeed, what else does it represent when those who heed the call find physical violence and humiliation of personal dignity in their path. How inevitable must the identification seem that draws a parallel between the early martyrs and the fate of Medgar Evers, William Moore, James Travis, and the hundreds of Freedom Fighters who were beaten, shot at, trampled on or killed, carrying the word "freedom" on their lips. Little wonder then that the hymn and the freedom song become as one, that there is no telling where man leaves off and God begins.

"Over my head I see freedom in the air;
There must be a God somewhere."

To anyone who still thinks it exaggerated to say that there could be no movement without the songs, one must answer from personal observation. The sights and sounds of a little Negro church in Albany, Ga., or in Clarksdale, Miss., or of a larger church in Birmingham, Ala., are a powerful memory to have. You are a participant, true, and less than objective because of a personal involvement with the cause. But you are also a guest from the North, with the observing eye of a visitor. And you know the tell-tale signs of weariness, of boredom with the repetitiveness of the speeches that lurk in the eyes of the congregation. A crisis is on. That means there has been a mass meeting every single night for the last week or more.

Although the speakers may be most revered as leaders and bear illustrious names such as King, Shuttlesworth, Abernathy, or Walker, the heart is heavy from the bombings, the bloodshed, the look of children fresh out of jail. Also, nonviolence does not come easy. How do you teach yourself not to lash out in fury when the white man raises a fist, a club, or a gun? How do you master your impulses when your own child is carried into your house, beaten senseless and bloody for having committed the crime of sitting at a soda fountain or going to a movie? The words, inspiring as they are, do not quite penetrate the curtain of dull pain and anxiety. But then someone begins to sing:

"We have walked through the shadow of death
We've had to walk all by ourselves
But we'll never turn back,
No, we'll never turn back."

Until we've all been freed and we have equality. All of a sudden it begins to make sense, not in a rational way, but in an emotional acknowledgement; although the mind had failed to understand, the soul had nodded assent. And the singing continues:

"We shall not, we shall not be moved,
We shall not, we shall not be moved,
Just like a tree that's standing by the water,
We shall not be moved."

"That's right, brother," come the exclamations. "You tell 'em." And a new verse, with acid humor this time:

"Tell Governor Wallace he shall be removed,
Tell Governor Wallace he shall be removed,
Just like a pail of garbage in the alley,
He shall be removed."

The eyes are brighter now; there is a dawning of fresh energy and renewed courage. And the songs do not let up. They attack apathy and resigned complacency in various ways: with earthy sarcasm, and a new verb:

"Down here in Mississippi
No neutrals have we met
Tell me, will you fight for freedom
Or 'Tom' for Ross Barnett?
Which side are you on?
Which side are you on?"

And with words of inspiration that in any other context might have sounded forced or even corny:

"I don't mind the jailhouse
'Cause I want my freedom
I want my freedom now."

Many words of this are often substituted—such as: I don't mind "walking" or "marching" or "dogs" or "Bull Connor." As you watch a boy, no older than 9, sing in all seriousness and fervor, "I dont mind dying 'cause I want my freedom," and you realize that he is not just mouthing words, but knows what he is saying, you look about and see all the weariness and listlessness gone from the eyes of the assembled. They are ready to meet the haters again. Tonight, if need be; because freedom is already 100 years too late in coming.

A large number of these songs have existed for a long time; they were sung by Negro congregants at every service. Why then assume that the texts of such songs should have suddenly triggered or even inspired action in the 1960's when they failed to do so 15, 25, or 40 years ago? I suppose the answer lies in a shift of interpretation. The term "freedom" was, until recently, used as a word of solace. It referred to a freedom that was promised in the afterlife; in the Kingdom of Heaven, in the arms of Jesus:

And before I'd be a slave,
I'd be buried in my grave,
And go home to my Lord and be free.

Or:

I have trials here below
But I keep singing 'cause I know
Yes I know—(Oh my Lord)—
My change will come.

It was not until the boycott of Montgomery, Ala., in 1955, the freedom rides and sit-ins in North Carolina and Tennessee, the Albany movement in 1960, the voter registration drive in Greenwood, Miss.; not until Birmingham, Cambridge, Md., and Danville, Va., that the words "change" and "freedom" were read with an appended "now." Even the unofficial anthem of the movement, every verse of which used to include the words "some day," has undergone changes:

Black and white together now it says, and
We are not afraid today.

The movement of the 1960's is, in fact, pledging its efforts, its energy, its dedication to the brotherhood of white and black, its determination to remain nonviolent in the struggle, its willingness to risk jail—and even death—for the cause. Anything but its patience. For that has run out.

"Avadim Hayinu Ve'ata B'ney Chorin"—goes an old Hebrew song. "Once we were slaves, but now we are freemen." It is quite obvious why the freedom movement of today draws upon the Biblical source so much, and finds itself particularly moved by the analogy of Egypt and Mississippi, Pharaoh and Barnett, Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, and George Wallace, overseer of Alabama. There seems to be an heirloom of suffering that slaves and former slaves understand profoundly. So it appears that the song of the Israelites, building Pharaoh's pyramids in Egypt, was but a forefather of the tune sung by the Negroes picking Eastland's cotton in Leflore County. By a curious set of circumstances, the analogy goes even farther:

Go down Moses
Way down in Egypt Land
Tell old Pharaoh
To let my people go.

Negro ministers and church choirs have been singing this for generations. But in today's crisis in the Mississippi Delta, one wonders if those who sing these words are not quite reverently referring to Robert Moses of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, who has come to lead his people to freedom as did his namesake in Egypt. History's pun, perhaps; but was not the original Moses an "outside agitator" too?

There is an old Talmudic saying: "In every generation, man must look upon himself as if he had personally come out of the bondage of Egypt." So it is with the idea—and the song—of freedom. If it is a fire of the same torch, and a torch of the same making, then the fire is being rekindled and the song being sung anew each time man's yoke becomes unbearable.

For freedom is not something that can be won and stashed away—it has to be fought for over and over again in each generation, whenever men seek to enslave others. Thus I see a chain throughout history that links the song of the slaves in Egypt with the battlecry of the Maccabees, the song of the French Revolution, the Greek revolt against the Turks, the Industrial Revolution in Europe, the Irish Rebellion against the English, and today's song of freedom in America.

A new day is coming upon us at last. It does not come unaided. If we are privileged to see its dawn at all, then surely we owe recognition to those who hastened the hour—to Martin Luther King, James Farmer, Medgar Evers, Bob Moses, Jim Forman, Charles Sherrod, Bob Zellner, Jim Peck, Sam Block and the host of leaders, students and ministers who gave a new meaning to hackneyed words such as "justice" and "brotherhood."

History, however, will owe the greatest debt to those who sang in the jails and on the courthouse steps, for their song will stand as the one tangible reminder of this era, its shame and its nobility, long after the hatemongers—and their victims—are forgotten.

Written by -
Mrs M. E. Tilly

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY

File: Misc.

May 1, 1964

WORSHIP SERVICE

One Family Under God:
Freedom of Residence and Job Opportunity

ORGAN PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP

First Reader: Exalt the Lord, our God and worship in his holy hill, for the Lord our God is holy. I will meditate on his precepts. I will observe his statutes.

HYMN: "Come, Thou Almighty King" Anonymous, 1757
Stanzas 1, 3, 4 Tune: Felice de Giardini, 1769

STATEMENT ON THE SIGNIFICANCE OF MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY

SCRIPTURE

First Reader: I looked again and saw all the oppression that goes on in the world; there were the oppressed in tears with no one to redress their wrongs. (Ecclesiastes 4:1)

Second Reader: Console my people, console them—'tis the voice of your God. (Isaiah 40:1)

First Reader: The Lord Eternal showed me this, showed me himself standing beside a wall, a plumb-line in his hand. The Eternal said to me, "Amos, what do you see?" "A plum-line," I replied. The Eternal said, "With a plumb-line I test my people." (Amos 7:7-8)

Second Reader: "We are apt to think that the early Church was made up of a small band of people with very much the same experiences and very much the same culture. However, if we re-read the book of Acts we will quickly discover that a glorious unity of various kinds of people resulted from the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. . . . "People of sixteen nationalities and three continents were baptized into the Christian church and made members of the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. . . .

"It was no accident that God chose such a motley crowd on which to bestow his gifts of faith, cleansing, and brotherly love. Pentecost was a mighty demonstration of his purpose '. . . that they may all be one.' "

—Edge of The Edge, by Theodore E. Matson

First Reader: The glorious unity did result in the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit on that day of Pentecost. But does the Church today say, "Come, whosoever will?"

Not many members have easy consciences. God is stirring the mind and hearts of men. In his book, The South and the Southerner, Ralph McGill writes, "The most prophetic words were those of a minister who said: 'We are all integrated . . . every one of our churches is integrated. The faces in the pews may all be white. But the Negro is there. He is present in the angers and guilt of some of the congregation. He is present in the consciences of many. He is present in the fears of the ushers who wait each Sunday to see if one will come. . . . God is at work. Some of the churches may become private clubs and establish rigid rules against the presence of nonmembers. . . . They will never know peace. We are all integrated and there is nothing we can do about it save ask God's grace to make us see the fact of it.' "

Second Reader: The Eternal said: "With a plumb-line I test my people." There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male nor female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus. . . . love one another with brotherly affection; outdo one another in showing honor.

(Galatians 3:28; Romans 12:10)

Freedom of Residence

First Reader: The preamble of the Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations states: "Recognition of the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice, and peace."

The Indian, the Puerto Rican, the Negro, the Jew, and members of other races in our nation are in the fellowship of suffering with Him who said:

Second Reader: "Foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man has nowhere to lay his head." (Matthew 8:20)

When a member of one of these does succeed in buying a house in a "better" neighborhood, he is often met with unfriendliness.

First Reader: And if he is allowed to stay, the community may become all Puerto Rican, or Negro, or Jewish, or Chinese, as the case may be.

Second Reader: God speaks through Micah:

"But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid;
for the mouth of the Lord of hosts has spoken."

(Micah 4:4)

First Reader: The Eternal said: "With a plumb-line I test my people."
He has showed you, O man, what is good;
and what does the Lord require of you
but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God? (Micah 6:8)
. . . I was a stranger and you welcomed me.
(Matthew 25:35)

Job Opportunity

Second Reader: "O God, we remember with pain and pity the thousands of our brothers and sisters who seek honest work and seek in vain. . . . We acknowledge our common guilt for the disorder of our industry which thrusts willing workers into the degradation of idleness and want. . . ."

—Prayers of the Social Awakening,
by Walter Rauschenbush

First Reader: Life in the United States is often difficult for people who are different from the majority in their skin color, their manner of worship, or even their names. We know there are places where a man named Jones, although no better qualified, gets a job more easily than a man named Cohen. We know the Negro is "the last to be hired and the first to be fired."

Second Reader: The Eternal said: "With a plumb-line I test my people."
Justice is turned back,
and righteousness stands afar off;
for truth has fallen in the public squares,
and uprightness cannot enter. . . .
The Lord saw it, and it displeased Him that there was no justice. (Isaiah 59:14-15)

A LITANY FOR THE FACING OF THIS HOUR

Leader: O God, the Father of all of us, who art all seeing, all knowing, all understanding,
We pray:
For those who seek homes and suffer defeat.
For those who are forced to live in city slums or country shacks.
For the homeless migrant and the refugee.
For all of those anywhere in the world who sleep in streets.

Response: Hear our prayer, O God. Teach us thy will.

Leader: For those who are denied jobs because of color of skin, religion or national origin.
For those prepared for jobs, but judged too old;
and the youth well equipped, judged too young.
For the Indian on the reservation, unprepared for a job outside.

Response: Hear our prayer, O God. Teach us thy will.

Leader: For all those who are unemployed,
For all those who labor without hope.

Response: Teach us thy will, O Lord, and show us the way. Amen.

Leader: The Eternal said: "With a plumb-line I test my people."

HYMN: "The Voice of God Is Calling" John Haynes Holmes, 1913
Tune: George J. Webb, 1837

Soloist: The voice of God is calling
Its summons unto men; as once He spoke in Zion,
So now He speaks again.
Whom shall I send to succor my people in their need?
Whom shall I send to loosen the bonds of lust and greed?

Congregation: We heed, O Lord, Thy summons, and answer, here are we!
Send us upon Thine errand, let us Thy servants be.
Our strength is dust and ashes, our years a passing hour;
But Thou canst use our weakness, to magnify Thy power.

Soloist: I hear My people crying in cot and mine and slum;
No field or mart is silent, no city street is dumb.
I see My people falling in darkness and despair,
Whom shall I send to shatter the fetters which they bear?

Congregation: From ease and pleasure save us, from pride of place absolve;
Purge us of low desire, lift us to high resolve,
Take us, and make us holy, teach us Thy will and way,
Speak, and, behold! we answer, command, and we obey!
Amen.

Leader: And behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and broke in pieces the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake, but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire, but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice.
(1 Kings 19:11-12)

UNISON PRAYER: May we hear thy still small voice,
O God, and follow where it commands. Amen.

POSTLUDE

All Bible references are from the Revised Standard Version except those on page 1 which are from Moffatt's translation.

This service was written by Mrs. M. E. Tilly

Published for United Church Women

Copyright 1963 by the National Council of Churches

FO5-144 Printed in the U.S.A.

MIGRANT STUDY: SOCIAL RESEARCH II, MAY - JUNE, 1964

On April 22, 1964, the classes of Dr. Joseph Golden (A. U. School of Social Work) and Dr. Eric Lincoln (Clark College), met with Mr. Pat Watters of Southern Regional Council (SRC), to discuss preparations for a study of migrants from rural areas to Atlanta.

The aims of the study had been stated in a letter from Pat Watters. SRC was interested in the situation of such people, simply as a general problem of the South. They wondered just "what goes" with poor people who moved to the city from the farm. Refinement of the general purpose is to be thejob of the combined student team. The following are to be considered in our research:

Hypotheses

1. That the experiences of poor Negro rural migrants to Atlanta are similar to the experiences of poor white rural migrants to Atlanta.

2. That the background of the two groups is similar.

3. That the characteristics of the two groups are similar.

4. That what has happened to the two groups in Atlanta has been similar.

The sample is to include only poor rural farm migrants, and not persons with non-farm rural backgrounds. At this point, the concept "poor" has not been defined. It was agreed that the best way of finding people in the categories we want will be to knock on doors in areas where large numbers of migrants live. If the areas are large enough, area sampling techniques will be used to find respondents. Maps of such areas will aid in our finding of desired migrants.

A schedule will have to be devised to include sections on (1) background, (2) what caused respondents to move, (3) description of who the respondents are, (4) what has happened to them in Atlanta.

The following material comes from class and committee notes.

April 22

The combined student group met with the instructors and Pat Watters of SRC. Dr. Golden stated that this project will not quite offer experience in every phase of the research process in that the problem for research is being chosen for us. In addition, the process of problem identification and formulation must be greatly foreshortened. We should attempt to review the literature on this subject as much as possible in the time available. In response to a question about migrants from a rural area, it was answered that it applie. to persons recently moved to Atlanta from a rural area anywhere in the USA. The question was raised whether certain neighborhoods and the sample we select would be representative of the migrant population as a whole. We would have to work out a technique for random selection of a sample of migrants.

On the question of focusing on race as an element that adds further problems to urban adjustment, it was pointed out that economic problems cut across racial lines. The Populist Movement was cited as an example of the alliance of poor Negroes and whites. A student asked if the subject was not too diffuse, too broad. It was agreed that we need closer focus. The difficulty of analysis without tabulating machines is tremendous. We must reduce the number of questions. However, Watters is primarily interested in doing a human relations report; therefore, he can go further with certain families and ask whatever he wants to ask.

WATTERS: Can we afford not to focus on how these people really see themselves in this society? We want to know how these people feel, about money, about life in the city. What other attitudes have influenced them since moving here? By focusing on race as a problem, are we not presupposing what our answer will be? Do we make it more likely that race will emerge as the problem if we form our questions in such a way that we are looking for that? We are interested in finding out about these people as people, yet getting enough about them as a type so that two or three representative families can be chosen and a story gotten on them.

Movement from one culture to another creates problems for them and for society, a compelling human story; the move is a tremendous distance in time. How does it thwart and cripple them? How does it make them grow? Deprivation is discrimination. It is similar to Oscar Lewis' Five Families as nearly as he could describe what he is seeking. Focus: Improving living conditions of people who live in the South. We must befriend them and gain their trust.

GOLDEN: According to the 1960 census material which we will use, a "migrant" is one who was not living in the Atlanta metropolitan area in 1955. In this project, we will be interested in persons who have been here a year or so. So far as locating neighborhoods, we will have to assume that things are pretty much the same now as in 1960, that those tracts showing a high percent of recent migrants will still be where most migrants are located.

May 1

Friday's class had the task of working out a way of finding the poor migrants from rural areas. Dr. Golden brought the manual, U. S. Census of Population and Housing, 1960 - Census Tracts in Atlanta, Ga.

We set up three committees to work on the problem. One will select which census tracts we are going to work in using the manual, a map by census tracts, and a sheet given to them by Dr. Golden. This committee also had to work out an operational definition of the concept "poor".

May 3

1. A committee reported on a technique of area sampling in which certain blocks will be selected and certain households within that block. Select alternate blocks within the tract and get all houses with numbers ending in 3 and 6. If there are apartment houses, choose apartments ending in 3 and 6. For those apartments using letters instead of numbers, use A for 1, B for 2,etc.

Use the same procedure in a rooming house, by numbering the doors beginning with one.

2. Who in the house should be interviewed.

Father or mother; if they are not available, then any relative, then anyone over 18 years of age who moved there as a part of the family group.

3. How to separate the migrants from rural areas and those from urban areas. We did not really solve this, but we defined rural areas from the book Society, by Eli Chinoy, 1961. Rural area - any settlement with a population of 2500 or less.

4. What time should interviews be held?

Up until 8 p. m.

May 8

Exploring teams will go out and find out where Negroes are located. We will take the F-10 census tract for white respondents, and F-72 census tract for Negro respondents. The exploring teams will go to F-72, locate Negroes, type of housing, etc., to get an idea of where the migrants are.

May 9

The following is a report from the exploring team. The tract was bounded by Oxford Ave., Browns Mill, Poole Creek, South River, and Moreland Ave. Two Negro neighborhoods or sections were old with a few older deteriorated homes, the remainder being new or relatively new. The other section was composed of new homes. In both sections it was found that family dwellings, rented homes, and apartment buildings were predominant. It became apparent that we could not rely on the publication Census Tracts to provide us with a guide for selecting areas with large numbers of migrants, since there have been tremendous changes since 1960.

May 14

On the above date the committee for the assignment of various blocks for each team met. The blocks were selected from census tracts 55A and 26. Thirty-six assignments were selected, each consisting roughly of three blocks. Thirteen were taken from 55A, and thirteen from 26, in case no migrants were found in census tract 55A.

May 15

The groups have met and decided on the tracts we will use for interviewing Negroes and whites.

There were volunteers for a committee to work out a method for analyzing the results of the study. Volunteers from the Monday group will be added.

May 16

The committee for completing the schedule met. The schedule was completed, and the general instructions for filling out the schedule were decided upon. Most of the changes consisted of making unstructured questions structured, taking out those words or questions which might influence the respondents' answer, and those irrelevant to the stated purpose of the study.

May 20

The analysis committee met to devise a method for analyzing data. It was decided that we will have two tabulation sheees to compare Negro and white respondents.

For the unstructured questions we attempted to anticipate responses; those we could not anticipate would be considered after the data are collected. The structured questions will be tabulated according to percentage.

Interviews were carried out in the last week of May. As Dr. Lincoln's class had completed the semester, they were not available for interviewing. A total of 31 respondents were interviewed - 21 Negro and 10 white. After committees had tabulated data from the schedules, there was no time remaining for analysis of the tabulated data.

In evaluating the following tables, it should be kept in mind that the 31 respondentents interviewed do not constitute a random or representative sample of the "poor", rural migrants in Atlanta. The data set forth in these tables can be only suggestive for a study using a well-selected sample. Since existing source materials were not useful in sample selection, it is suggested that a more useful source might be found in registrations for utility service.

TABLE I

LENGTH OF RESIDENCE IN ATLANTA

LENGTH (in months)	Negro	White	Total
6 - 12	15	7	22
13 - 18	4	3	7
19 - 24	2	--	2
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 2

PREVIOUS RESIDENCE BY STATE

STATE	Negro	White	Total
Georgia	17	8	25
Other state	4	2	6
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 3

DID YOU LIVE ON A FARM?

REPLY	Negro	White	Total
Yes	14	3	17
No	7	7	14
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 4

RESPONDENTS BY FAMILY ROLE

ROLE	Negro	White	Total
Head of Household	4	2	6
Spouse	13	8	21
Relative	3	--	3
Other Adult	1	--	1
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 5

NUMBER OF CHILDREN IN HOUSEHOLD

AGE	Negro	White	Total
5 or less	17	10	27
6 - 11	4	--	4
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 6

RELATIVES IN HOUSEHOLD BY AGE

AGEk	Negro	White	Total
5 or less	20	10	30
6 - 11	--	--	--
12 and over	--	--	--
Total	20	10	30

TABLE 7

NON-RELATIVES IN HOUSEHOLD BY AGE

AGE	Negro	White	Total
5 or less	--	--	--
6 - 11	--	--	--
12 and over	1	1	2
Total	1	1	2

TABLE 8

REASON FOR MOVING TO ATLANTA

	Negko	White	Total
Employment	10	9	20
Education	2	--	2
k Health	--	1	1
s Other	10	--	9
Total	22	10	32*

* Cne respondent gave 2 reasons.

TABLE 9

REGULARITY OF EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Full time	15	7	22	15	10	25
Part time	4	2	6	3	--	3
Seasonal	1	1	2	1	--	1
Other	1	-	1	--	--	--
No Answer				2	--	2
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 10

TYPE OF EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Skilled	--	2	2	1	2	3
Semi-skilled	10	7	17	2	3	5
Unskilled	11	1	12	18	4	22
Other				1	1	2
No Answer				2	--	2
Total	21	10	31	24	10	34

TABLE 11

FAMILY MEMBERS EMPLOYED

FAMILY MEMBER	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Head	15	9	24	15	8	23
Spouse	9	4	13	5	1	6
Child	1	--	1	--	--	--
Others	--	--	--	1	1	2
All members	--	--	--	-	--	1
None	--	--	--	2	--	2
Total	25	13	38	24	10	34

TABLE 12

WEEKLY INCOME

INCOME	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Less than $20	5	1	6	1	--	1
$20, less than $40	4	4	8	4	--	4
$40, less than $60	5	3	8	7	4	11
$60, less than $80	2	1	3	4	5	9
Other	4	1	5	3	1	4
No Answer	1	-	1	2	-	2
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 13

DID YOU HAVE TROUBLE FINDING WORK ?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	1	6	7	2	1	3
No	20	4	24	17	9	26
No Answer	--	--	--	2	-	2
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 14

(DO, DID) YOU WORK TOGETHER WITH MEMBERS OF THE OTHER RACE?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	14	2	16	14	2	16
No	7	6	13	4	6	10
Other	--	--	--	--	1	1
No Answer	--	2	2	3	1	4
Total	21	10	.31	21	10	31

TABLE 15

PAID SAME AMOUNT AS OTHER RACE FOR SAME WORK?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Same	2	--	2	1	--	1
More	1	1	2	--	--	--
Less	6	--	6	6	--	6
No Answer	9[k]	9	18	4	8	12
Don't know	3	--	3	10	2	12
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 16

OWN OR RENT

STATUS	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Own	10	2	12	2	--	2
Rent	7	8	15	19	10	29
Worked for Shelter	4	-	4	-	-	-
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 17

AMOUNT OF RENT PAID

AMOUNT BY WEEK	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Less than $10	3	-	3	1	-	1
$10 and Over	9	1	10	2	4	6
BY MONTH
Less than $30	3	4	7	-	-	-
$30 - $39	1	-	1	4	1	5
$40 - $49	-	3	3	9	2	11
$50 and Over	1	-	1	3	2	5
Other	1a	2b	3
No Answer k				2	1	3
Total	18	10	28	21	10	31

a Worked for shelter; paid no rent.

b Owned home outright; no payments.

TABLE 18

NUMBER OF ROOMS IN RESIDENCE

ROOMS	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
One	-	-	-	-	-	1
Two	-	-	-	1	5	6
Three	6	2	8	11	3	14
Four or More	15	8	23	8	2	10
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 19

OTHER RACE LIVE CLOSE BY?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	13	3	16	11	6	17
No	8	7	15	9	4	13
No Answer	-	-	-	1	-	1
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 20

LIVING IN SAME BLOCK WITH MEMBERS OF OTHER RACE ?

REPLY	Negro	White	Total
Yes	6	-	6
No	15	9	24
No Answer	-	1	1
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 21

(DID, DO) YOU VISIT EACH OTHER ?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	7	1	8	-	-	-
No	14	6	20	20	7	27
No Answer	-	3	3	1	3	4
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 22

RELATIONS WITH OTHER RACE (IN COUNTRY)

REPLY	Negro	White	Total
Yes	20	4	24
No	1	6	7
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 23

HARD TO FIND A PLACE TO LIVE IN ATLANTA ?

REPLY	Negro	White	Total
Yes	2	1	3
No	19	9	28
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 24

K RESPONDENTS BY EDUCATION

EDUCATION (in years)	Negro	White	Total
Less than 4	1	1	2
5 - 8	6	4	10
9 - 12	14	5	19
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 25

HAVE YOU HAD ANY TRAINING FOR A JOB ?

TRAINING	Negro	White	Total
Yes	2	4	6
No	19	6	25
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 26

KIND OF JOB TRAINING RECEIVED

KIND OF TRAINING	Negro	White	Total
Correspondence Course	-	1	1
On the job training	-	3	3
Public Schools	3	-	3
Total	3		7 *

*A discrepancy; the total should be 6.
None of the respondents were attending school at the time of the study.

TABLE 27

KIND OF SCHOOL ATTENDED BY CHILDREN IN COUNTRY

SCHOOL	Negro	White	Total
One Room school	2		2
Grade School	6	5	11
High School	10	1	11
No answer	3	5	8
Total	21	11	32 *

* One respondent had 2 children

TABLE 28

DID YOUR MOVING TO THE CITY HAVE ANYTHING TO DO WITH SCHOOLING?

REPLY	Negro	White	Total
Yes	3	-	3
No	18	9	27
No Answer	-	-	1
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 29

(DID, DO) YOU GO TO CHURCH ?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	21	9	30	14	1	15
No	-	1	-1	7	9	16
No Answer	-	-	-	-	-	-
Total	21	10	31	21	10	31

TABLE 30

FREQUENCY OF CHURCH ATTENDANCE IN ATLANTA

FREQUENCY	Negro	White	Total
Once a week	5	-	5
Once a month	4	1	5
Once a year	-	1	1
Other	4	-	4
Total	13	2	15

TABLE 31

(DID, DO) MEMBERS OF THE OTHER GROUP ATTEND YOUR CHURCH?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	3	- K	3	3	-	3
No	17	10	27	11	1	12
No answer	1	-	1	-	-	-
Total	21	10	31	14	1	15

TABLE 32

KNOW ANY MEMBERS OF THE OTHER RACE WHO (ATTENDED, ATTEND) YOUR CHURCH?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	1	-	1	-	-	-
No	2	-	2	3	-	3
No answer	1	-	1	-	-	-
Total	4	-	4	3	-	3

TABLE 33

(WERE,ARE) YOU A MEMBER OF ANY ORGANIZATIONS?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	6	2	8
No	15	7	22
No answer	-	1	1
Total	21	10	31

TABLE 34

CHANCE TO JOIN AN ORGANIZATION BUT DID NOT ?

REPLY	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Yes	6	1	7	5	1	6
No +	10	2	12	12	1	13
No Answer	5	7	12	-	-	-
Total	21	10	31	17	2	19

TABLE 35

WHAT KIND OF ORGANIZATION (DID, DO)YOU BELONG TO ?

	BEFORE ATLANTA			IN ATLANTA
ORGANIZATION	Negro	White	Total	Negro	White	Total
Church	1	-	1	1	-	1
School	1	-	1	2	-	2
CCommunity	-	1	1	-	-	-
Other	2	1	3	1	-	1
No Answer	12	10	22	17	10	27
None	3	-	3	-	-	-
Total	19	12	31	21	10	31

1964 REPORT on the work of NATIONAL SHARECROPPERS FUND

"... It is simple justice that all should share in programs financed by all, and directed by the government of all the people."

Lyndon B. Johnson

FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF ALL AGRICULTURAL LABOR

NSF

SINCE 1937

NATIONAL SHARECROPPERS FUND
112 East 19th Street
New York, N.Y. 10003

THE CASE AGAINST CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

This article concludes the argument against the death sentence begun in the last issue of The Record. The author is a prominent Southern attorney and a vice-president of the Southern Regional Council.

By MARION WRIGHT

Fortunately, because certain states have been willing to experiment, we now have the light of experience. Of the seven northwest central states (Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas), Minnesota and North Dakota do not have the death penalty. In 1961, the entire area's rate for homicide was 1.5 per 100,000 population. Minnesota's rate was 1 and North Dakota's rate was 0.9. The entire area's rate for rape was 6.4, Minnesota's rate was 2.7 and North Dakota's was 5.2. The two states that abolished capital punishment were well below the average for the region.

The same story is true in Europe. The Scandinavian countries have lower rates of capital crimes than do Great Britain, Spain, France and Ireland, the only nations of Western Europe which retain the death penalty.

If punishment has any effect, it is due to its certainty, rather than its severity. The plain truth of the matter is that as safe a gamble as one may make, if he should commit a capital crime, he will not be executed. Juries, with a naturally tender regard for human life, refuse to convict. If convicted, the appellate courts resolve all doubts in the convicted man's favor, and finally, parole boards and governors are humanly and prop-

Where laws permitting infliction of the death penalty are on the books, such laws are ready and convenient tools for tyrannical or merely frightened men who suddenly come to power. So Hitler, acting under existing law, exterminated millions of Jews—again the despised minority. So Stalin liquidated the kulaks, or wealthy land owners of Russia, under existing law. So, under existing law, Castro's firing squads mowed down those who opposed his regime.

Let us here in America indulge in no vainglory. In the year 1692, ten young girls of Salem accused Tibula, a West Indian slave, and two old women of bewitching them. Those accusations set off a wave of hysteria. Within four months hundreds were arrested and tried for witchcraft; 19 were hanged and one pressed to death for refusing to plead. The reaction came quickly, and, in May 1693—one year from the first accusation—Governor Phelps ordered release of all persons held on the charge of witchcraft. But he could not bring back to life 20 innocent women. They were victims of mass hysteria and a statute which prescribed capital punishment for witchcraft, a crime which exsted only in the minds of the illiterate and superstitious.

Hysteria Condemned Sacco, Vanzetti

Most observers now agree that the State of Massachusetts took the juries, with a naturally tender regard for human life, refuse to convict. If convicted, the appellate courts resolve all doubts in the convicted man's favor, and, finally, parole boards and governors are humanly and properly disposed to commute sentences. Only 42 executions took place in the United States in 1963. My belief is that not more than two percent of those brought to trial on capital charges in North Carolina ever walk that last mile to the gas chamber. And my belief is that the convictions for crimes not punishable by death is much higher than for those carrying the death penalty.

Warden Clinton Duffy of San Quentin, in his book "88 Men and Two Women," states that he has interviewed thousands of convicted murderers and not a single one said he even remotely considered punishment at the time of the crime. Generally speaking, murder is a crime of passion where the perpetrator is not thinking of the punishment consequences.

So the argument that capital punishment acts as a deterrent will not hold water. All experience is against it. And the whole case for capital punishment rests on that argument.

What are the arguments against it?

The first appeals to our sense of fair play. It is that capital punishment is inflicted mainly on the poor—those unable to hire skilled counsel to represent them. Warden E. Lawes, in his book "Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing," stated: "In the 12 years of my wardenship I have escorted 150 men and one woman to the death chamber and the electric chair. In ages they ranged from 17 to 63. They came from all kinds of homes and environments. In only one respect were they all alike. All of them were poor and most of them were friendless . . . Thus, it is seldom that it happens that a person who is able to have an eminent defense attorney is convicted of murder in the first degree. A large number of those who are executed were too poor to hire a lawyer, counsel being appointed by the state."

Negroes a Majority of Those Executed

The death penalty also discriminates against non-whites. This is not to say that judges and juries harbor outright prejudice against Negroes and other non-whites—although it is not far-fetched to suppose that some prejudice does exist. It is rather to suggest that whatever group is at the bottom of the economic ladder will have a disproportionately higher representation in the death house. Non-whites, being at the bottom of the ladder, pay the penalty. Thus, more than half of those executed in the United States since 1930 have been Negroes. In New York during the last five years 80 percent of those sentenced to death were Negroes or Puerto Ricans, and all but two of the 13 men actually executed were either Negro or Puerto Rican. The same pattern exists in other states.

There is a further argument for its abolition. Nations undergo periods of upheaval, of storm and stress. This may take the form of revolution and overthrow of government, as in Russia, in Cuba and in many South American countries; or it may take the form of mass hysteria, as in Salem, Massachusetts in the late 1690's when witchcraft was the great fear, or fear of the labor movement about the beginning of this century, or fear of Communist subversion, which Senator McCarthy whipped up a few years ago.

Hysteria Condemned Sacco, Vanzetti

Most observers now agree that the State of Massachusetts took the lives of two innocent men when, on August 23, 1927, it executed Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti for murder. They had three strikes against them when they entered the dock: they were Italian immigrants; they spoke broken English; they were active in labor and Socialist circles at a time when anti-labor and anti-Socialist sentiment was rife in Massachusetts. They were executed in spite of the confession of one Celestino Madeiros that he had participated in the crime and that neither Sacco nor Vanzetti was present. True, they were victims of mass hysteria, but that hysteria used the tool of capital punishment which lay ready to hand.

The point of all this is that capital punishment would have no justification even if it were inflicted only by calm, sober, intelligent and unbiased minds operating in an atmosphere of complete tranquility. The part of wisdom is to foresee that inevitably there will be periods of turmoil, stress, upheaval, when power may be exercised by the unscrupulous or by those whose reason is dethroned by popular passion. Then the margin for error, or the opportunity for abuse, is greatly enlarged. Witness the busy guillotine of the French Revolution or Castro's firing squads. In a time of domestic tranquility, we should de-fuse the dangerous weapon of capital punishment in order that it may not, in later, fevered occasions, be wrongfully employed against the innocent.

But, without regard to the temper of the times in which it is inflicted, this ancient institution has robbed humanity of its noblest spirits. Socrates, with his cup of hemlock; Jesus on the cross; Joan of Arc, Bruno, John Huss, St. Stephen. The list spans the centuries and continents. Humanity has been forever impoverished by the lawful execution of men and women of genius and nobility guilty of no crime.

But, at the time, their executioners, judges, jurors, hangmen, butchers all—in short, society — thought they were guilty, thought that the world would be better off without them. And so fallible men sustained by a belief in their infallibility think today.

Capital punishment is based upon this belief in infallibility. In the case of any lesser punishment than death, errors may be corrected. There is always the parole board or the governor who may act upon a showing that justice has miscarried, that is, when the prisoner is still alive. When death in the chair or gas chamber has closed the books, all errors are beyond correction. Scattered over this land are graves of many men, innocent of crime, whom society has crushed under its heel.

The blow falls not merely upon the condemned man. For him the agony is quickly ended. But there are relatives, friends, wife, children, mother, father, perhaps, who will to the end of their days wear the mantle of shame. For the murder of one man, society murders another and condemns his survivors to endless sorrow and humiliation.

Surely a civilized state in the year 1964 has wisdom enough to meet the challenge of crime without using tools and methods of the barbarian. Surely one created in the image of God—a little lower than the angels—should not be crushed, worm-like, beneath the heel of the state.

Retail Wholesale Department Store Union

File 4-65

W. H. FERRY

THE WHITE NATION AND THE BLACK

Let no one suppose that, in any of what follows, I assume that I know what Negroes, as Negroes, are thinking or feeling. I don't. I haven't any idea. I am a white American securely raised in the middle of the middle class and only a little less securely moored to its values and outlook. Perhaps even the assumption is unwarranted that there is a substantive difference. What anyone does know, of course, is that the experiences of Negro and white are not the same—so different, one would think, as to lead to wholly different outlooks. There can in any case be no doubt about the xenophobia displayed by white middle-class America toward those of another pigmentation.

What I do assume is common humanity. I assume that all of us, white and black, love our children and hope they won't grow up to be President. I assume that we don't wish to be pushed around, that we like praise and flinch under criticism, that we expect a raise far more often than we get it, that we like some of our neighbors and dislike others. I assume that all of us share the same frustrations in the face of modern life, desire a fair shake when dealing with the law, and are willing to take thick with thin as part of the common lot.

Whatever special feelings and attitudes Negroes may have beyond those dealt to all men I know nothing of. As many of you are aware, the Triple Revolution is the title of a memorandum presented to President Johnson and Congress last March by an Ad Hoc Committee of publishers, labor leaders and eggheads.* The three concurrent developments referred to were the Weaponry Revolution, the Cybernation Revolution, and the Human Rights Revolution. Most of the memorandum was devoted to an analysis of the cybernation revolution. It declared that cybernation was doing away with jobs from bottom to top of the employment pyramid. It rejected the argument of economists and other salesmen of old clothes and yesterday's fashions who say that we are just going through a sticky spot and that we shall sooner or later get back to full employment by use of sophisticated government policies and supercharged advertising campaigns. On the contrary, the Triple Revolution argues that full employment is no longer a feasible or necessary national goal.

The link between jobs of the traditional kind and income from conventional sources has been broken, according to the Triple Revolution. A new method for distributing income, a way of assuring consumer rights appropriate to an era of abundance, is required. The Ad Hoc Committee therefore advocated a guaranteed income to all, subject to none of the usual degrading means tests, but as an inalienable right of all Americans. This policy was seen as of special force with respect to Negroes.

The vast differentials between Negro and white unemployment are familiar to everyone. What is not so evident is the fact that an ironic marriage of high technology and low educational opportunity has perhaps as much to do with these differentials as discrimination. Here is what the Triple Revolution had to say on this point:

> The Negro claims, as a matter of simple justice, his full share in America's economic and social life. He sees adequate employment opportunities as a chief means of attaining this goal: The March on Washington demanded freedom and jobs. The Negro's claim to a job is not being met. Negroes are the hardest-hit of the many groups being exiled from the economy by cybernation. Negro unemployment rates cannot be expected to drop substantially. Promises of jobs are a cruel and dangerous hoax on hundreds of thousands of Negroes and whites alike who are especially vulnerable to cybernation because of age or inadequate education.
>
> The demand of the civil rights movement cannot be fulfilled within the present context of society. The Negro is trying to enter a social community and a tradition of work-and-income which are in the process of vanishing even for the hitherto privileged white worker. Jobs are disappearing under the impact of highly efficient, progressively less costly machines.

*Published in LIBERATION, Arpil 1964. Reprints with commentary by Dave Dellinger and Paul Goodman are available at ten cents each.

On this point I go further than my associates on the Ad Hoc Committee. I believe there is little chance that today's unemployed Negro will ever again be taken up into the private economy. Where once he was a conscript in its lowest ranks, the jobless Negro today is a permanent dischargee from the traditional economic army, expelled by technology. He is not alone in his plight, of course; the same thing can be said about many white workers. Sidney Wilhelm writes:

> The crisis is caused not so much by the transition from slavery to equality as by a change from the economics of exploitation to the economics of uselessness. He is not so much oppressed as unwanted; not so much unwanted as unnecessary; not so much abused as ignored. . . . As automation proceeds, it is easier and easier to disregard him. (Trans-Action, Sept.-Oct., 1965.)

This does not signify that the unemployed Negro is necessarily doomed forever to the welfare office, to inert uselessness. The future is full of things to do and be, and cybernation unlocks the possibilities as they have never been unlocked before. There is the almost unexplored treasure house of self-development. There are multitudes of valuable services crying to be done, and the Negro has the capacity to perform them. All that stands in the way is a vast bulk of received opinion, that heritage of worn-out economic and social dicta which J. K. Galbraith called the conventional wisdom. The proposal for a guaranteed income represents one assault on this unwieldly mass. It is not a cure-all. It is an indispensable measure if we are going to the roots of the wild imbalances and paradoxes of this affluent society. It is not merely that we can afford it. It is also that both political prudence and justice require it. Which is better, taking millions of men out of the welfare line or landing two of them on the moon?

Exacerbating as the economic situation is to the human rights dilemma, it is far from all there is to it. Thomas Merton recently remarked:

> We are not really giving the Negro a right to live where he likes, eat where he likes, go to school where he likes, or work where he likes, but ony to sue the white man who refuses to let him do these things. (Seeds of Destruction, 1965.)

This brings us to Disraeli's idea of the Two Nations. He described them as the nations of the rich and the poor. Today's two nations, in the United States and everywhere in the world, are the white and black nations.

The Civil Rights Act is now law and its passage is properly regarded as a great victory. I do not wish to underrate its importance, yet it must be seen as largely symbolic. Only a little self-congratulation is in order. The statute does not welcome the Negro to the American Community. It gives him the key to the courthouse. It is the promise to the Negro of admission, in some receding tomorrow, into a community in which he already owns full citizenship. We have allowed Negroes into our legal system but not into our hearts. Strait is the white gate. Today, eleven years after the Brown decision, sixty-five thousand—2 percent—of the three million Negro youngsters in the South are in desegregated classrooms. The expenditure of great legal fees and even greater patience may, in a decade or a generation or so, win the Negro a few modest beachheads, a few more tokens that the white nation knows there's a war going on. The questions are many. Will they wait? Should they wait? What choice have they? The tyranny of the white majority is here on full display.

This is because the United States is a white society, its assumptions those of an important power able to dispense or withhold benefits. I do not maintain that this outlook is universal (only nearly so) nor that it has gone uncriticized. I maintain that despite the commotions of the last years, the white community still has a superficial and essentially wrong understanding of what is at stake, and what is now required.

The important discovery of the last decade is that the United States is two nations, black and white, organized in a colonial relationship. The effort of the white community, always excepting the few, has been to maintain the two-nation relationship. The effort of the black community, always excepting the black nationalists, has been to merge into one nation. The problem is not primarily the integration of the Negro but the survival of the democratic process. One depends on the other, one is the test of the other.

The model is that of colonists and colonials, locked in a sort of cold war. Perhaps it is better to call it neo-colonialism, for a new style of white administration of colored subjects is developing today. Thus we hear daily of negotiations between one group and another, between demonstrators and those demonstrated against. We applaud treaties between the two nations, however brittle, if they promise to ease ugly situations, even if only for a little while. The cold war between the white and black nations produces high strategies and tactics on both sides. All parties hope that the constant frictions and small incidents will not escalate.

Nothing shows us the Two Nations more tellingly than the informal and formal diplomatic relations established between them. I pass over the knotty question of just who represents who in this incessant treaty-making, and the fragility of the treaties themselves. The important thing is the arrangement of the two nations into adversaries. The important thing is that treaties do not lead to mergers but to the continuation of separate sovereignties.

Thus it is seldom noticed how intrinsically un-American are these procedures and attitudes. Rights are constitutional, or natural: they are not negotiable. No constitutional provision, no statute gives the white nation the right to dispense or withhold. The Declaration of Independence asserts liberty and justice for all. To its everlasting and international shame, California last November decided to alter the declaration. Now it reads, license for the majority and injustice for the minority. Two thirds of our fellow citizens marched to the ballot box chanting "property rights." A nation or a state that computes its rights on the cash register is in deep trouble. No one is entitled to claim rights that work a hardship on the general good of the society or that result in the humiliation of other members of that society.

There is not a finite supply of rights, so that their acquisition by one person or group results in the diminution of another's portion. What is diminished by white deprivation of the black nation is democracy.

The race issue is not a passing difficulty which time and patience, aided by demonstrations and movements, will iron out. Its roots are historical: slavery—and contemporary: unemployment, prejudice, exploitation. Slavery was extirpated by civil war. What will elimination of its contemporary metamorphosis require?

There is no gainsaying the social strains and cleavages; they underlie the ideology of the domestic cold war. We now hear forecasts, many from the liberal sector of the white nation, of a "wearing war of nerves" between black and white over years. The hope is expressed that there will be no major outbreaks of violence. If there are, it is regretfully said, we—the white nation—will have to suppress them—the black nation. The message is that the black nation should be patient and wait for the waterdrops of time to wear away the fears and antipathies of the ruling nation. Against this message are arraigned prophecies like that of Louis Lomax, "We are headed for bloodshed and chaos."

The Erosion of Democracy

This is the measure of the threat to democracy. The United States is close to a sundering of this country, not on the Mason-Dixon line but on its successor, the color line. A nation thus divided can, no doubt, survive. South Africa survives. Here as there the whites have the guns and own the levers of social and political control. But neither nation can survive with its democratic writ intact, or anything but a shabby hypocrisy. It is interesting to consider what the amiable good-spirited middle class American would regard as a fair shake for South Africa's non-whites.

It is generally agreed that if real trouble breaks, it will be between the poorly paid and ill-treated whites and the Negroes. This does not excuse the so-called white power structure from responsibility or action, but the reverse. It places on it the duty of good example and leadership, and, most important, of radical alteration in attitude. The leaders of the white nation are for the most part proceeding on the pseudo-American assumptions described above. This is made clear in the communications media of the white nation. They faithfully reflect these same assumptions day after day in their pleas for patience and moderation and their warnings against "excess." This is reminiscent of the admonitions of the colonial press to the rebellious Americans of 1770. In their meditations upon the human-rights situation editorial writers, I observe, tend to use three words interchangeably—the words justice, patience, and order. They pant for justice, counsel Negroes to be patient, and scold disorderly whites, especially in the South. This is not so much a sign of sloppy thought as it is of membership in the middle class—that majority whose overbearing will was much feared by the Founders.

The indifference of the white nation to the gross erosion of democracy is most marked in its unwillingness to consider ways of mending it. How much is it worth in hard cash to the United States to avoid a domestic calamity, or to stave it off while time and a revived sense of national responsibility work their ways with integration? One billion? Thirty billion?

This appears to me to be the immediate question, for the only really useful palliative that I can see is to do something about jobs. The main problem is unemployment, black and white, the main problem spots the big industrial centers. We are willing to spend twenty billion on a race to the moon and nearly fifty billion a year to prevent international conflict, as we say; perhaps we could persuade ourselves that preventing a fierce domestic rupture is worth some fraction of that amount.

The jobs I have in mind would be of the New Deal variety, if the federal-state imagination could produce nothing better. The object would be to get the potential warriors off the streets, occupied, and with a pay check at the end of each week. The job strategy would be aimed at the unemployed of both black and white nations.

I do not suggest that this policy would right injustice or repair the humiliations at which the Civil Rights Act is aimed. I do not think this policy is a long term answer to the complicated employment issues presented by technology and discussed at length in the Triple Revolution. Much of the work provided under the scheme proposed here could doubtless be done more efficiently by machines. But I do not believe the nation is ready psychologically or politically to adopt the income-for-all arguments set forth in the Ad Hoc Committee's memomandum. I do think that there is a bare chance that the country might be willing to embark on a Domestic Peace Offensive if it was made up of elements made familiar in the New Deal. We are already so engaged, of course, in the Poverty Program.

This is not to suggest that jobs, especially of the transitory and makeshift variety here described, will make all the difference. They will merely buy a little time for the unification of our nation, while the country gets on with collateral tasks in housing and education, where the Negro (and poor white) deficit is great and growing. We need time even more to re-fashion our economic ideas and to get used to the responsibilities and privileges of abundance.

Before leaving this topic I want to salute President Johnson's educational program, in particular those sections devoted to the raising up of substandard elementary and secondary schools, and those designed for preschool training. The President's plan is a most important break in the dike.

Democratic ideals and practice show signs of weakness when confronted by the demand that the United States at long last become one nation. It would be a perilous mistake to think that the issue is domestic only. It is a cliché that billions of eyes in Asia and Africa are on us, judging strategy and attitudes. But the eyes are there all the same. It would be a mistake fatal to democracy to conclude that the white nation has a choice to opt out, that it can choose for any length of time to continue to withhold what does not rest with it to withhold. The outcome is up to the white nation. A favorable outcome will not be secured by negotiation or bargaining which results in arms-length treaties. It can be prepared for only by understanding that the cost of democracy and the continuation of institutions grounded in freedom and justice is swift and complete merger of the Two Nations.

I have been talking about the necessity for a speedy and fundamental alteration of society. Some will call this Utopian and let it go at that. I shall touch briefly on Utopia in a moment. Some others regard it as mischievous and deceptive prattle. Martin Mayer speaks for this hard-headed group when he says:

> The notion that any society will remake itself drastically for the presumed benefit of a ten per cent minority is far worse than childish; it is stupid. It looks like a call to action, but those (relatively few) who respond find there is no significant action possible under present conditions, and the call quickly becomes a counsel of despair, expressed by angry praise of violence over the demi-tasse. (Commentary, Jan., 1956.)

I find this extremely distasteful. No one likes to be labeled childish and stupid. Yet Mr. Mayer has a point. He says that the white nation has no intention of giving up its prejudices and bad habits except in its own good time, and the evidence is on his side. What is not on his side is the corrosion of public morality thereby acknowledged, and with it the decay of democracy. What is reprehensible is his seeming encouragement of the tendencies he discerns over the demi-tasse.

Utopia and Cacotopia

I leave Mr. Mayer reluctantly and turn to his least-favored land, Utopia. With a single exception, Utopia is the exclusive province of the white American today. The only Negro Utopists are the Muslims and nationalists. Their dream of a better community, as everyone knows, is all black. Their Utopia formalizes the Two Nations. They do not wish a merger; to them there is nothing pleasurable or utopian about such an idea. Their Utopia would be washed clean of white culture, white institutions, white laws. What they see in the white nation and experience in their dealings with whites does not appeal to them. Far from regarding white middle-class culture as worth joining, they see it as a sink-hole of corruption and hypocrisy. So, alone among Negroes, the Muslims and nationalists have set forth a utopian program for a decent community. Its only outstanding characteristic is its uncompromising darkness. The rest of their Utopia reads to me like a description of a purified Muncie, Indiana.

Utopia is denied to other Negroes. As far as I am aware, there is no contemporary Utopia written by a Negro. On the other hand there is a great supply of Negro cacotopias—plays, novels, essays. Cacotopia means a bad place, as Utopia in one sense—Utopia—means no place, and in another—Eutopia—means a good place. It should distrub us far more than it does that Negro writing today is a litany of frustration and despair. My associate Harvey Wheeler describes it as the literature of uselessness. Utopias show that the power to dream is still alive. Denying this power is to deprive a human being of one of his essential elements.

There are, Lewis Mumford says, two kinds of Utopia. One is the Utopia of never-never land, where the bread-fruit hangs in the non-stop sunlight. This is the model of the Muslim Utopia. The modest and un-Utopian quality of the non-nationalist Negro's quest was depicted last month in a television documentary. It was the story of the long hunt of a prosperous Negro businessman for a house. The gist is familiar to everyone here. He and his wife for weeks scoured the New Jersey suburbs. The story had a bittersweet ending. They finally got a house through the intercession of a New Jersey committee on fair housing. But it was clear that this old and simple transaction, the acquisition of a home, was in fact a diplomatic negotiation of immense moment between the two nations. When, midway in his search, the Negro businessman was asked what his purpose was, he said that he was "just looking for a house that I can afford in a neighborhood where my wife and child would be treated like human beings and where my neighbors wouldn't run away when I moved in."

This Negro by persistence managed to wring a kind of victory out of the white nation. But the incident ends up as a moral doodle at the margin. This Negro had the resources and patience to explore all the diplomatic avenues between the two nations. Can anyone, white or black, who cares about justice, take comfort out of his story? I am glad he won his fight. I feel sorry for the ignorant and frightened real estate agents and white homeowners who one after another systematically lied to him. I feel sorry for a country whose majority accepts this as the way that "liberty and justice for all" is to be achieved.

I don't know what is to be done. I have no solutions, no practical suggestions. The white nation is being asked the large question: are you willing to live out your religious and political obligations to your fellow-man? And the answer of the white nation, when it is not trivial or tokenistic, is to ignore the question, or to say that it might cause inconvenience or loss of money.

We have had all the economic surveys and sociological observations we need for the time being. To paraphrase the philosopher, intelligence without compassion is barren. We do not need more cynical and chewed-off statements like Martin Mayer's about what is politically possible. How does anyone, including Martin Mayer, know what is and is not politically possible? Was Nazi Germany politically possible? Or a Catholic President of the United States? If we find ourselves in a morally abhorrent situation and with our chief pretensions to democracy becoming unstuck, shall we just say "too bad, but that's the way the cookie crumbles"? Here is an assertion from a black nationalist: "This white man's racist-monopoly-capitalist-imperialist system cannot reform itself and cannot ever grant the black man freedom, justice, and equality." For all its polemical fervor, the statement puts the issue squarely. Is he right or wrong?

(Continued on page 29)

THE TWO NATIONS

(Continued from page 15)

The obligation is to bring to this matter the highest judgment of which we are capable. The remaking of society is a solemn affair. The spiritual regeneration of a country is a tall order. It would be intensely sad to believe that the highest judgment on this issue that Americans can bring to bear is based on property and prejudice. A high judgment is informed by considerations of right and wrong, justice and injustice; it does not derive from considerations of profit or property or convenience or power. No one can look candidly at the situation of the American Negro and say that ours is a just society.

But I feel that bringing high judgment to bear on the issue of the two nations is probably beyond us. We have not been taught the practice of high judgment. Our education has been about the value of self-interest. Our culture is rooted in the dollar bill. It was not at all difficult for Californians to turn their backs on their religious leaders and other teachers last November and vote for Proposition 14. The high judgment that was required of them then could not be elicited because of the deficiencies of their earlier education, in homes and the parish house as well as in the schools. They could not overcome the lifelong training that declared property to be more important than anything else, including people.

There is a parallel between the public encounter with long-term results of radioactive fall-out and our present encounter with social effects of fall-out from prejudice and injustice. In the first case scientists were able to demonstrate the likelihood of a linear degradation of the human genetic pool. These intrepid men, my colleague Linus Pauling prominent among them, were able to show that while harm had already been done, a decision to get rid of further pollution of the atmosphere could prevent escalation of the damage. The test-ban treaty came into being. Some such common apprehension and action is required if long-term corrosive results of ranging black nation against white is to be avoided. Science cannot help us here. This is a moral issue. How to encourage moral re-creation I do not know. So far the Negroes themselves, aided by a handful of whites, have been the precipitating agent in the demonstrations that have brought whatever small measure of justice has so far been achieved. In the doing they have given us a much-needed lesson about the uses of nonviolence.

In short, the opportunity and obligation to make an exemplary national community is at hand. We have the means. Considering that the One World into which we are rapidly growing will be predominantly non-white, it can be argued that it would be the most foresighted global politics to effect the merger of the two nations with utmost speed. But I see little evidence that the white nation is moving in that direction.

This is not a happy ending. Indeed there is no proper ending at all. If there is a message, it must be that of Louis the Pious: it is not necessary to succeed in order to strive.

9.22.65

PROPOSED COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM FOR ORANGEBURG COUNTY*

For your criticism, comment, & suggestion. Looking foreward to hearing from you.

Orangeburg County is located in the central part of the State of South Carolina. It is the second largest county in the state, with a population of 68,559, of which 41,192 are Negro. The total number of families residing in the county is 14,377, and 24% of these families has an income of less than $1000, 17% have an income between $1,000 and $2,000, and 17% have an income of $2000 to $3,000. This means that 58% of the families in Orangeburg County are below the $3,000 Poverty Level.

The economy is basically agricultural; 90% of the population is rural and 40.5% of the total population live on the 3,415 farms in the county. Commercial farms number 2,140 and of these 895 are rated in the lowest (6th) economic class, 521 in the next lowest (5th) class, and 319 in the fourth class. The median income for rural farm families and indivifuals in the county is $911.00.

In Orangeburg County 25% of the dwellings are in deteriorating condition and 14% are in dilapidated condition However, statistics show that in rural areas the houses are in poorer condition and that the worst conditions exist in rented rural farm nonwhite dwellings. Over 40% of these houses are rated as deteriorating, over 40% as dilapidated, and less than 20% as sound. The percentages for nonwhite owned rural farm houses are only slightly better. Crowded housing is also more prevalant in rural farm areas where over 30% of the occupied dwellings have more than one person per room. As many as thirty-five percent of the nonwhite owned dwellings in rural areas are classified as crowded, and over 60% of nonwhite rented houses in these areas are overcrowded. The same trend can be noted in facilities in these dwellings. In nonwhite rural farm houses fewer than 10% have hot and cold running water or flush toilets or bathtubs of showers.

There is a large percentage of unemployment in Orangeburg County, but precise statistics are not available.

---

*All statistics were taken from the 1960 Census of Population.

Class 6 farms--the value of the farm products sold is $50 to $2,499, the operator is under the age of 65 years and did not work off the farm 100 or more days, and the income of the family does not exceed the value of the farm products sold. Class 5 farms--value of farm products sold is $2,500 to $4,999. Class 4 farms--value of farm products sold is $5,000 to $9,999.

Sound housing--no defects or only slight defects; Deteriorating housing--one or more intermediate defects that must be corrected if unit is to be safe and adequate; Dilapidated housing--not safe or adequate shelter and endangers health, safety, or well-being of the occupants.

In the montheof July $48,831.52 was expended in this county on Old Age Assistance. Of this amount 70% to 80% is provided by the federal government. Of the 4,662 people over age 65,21.1% are receiving this aid. In the same month $12,902.36 was paid to children under age 18 years through Aid for Dependent Children(AFDC) Of the 31,126 children in this age bracket 2.1% are receiving such assistance. This means that 202 children are receiving only ¼ the aid alloted the 223 elderly people..The maximum payment to the elderly is $70.00 per month and that to dependent children is $99.00 per month per family;no more than $30.00 for the first child nor $21.00 to each additional child. Families with five and more children are prevelant among recipients of this aid and in such a family the amount to each child is even less. Moreover,there are many people who need to receive some type of aid but,due to the strict requirements of the Welfare Department,are not eligable for this releif.

In Orangeburg County there were in 1961,1,838 live births, 594 of which were white,1,244 of which were Negro. The rate of illegitimate births for the same year was 20.54%; 1.54% for whites,27.25% for Negroes. The rate of infants deaths for the county was 3.96%;2.06%for whites and 4.63% for Negroes. The rate of premature births for the county 7.85%;4.88% for whites and 8.9% for Negroes. The rate of deaths for premature babies among whites is 0.0% and among Negroes is 1.09%.

The annual expenditure for a pupil in attendance in school in South Carolina (there is no compulsory attendance) is the fourth lowest in the country. Teachers salaries are low and it follows that the teaching profession here does not attract the most qualified people. Of all the people 25 years of age and over,50% have received less than eight years of education,yet there is only one adult education program for Negroes in this vast county.

PROPOSED PLAN

Poverty is a complex phenomenon and affects many aspects of its victims' lives. Its cure is also complex and alleviation of its symptoms must include a comprehensive attack. In Orangeburg and Calhoun Counties where poverty is prevalent a program is now being devised in conjunction with the nationwide War on Poverty. The plan is to build community centers in several strategic locations throughout the two counties so that all the people who need the services provided by these centers will have easy access to them. The buildings will be carefully planned to house adequately but economically all the services so desperately needed in these areas. All the centers will have certain features in common but the particular needs of each area will be considered in the planning of its center. The following is a description of the basic program but it is neither complete nor inflexible.

In most poor families both parents need to work to provide the basic necessities for their children. Small children either keep the mother from working or are left with an elderly neighbor or relative. Sometimes an older child must stay with his younger brothers and sisters thus forfeiting his education. Therefore each center will have a day care program which will function as a Headstart school as well as a caretaking unit for preschool children. In this way both parents will be free to work and children from deprived homes can receive some preparatory training for school so that no time need be lost in first grade due to adjustment problems.

The centers will also provide a recreation place for older children after school before their parents return from their places of work. Thus these children will be able to benefit from supervised, directed play with adequate materials which their individual homes cannot provide. At this time there will also be tutoring available for children with special needs either in keeping up with their regular classes or in preparing for greater advancement. Included in this aspect of the program will be plays and workshops that will be related to classroom material. The aim of this will be to stimulate the motivation of the children and increase their interest in their school work. It is hoped that more children will be encouraged to continue their education through high school and college.

In the evenings the center will be available as a recreation center and as the home of an extensive adult education program. This program will include literacy training to teach people to read and to write so that they may better function in a society of which the printed word is an integral part. Also included in this program will be lecture and workshop series that will add cultural enrichment to the lives of these people as well as bringing them information to serve practical needs. Some areas to be covered in this series are federal programs, basic government, fundamental economics, housing and home management, consumer markets, sanitation, hygiene, child care, family planning,budget planning, basic legal procedure, etc.

Each center will have a reading room which will be equipped with a library to supplement the various programs as well as providing pleasure reading, study aids, encyclopedias, etc. This room and others in the center will also provide the badly needed study areas for children from poorly equipped, poorly lighted, overcrowded homes.

We hope to attract specialists who will provide such services as counseling and guidance in the areas of health, speech, hearing, psychology, and social work. Clinics should become incorporated within the program to provide these services to people of limited income, to whom such services are now unavailable.

Employment information, job training and placement services will also be provided to help combat unemployment and to aid people in raising their now meager incomes. Specialists may be brought in, but it is hoped that local personnel will be able to staff this part of the program. When a new company comes into an area or when a company within the area expands its personnel, special training courses can be set up at the Center to enhance the opportunity for employment of the people in this area.

The aim of the Community Action Program as conceived under the Economic Opportunity Act is to reduce cultural and economic poverty. This end is to be met by increasing the capacity of people affected by poverty to deal effectively and independently with their problems. In keeping with this aim, we plan to involve as many of the local people as possible in the planning and operation of the program. It is also an intention of this program to employ large numbers of people from each area involved to serve in nonprofessional capacities.

Students and faculty from local schools and universities will be part of the staff. For instance, juniors and seniors in Education at South Carolina State College will be hired as teachers and tutors under that school's Work-Study Program (Economic Opportunity Act - Title II C.) Teachers who take advantage of "Operation Reclaim" which is designed to help train Negro teachers who lost their jobs because of school desegregation, would also be hired in these centers. It is hoped that all these people will receive enough training so the present cycle of education by those not well qualified can be ended. To accomplish this, however, it will be necessary to bring in some specialists and well trained personnel, but the aim is to train people indigenous to the areas served to continue the program independently. There are plans being made to involve students and faculty from Columbia and other universities to participate in this program as observers, advisors, lecturers, and teachers of training programs. Students, faculty, and administration from many of these shcools have been involved in voter registration and tutoring programs in the South and intend to set up special classes on their campuses to train students to work in such a program as we are planning. They also hope to set up an exchange program which would include sending faculty to South Carolina.

People living in the areas which have been determined as strategic locations for these community centers are organizing non profit corporations. These corporations will apply for loans from the Farm Home Administration for the purpose of building the community centers.

The Community Action Commission will include people living within the areas where the community centers are located. This will insure an equitable distribution of Community Action Program money throughout the county.

File

LAW OFFICES
ADAIR, GOLDTHWAITE, STANFORD & DANIEL
1431 CANDLER BUILDING
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

THOMAS S. ADAIR
J. R. GOLDTHWAITE, JR.
MORGAN C. STANFORD
T. EMORY DANIEL
ALBERT M. HORN
J. LEON ADAIR

TELEPHONE
523-2525

October 5, 1965

Rec'd 10/6/65

Mr. Pat Waters
Southern Regional Counsel
5 Forsyth Street
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Pat:

Please find enclosed an article by Charlie Houston pertaining to the demise of the Atlanta Times.

Sincerely,

Morgan C. Stanford

Morgan C. Stanford

MCS:maj

encl.

Note: Article not attached to correspondence when given to JS.

10-6-65

OFFICE OF THE SOUTHERN POLITICAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION

PRESIDENTS OF SOUTHERN POLITICAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION

Bennett, Walter H.	U. of Ala.	1954
Butts, A. B.	U. of Miss.	1938
Cole, Taylor	Duke	1951
Cleaveland, Frederic N.	U. of N. C.	1965
Dauer, Manning J.	U. of Fla.	1955
Dugan, Arthur B.	U. of the South	1961
Durisch, Lawrence F.	T. V. A.	1949
Fleming, Denna F.	Vanderbilt	1941
Frazer, Kenner C.	U. of N. C.	1939
Gooch, Robert K.	U. of Va.	1959
Gosnell, Cullen B.	Emory	1929, 1933
Greene, Lee S.	U. of Tenn.	1958
Hallowell, John	Duke	1964
Harris, Robert J.	La. State U.	1947
Hart, James	U. of Va.	1946
Heard, Alexander	U. of N. C.	1962
Hudson, Irby	Vanderbilt	1930
Irish, Marian D.	F. S. U.	1957
Knepper, David W.	Miss. State College for Women	1936
Manning, John W.	U. of Ky.	1935
Martin, Roscoe C.	U. of Ala.	1942, 1943
Nixon, H. C.	Vanderbilt	1944, 1945
Pound, Merritt B.	U. of Ga.	1948
Prescott, Frank W.	U. of Chatt.	1937
Rankin, Robert S.	Duke	1931
Robson, Charles B.	U. of N. C.	1953
Shannon, Jasper Berry	U. of Ky.	1950
Sherrill, George R.	Clemson	1932
Spicer, George W.	U. of Va.	1952
Swisher, Carl	John Hopkins	1956
Vandenbosch, Amry	U. of Ky.	1963
Williamson, Rene'de V.	L. S. U.	1960
Wilson, Robert R.	Duke	1940
Wright, E. Baskin	U. of Ala.	1934

Submitted Sam Cook's Name
10-6-65
N.M.

THE JOURNAL OF POLITICS
Office of the Managing Editor
Peabody Hall
University of Florida
Gainesville, Florida

GAINESVILLE FLA.

[redacted]

File Winter 65

ART AND DIPLOMACY COMBINE

The New Washington Museum of African Art

Weaving pulley, Baule Tribe, Ivory Coast. Museum of African Art.

A NEW concept in museums is being carried out in Washington, D. C. with the recent establishment on historic Capitol Hill of the Museum of African Art. The Museum's objectives go beyond aesthetics and art education to be concerned with the implications of art in the realm of inter-cultural understanding.

Located in the Nation's Capital, which has one of the highest concentrations of African diplomats, students and cultural exchange visitors of any city in the world and an indigenous population of which more than 50% is of African extraction, it is the goal of the Museum to foster for a wider public—not just for a limited audience of art devotees—some awareness of the ancient tribal arts of Africa, of their aesthetic significance, and of the influence that they have had upon modern artists of the Western world.

In Washington, the National Gallery and the Smithsonian Institution display primarily the art and artifacts of America's European forebearers; the Freer Gallery, the art of Asia; the Pan American Union and the new Dumbarton Oaks Museum, the ancient art of Latin America (and of the Byzantine Empire). The Museum of African Art is the only institute in the Nation's Capital or in the nation for that matter, which is exclusively devoted to portraying the rich cultural heritage of the Negro peoples, providing for the white community at large in America its first real introduction to the fact that the peoples of Africa and their new-world descendents have had an ancient cultural past. At the same time, the Museum serves to acquaint both Africans and American Negroes with the significance of African sculpture and the contribution that the plastic arts of Africa have made—along with music and dance—to Western creative development.

The Museum serves also as a special educational resource not only for the schools and colleges of the District of Columbia, but for the numerous federal agencies which assign people for service in foreign lands: the Department of State, the United States Information Agency, the Agency for International Development, the Peace Corps, the Defense Department, etc. It provides as well a cultural center in which the new African nations—36 of them now with diplomatic missions in the U.S.—can be represented and from which Africans themselves can become aware of the importance accorded to their traditional arts in Western cultural circles.

Miss ANGELA CHRISTIAN, Cultural Attaché of the Embassy of Ghana, shows an African textile to WARREN ROBBINS, Director of the Museum of African Art and RUDY AGGREY of the Department of State.

The Museum, which opened provisionally in May, 1964 and on a full-time basis in October, occupies the historic Victorian townhouse of Frederick Douglass, world renowned 19th century Negro abolitionist-orator and publisher, who became a friend and advisor to President Lincoln, and who served in high office in the succeeding administrations of Presidents Grant through Cleveland.

In seven intimate, ivory-toned galleries on two floors, some 200 pieces of traditional African sculpture are displayed. Three shows have been held thus far: an inaugural exhibition comprising sculpture of wood, ivory and bronze, from 35 tribes and 18 countries of West and Central Africa; a special exhibit, "The Art of the Yoruba," (Nigeria), currently touring the U.S. under the auspices of the Smithsonian Travelling Exhibition Service, (held in Washington from December 5th through the 28th); and the current exhibition, "The African Heritage," incorporating selected works of modern European and American art showing African derivation—Weber, Maurer, Leger, Pechstein, etc.

About one fourth of the pieces on display are from the Museum's small permanent collection, the rest are on loan from the Museum of Primitive Art, the Smithsonian, the University of Pennsylvania Museum, the Museum of Modern Art, the Whitney and the Wadsworth Atheneum. Also represented are the collections of Eliot Elisofon, Harold Rome, Irwin Hersey, Emil Arnold, the Carlebach and Rassiga Galleries, Edith Gregor Halpert, Robert Hilton Simmons and Warren M. Robbins, founder and acting Director of the Museum.

Figures holding palm wine cup, Basonge Tribe, Republic of the Congo. Museum of African Art.

An interior view of one of the galleries in the new Museum of African Art.

A study facility including a library of literature on African and modern art, reproductions and slides of art works, recordings of African music, etc. is also being developed.

Exhibitions of contemporary African art and the arts of North and East Africa are being planned and an active program of lectures, films, discussions and performances is contemplated.

The Curatorial Board of the Museum includes Professor James Porter, Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts at Howard University; Mr. Alan Sawyer, Director of the Washington Textile Museum and former Curator of Primitive Art at the Art Institute of Chicago; Dr. Gordon Gibson, Associate Curator of Ethnology, the Smithsonian; and Leon Siroto, ethnologist. Installation of exhibitions is under the supervision of Joan Elisofon.

Among those participating in the establishment of the new Museum as members of the Board of Trustees and Advisory Board are: Roy Sieber, Professor of Fine Arts and specialist in African art, Indiana University; Rene d'Harnoncourt, Director of the Museum of Modern Art; Edith Gregor Halpert, Director of the Downtown Gallery; the artists Jacques Lipchitz, Jacob Lawrence and Ben Shahn; social scientists S. I. Hayakawa and Hugh Smythe; Wayne Fredericks, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs; Jefferson Murphy, Vice President of the African-American Institute; John Davis, Director of the American Society for African Culture; James Robinson, Director of Crossroads Africa; Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas; Congresswoman Frances Bolton and Commissioner of the District of Columbia, John Duncan. Four African ambassadors, yet to be selected, will represent the African nations on the Board of Trustees.

A Common Goal— Equal Opportunity

SOMETHING OF OUR OWN part I

File

BY ELIZABETH HERZOG

Is There a "Breakdown" of the Negro Family?

■ Recent events have reactivated controversy concerning two questions: (1) Is the low-income American Negro family showing "rapid deterioration" or continuance of long-standing patterns? (2) Are its patterns mainly rooted in the legacy of slavery? This analysis sees a long-standing picture rather than drastic change and relates family pattern primarily to postslavery conditions. ■

MUCH HAS BEEN said of late—and often with great heat—about the Negro family. Despite prevailing consensus on a number of points, controversy has been generated with regard to other points because one man's fact is another man's fiction. Some points of consensus deserve mention before points of controversy. First, it is generally agreed that a harmonious two-parent home is better for children than a one-parent home—and better for parents, too, in this society. It is agreed also that fatherless homes are far more frequent among Negroes than among whites and that in both groups their frequency rises as income falls.

Another point of firm consensus is that strong action is needed to remedy adverse conditions that have existed far too long, especially for low-income Negroes; and that these conditions bear especially on the low-income Negro man, whose disadvantaged situation takes heavy toll of himself, his children, their mother, and the family unit as a whole. All these statements have long been accepted by serious students of Negro family life.[1]

The controversy centers mainly on the following points: (1) whether "the" Negro family is "crumbling" at a disastrous rate, (2) whether the amount of breakdown that exists is primarily due to poverty, or to cultural inheritance, or to a cycle of self-perpetuating pathology, (3) whether the

ELIZABETH HERZOG, Ph.B., is Chief, Child Life Studies Branch, Division of Research, Children's Bureau, Welfare Administration, U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

[1] St. Clair Drake and Horace R. Cayton, Black Metropolis (New York: Harcourt, Brace, and Co., 1945); E. Franklin Frazier, The Negro Family in the United States (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1939); Hylan Lewis, "The Changing Negro Family," in Eli Ginzberg, ed., The Nation's Children, Vol. 1: The Family and Social Change (New York: Columbia University Press, 1960); Thomas F. Pettigrew, A Profile of the Negro American (Princeton, N.J.: D. Van Nostrand Co., 1964).

remedy is to be sought primarily through improving the economic, social, and legal status of Negroes or primarily through conducting a remedial campaign aimed directly at the Negro family.

THE MOYNIHAN REPORT

Impetus has been given to these and related questions by the much-discussed "Moynihan report."[2] Released to the general public in the late fall of 1965, this publication presents census figures and findings from some special studies to document the grim effects of poverty and discrimination and their impact on Negro families. It brings together all-too-familiar evidence that the frequency of broken marriage, female-headed families, births out of wedlock, and dependence on public assistance are much higher among Negroes than among whites. In doing so, it recognizes that these problems are most acute among the very poor and least acute at the middle- and upper-income levels. It points out also that they are more acute in cities than in rural areas and thus are intensified by continuing urbanization.

The report further documents the higher unemployment rates and lower wage rates among Negroes than among whites. It states, as others have done, the 2 to 1 white-Negro unemployment ratio that has persisted for years, the lower wages available to Negroes, and the fact that the median nonwhite family income is little more than half the median for white families. To this discrepancy is added the fact that the families of the poor tend to be larger than middle-class families. "Families of six or more children have median incomes 24 percent below families with three."[3] Other sources tell how heavily this fertility differential bears on Negro families: in 1963, according to the Social Security Administration Index, 60 percent of nonwhite children under 18 lived in poverty as compared with 16 percent of white children.[4]

The effect on marital and family stability of the man's economic instability is also discussed. The sad cycle has become familiar in the professional literature: the man who cannot command a stable job at adequate wages cannot be an adequate family provider; the man who cannot provide for his family is likely to lose status and respect in his own eyes and in the eyes of others—including his family. His inability to provide drains him of the will to struggle with continuing and insuperable family responsibilities. It is an incentive to desertion, especially if his family can receive public assistance only when he is gone.

A good deal of the Moynihan report is devoted to interpretation of the documented figures and, quite naturally, it is on the interpretation that opinions diverge.[5] It is not the purpose of this paper to summarize fully, to concur with, or to take issue with the report as such, but rather to consider some propositions that were in circulation before it was published and to which it has given increased currency. With regard to the report itself, its factual summary has shocked some Americans into new recognition of old and

[2] The Negro Family: The Case for National Action (Washington, D.C.: Department of Labor, Office of Planning and Research, 1965).

[3] Ibid., p. 24.

[4] Mollie Orshansky, "Who's Who Among the Poor: A Demographic View of Poverty," Social Security Bulletin, Vol. 28, No. 7 (July 1965), pp. 3–32.

[5] Midway between statistical report and interpretation is discussion of a "startling increase in welfare dependency," described as occurring at a time when employment was increasing. See U.S. Department of Labor, The Negro Family: The Case for National Action, op. cit., p. 12. It would require extensive and sophisticated analysis to determine the extent to which this upswing in AFDC recipients related to changes in families, or to liberalization of AFDC policies following new legislation, or to changes in population distribution. Similarly, differentials in rates of juvenile delinquency would need to be controlled for income and analyzed in light of differential rates of apprehension and treatment of presumed offenders, white or nonwhite.

unpalatable facts about the toll exacted by poverty coupled with discrimination; and its interpretive sections have challenged us to an assessment of evidence—two substantial services. Some of the propositions attributed to it may be misinterpretations of the author's intended meaning. In any case, they have taken on a life of their own and are met frequently in other current writings. Accordingly, they will be considered here on their own merits, without reference to any particular document.

FATHERLESS FAMILIES

One recurrent proposition concerns the "rapid deterioration" of the Negro family, often referred to as "crumbling" and presumably near dissolution. The incidence of fatherless families is used as the primary index of family breakdown. Although questions can be—and have been—raised about this index, such questions do not dominate the mainstream of the argument and will be disregarded here. But if one accepts the proportion of fatherless homes as a primary index of family breakdown, does it then follow, on the basis of the evidence, that the Negro family is rapidly deteriorating?

It is important to differentiate between sudden acceleration of family crisis and relatively sudden perception of a long-chronic situation, since the diagnosis of a social condition influences the prescription for relieving it and the context in which the prescription is filled.

Actually, census figures do not justify any such alarmist interpretation. It seems worth while to review these figures, not because there is no urgent need for remedial action—the need is urgent, especially in the area of jobs for low-income Negro men. Rather it is important to keep the problem in perspective and to avoid feeding prejudices that can all too readily seize upon statistical misconceptions as reason to delay rather than to speed such action.

As already noted, census figures do show much higher rates of fatherless families for Negroes than for whites. The 1964 figures show almost 9 percent of white families headed by a woman as compared with 23 percent of nonwhite families; a difference of this order has persisted for years.[6] The figures do not, however, document a rapid increase in those rates during recent years. On the contrary—and this is a point curiously slighted by commentators on both sides of the argument—they show a gradual increase from 1949 (19 percent) to 1959 (24 percent). Moreover, from 1960 to 1964 the proportion of female-headed families among Negroes showed no net rise at all, standing at 23 percent in 1964. The total rise from 1949 to 1964 was about 5 percentage points, that is, about one-third of a percentage point a year. In 1940, the proportion was 18 percent.[7] Thus, an accurate description would be that during the past twenty-five years there has been a gradual rise, preceded and followed by a plateau, but not an acute increase in the over-all proportion of broken homes among Negroes. (Table 1, page 4.)

ILLEGITIMACY

Another generalization also related to family breakdown is met so often that by now it threatens to attain the status of "fact," namely, that there has been an

[6] These figures are available for white and nonwhite rather than for white and Negro families. However, most of the nonwhite (about 92 percent) are Negroes.

[7] Percentages have been rounded. The exact rise was from 18.8 percent to 23.6 percent, or 4.4 percentage points. The 1940 figure was 17.8 percent, as recomputed according to the definition of "family" introduced in 1947. Bureau of the Census, Current Population Reports. Series P-20, Nos. 125, 116, 106, 100, 88, 83, 75, 67, 53, 44, 33, and 26 (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Department of Commerce); Bureau of Labor Statistics, The Negroes in the United States: Their Economic and Social Situation (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Department of Labor, 1965); Bureau of the Census, 16th Census of the U.S. 1940. Population—Families—Types of Families (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Department of Commerce, 1940).

"alarming rise" in illegitimacy. It is true that the number of births out of wedlock has soared. In 1964 the number was 276,000 as compared with 176,600 in 1954.[8] This is a tremendous number, and the more distressing since there has been no services explosion to keep pace with the population explosion. However, in terms of people's behavior, the only relevant index of increase in illegitimacy is rate, that is, the number of births out of wedlock per 1,000 unmarried women of child-bearing age.

The rise in rate (as differentiated from numbers) was relatively steady over several decades. This rise represents a long-term trend and not a sudden upsurge. Moreover, in the last seven years reported (1957–1964) the rate has oscillated within about two points, at about the same level, rising or falling one point or less annually, but in effect representing a seven-year plateau. Since all national illegitimacy figures are based on estimates, with a number of states not reporting, very slight changes should not be regarded as significant. Thus, the current picture is a large rise in numbers and a leveling off in the rate of nonwedlock births.[9] Rates for teen-agers have increased less than for other groups, and for those under fifteen the rate has not increased since 1947.[10] (The ratio—the proportion of live births that are out of wedlock—has risen for both whites and nonwhites. However, ratio is far less meaningful than rate as an index of change.)

TABLE 1. FAMILIES HEADED BY A WOMAN AS PERCENT OF ALL FAMILIES BY COLOR SELECTED PERIODS, 1949–1964

Year	Families Headed by a Woman As Percent of Total
	White	Nonwhite
1964	8.8	23.4
1963	8.6	23.3
1962	8.6	23.2
1961	8.9	21.6
1960	8.7	22.4
1959	8.4	23.6
1958	8.6	22.4
1957	8.9	21.9
1956	8.8	20.5
1955	9.0	20.7
1954	8.3	19.2
1953	8.4	18.1
1952	9.2	17.9
1950	8.4	19.1
1949	8.8	18.8

Source: U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census: Current Population Reports, P-20, No. 125, 116, 106, 100, 88, 83, 75, 67, 53, 44, 33, and 26. Figures for 1963 and 1964 are drawn from Bureau of Labor Statistics, The Negroes in the United States: Their Economic and Social Situation (Washington, D.C., U.S. Department of Labor) Table IV, a, 1.

The recent relative stability of rate does not diminish the problems caused by nonwedlock births but it should affect the conclusions drawn from the statistics, the measures taken to act on those conclusions, and the attitudes of those who ponder the meaning of the figures.

Over half the children born out of wedlock are nonwhite, although only 12 percent of the population are nonwhite. The reasons for this difference have been much discussed and need only be mentioned here. They include (1) less use of contraception, (2) less use of abortion, (3) differences in reporting, (4) reluctance to lose a public assistance grant by admitting to a man in the house, (5) the expense of divorce and legal separation. It seems probable that, even if discount could be made for these and other factors, a difference would remain. It would be a much smaller difference, however, and conceivably could still relate more to income than to color.[11]

[8] Monthly Vital Statistics Reports, Advance Report, Final Natality Statistics, 1964 (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, National Center for Health Statistics, Public Health Service, October 22, 1965); Vital Statistics of the United States, 1963. Volume I—Natality (Washington, D.C.: National Center for Health Statistics, Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, 1964).

[9] Elizabeth Herzog, "The Chronic Revolution: Births Out of Wedlock." Paper presented at meeting of American Orthopsychiatric Association, March 1965. To be published in a forthcoming issue of Journal of Clinical Pediatrics.

[10] Rates are not available by color except for a few years.

If further evidence were needed on this virtually unchallenged relation between income and illegitimacy rates, figures on rates in high- and low-income tracts should be sufficient. Pakter and associates, for example, found that the proportion of births out-of-wedlock in relation to total nonwhite births varied from a high of 38 percent in the Central Harlem district to a comparative low of 9 percent in the Pelham Bay District.[12]

Attitudes toward illegitimacy and toward marriage are clearly linked with the economic position of the Negro male. A male head of house who is not a breadwinner and provider is a hazard to the happiness of the marriage, and his loss of economic status is so great a hazard to his intrafamily status that he may decamp, either to protect his own ego or to make his family eligible for support from AFDC. Recent changes in the AFDC program are aimed against the latter reason for family desertion.

SLAVERY IS NOT THE EXPLANATION

Among the most frequent and most challenged generalizations relating to low-income Negro families is the assumption that their present characteristics are influenced more by the legacy of slavery than by postslavery discriminations and deprivations. The challenge rests chiefly on (1) the similarity between very poor Negro families and very poor white families, and (2) the fact that slavery ended a hundred years ago while the postslavery situation is contemporary and appalling. Adequately controlled comparisons within different income levels show that the differences associated with income outweigh those associated with color. Family structure, for example, differs more between different income levels than between Negro and white families. The same is true of differences between Negro and white children in educational achievement, and—when income is controlled—the relative position of men with respect to women, economically and educationally, is the same for whites as for nonwhites.[13]

Descriptions of white families at the very low income levels read very much like current descriptions of poor Negro families, with high incidence of broken homes, "mother dominance," births out of wedlock, educational deficit, crowded living, three-generation households, and failure to observe the norms of middle-class behavior.[14] Such families are described by Hollingshead and Redlich:

> Doctors, nurses, and public officials who know these families best estimate from one-fifth to one-fourth of all births are illegitimate.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> Death, desertion, separation, or divorce has broken more than half the families (56%). The burden of child care, as well as support, falls on the mother more often than on the father when the family

[11] Elizabeth Herzog, "Unmarried Mothers: Some Questions To Be Answered and Some Answers To Be Questioned," Child Welfare, Vol. 41, No. 8 (October 1962), pp. 339–350.

[12] Jean Pakter, Henry J. Rosner, Harold Jacobziner, and Frieda Greenstein, "Out-of-Wedlock Births in New York City. I—Sociologic Aspects," American Journal of Public Health, Vol. 51, No. 5 (May 1961), pp. 683–696.

[13] Myron J. Lefcowitz, "Poverty and Negro-White Family Structures." Unpublished background paper for White House Conference on Civil Rights, Washington, D.C., November 1965.

[14] Walter B. Miller, "Implications of Urban Lower-Class Culture for Social Work," Social Service Review, Vol. 33, No. 3 (September 1959), pp. 219–236; W. Lloyd Warner and Paul S. Lunt, The Social Life of a Modern Community (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1941); James West, Plainville, USA (New York: Columbia University Press, 1945).

is broken. The mother-child relation is the strongest and most enduring family tie.

. . . . . .

Here we find a conglomerate of broken homes where two or three generations live together, where boarders and roomers, in-laws and common-law liaisons share living quarters. Laws may be broken and the moral standards of the higher classes flouted before the children's eyes day after day.[15]

These are descriptions of white families in the North, with no heritage of slavery to explain their way of life. It seems unlikely that the slavery-specific thesis is needed to explain the occurrence among Negroes of patterns so similar to those produced in other groups merely by poverty, and so often described in other contexts as "the culture of poverty." [16]

It is difficult to be sure how much—if any—difference would remain in proportions of female-headed families if really sensitive comparisons were made between Negroes and whites on the same income level. Available income breakdowns employ rather broad groupings, and Negroes tend to be overrepresented at the lower layers of each grouping. It seems reasonable to assume that some differences between white and nonwhite would remain even with a more sensitive income classification. Yet it does not necessarily follow that they might be ascribed primarily to the legacy of slavery rather than to the hundred years since slavery. It seems more likely that differences between low-income white and Negro families, beyond that explained by income alone, may be attributed primarily to postslavery factors of deprivation and discrimination affecting every facet of life: occupation, education, income, housing, nutrition, health and mortality, social status, self-respect—the documented list is long and the documenting references myriad.[17]

The habit of analyzing data by color rather than by income encourages the tendency to attribute to race-related factors differences that may in fact be due to income level. Studies of prenatal care, for example, indicate that in effect one is comparing the prosperous with the poor in all three of the following comparisons: white mothers with nonwhite mothers; married mothers with unmarried mothers; all mothers who do, with all mothers who do not, obtain prenatal care.[18]

All the points mentioned here, and some not mentioned, are important. However, the emphasis on rapid deterioration is so central to current discussion of the low-income Negro family and to means proposed for alleviating its current problems that it deserves major emphasis—along with the slavery-specific thesis to which it is so often linked.

There has been little disposition to challenge the ample evidence that family structure and functioning in our society are strongly linked with social and economic status. The questions raised, as Robert Coles put it, have to do with which is the cart and which is the horse.[19] The alleged rapid acceleration of family breakdown has [15] August B. Hollingshead, Elmtown's Youth. (New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1949), pp. 116, 117; Hollingshead and Fredrick C. Redlich, Social Class and Mental Illness: A Community Study (New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1958), p. 125.

[16] Oscar Lewis, The Children of Sanchez: Autobiography of a Mexican Family. (New York: Random House, 1961).

[17] Dorothy K. Newman, "Economic Status of the Negro." Unpublished background paper for White House Conference on Civil Rights, Washington, D.C., November 1965; Alvin L. Schorr, Slums and Social Insecurity, Research Report No. 1 (Washington, D.C.: Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Social Security Administration, 1963).

[18] Elizabeth Herzog and Rose Bernstein, Health Services for Unmarried Mothers, Children's Bureau Publication No. 425 (Washington, D.C.: Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Welfare Administration, 1964).

[19] Robert Coles, "There's Sinew in the Negro Family." Background paper for White House Conference on Civil Rights, Washington, D.C., November 1965. Reprinted from the Washington Post, October 10, 1965, p. E 1.

been cited as evidence that among low-income Negroes the family is the horse. Therefore it is important to recognize that, according to the chief index used by proponents of this view, no rapid acceleration of family breakdown is evident.

If there has been no substantial change in family structure during the past two decades, then there are no grounds for claiming that a new "tangle of pathology" has set up a degenerative process from within, over and above response to the long continued impact of social and economic forces from without; and that this process is specific to a Negro "culture" inherited from days of slavery.

TWO VIEWS—AND TWO REMEDIES

Both sides of the controversy agree that there is urgent need for strong action to increase the proportion of sound, harmonious two-parent homes among low-income Negroes. They disagree on whether that action should be focused primarily on intra-family or extra-family problems. The acute-crisis view suggests that primary attention be given to the family as such. The other view suggests that the best way to strengthen low-income families, as families, is to give primary attention to building up the economic and social status of Negro men.

According to this view, a number of noneconomic supports can and should be given to low-income Negro families, pending the time when fewer of them are fatherless. Such helps should include, among other things, (1) aids for the overburdened mother in her multiple role as homemaker, child-rearer, and breadwinner; and (2) effective male models introduced into the lives of children—girls as well as boys. A number of new ways for providing both kinds of support have been proposed. In the long run, however, according to this view, what these families need most is jobs for Negro men—jobs with status, with stability, with future, and with fair wages. No one claims that this can be achieved easily, quickly, or cheaply; but many believe it can and must be done.

What is new for the white majority is not that it is suddenly faced with an explosive breakdown of "the" Negro family. What is new is the recognition of a long-standing situation, plus the determination to do something about it. If we are able to achieve that recognition and determination, however belatedly, then surely we must be able to act on this basis rather than to galvanize ourselves into action by believing that suddenly the Negro family is a bomb or a mine which will explode in our faces if it is not quickly defused. Surely we are able to act, not because of panic but because action is long overdue, and inaction flies in the face of decency.

What is new for the Negro minority is not a sudden acceleration of family breakdown. What is new is an injection of hope that attacks apathy and fatalism and sparks insistence on full justice. It is not increased family breakdown that activates outbreaks such as occurred in Harlem, Watts, and elsewhere. It is the recognition that the families of the "dark ghetto" no longer need to continue to accept the ghetto and what it does to them.

It must, of course, be recognized that "the" Negro family is itself a fiction. Different family forms prevail at different class and income levels throughout our society. In addition, at any given level a wide variety of families are found, each with its individual characteristics—some of which are and some of which are not class linked. When the great diversity among low-income families is ignored, there is danger that the deplored characteristics of some will be imputed to all.[20] At the same time, most writers—including the present one—find it almost impossible to avoid falling into the oversimplified form of reference to "the" Negro family that constantly risks oversimplified thinking.

[20] Hylan Lewis, Culture, "Class and the Behavior of Low Income Families." Unpublished background paper for White House Conference on Civil Rights, Washington, D.C., November 1965; Elizabeth Herzog, "Some Assumptions About the Poor," Social Service Review, Vol. 37, No. 4 (December 1963), pp. 389–402.

It is necessary also to caution one's self and others that, while problems must be discussed and attacked, strengths must not be forgotten. Problem-focused discussions, however necessary and constructive, also invite distortion. Not all fathers are absent fathers among the poor—in fact, about two-thirds of them are present among low-income Negro families. And, as Erik Erikson reminds us, there are impressive strengths in many Negro mothers.[21] Robert Coles, after living among low-income Negroes for months, wrote:

> I was constantly surprised at the endurance shown by children we would all call poor or, in the current fashion, "culturally disadvantaged." . . . What enabled such children from such families to survive, emotionally and educationally, ordeals I feel sure many white middle-class boys and girls would find impossible? What has been the source of strength shown by the sit-in students, many of whom do not come from comfortable homes but, quite the contrary, from rural cabins or slum tenements?[22]

One may go on to speculate: What are the sources of strength and self-discipline that make possible a Montgomery bus boycott or a March on Washington, conducted without violence? We do well to ponder such questions, for we shall have to mobilize the strengths of families in poverty as well as the wisdom of others who ponder their problems, if we are at last "to fulfill these rights."

---

[21] Erik H. Erikson, "The Concept of Identity in Race Relations: Notes and Queries." To be published in December 1965 issue of Daedalus.

[22] Robert Coles, op. cit., p. E 1 (Washington Post).

Reprinted with permission from

Social Work

Copyright 1966 by the National Association of Social Workers
Printed in U. S. A.

For additional copies, write to
THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE
Institute of Human Relations
165 East 56 Street
New York, N. Y. 10022

Single copy, 20¢
Quantity prices on request

File

the museum of african art

an experiment in communication between cultures

The week which encompasses the birthdays of Abraham Lincoln (February 12th) and of the great 19th century Negro abolitionist orator-publisher, Frederick Douglass (February 17th), has been designated as Negro History Week.

An unusual approach to the task of making the American public more aware of the creative past of the Negro peoples of the world is being carried on by a new museum in Washington, D. C., The Museum of African Art. Located on Capitol Hill in the shadow of the Supreme Court, the Museum occupies the first residence in Washington of Frederick Douglass, a man whom Lincoln once called "the most meritorious person I have ever met" and who later served in high posts in the administrations of five U. S. presidents.

In the Museum's education program, art serves in a unique way the cause of social understanding.

The story of how the Museum evolved is an interesting one. It is the brain child of a former State Department and USIA cultural attaché, Warren Robbins, who while serving at various European posts for over a decade, began to collect modern art and African sculpture. Impressed by the considerable influence which African sculpture had exerted on many of the pioneers of twentieth-century art such as Picasso, Modigliani, Leger, Matisse, and the German Expressionists, Robbins discerned in the relationship between the two a strong basis for "cultural equivalency" between peoples of hitherto alien cultures.

Resigning from the Foreign Service in 1962, he established a non-profit educational institute with the unwieldy name of "The Center for Cross-cultural Communication." The Center's purpose was to more fully exploit the arts and social sciences in the struggle for inter-cultural—and in particular interracial (a term he doesn't like)—understanding. It is precisely because people wince at the Center's name that he insists upon using it, to underscore the fact that communication between cultures is radically different from communication within a particular group.

As its first principle undertaking, the Center established the Museum, which is unique among American museums in that it is concerned not solely with art, art education and the limited (though growing) audience of art cognoscenti, but more particularly with its social implications. The Museum's program has two distinct components. The first is to conduct an art education program centered around a broadly representative permanent collection. This program is carried on not only for visitors to the Museum but, through extension activities, for school groups in Washington and throughout the country. The second comprises the program of a more broadly conceived organization, the Frederick Douglass Institute for Inter-cultural Understanding, of which the Museum is a part.

While the Museum itself focuses upon the art, the Institute will demonstrate and exploit its social meaning. One of its aims will be to furnish irrefutable evidence of the profound contribution that the Negro, in Africa and in America, has made and is making to the creative life of man. That African sculpture constitutes one of mankind's great artistic achievements has long been known to art historians, but the general public has remained largely ignorant of its significance. Because all great art transcends its cultural context in aesthetic terms, scholars have long recognized that African art retains its expressive power even when subjected to Western critical standards. At the same time, by synthesizing the insights of the anthropologist, archaeologist, historian and psychologist, the Institute will seek to

Reprinted From ART EDUCATION, February 1966
Journal of the National Art Education Assoc.

File

Rec'd 3/23/66

The Nomination of Farris Bryant: Some Facts and Analysis

On March 12, 1966, at a national governors conference, President Johnson, to the surprise of everyone in the State of Florida, announced the nomination of ex-Governor Farris Bryant as Director of the Office of Emergency Planning. The nomination goes before the Senate Armed Services Committee. In 1965, it took the Senate only 18 days to confirm another ex-governor, Bufford Ellington, Bryants's predecessor at OEP.

Who is Farris Bryant? And why was he nominated?

Selected Background Material on Farris Bryant

a) While a state legislator in the 1950's, he introduced a resolution that sought to apply the doctrine of interposition to the Supreme Court's decision on school de-segregation. While governor, he did nothing to help de-segregation; he remained an open, committed segregationist throughout his two terms, and ran as a declared enemy of school desegregation. In 1963 he testified before a congressional committee in opposition to the public accomodations section of the 1964 CR act. He conspried against Martin Luther King in St. Augustine, against CORE in North Florida, and is alleged to have pressured the University of Florida to "get rid of" any civil rights activists on its faculty. Overtly and covertly, he has one of the worst civil rights records of any recent Southern governor.

b) Bryant represents the rightwing extreme of the Florida Democratic Party. He refused to support Kennedy in 1960; his support of LBJ in 1964 was merely ritual, since his entire wing of the party was known throughout the state to be working privately for Goldwater. Bryant's opposition within the party came from the LeRoy Collins coalition, and the south Florida Democrats led by Mayor Robert King High of Miami. Bryant is a recognized extremist, hence the local feelings of surprise when LBJ announced the nomination. The Tampa Tribune, the most respected conservative daily in the state, is persistently and ruggedly anti-Bryant, as are the state's two leading liberal dailies, the Miami Herald and the St. Petersburg Times. When Smathers retires from the Senate, Bryant is alleged to want the seat; Collins is supposed to want it also. If the polls are right, Collins has the edge on people, Bryant has the edge on special interests: banking, railroads, the Florida DuPont empire, the mine operators, and the hogs-and-timber vote in the countryside.

c) Recently, Bryant's reputation for honesty has been impugned by several newspaper stories raising questions about his insurance business operations since he left office. The prevailing popular opinion in the state is that Bryant is dishonest, but too smart to be caught, and that the huge sums spent on his electoral campaigns were more than repaid to the special interests who supported him. The big point to be drawn from this is that, in Florida, Bryant is a political bankrupt: he has no organization, he is unpopular, the press is against him, his record is very dismal (especially in education, race, social services, conservation, universities, fiscal planning favoritism to special interests, etc.), and as a consequence no sound argument could be made that a federal appointment of Bryant helps LBJ in Florida in 1968. Between Bryant and Collins as running mates in Florida for the '68 Presidential election nobody in this state would be so stupid as to recommend Farris Bryant.

d) There is another level in Bryant's background that explains LBJ's preference for him as director of OEP. Examine the following patterns:

1. Under Bryant, Florida became the first state in the union to require of its high school graduates successful completion of a course called "Americanism vs. Communism."

2. Bryant issued two executive orders that sought to drill his public employees (including college faculty) in "internal security": one required that everyone submit to fingerprinting (his highway patrol administered this program; strong-arm tactics were needed to break resistance by 200 faculty at the University of Florida), and the other required that all public employees watch a civil defense television series and pass a paper-form test on same.

3. While governor, the Board of Control (regents) sought to restrict academic freedom on college campuses in so outrageous a manner that it united the state's AAUP chapters and faculties in a way never before or since seen in the state. Regents in the state are directly responsible to the Governor's cabinet, in an almost uniquely naked top-down management system.

4. Bryant permitted free reign to the Florida Legislative Investigating Committee, known in the state as "the Johns Committee". This committee, under its head Charley Johns, a state senator, is Florida's now defunct HUAC; its career began in 1958, in a pursuit of Communists in the NAACP, of homosexuals and subversives at the University of Florida in the later '50's, and during Bryant's term, a wholesale and stupid assault on the newly-chartered University of South Florida in Tampa. USF was subsequently put on the AAUP blacklist, the panic there having run so deep that its administrators have yet to recapture its faculty losses. Bryant's press secretary, John Evans, eventually headed up the Johns Committee staff.

5. There is no educator in the state who would disagree with the proposition that nativist anti-intellectualism reached a climax during Bryant's terms of office. Deeply convinced that the campuses under his control were being infiltrated by subversives, Bryant launched an extraordinary attack: unconstitutional Regental orders, fingerprinting, compulsory CD training, legislative committee investigations, a year-around trimester speed-up system, administrative denial of appropriated funds for salary increases, conspiracies to terminate activist teachers, to send qualified Negro students out of state, to politically screen new students and teachers, etc. Given the wealth of the state, the condition of Florida higher education is a scandal; and after Bryant's two terms, it is nearly a catastrophe.

6. Bryant's notivation is largely ideological: he is a self-conscious right-wing protagonist with a history of personal and political connections with some of the most extreme rightist elements in the state. In his last days in office, he sought to pack the Board of Regents by appointing all its members, almost all of whom are known rightists. A Bryant crony, Wayne McCall of Ocala, still a Regent, was one of the charter members of Project Alert, a notorious rightist front group for Cold War extremists.

e) Taking the following pattern into account, the objective record indicates that Bryant's nomination to head OEP has more to do with his Cold War avocation than with his administrative skills. Strong evidence for this is provided by two sources, one of them a study of rightist influence in the State of Florida and the other a look at Bryant's special contribution to Cold War militancy.

The inter-connections Bryant had with rightists in Florida is well documented in a study by Marshall B. Jones, PhD., "Military Participation in the Rightist Revival," pp. 45-48, and published in The Radical Right: Proceedings of the Sixth Annual Intergroup Relations conference, University of Houston, Houston, Texas, March 27, 1965.

At about the time these intra-state connections were firming up, Bryant moved aggressively inside the national governors' conferences and wrangled out of them the chairmanship of the Committee on Cold War Education. Report of this committee was made to the June 10, 1964 conference in Cleveland, Ohio. (John Evans shows up again, this time as staff director for the governors' committee.) This report, called Paths to Understanding, sharply defines Bryant's special contribution to the Cold War: the use of state governmental bodies as organizational resources for the propagation of Cold War educational materials (especially rightist visions of the war); for the training of actual combat units in tactics designed to contain domestic threats against internal security; and for the militant arousal and preparation of the state's population against Communist propaganda, candidates for office, sabotage (the water system is mentioned especially), and exploitation of the state's social problems. The report also emphasizes that before war is declared officially, governors and local authorities have the police power and the right to protect themselves from subversives; stress is placed throughout on working with the FBI and other federal agencies.

A concrete product of this report was the Florida Center for Cold War Education. Conferences held under its auspices became, in effect, funnels for the legitimization and distribution throughout the state and the country of rightist visions of Communism and American foreign policy.

f) The Office of Emergency Planning could be used to create Cold War education centers in every state of the union. Indeed, there is very little reason to believe that Farris Bryant would do otherwise, and perhaps he is expected to do more. When Paths to Understanding was published originally, it was understood by many governors and their aides as a bit "cranky", representative of the southern governor's enthusiastic association of civil rights activism with Communist subversion. Bryant's recommendations were almost a direct translation of counter-insurgency systems being employed by the U.S. externally; indeed, he seemed to be suggesting in the report that CD teams be deployed in Vietnam--as political police, advisors, etc. In 1964, nobody could take that kind of thinking seriously, except right wing ideologues, men who are accustomed to reading into lawful dissent and demonstrations the secret plots of an omnipresent enemy. Since 1964, however, and since Johnson's determination to fight a long and expensive action in Vietnam, the anti-war movement in this country has developed on a scale comparable in many ways to the civil rights movement. In fact, an increasing effort to link the two movements is common knowledge. All of this suggests that Bryant's special expertise is now being called to Washington, D.C. for the purpose of policing political dissent as it manifests itself in the anti-war movement. There is, after all, nothing else in the Bryant record to recommend him.

Structurally, the OEP is ideal for the kind of operation suggested above. In the first place, it is NOT an acknowledged police agency, and that is an advantage when you want your policing function to be unknown to the public at large. Secondly, OEP's regional offices will become less important as Bryant's contacts are renewed state-by-state, this time in the name of civil defense planning. CD authority is mysteriously diffuse in the federal government, and technically the OEP is not supposed to have the CD powers it can in fact exercise. But it will no doubt be in the name of a new concept of civil defense that Bryant will introduce into every state the Cold War "education" centers he is expert at creating. It is no accident, as the Bryants would say, that his nomination was made at a national governors' conference, especially at a conference where adroit manipulative moves were made to get a gubernatorial consensus for LBJ's Vietnam policy.

Analysis and Recommendations for Action

As any Gallup poll will tell you, let alone the poll printed in March, gubernatorial unanimity behind LBJ's Vietnam policy does not reflect American public opinion. Only half of those asked are willing to say they support the President's policy, an all-time low for LBJ to match the record low of 56 per cent who think he is doing a good job over-all; of special interest to poll-watchers, too, was the one that indicated nearly 50 per cent of those asked could see no difference between, or had no opinion about, the Democratic and Republican parties as vehicles to peace.

The President is faced not only with a potentially rebellious Senate waiting its chance to repudiate his Southeast Asia policy, but a massive and popular revulsion against the war, albeit inarticulate, intuitive, and apolitical. Obviously the federal government as such can do no more than it is already doing, under these circumstances, to propagandize its very controversial war effort. What is needed, the National Security Council has probably concluded (we surmise this to be the case), is a Farris Bryant--a Cold War salesman on the NSC itself, and one who knows how to take the burden of its merchandizing off the backs of the policy-makers and relocate it closer, as it were, to the people. Cold War education programs throughout the states will make the Vietnam kind of war more acceptable in the future, and if the programs are launched swiftly enough, they may even make this particular war as popular as electoral necessities require it to be.

War consensus is essentially and always a manipulated affair, particularly when casualties are high, costs are inequitably distributed in the community, and the popular mood has become fatalistic. (The poll that indicated as much as two-thirds of the population thought the government was lying to them about the war is an index to the quality of consensus currently available to the "hawks".) U.S. foreign policy decision-making is too obviously far from the people and too ambiguous in perceptible structure and motivation--in short, too aristocratic in nature--to make it possible for any American foreign policy "delivered" in the near future to be authentically popular. Liberalism in general, and White House liberalism in particular, is very unlikely to alter this basic framework around U.S. foreign policy. What current policy-makers can do, however, is minimize the disadvantages that arise concretely from the fact that people resent a policy that makes them feel politically impotent, and a policy, furthermore, they suspect is irrational, arbitrary, imposed from above, secretive in the logics of its motivation and execution, and unconvincing to the educated and the opinion leaders.

"In short," we may pretend the National Security Council has concluded, "this foreign policy establishment--forgive the jest, gentlemen--needs to improve its public relations." Panic-stricken about "losing face" here or there, that is what we should expect the presidential Democratic party to conclude from the polls and its recent hassle with the Senate.

Given its fundamentally conspiratorial frame of mind, the "foreign policy establishment" ought also to conclude that it needs to undertake (on the sly) a more extensive "policing" of the public opinion-making process. The policy-makers must have been told by now that there are not enough FBI agents available for policing the anti-war movement. There are too many centers of initiative--and too little respect for the FBI as such among the constituencies approached by those centers--for that agency to be as effective as it was in the 1950's at isolating dissenters.

A new agency, and one that is essentially popular in its base, would not only relieve the FBI of policing the new "fifth column", but it would be freer to do whatever was necessary to intimidate, harrass, frustrate, isolate, and in other ways "counter-insurge" the anti-war movement. This implies the creation under the auspices of state and local authorities--or perhaps through volunteer civil defense units--groups of "patriots" who would be, in effect, legitimized vigilantes. (The phrase "storm troopers" comes to mind, and will not go away.) As Paths to Understanding points out, "...if guerrilla techniques should be employed in North America, state governors might be called upon to play a far more prominent role than most Americans now expect." The report goes on to urge the creation of federal-state policing functions, as an aid to the FBI, before war has been declared by Congress. And immediately following that observation, there are the following two paragraphs (pp. 18-19):

"Propaganda is one of the foremost techniques of Communist aggression. [Note identification of "propaganda" with "aggression."] Such propaganda may be directed against conditions in a particular state or region. In any event, enemy propaganda activities...are taking place on the territories of the several states and it is there where they can be opposed most effectively.

"State governments also are heavily engaged in education, including education at university levels. Presently, the main effort of the Communist Party of the United States is directed toward propagandizing college and university students. In some areas, there also seems to be an effort to get propaganda into the high school system. In addition, there is a great deal of lecture activity that is directed at the population at large. There are indications that Communists may be trying to run for state and local offices. At the present time, many of these Communist activities in the several states remain virtually unopposed."

Etc. The remainder of the report goes on to detail how governors' offices can be staffed and trained to combat Bolshevik maneuvers, such as running for office.

The nomination of Bryant is, in the view of this committee, an adoption of the strategy both explicit and implicit in Paths to Understanding. The strategy of domestic counter-insurgency at a political level, decentralized in personnel and administration, and financed and initially trained through federal resources, is precisely the background and expertise that Bryant brings to OEP. His appearance at this time is a further confirmation of LBJ's determination to fight a long and expensive and predictably unpopular war in Southeast Asia. Bryant's otherwise inexplicable political mobility also confirms a quality of desperation and perhaps actual insanity deep within the foreign policy establishment, a quality long suspected by the Peace Movement to be decisive there.

Bryant's appointment, to put the matter as strongly as possible, is an identifiable public step toward an American fascism; it represents a decision on the part of the federal government that the informal media and opinion-shaping processes in this country are too slow or too untrustworthy to offset its foreign policies efficiently; and, finally, the decision entails a direct federal-state intervention in the opinion-making process unparalleled in American history, and essentially fascistic in its structure.

Without going into detail, this committee recommends the following strategy:

(1) Urgent appeals should be sent to all friendly Senators calling for a full-scale investigation of the Bryant nomination. Bryant's segregationist past, coupled with his disgraceful relations with extremists, might make his nomination intolerable to a majority of the Senate. Sen. Stephen Young is on the Senate Armed Services committee, which has responsibility for the public hearings; Sen. Symington, no friend of the Peace Movement , is nevertheless suspicious of extremists on the right and could not be expected to sympathize with a man like Bryant if he knew him as the racist and reactionary that he is. But it is nevertheless true that there is no way of stopping Bryant at the committee level, though a good deal of exposure of him there is possible, especially if civil rights organizations demand an opportunity to testify against the nomination.

(2) This leads us to our second suggestion: not only is it in the interests of the Senate liberals to combat the Bryant nomination for their own reasons, it is in the interests of the anti-war movement to get more and more people to understand what is entailed domestically by our Vietnam policy. Bryant's nomination associates segregation, war panic, cold war education, unconstitutional and fascist plots to subvert the opinion-making process (even more so than it is already subverted by corporate control), spying on citizens in the exercise of their rights, "storm troopers, southern governors, local government in the context of federal war policies, etc., etc. These associations are crucial, as movement people know without our belaboring the point. Hence it seems to us that as many civil rights organizations, as many civil liberties organizations, as many peace groups, as many liberal coalitions as are approachable should be urged to interest themselves in this nomination. In short, the occasion is a natural for the radicalization of everybody from U.S. Senators to the cats in the ghetto who think the Vietnam scene is "white man's worry."

Copies of Marshall Jones' paper may be obtained by writing for the pamphlet, The Radical Right, c/o Sociology and Anthropology, University of Houston, Houston Texas; copies of Paths to Understanding may or may not be available at Florida Center for Cold War Education, State of Florida, Tallahassee, Florida, and more probably available from the staff headquarters of the National Governors Conference, 1313 E. 60th Street, Chicago 37, Illinois.

Prepared by:

Students for a Democratic Society
Gainesville, Florida
March 14, 1966

Distributed by:

Southern Student Organizing Committee
Box 6403
Nashville, Tennessee

File 4-15-66

TIME ESSAY

BREACHING THE WHITE WALL OF SOUTHERN JUSTICE

IN almost every area of life—in schooling, public accommodations, and above all voting—the Southern Negro has lately made enormous strides toward gaining the equality guaranteed him by the Constitution and reaffirmed in the recent massive wave of civil rights legislation. Ironically, it is in the field of law and administration of justice that he is most frequently foiled. All too often white segregationists go on killing civil rights workers without fear of conviction, and white police terrorize Negroes and arrest the victims as suspects. To the Southern Negro, it still seems that the whole system of law winks at nearly every lawless scheme to cow him and keep him from his rights.

The Supreme Court two weeks ago dealt with two notorious 1964 cases—the murder of three civil rights workers near Philadelphia, Miss., and the slaying of Negro Educator Lemuel Penn in Georgia—in both of which Southern courts had sidetracked attempts to bring the accused to justice. Basing itself on a 19th century anti-conspiracy law, the Supreme Court not only ordered these cases tried but hinted that new federal legislation is needed. The Government is ready to oblige. In his State of the Union message President Johnson called for increased authority for federal courts to try "those who murder, attack or intimidate either civil rights workers or others exercising their constitutional rights." In the new civil rights bill, which the President will send to Congress this month, he is asking 1) stiffer penalties for threats of violence interfering with a series of broad civil rights; 2) more stringent criteria for the selection of Southern juries.

Federal pressure and Southern conscience are certainly having their effect. The great white wall of segregated Southern justice is finally being breached, as illustrated by some scattered but significant recent events: the nearly unprecedented life sentence for a white youth who raped a Negro girl in Mississippi; eleven Negroes serving on a jury trying the Negro killers of a white policeman in Georgia. Yet the South has a long way to go before Negroes will have gained "equal justice under law."

Rule of the Sheriff

From bottom to top, Southern justice is white. This fact shadows the Negro's every activity from driving a car to engaging in sexual intercourse; from borrowing money to suing for personal injury; from seeking police protection to defending against criminal charges. To Southern Negroes, the courthouse is not a citadel of justice. Instead, says Harvard Psychiatrist Robert Coles, who recently completed a six-year study of Southern racial attitudes, the courthouse is "the symbol of where the policemen, the sheriffs, the judges, the juries, the voting registrar, the registrar of deeds and the whole structure of society is weighted against Negroes. They are afraid of this building." Segregated justice, adds a Southern Regional Council report, "provokes desperation among Negroes and shakes their faith in democracy."

Segregated justice begins with white police and prosecutors, all of them beholden to the white world that appoints or elects them. The elected Southern sheriff is no professional policeman; he is a powerful politician and quite likely the most important man in his county. In Mississippi, for example, he is not only the top law-enforcement officer but also the official tax collector, a job that gives him a fee-income that sometimes raises his annual take to more than $30,000. Since the sheriff is personally responsible for crime-fighting expenses, he hires as few deputies as possible and commonly ignores the crimes his constituents commit in adjoining counties. Thus, white nightriders who terrorize Negroes in the next county sneak home to peace and quiet.

When it comes to Negroes, almost all Deep South states have on their books a catchall statute against disturbing the peace; Louisiana not only lists a number of acts that might "foreseeably" disturb the white public but also makes a crime out of the "commission of any other act" that might "unreasonably" alarm that public. Southern legislatures specialize in frankly discriminatory laws that may survive for months or years before federal courts strike them down. In 1964 the Mississippi legislature prescribed up to three months in prison and a $250 fine for anyone giving birth to a second illegitimate child (considerately, the lawmakers stipulated that twins count only as one). More than 93% of the state's illegitimate births are to Negroes, and a state representative candidly described the measure's purpose: "This is the only way to stop the black tide which threatens to engulf us."

J.P.s & Lawyers

The Negro accused even of a misdemeanor usually goes before a justice of the peace who not only may be unsympathetic but who has every incentive for throwing the book at him—the j.p. is paid per conviction. Virtually no Southern j.p. is a lawyer; one study of 90 North Carolina j.p.s showed that only six had gone to college. They hold court, as the study group discovered, in "country stores, private homes, motel offices, upstairs over the fire stations, and in one case, on the screened-in porch of an ice house." Not only does the justice of the peace have the final decision on fine or jail sentence in nearly all the cases he decides, but he gets to set bond if the case is scheduled for a higher court. The whole bail system, in fact, is used as a handy club against Negroes. While many white-owned bonding companies mulct Negro defendants in ordinary criminal cases, few touch the Negro involved in a civil rights matter. Unless he can put up unmortgaged property or raise cash from hard-pressed civil rights groups, he stays in jail.

Though the Supreme Court's Gideon ruling and recent elaborations by lower federal courts grant any indigent defendant the right to counsel paid for by the state, this means little in cases where Negroes are accused of crimes against whites, to say nothing of civil rights workers. The court-appointed white lawyer takes such cases with reluctance, generally urges the defendant to plead guilty and, if forced to a trial, rarely gives it adequate time or effort. Even if such defendants have money, few white lawyers would offer their services for fear of losing their regular clients.

Why don't Negro defendants hire Negro lawyers? One reason is that there are so few in the South. Of some 21,000 lawyers in Mississippi, only five are Negroes. Even relatively enlightened North Carolina has only 125 Negro lawyers in a Negro population of 1,500,000. The Negro lawyer is barred from judgeships, professorships, political appointments, big corporate firms and affluent clients. Even injured Negroes usually prefer white lawyers because they get more money from white juries. As a result, most important rights cases are directed by non-Southern lawyers, who for all their frequent zeal and skill, are often unfamiliar with the procedural obstacles thrown up by segregated justice.

Unable to make bail or hire a good lawyer, the Negro awaits his state court trial in a segregated jail; even the drunk tanks are generally separate, and the turnkeys are uniformly white. When he finally does go to trial, the Negro enters the courthouse that to him has become the symbol of all his afflictions. There may be a Negro janitor about the premises, but everyone else is white, from judges and prosecutors down to clerks. Though many Southern judges dispense justice with admirable evenhandedness, the judge the Negro faces may well be ruled by his own prejudice or, since he holds elective office, by community pressures. One demeaning custom, banned by federal decision but continued in many Southern courtrooms, is to call Negro witnesses either by their first names or merely "boy."

The most notorious part of segregated justice is the all-white jury system. Since 1875 it has been a federal crime, punishable by a fine of up to $5,000, for a jury commissioner to exclude Negroes systematically from venires in either federal or state courts. Yet, not once in this century has a prosecution been brought under that law. One reason: a jury commissioner almost certainly would be tried before a white jury and acquitted. It is, therefore, with impunity that commissioners draw their venires from lists of registered voters (excluding, until recently at least, most Negroes), from personal-property-tax rolls or from membership rosters of local Junior Chambers of Commerce, Rotary Clubs and similar organizations. Almost all such lists naturally exclude large numbers of poor people, among whom Negroes most often find themselves. Sometimes prospective jurors are required to be of a certain "moral character" or "intelligence" or "uprightness." The highly subjective determination of such qualities is entirely up to the jury commissioners, and illiterate jurors are not unknown in the South.

Jury Problems

In theory, Negroes get a better deal from federal-court jurors, who are picked from a wider area and are less subject to local pressures. Actually, many Southern federal courts use a "key man" system of drawing up venire lists, the key man being a "good citizen" (a middle-class white) who suggests other "good citizens" for jury duty. The nation's 91 federal district courts have been free to pick juries in different ways, thus compounding the subjectivity of state courts. Many federal jury lists simply duplicate state lists.

By the thousands, Negroes exercising their rights nonetheless seek to remove their cases from state to federal courts. Federal judges no longer send these cases back to state courts so readily as they used to; the 1964 Civil Rights Act permits remand orders to be appealed. Negroes still face a major hurdle: Southern federal district judges. Many are scrupulously fair, notably Alabama's Frank Johnson, an Eisenhower appointee, and Florida's Bryan Simpson, a Truman appointee. But others are deeply segregationist, a problem largely attributable to the Kennedy Administration, which surprisingly named such men as Mississippi's William H. Cox, who once described the Negroes involved in a case before him as nothing but a bunch of "chimpanzees" who "ought to be in the movies rather than being registered to vote."

The typical all-white jury breeds injustice in three ways: 1) Negroes committing crimes against Negroes are likely to be let off too easily; 2) Negroes committing crimes against whites receive unduly harsh penalties; 3) whites committing crimes against Negroes either get off scot free or receive token sentences. Into the last category falls the breakneck acquittal last September in Hayneville, Ala., of Thomas Coleman, accused of killing an Episcopal seminarian and wounding a Catholic priest, both civil rights workers. It was at least slightly embarrassing to the state that Coleman, one of the local white courthouse-hangers-on who are so often available for jury duty in the South, was on the venire list for his own trial. Another all-white Alabama jury did convict Hubert Strange last December for murdering a Negro motorist near Anniston; compared with the almost certain death that a Negro defendant would have drawn had the motorist been white, Strange got ten years, a sentence that makes him eligible for parole in three years.

However clear the failures of Southern justice, it is far from clear what should be done about them without weakening the nation's legal structure. Certainly no one wants to destroy the jury system in order to correct its abuses. After the Hayneville acquittal, Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach said: "This is the price you have to pay for the jury system, and I don't think it's too high a price. The situation has changed a great deal already."

To change it further, the President's forthcoming civil rights bill sets up detailed instructions for the selection of federal juries, composition of jury commissions, such technical matters as challenges by the defense. The jurors are to be drawn from voting rolls, but where there is evidence of racial discrimination, other methods are to be employed. Above all, the administration of the system is left to the Court of Appeals judges acting as the judicial council for each circuit, and not to individual, possibly segregationist judges. The bill also bars discrimination in state jury lists and puts federal courts in a watchdog position to ensure fairness, but it does not tell the states what procedures to follow.

Reforms & Solutions

Several other suggestions for improving the Southern jury system have been advanced. One idea: appointing federal jury registrars, like the new, federal voting registrars. Another: a population-sampling system designed to prevent subjective judgments in venire drawing; panels would be selected from among those in a community who are citizens, over 21, have no criminal convictions within a specified period, and can read, write and understand English.

Juries aside, the new civil rights bill also strengthens section 241 of Title 18 in the U.S. Code that prohibits conspiracy to deprive citizens of their federal rights. In the revised sections, conspiracy need no longer be proved—a single act will be sufficient. Nor will the act need to be carried out by an official—a private individual's act will be similarly punishable. Penalties are on a sliding scale from one year to life. Still not specifically covered are acts of violence unrelated to civil rights issues, and some Negro leaders feel that ways must be found to cover these too. Some advocate virtually automatic transfer of all cases involving Negroes from state to federal courts, but Melvin Wulf of the American Civil Liberties Union says: "This would not really solve anything. It wasn't what the federal courts were meant to do, sit on all local crimes. This would literally be making a federal case out of everything."

Two other areas in which civil rights leaders feel improvement can be made:

- EMPLOYMENT. The Constitution already entitles Negroes to fair employment in state and federal courthouses and police forces; Congress could easily and properly pass new laws to enforce that right. Such measures would not guarantee the election or appointment of Negro judges. But they would give Negro lawyers a chance to be considered, and a fair appointment system would surely place some Negroes among the large numbers of other functionaries—cops, clerks, bailiffs, stenographers—who now shore up segregated white justice.
- ENFORCEMENT. Nothing is more frustrating to Southern Negroes than to see FBI agents standing around taking copious notes while local white cops or hoodlums engage in large-scale civil rights violations. Actually, federal officers already are legally empowered to make on-the-spot arrests for any violation of federal laws; the only thing that stops them is Government policy. Criticism of this restraint has led to calls for a special police force to handle civil rights matters. The more reasonable alternative to such massive intervention would be stricter enforcement of existing laws.

Ideally, the South's own state courts should rediscover the U.S. Constitution and eliminate the need for overexpanding federal jurisdiction. Such hopes are not entirely groundless. With new courage, for example, the Mississippi Supreme Court last February voided the death sentence of a Negro convicted of raping a white woman, on the ground that his jury excluded Negroes. In Alabama, a federal court recently ordered Lowndes County to put Negroes on venire lists.

Ultimate solutions await the day when the Southern Negro has the voting power to elect Negro judges, sheriffs and prosecutors, or at least whites who get the message. Growing Negro registration has already begun to alter the political balance in the South, forcing certain politicians to be more responsive to Negro demands and resulting in the election of some Negro officials. The problem of segregated justice can no longer be avoided. It breeds contempt for law among the very Southern whites whom it seeks to favor; it goads the Southern Negro to take the law into his own hands, as in the case of the gun-toting Deacons for Defense and Justice. And in the Negro who flees the South, it reaps a harvest of hatred that explodes in the violence of Harlem and Watts. But above all, it is the inescapable moral imperative that demands "equal justice" for all citizens, in the South as elsewhere.

The American Federationist
APRIL 1966

AMERICA'S POOR: Reality and Change

STATEMENT OF ANDREW J. BIEMILLER, LEGISLATIVE DIRECTOR
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
TO SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 5 OF THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE
ON H.R. 14765, THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1966

May 24, 1966

Mr. Chairman, my name is Andrew J. Biemiller. I am Legislative Director for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations. Accompanying me is Thomas E. Harris, our Associate General Counsel. We appreciate this opportunity to present the views of the AFL-CIO on this important matter.

The proposals which this Subcommittee are considering deal with two major problem areas in the functioning of American democracy. The first has to do with the administration of justice; the second with discriminatory housing practices.

In both of these fields there are large and acute evils which must be eradicated; and the AFL-CIO welcomes the determination of the President and the Congress to face and face squarely the difficult issue of how best to remedy the deficiencies which all of us recognize.

We all, I am sure, believe in equal justice under law; and we all, I am sure, believe that no part of our population should suffer discrimination in so vital a matter as a place to live. The question is how to implement these principles.

The AFL-CIO indorses and supports H.R. 14765. We think it provides constructive and effective cures for the evils with which it deals, and we urge its enactment. We believe that the bill could be strengthened in a few particulars which we suggest below, but in general we are for it.

I will discuss successively the various titles of the bill, indicating in each instance what, if any, changes we think might be made.

Titles I and II

Titles I and II undertake to end discrimination in jury systems, in, respectively, the federal and state courts.

Up until now three different groups have been discriminated against in various areas as respects selection for jury service. These groups are: first, Negroes and perhaps members of certain other minorities; second, women; and third, people with low incomes. The discrimination may be de facto or de jure.

Discrimination against Negroes is unquestionably most acute in the South.

Discrimination against women is also concentrated in the South but is probably also more prevalent de facto in rural and small town areas than in cities. Also, both of these types of discrimination are much more prevalent in state than in federal courts.

On the other hand discrimination in selection for jury service against people having low incomes is decidedly not a peculiarly southern vice, and it is probably more prevalent in federal than in state courts and in cities than in rural areas. Mr. Thomas Dewey, when he was a young district attorney, was an advocate of the so-called blue ribbon jury -- in state courts in New York City. But the use of blue ribbon juries is at least as prevalent in federal courts as in state courts generally.

Prosecutors have the idea that juries drawn from the upper economic strata are readier to convict. We commend Attorney General Katzenbach for his willingness to forgo this advantage for prosecutors, if indeed it is one, and for his recognition that discrimination on grounds of economic status is just as violative of the equal protection of the laws as discrimination on grounds of race or sex.

There is another reason for banning discrimination on the basis of economic status. It is that if such discrimination were permissible it could perpetuate, in a different guise, discrimination against Negroes and other minority groups.

We therefore agree with the sponsor of H.R. 14765 that all three types of discrimination -- i.e. race, sex, and economic status should be ended. Further, we agree that the language of the bill is clear and straightforward, viz. (p.2, lines 9-12):

> "No person or class of persons shall be denied the right to serve on grand and petit juries in the district courts of the United States on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or economic status."

The same terminology is used in the provision as to state courts.

However, we suggest that the procedure for enforcing these standards might well be strengthened.

In the case of state juries, the bill authorizes the Attorney General to bring injunctive proceedings against state jury officials. However, the bill does not contain any such authorization in the case of federal juries, evidently upon the assumption that federal judges and jury commissioners will be readier to effectuate the bill's bans on nondiscrimination than will their state counterparts. Even if this assumption is correct there has been, as the Attorney General acknowledged, some discrimination in the federal courts, and we see no reason why the provision for suits by the Attorney General should not be applicable to federal juries as well as to state.

More important, we are doubtful that the enforcement provisions of the bill are adequate even in the case of state juries. The bill does provide a discovery procedure to make it easier to find out whether unlawful discrimination has occurred in the jury selection process. This procedure is available to the Attorney General in civil suits brought by him and to defendants in criminal prosecutions. However, for enforcement of its bans on discrimination the bill relies exclusively on adjudications in individual law suits, either where the issue is raised by private litigants or in suits brought by the Attorney General.

We are doubtful that this sort of spot policing will be adequate to end jury discrimination. It has not been adequate to end discrimination in other fields.

As respects the right to vote, for example, prior to the Voting Rights Act of 1965 earlier legislation relied for enforcement on suits brought by the Attorney General or by voters. Suit had to be brought in each election district, and in each separate suit there had to be an adjudication whether there had been an unlawful deprivation of the right to vote. We foresaw that these provisions would prove to be inadequate. We testified, when the bill was before Congress that implementing the Fifteenth Amendment by law suits was like trying to paint a wall with a fountain pen.

Our forebodings proved to be well founded, as testified by the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

The 1965 Act utilized several novel devices to counter enforcement difficulties. It provided an automatic triggering test, i. e. whether fewer than 50% of eligible persons were registered or voted. It provided for determinations applicable throughout major geographic units, i. e. States or counties. It provided for the use of federal examiners to register voters, and for federal observers at elections.

These provisions, in contrast to their predecessors, seem to be proving effective.

As respects school desegregation, too, individual law suits proved to be a slow and ineffective way of vindicating constitutional rights.

On the basis of these experiences, we suggest that broader scale procedures for the implementation of Title II may be needed than enforcement through individual law suits. We believe the suggestions on this point made by Roy Wilkins in his testimony for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights have substantial merit and deserve the attention of this Committee.

TITLE III

This Title deals with discrimination in the schools and other public facilities. It eliminates certain existing limitations on the bringing of suits by the Attorney General, and provides for broadened relief.

We are in favor of the enactment of Title III as written.

Since the Attorney General's testimony of this Title was rather general, we propose to give a concrete illustration of why this Title is needed.

In 1950 some Negro parents brought suit against school officials in Clarendon County, South Carolina, seeking the admission of their children to the white schools. In 1951 the federal district court ruled that the schools were very separate but not very equal, and that the plaintiff's rights under the Fourteenth Amendment were being violated. However, the court did not order that the children be admitted to the white schools: it ordered that the Negro schools be made equal.

In 1954 the Supreme Court likewise held that the Negroes' constitutional rights were being violated, on the ground that segregation by races is inherently unequal. This case was one of the four decided by the Supreme Court in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U. S. 483. In 1955 the Supreme Court, on reargument, ruled that integration should proceed with "all deliberate speed," and the case went back to the district court.

In the District Court the deliberation has been more evident than the speed. It was not until the fall of 1965 that the district court finally required the admission of six Negro children to white schools in Clarendon County.

Of course these were not the same children whose parents had started the litigation. A child who was six years old in 1950 was 21 in 1965. However, one Negro girl whose parents had intervened later, and were parties in the 1954 Brown cases in the Supreme Court, did finally get into a white school at age 17 after 11 years of litigation. Incidentally, according to news reports, the whites have been giving her a bad time.

Of course the litigation isn't over. The court has retained jurisdiction and has ordered further desegregation next fall. Anyway, Negro parents, with the help of the legal defense fund of the NAACP, have been carrying on this litigation for 16 years, and the end is not in sight.

The Department of Justice has not brought suit in this situation. The burden of the litigation has been left to the parents and to the legal defense fund. The Department of Justice could bring suit under Title III of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 if the Attorney General certified that the parents were unable to maintain appropriate legal proceedings, which means under the statute that they "are unable either directly or through other interested persons or organizations, to bear the expense of the litigation ***."

How can the Attorney General determine such a thing as that? The legal defense fund of the NAACP is presumably able to sustain a certain volume of litigation, but what is the basis for saying that it is able to maintain one particular suit and not another?

More broadly, it is our view that the burden of vindicating these constitutional rights should rest on the Federal Government, and that it should rest there regardless of whether particular parents can or cannot afford to sue. That is one reason why we urge the enactment of Title III.

The other reason is the physical and economic intimidation which faces Negro parents in some areas. Title III authorizes the Attorney General to seek injunctions against such intimidation, and we are of course strongly in favor of that.

Title IV

The AFL-CIO likewise strongly supports Title IV of the proposed Civil Rights Act of 1966.

Organized labor has long been in the forefront in the fight for fair housing legislation. Laws enacted by a large number of states and municipalities to outlaw discrimination in housing have been placed on the statute books with the full backing, and often on the initiative of, organized labor.

The Sixth Constitutional Convention of the AFL-CIO, held last December, called for equal housing opportunity in these words:

> "A key feature of labor's housing program is its drive for equal housing opportunity for all Americans. There is no place in America for racial ghettos. Equal access, without regard to race, creed, color or national origin, to every residential neighborhood in every American community should be assured for every family in America. Equal opportunity in housing should be assured in all programs in which housing is provided with Federal aid or is protected by Federal insurance of mortgages or guarantee or regulation of mortgage loans."

The national purpose was pledged by Congress in the Declaration of National Policy set forth in the National Housing Act of 1949 (Public Law 171, 81st Congress; 63 Stat. 413; 42 U. S. C. 1441), which stated:

> "The Congress hereby declares that the general welfare and security of the Nation and the health and living standards of its people require...the realization as soon as feasible of the goal of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family, thus contributing to the development and redevelopment of communities and to the advancement of the growth, wealth, and security of the Nation."

This Congressional affirmation of the national goal in a basic legislative enactment underlying all Federal housing statutes promulgated from 1949 to date, should be viewed in the light of the Nation's resolve proclaimed by the 14th amendment to the Constitution. The 14th Amendment declares that no State should deny "the equal protection of the laws" to any person, regardless of race.

The Supreme Court has said /Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U.S. 1 (1948)/:

> "It cannot be doubted that among the civil rights intended to be protected from discriminatory state action by the Fourteenth Amendment are the rights to acquire, enjoy, own, and dispose of property. Equality in the enjoyment of property rights was regarded by the framers of that Amendment as an essential pre-condition to the realization of other basic civil rights and liberties which the Amendment was intended to guarantee."

And the Supreme Court has held, in that case, that the 14th Amendment prohibits the courts, as instrumentalities of the states, from enforcing private racially restrictive covenants. In another case /Hurd v. Hodge, 334, U.S. 24, (1948)/, the Supreme Court applied similar prohibitions to the Federal government and its courts, as well.

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission, in its 1961 Report on Housing, reviewed the constitutional problem involved here and arrived at this compelling conclusion:

> ". . . it poses the question whether, as a matter of national policy, the Federal Government can permit itself to be involved in the denial of equal opportunity; whether the Federal Government, which has established national housing programs to achieve a national purpose, should not take affirmative steps to move upward the achievement of equal opportunity in housing for all Americans. The Supreme Court has recognized that 'Equality in the enjoyment of property rights' is 'an essential pre-condition to the realization of other basic civil rights.' If the achievement of this 'essential pre-condition' is not here the explicit command of the Constitution, it is nonetheless its promise."

What opposition there is to the assurance of equal opportunity in housing to all Americans regardless of race, when it is not the result of outright race bias, is usually based on misinformation or ignorance of the facts.

One widely broadcast misconception prompting such opposition is that property values will drop whenever non-white families move into a previously all-white neighborhood. There is absolutely no documentary evidence to support this contention. It is a myth which has been completely exploded.

A comprehensive study of property values was conducted for the Commission on Race and Housing, a distinguished citizens' group which included nationally known specialists in the social sciences, by Dr. Luigi Laurenti. Its findings are included in the volume, Property Values and Race, (University of California Press, 1960). Dr. Laurenti's research involved 20 neighborhoods in San Francisco, Oakland, and Philadelphia, where Negroes had entered during a span of 12 years.

With each of the three cities he studied, Laurenti compared price movements in "test" neighborhoods with those in similar neighborhoods which had remained all-white over the same period. The price transactions studied covered a 12-year period from 1943 to 1955. Over 9,900 sales prices were analyzed comprising about 40 percent of all the sales during the study period. Almost all the neighborhoods consisted of single-family, owner-occupied residences and were not contiguous to other areas of non-white population.

In 44 percent of the comparisons, prices showed gains which ranged from five to 26 per cent. Another 41 per cent of the comparisons showed no significant change in price behavior. The other 15 per cent showed declines but none were over 15 per cent.

Put another way, 85 per cent of the cases either showed upward improvement or remained stable.

The results of the studies in these three cities are consistent with those made by other investigators who studied similar areas in Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, and Portland, Oregon.

In the volume, Property Values and Race, Laurenti concluded:

> "The major statistical finding of the present study is that during the time period and for the cases studied the entry of non-whites into previously all-white neighborhoods was much more often associated with price improvement or stability than with price weakening. A corollary and possibly more significant finding is that no single or uniform pattern of non-white influence on property prices could be detected. Rather, what happens to prices when non-whites enter a neighborhood seems to depend on a variety of circumstances which, on balance, may influence prices upward or downward or leave them unaffected."

Another myth, long since exploded, is that neighborhood standards will go down whenever Negro families become part of the neighborhood.

Extensive studies have shown that Negro homeowners are just as concerned with neighborhood standards as any other citizens. Even a poll conducted more than twenty years ago by the National Association of Real Estate Boards supported the fact that Negro homeowners maintain their properties as well as whites.

There are good standards and bad standards in both white and non-white neighborhoods.

Overcrowding, economic exploitation, and neglect of buildings by landlords contribute to the creation of slums, regardless of the color or national origin of the residents. But slum areas, with which the Negro stereotype is all too often associated, generally were badly deteriorated before Negro residents fell heir to them.

Equal access to housing, regardless of race, creed or national origin in a free market, should be a part of the American way of life. Equal opportunity in housing is intimately linked to equal opportunity in schooling and to other civil rights.

The AFL-CIO strongly supports the enactment of Title IV because it will remove the obstacles that impede the rights and opportunities of Americans on the unjust basis of their race, creed or national origin. We support it, above all, because its enactment will broaden the horizon of American democracy and will extend the opportunity to contribute to the strengthening of community life to every citizen of our country.

In addition, we believe the committee would be well advised to explore with care the possibility of adding administrative enforcement procedures to this title. As this committee knows from our previous testimony on civil rights matters, we consider administrative enforcement less cumbersome, more immediate and generally more effective in matters of this kind. We hope you will consider carefully adding administrative procedures to this title.

Title V

This Title has to do with crimes against Negroes and civil rights workers.

There have been numerous such crimes in recent years, but very few convictions, particularly in the state courts. Something needs to be done; and if anyone has any doubt of that we suggest that they read the 1965 Report of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. The shocking breakdown of law enforcement in the South, as respects Negroes and civil rights workers, is there set forth in horrifying detail.

Certain violent deprivations of civil rights are made criminal by the Federal Criminal Code, Title 18 U. S. C. § § 241 and 242, but these provisions, which date back to Reconstruction days, contain technical deficiencies which make it very difficult for the government to prove a case under them. Title V parallels but does not supplant these existing federal criminal statutes, and undertakes to cure some of their deficiencies.

The jury selection proposals of Titles I and II also of course relate to the general problem of the administration of justice, which is most acute in, though it is not confined to, the South.

Title V was drafted in the light of the recent Supreme Court decisions in United States v. Price, and United States v. Guest. In those decisions the Court sustained the sufficiency of the indictments, but it pointed out that the requirements of proof under existing law are difficult to meet, and the Court suggested that Congress enact more specific provisions. Title V embodies such provisions, and we urge its enactment.

Under Section 241 it is necessary for the government in a case like Guest to prove that the defendants had a specific, wrongful, intent in two different respects. In the first place, the government must prove, as in the case of nearly all criminal statutes, that the defendant intended to commit the prohibited act, as, for example, that the defendant intended to murder or injure the victim, and that the death or injury was not the result of accident. This sort of intent is a normal and proper prerequisite to conviction in criminal cases. Under Section 241, however, the government must also show a second type of specific intent, viz., that the defendant also intended to interfere with the victim's exercise of some right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States. The government must show, for example, not only that the defendant murdered a Negro, but that he murdered him to keep him from voting, or attending a desegregated school or exercising some other federally protected right. Proof of this sort is unlikely to be available, and one of the purposes of Title V is to obviate the need for it.

Section 501(a) substitutes for the specific intent requirement we have been discussing the requirement that the defendant must have injured the victim (1) because of his "race, color, religion or national origin", (2) while the victim is engaging or trying to engage in the exercise of any of various enumerated federal rights, such as voting or attending a public school.

Under this provision it would still be necessary to show that the defendant injured his victim because of his race, etc. In other words the specific intent requirement is shifted from intent to prevent the victim from voting, for example, to intent to injure him because of his race while he is voting.

Evidence of racial animus is more likely to be available than evidence that the defendant intended to prevent the exercise of some particular federal right. Even with the new provisions on the books, however, the task of the federal prosecutor will still be a most difficult one. In a case like Guest it will still be necessary for the prosecutor to show not only that the defendants deliberately killed their victim, but they did so because he was a Negro.

In general we think the Department of Justice has done a good job in drafting Title V. We suggest, however, that the language should be revised to make it clear that traveling on a public highway is a protected type of activity. That is what was involved in the Guest case; it is clearly sufficient as a constitutional basis for a federal intervention; and there will be cases where it may not be possible to prove that the victim was engaging or seeking to engage in any of the other types of activities enumerated in the bill.

CONCLUSION

Let me conclude with a brief observation. This Congress and its predecessor are certain to go down in history for the trail-blazing legislation passed in 1964 and 1965 in this field. All of us who played any role whatsoever in achieving the civil rights legislation have a right to be proud.

But so much more remains to be done, Mr. Chairman, that none of us can pause for self-congratulations.

We have all read reports that this Congress is tired of the subject; that this Congress believes this is no time for another civil rights battle; that 1966 should be the year of stock-taking, not action.

Well, we just don't believe those reports.

We believe this Congress will recognize -- as did the President in the message in which he submitted this bill -- that the unresolved problems are many and great but that they can be solved, as indeed they must be solved.

We in the AFL-CIO are dedicated to the belief that true and absolute equality of opportunity is possible in America and we intend to help achieve it. That, we are confident, is the mood of the American people and we believe it to be the intention of this Congress.

File

PROBLEMS AND PROSPECTS OF THE NEW SOUTH

A Seminar Series for Congressional Assistants

April - June 1966 Washington, D.C.

sponsored by

THE INSTITUTE FOR POLICY STUDIES
1900 Florida Avenue, N.W.
Washington D.C. 20009

general

information

CONGRESSIONAL ASSISTANTS SEMINAR SERIES
PROBLEMS AND PROSPECTS OF THE NEW SOUTH

The Institute for Policy Studies is sponsoring a seminar series on "Problems and Prospects of the New South." The series is intended primarily for Congressional Assistants of Southern Congressmen and for those persons in both the executive and legislative branches of the government who are particularly concerned with the development of the South.

Except for the opening session on Thursday, April 7th, approximately twenty-five participants will meet every Wednesday night at the Institute through June 15. The sessions will begin at 6:00 pm and conclude at 9 pm. Coffee and sandwiches will be served. An address by the guest speaker will be followed by informal discussion. Suggestions for background reading will often be circulated in advance of each session.

A registration fee of $10.00 per participant will be charged to cover part of the expenses of the seminar. The remainder of the expenses will be borne by the Institute through grants given for this purpose.

The Institute for Policy Studies is an independent center at which intellectuals, politicians, and government officials can exchange ideas and collaborate on problems most critically in need of new thought.

syllabus

CONGRESSIONAL ASSISTANTS SEMINAR SERIES
PROBLEMS AND PROSPECTS OF THE NEW SOUTH

April 7 "Rescuing the South's Depressed Areas"

Leo T. Surla, Regional Economist, Spindletop Research Center, Lexington, Kentucky, will discuss the impact and potential of current federally sponsored development programs such as the Appalachian program and the Economic Development Act, with emphasis on the most depressed rural areas of the South.

April 13 "The Southern Congressional Delegation: New Trends and New Faces"

A panel of veteran Southern Congressional assistants and Southern Washington correspondents will discuss the political significance of the recent development of both receptiveness and resistance to change among Southerners on the Hill.

April 20 "The History of and the Responsibility for White Supremacy in the South"

Professor James W. Silver, formerly of the University of Mississippi and the author of The Closed Society, will bring some new historical interpretation to bear on a problem of the Southern past and present which still haunts the Southern future.

April 27 "Problems of the Urbanizing New South"

Aelred J. Gray, Director of Community Planning for more than two decades with the Tennessee Valley Authority, will discuss what ails the Southern city and what is its promise: is it setting a distinctive pattern, or is it heading for the chaos of the urban North?

May 4 "Dilemmas of Self-Help in the Negro Community"

Floyd McKissick, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality, formerly of Durham, North Carolina, will explore the difficulties of the Negro "bootstrap" development in the South based on his own experience, observations, and knowledge of the changing regional economy.

May 11 "The Southern Industrial Revolution - A World Model?"

James Pierce, Director of Southern Organizing for the Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO, and another speaker (to be announced) will comment on persisting social and economic problems of Southern industrial development.

May 18 "Civil Rights Enforcement - How Much Progress?"

Al Ulmer, Director of Community Organization Planning for the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, and Charles McLaurin, indigenous community organizer in the Mississippi Delta from Ruleville, Mississippi, will give "field reports" on the successes, failures, and limitations of the administration and enforcement of existing federal civil rights laws. Federal agency representatives (Civil Rights Commission, Justice Department, Community Relations Service, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Title VI Enforcement officials, etc.) will be invited to respond.

May 25 "The Changing Southern 'Power Structure'"

Dr. Floyd Hunter, author of Community Power Structure, the classic study of the Atlanta elite that opened a whole new area of study for political and social scientists, will describe the changes as well as the constants he sees in the structure of political, social and economic power in the South.

June 1 "The Challenge to the White Southern Liberal"

Congressman James A. Mackay of Georgia's 4th District will assess the sensitive leadership role of the white liberal in a changing region.

June 8 "Political Prospects in the New South"

Randolph Blackwell, Program Director for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and a respected political analyst, will give his views on the rise of new forces in the South, from impatient Negroes and new unionized workers to "white backlashes" and conservative suburbanites, and what potentialities for both new alliances and new conflicts are emerging among these forces.

June 15 "What the 'New Negro' Seeks"

A major civil rights leader (to be announced) will discuss his views of what the "New Negro" wants from the "New South."

The National Broadcasting Company Presents

MEET THE PRESS

America's Press Conference of the Air

Produced by LAWRENCE E. SPIVAK

Guests

DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, Jr.
President, Southern Christian Leadership Conference

ROY WILKINS
Executive Director, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People

WHITNEY M. YOUNG, Jr.
Executive Director, National Urban League

FLOYD B. McKISSICK
National Director, Congress of Racial Equality

STOKLEY CARMICHAEL
Chairman, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee

JAMES H. MEREDITH
Leader of the recent March through Mississippi

SPECIAL EDITION SUNDAY, AUGUST 21, 1966

Merkle Press Inc. Printers and Periodical Publishers

Division of Publishers Co. Inc.

Box 2111, Washington, D. C. 20013

10 cents per copy

Panel: ROWLAND EVANS, Publishers Newspaper Syndicate & Chicago Sun-Times
JAMES J. KILPATRICK, Richmond (Va.) News Leader
CARL ROWAN, Chicago Daily News
RICHARD VALERIANI, NBC News
LAWRENCE E. SPIVAK, Permanent Panel Member

Moderator: EDWIN NEWMAN, NBC News

Permission is hereby granted to news media and magazines to reproduce in whole or in part. Credit to NBC's MEET THE PRESS will be appreciated.

MEET THE PRESS

MR. NEWMAN: This is Edwin Newman inviting you to a special 90-minute edition of MEET THE PRESS. Today in this special hour and a half program, MEET THE PRESS focuses on the country's No. 1 domestic problem: Civil Rights. Our guests are six of the nation's top Negro leaders in their first joint live broadcast. With us today in Chicago is the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., President and one of the founders of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Dr. King, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, is a leading proponent of the principle of nonviolence. He is recognized throughout the world as the spiritual leader of the civil rights movement in the United States.

Because of the march he is leading today in Chicago, Dr. King finds it necessary to leave the studio before the end of our program. For that reason we will direct more questions to him than to our other guests in the first part of our broadcast.

And in our Washington studio: Roy Wilkins, a former newspaperman and the Executive Director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People since 1950. The NAACP, which he heads, is the oldest and largest civil rights organization in the country. Founded in 1909, it now claims a national membership of over 500,000. The first organization to use the picket line, it has been involved in many demonstrations and has played a major role in the fight for civil rights laws.

Whitney M. Young, Jr., Executive Director of the National Urban League since 1961. A former Dean of the Atlanta University School of Social Work, he heads one of the most important bi-racial service organizations. Its policy has been to lead Negroes into the American mainstream through job training programs and through housing, welfare and education projects.

Floyd B. McKissick, National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality. He is a lawyer who gave up his practice early this year to become head of the 22-year old CORE. Mr. McKissick's official biography describes him as "a dynamic civil rights activist." He has played a leading role in picketing, sit-ins and other civil rights demonstrations. His organization, CORE, claims a membership of 80,000 and is considered one of the most militant of the civil rights groups.

Stokley Carmichael, Chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. A graduate of Howard University and the youngest of the civil rights leaders, Mr. Carmichael heads the newest and most militant of the national organizations. His use of the slogan "Black Power" during the recent Mississippi march stirred up a storm in and out of the civil rights movement and brought him to front page prominence.

And James H. Meredith, who occupies a special position in the American Negro movement because of his leadership in desegregating the University of Mississippi and in the recent march through Mississippi. He is now a student at the Columbia University Law School.

Reporters on our panel of questioners today are Lawrence E. Spivak, Permanent Panel Member of MEET THE PRESS; Carl T. Rowan of the Chicago Daily News; James J. Kilpatrick of the Richmond News Leader; Rowland Evans of the Publishers Newspaper Syndicate; and Richard Valeriani of NBC News.

We will begin the questions now with Mr. Spivak.

MR. SPIVAK: Dr. King, despite all of your marches and demonstrations and despite major civil rights laws, the civil rights crisis is getting worse rather than better, or at least it seems so.

Do you think it is growing worse and, if so, why?

DR. KING: I think at points it is growing worse. This does not mean that we have not made significant progress, but I think the real problem today is that there is still a tragic gulf between promise and fulfillment and that the rising expectations of freedom and equality and the rising expectations of improvement have met with little results. So, the problem today is that we have the laws on the books but they have not been thoroughly implemented, and there are still pockets of resistance that are seeking to hold the civil rights movement back. And our just and legal and moral aspirations for a democratic society are still being met with these forces of resistance.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Wilkins, do you think the crisis is getting better or worse?

MR. WILKINS: I think only outwardly worse. We are having some manifestations of abrasive resistance, but actually progress is being made and we are going forward, and this despite the fact that great masses of people cannot count the difference in today's living between that that they had, say a year ago, or two years ago. But the forces are in motion. I agree with Dr. King that they are not moving fast enough, nor on a broad enough scale.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Young, for many years we had no civil rights laws of any importance. Very little was being done by the white community for the Negro population or with the Negro population, and yet we had relative quiet. What is your explanation for the riots that are taking place at the present time?

MR. YOUNG: I think it reflects this high aspiration of the Negro. I have never felt that social progress could be a painless process. I don't think that good race relations is purely the absence of conflict. In fact, we probably have less disruption in South Africa today where we have the greatest segregation and discrimination.

What we are really facing today, I think, is positive, and that is that the white community is now coming to find out that it takes more than the passage of laws which relieve their guilt, that it takes actual determination to live with and to work with and to cooperate with Negro citizens, and it is this final confrontation that people find most difficult to make.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. McKissick, what do you think? Do you think things are getting better or worse?

MR. McKISSICK: I am of the opinion that things have not progressed tremendously for the masses of the people. I would not dispute the statement that some progress has been made, but I would say by and large the average black man in the ghetto has not profited within the last ten years. I think the last statistics showed, even last week at the hearing in Washington here, at the Ribicoff hearing, when he made the statement, we will find we have more discrimination in education, more segregated school systems, we are finding the unemployment rate is higher now than ever before. I think we could just go down the line and we could find that the situation has not improved as far as the masses are concerned. That is what the Congress of Racial Equality is concerned with.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Carmichael, from your experience, are things getting better or worse?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I don't know if you can make a comparison like that. I believe that what is happening is that black people across the country are becoming politically aware of their position, of their strength and of their ability to move, and so, based on that feeling, the masses of people are beginning to now move. The question is whether or not this country is going to be able to meet their needs peacefully or whether they will have to move to disrupt this country in order to force the country to speak to their needs.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Meredith, may I hear from you on that? Do you think things are getting better or worse?

MR. MEREDITH: I think we have just reached a point in our history where we are really beginning to face the issue and the question. The question in this country is what is the basis or what is going to be the basis of our society. Up until now it is based on the theory of white superiority, and now this nation has to make a decision whether we will continue to use this base of white supremacy or whether we will live up to our ideals of equality and equal justice before the law.

MR. SPIVAK: Dr. King, I'd like to come back to you now. The Superintendent of Police of Chicago, Mr. O. W. Wilson, said the other day that your civil rights tactics have "aroused hatred among Chicago white residents and are hampering the Negroes' progress." What is your answer to that?

DR. KING: My answer is that this is totally erroneous. Our civil rights efforts have not aroused hatred. They have revealed hatred that already existed. There is no doubt about the fact that there are many latent hostilities existing within certain white groups in the North, and what has happened now is that these latent hostilities have come out in the open. I don't think you can blame the civil rights movement for that.

Certainly no one would blame a physician for using his instruments and his skills and his know-how to reveal to a patient that he has cancer. Indeed one would praise the physician for having the wisdom and the judgment and the power to do that. We have only revealed in Chicago that there is a blatant, social, hate-filled cancer, and we haven't said even that it is in its terminal state. We feel that it is curable, that it can be cured. But there is no doubt about the fact that the hate is here. We didn't create it, we merely exposed it and brought it to the surface.

MR. SPIVAK: Dr. King, I am sure you either heard or read President Johnson's speech yesterday when he warned that violence and discord would destroy Negroes' hopes for racial progress. Isn't it time to stop demonstrations that create violence and discord?

DR. KING: I absolutely disagree with that, and I hope that the President didn't mean to equate non-violent demonstrations with a riot, and I think it is time for this country to see the distinction between the two. There is a great distinction between individuals who are non-violently engaged in pursuit of basic constitutional rights and who in the process face violence and face hatred perpetrated against them, and individuals who aggressively throw Molotov cocktails and engage in riots, so that there can be no equation, or there can be no identity between riots and demonstrations.

I think demonstrations must continue, but I think riots must end, because I think they are socially disruptive. I think they are self-defeating, and I think they can destroy the many creative steps that we have made in a forward sense over the last few years.

MR. ROWAN: Mr. Wilkins, despite the fact that you gentlemen sit here together, there is the feeling around the country that there is a crisis of leadership in the civil rights movement. Do you agree that the movement toward Negro equality is jeopardized by what now seems to be a host of warring civil rights groups, each pursuing its own special interest?

MR. WILKINS: No, I don't Mr. Rowan, I don't think it is quite that serious. We tend to feel that unity should be exhibited at all times, no matter what kind of organizations or what kind of personalities or what kind of tactics are involved. I think we have to grow up to the idea that there will be differences of opinion and that these will manifest themselves from time to time. I don't see as yet any great split in the civil rights movement.

MR. ROWAN: I have noticed in The New York Times, Mr. Wilkins, a quotation from a so-called SNCC position paper saying "We are now aware that the NAACP has grown reactionary, is controlled by the black power structure itself and stands as one of the main roadblocks to black freedom."

I note also that an NAACP official was referring to the Urban League as an "Uncle Tom" organization. This you don't think is serious division or anything to be worried about?

MR. WILKINS: No, no. I call your attention first of all to the fact that the SNCC person said that we were—the NAACP was controlled by the "Black Power structure."

MR. ROWAN: I wondered if that was a typo.

MR. WILKINS: No, it wasn't a typographical error, and for that we moved up on the scale, because there was a time when the spokesman would have said we were controlled by the white power structure. But the NAACP official you referred to as calling the Urban League "Uncle Tom" was only a local official, an extremely individualistic one at that, and in no sense can be said to represent the sentiments of the NAACP.

MR. ROWAN: I noted, Mr. Wilkins, that your organization lost some 15,000 members between 1964 and 1965. You don't think the NAACP and the country are in trouble today because the NAACP put its faith in the law and court decisions, but that when the crunch came, the decisions were not enforced and the law became just so much paper?

MR. WILKINS: No, I don't think we are in trouble because we lost 15,000 members out of a half million. I don't consider that serious or beyond accounting for in the normal course of events. Nor do I believe that the adherence to law and order is a penalty that we suffer. I think we all have to come back to law and order. I understand Dr. King out in Chicago has a lawyer now working on his injunction business, and I see where SNCC is engaging lawyers up in Philadelphia. So we all come to the courtroom and to the law eventually. We find we can't solve it with rhetoric.

MR. KILPATRICK: Dr. King, you have been quoted as saying that you have encountered more hatred among white opponents in Chicago than you have encountered in the deep south. How do you account for this?

DR. KING: I think for years the hatred existed beneath the surface in Northern communities, and as I said earlier, it is coming out now. I think also we have to see that this is something of a dislike for the unlike. You see it a great deal among the lower income ethnic enclaves who have basic fears about Negroes. They have grown up believing in certain stereotypes, whether it is the stereotype of, the Negroes are lazy, or inherently inferior or whether it is the myth that Negroes depreciate property values when they move into a community. There is another fear, the fear that the Negro is an economic threat. I think all of these things have contributed to and in a sense have conjoined to bring about this massive outpouring of hatred in Chicago and, I am sure, in other communities.

MR. KILPATRICK: But why should these factors carry greater weight in Chicago or in some other northern city than they woud in the deep south?

DR. KING: I am not saying and I haven't said they exist more than they do in the deep south because I must make one distinction and that is, in the south we have had the hatred, the violence, the vitriolic and vituperative words of the mobs on the one hand, but often these mobs have been aided and abetted by the law and by law enforcement agents. I think the difference is here that we have the violence of the mobs, but at least the law enforcement agents are trying to preserve a degree of law and order.

In the south we have had a double blow. We have had the mob against us as well as in some instances law enforcement agents actually and literally supporting the mob.

In the north it is often the mob and the support, on the other hand, of the policemen trying to restrain the mob, but I don't say that the hatred is worse. I think it is equal, and I think we have got to see now that the problem is a national problem and that we must work passionately and unrelentingly to remove these conditions and the kind of hatred that we see both north and south today.

MR. KILPATRICK: Let me ask about your march today, Dr. King. You have decided, as I understand it, to obey the injunction that was laid down limiting the number of demonstrators.

DR. KING: Yes,——

MR. KILPATRICK: Even though you have described that twice yesterday, I believe, as an unjust order.

DR. KING: Yes, it is an injunction which I feel is unjust and totally unconstitutional, but, because we are engaged in negotiations now with the city, with the real estate agents and with labor and industry and other forces of power and goodwill in the community, we decided that we would abide by this injunction until we have our negotiating session next Friday and determine on the basis of that whether we would continue to comply with what we consider a blatantly unjust, unconstitutional and, I might say, amoral injunction.

MR. EVANS: Mr. Young, you had to contend with a new sort of militancy at your national convention in Philadelphia. What, exactly, do the younger Urban Leaguers want that is new? And let me ask you also, do they feel that the Urban League has become too identified today with the middle class?

MR. YOUNG: No, I think that that reflected more of an impatience with the pace. Urban League staff people are probably in the best position of any to recognize how slowly the gap is closing, if at all, in economics and education and housing, and in health and welfare. I think it recognizes also that we can do all we want to in terms of getting parents motivated into getting their children into school and keeping them there, but unless there are school boards that are so politically structured and politically sensitive enough to provide the resources, then our efforts to provide the motivation is of no value. What they are really saying is that we need these other activities, we need the other organizations who are doing the political activity.

The Urban Leaguers know that we are not middle class in the sense of our services. Last year, for example, over 50,000 Negroes were placed through the Urban League, and these were poor people who were placed, unemployed people.

MR. EVANS: But didn't it shock you when at your convention you were picketed by another organization?

MR. YOUNG: No. I think, as Mr. Wilkins said, this was the act of an individual and not the act of an organization. Even there the Executive Committee of the Philadelphia NAACP totally discredited this and disowned it, and the individual himself apologized. He had made a mistake.

MR. EVANS: But surely Cecil Moore represents the NAACP in Philadelphia and surely this represented a dissatisfaction with the work the Urban League is doing in Philadelphia. Is that not a fair statement?

MR. YOUNG: No, it is not a fair statement. This was a personal thing and the local board disowned the activity. Cecil Moore himself later apologized. I think what we are witnessing here—and I think it is a healthy thing—is that we do have in the Urban League at a moment in time when there is great turmoil and when there is a great gulf, that we do have healthy dissent; we do have impatience; we do have people who want to push faster. But I think what we finally ended up with was saying the Urban League cannot do all of these things, that it is good to have other organizations who are supposed to do some things. What we need to do is to go back home and do all we can to help the other civil rights groups to do the job they are supposed to do, so that the Urban League can do what it is supposed to do and do it better.

MR. VALERIANI: Dr. King, to follow up Mr. Spivak's question, recent polls suggest that in terms of national reaction, demonstrations are now counter-productive.

By continuing them, don't you run the risk of doing more harm than good?

DR. KING: Again I contend that we are not doing more harm than good in demonstrations, because I think demonstrations serve the purpose of bringing the issues out in the open.

I have never felt that demonstrations could actually solve the problem. They dramatize the existence of certain social ills that could very easily be ignored if you did not have demonstrations. I think the initial reaction to demonstrations is always negative. When we had them in the south initially there was a negative outpouring of disagreement. Now that they have started on a massive scale in the north, it is only natural that we will have this reaction. but in spite of the reaction, the demonstrations—in Chicago, for instance—have not only brought the issues out, but they have brought us to the conference table, and I don't believe that we would be in Chicago where we are today without demonstrations.

And let me say, secondly, that it is very important to see the difference between nonviolent demonstrations and riots. It may be true that in a demonstration people react with violence toward nonviolent demonstrators, but you don't blame the demonstrators. This would be like blaming the robbed man because his possession money precipitated the evil act of robberv.

Ultimately society must condemn the robber and not the robbed. It must protect the robbed, and this is where we are in these demonstrations, and I am still convinced that there is nothing more powerful to dramatize a social evil than the tramp, tramp of marching feet.

MR. VALERIANI: In regard to your present movement, in regard to housing, is it not conceivable to you that a majority of white Americans does not want a Negro for a neighbor, and if that is so, as it was demonstrated in a vote in California, should the majority preference be respected?

DR. KING: It is quite true that there are many people who are against open housing and who are against having Negroes as their neighbor. This does not mean that we don't go all out to end housing discrimination. It may be true that in the south many white people did not want Negroes to eat at lunch counters, did not want Negroes to have access to motels and hotels and restaurants, but this did not stop the nation from having its conscience so aroused that it brought into being a civil rights law, as a result of our movement, to end this.

Now, I think the same thing must happen in housing. People have these fears, they have these prejudices, and we are only saying that through legislation and a vigorous enforcement of fair housing bills we will be able to change certain conditions. It doesn't mean that we will change the hearts of people, but we will change through laws the habits of people, and once the habits are changed, pretty soon people adjust to them, just as in the south they have adjusted to integrated public accommodations.

I think in the north and all over the country people will adjust to living next door to a Negro, once they know that it has to be done, once realtors stop all of the block busting, the panic peddling and all of that.

When the law makes it clear, and it is vigorously enforced, we will see that people will not only adjust, but they will finally come to the point that even their attitudes are changed.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. McKissick, you have been quoted as saying —and these are the words—that "the civil rights movement in 1966 has reached the moment of truth, and Negro leaders are not telling it to us like it is."

Most of the Negro leaders are here today. Will you tell us how you see the moment of truth that we are not being told?

MR. McKISSICK: I don't know whether I am being quoted accurately, but in substance that is what I said, and I will certainly explain it. First of all, I believe that the moment of truth is here for the simple reason that, one, nonviolence is something of the past. I don't believe nonviolence can be taught the way nonviolence could be taught years ago.

At our recent convention in Baltimore, the question of self-defense came up, and the convention went on record favoring self-defense, not abolishing nonviolence, but certainly favoring self-defense. The attitude was that, one, we are an organization fighting for constitutional rights and, in fighting for constitutional rights, one of those rights is the right to defend the home and the person, and no longer could we advocate that a person give up the right of self-defense.

I think, two, the climate which prevailed in 1960 or in the earlier years has changed, and I think it is difficult now to harness and have the control over demonstrations at many points for the simple reason that most of the black people in the communities do not and will not agree to be nonviolent. They will agree to participate in demonstrations, but they will not agree to be hit and passively to stand there and not return blow for blow.

MR. SPIVAK: In your literature as late as 1965, you said, "Nonviolence is effective. It has worked in hundreds of cases. This method attacks the practice of discrimination but respects the person who discriminates."

Do you still stand by that or have you changed your definition of nonviolence? Everybody believes in self-defense.

MR. McKISSICK: Oh, no. Let me get one point very clear. If we make a mistake, we are going to be the first to say an error has been made. Now, we are saying right today, we have had CORE rules for action for a number of years in which we advocated a policy of nonviolence and we still advocate nonviolence in a demonstration. We say that we can march down the street and if nobody hits us, okay, you have got nonviolence. But if somebody hits us, then you better have an ambulance on the side to pick up whoever hits somebody.

MR. SPIVAK: Am I to understand then that you and Dr. Martin Luther King really are not in disagreement on the principle and the philosophy of nonviolence?

MR. McKISSICK: First of all, I'd like to answer that by saying this, that despite the fact that as already has been said, that Dr. King believes in one thing, Mr. Wilkins believes in another and Stokely Carmichael believes in another——

MR. SPIVAK: I am just talking about nonviolence.

MR. McKISSICK: The facts of injustice are so heaped and they weave so closely together that I dare say that we will ever divorce ourselves from each other regardless of any point which may come up.

MR. SPIVAK: You haven't answered my question on nonviolence. Are you in agreement or disagreement with Dr. King on the matter of nonviolence?

MR. McKISSICK: The answer cannot be a positive yes and no answer. The Congress of Racial Equality adopts its position and Dr. King adopts the position for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. As far as we are concerned, as I said before, we believe in nonviolence providing nobody hits us. When somebody hits us, we believe in self-defense.

MR. SPIVAK: There is a difference between self-defense and nonviolence though.

MR. McKISSICK: Self-defense and nonviolence are not incompatible.

MR. ROWAN: Dr. King, you have heard what Mr. McKissick said. Are you in disagreement or not?

DR. KING: I believe firmly in nonviolence. I still believe that it is the most potent weapon available to oppressed people in their struggle for freedom and human dignity. I think a turn to violence on the part of the Negro at this time would be both impractical and immoral.

If Mr. McKissick believes in that, I certainly agree with him.

On the question of defensive violence, I have made it clear that I don't think we need programmatic action around defensive violence. People are going to defend themselves anyway. I think the minute you have programmatic action around defensive violence and pronouncements about it, the line of demarcation between defensive violence and aggressive violence becomes very thin.

The minute the nomenclature of violence gets into the atmosphere, people begin to respond violently, and in their unsophisticated minds they cannot quite make the distinction between defensive and aggressive violence.

I think that we must still stand on the premise of nonviolence, and I choose to do that not only because I think it is morally right, but I think it is practically sound.

MR. KILPATRICK: Mr. Carmichael, in a recent speech in Cleveland you reportedly ridiculed as "Uncle Toms" those Negro spokesmen who counsel nonviolence and patience in the civil rights struggle.

Did you mean thus to label such spokesmen as Dr. King and Mr. Wilkins?

MR. CARMICHAEL: Let me say that the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee will never publicly denounce any black leader in this country, so I couldn't have possibly said that.

MR. KILPATRICK: The quote was simply a false quote; you never said anything of that sort?

MR. CARMICHAEL: No, I never critically publicly criticized any black leader in this country.

MR. KILPATRICK: In the same story you were quoted by the United Press International as saying that when you talk of "Black Power", you talk of bringing this country to its knees.

Were you correctly quoted on that?

MR. CARMICHAEL: The rest of it was not there. The other half of it said that when you talk about Black Power, you talk about bringing this country to its knees any time it messes with a black man."

MR. KILPATRICK: Any time it messes with a black man. By that do you mean violence against the Negro?

MR. CARMICHAEL: By that I mean messes with a black man.

MR. KILPATRICK: You would just stop it right there?

MR. EVANS: Dr. King, a couple of political questions.

You said recently that the "extravagant promises" made a year ago in connection with the voting rights bill have now become a "shattered mockery."

What, exactly, did you mean by that, Dr. King?

DR. KING: I mean that this voting rights bill came into being to end not only discrimination in its overt expressions of voter registration, but also to remove the atmosphere for intimidation, for economic reprisals and for the creation of fear that cause people not to vote. One of the things we have found is that when you have federal registrars in communities, many more Negroes go out to register because they see a different atmosphere and are not over-arched or under-girded with the fear of intimidation and economic reprisals as much as they have in dealing with some of the local registrars that they have dealt with so long.

The problem is that after that bill came into being very few registrars were sent into the south. I mean federal registrars. Even today all too few have been sent, and this is even true in some communities where we know that there are outright patterns of discrimination.

MR. EVANS: That is what I wanted to get to next, Dr. King. Whom do you blame for the failure of, as you call it, enough federal registrars to have been sent south? Is that President Johnson's responsibility? Is it the Department of Justice? Where do you lay the blame?

DR. KING: I think it is both. I think it is ultimately the responsibility of the President through the Attorney General, and I would say that it is not either/or, it is both/and, here. The President and the Attorney General have the responsibility to implement and to enforce it.

I know that the ultimate enforcement of the law is with the President, but certainly he follows the advice of the Attorney General, so I'd say both ends.

MR. EVANS: Dr. King, why do you think the President has not moved as forcibly on voting in the south as you think he should have? What reason do you give to his not having sent more registrars into the south?

DR. KING: There are probably many reasons, and I must confess that I don't know all of the reasons. I think on the one hand some sincere feelings that if you can get voluntary—I mean if you can move into certain areas forcefully with federal registrars, that other areas will follow through inevitably in the realm of voluntary compliance. I believe that that is a sincere analysis, although I think it is a wrong analysis of the situation. I think on the other hand there are certain political forces that have sought desperately to keep the Administration from sending federal registrars in their areas.

For instance, in southwest Georgia we need federal registrars right now, and I am convinced that the political leaders of Georgia in the Senate have used pressure to keep the Federal Government from sending federal registrars into Georgia.

MR. VALERIANI: Mr. Meredith, looking back, what do you think your march through Mississippi accomplished?

MR. MEREDITH: As you recall, I didn't march through Mississippi. I was shot the first day and, of course, all of these other gentlemen carried on the march in Mississippi. I only returned for the last two days.

I think probably the biggest accomplishment was to place in focus the problem in this country, and again I say the question is whether or not white supremacy and the rest of the theory of white superiority is going to be the rule in this country, or if we are in fact going to follow the rule of equality and equal justice before the law, as our ideals say.

MR. VALERIANI: How is the philosophy of white supremacy going to be changed in your opinion?

MR. MEREDITH: It can only be changed in two ways, and one more important than the other. That is, the white in this country decides that—and I think he must make this decision for his own survival—that this country will be one of equality and equal justice before the law, and, of course the Negro must develop himself, make himself whole, so that he can assert his 25 million manpower strength toward making sure that this nation becomes what it should be.

MR. NEWMAN: Gentlemen, I must interrupt briefly here. Our thanks to Dr. King, who is leaving us now.

(Station break)

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Carmichael, you have said over and over again that the white press has distorted your use of the slogan "Black Power."

Will you tell us here and now exactly what you mean by "Black Power," so that all of us can understand your meaning without misquoting you or distorting you?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I am sorry you asked that question now, because two days ago the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee decided we are not going to define the term "Black Power" any more.

MR. SPIVAK: Granted that you won't define it, there has been a position paper of SNCC's organization published in The New York Times, and in that position paper these words of the SNCC organization are quoted: "When we view the masses of white people, we view in reality 180 million racists."

Was The New York Times misquoting SNCC and its philosophy of "Black Power?"

MR. CARMICHAEL: In the first place, that paper was written by some people in the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. It was not a public paper. We don't know how The New York Times got hold of it. The paper is 75 pages long. I don't see how it is possible for them to assume that in one page of their anti-black newspaper they could publish the thoughts of a 75-page paper, and they said—they said, not the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee—that it was the basis for "Black Power." We didn't know that. We thought the work we have been doing for the past six years has been the basis for "Black Power" because that is all we have been working on in SNCC.

MR. SPIVAK: Well, Mr. Carmichael, will you yourself answer? Do you believe there are 180 million racists in this country?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I would say that the system in this country that is set up, that affects all of us, black and white, allows for white supremacy to reign in this country and that it does not allow for any white person to view a black person as his equal but rather to view him as inferior because of the system. That has nothing to do with the white person himself. He or she might be a good guy or a bad guy, but that the system just allows for seeing black people as inferior and that the few black people who are allowed to escape are viewed as excetions to the rule.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Carmichael, you seem to be misquoted a great deal in the press of America. I'd like to try you on one more thing. Did you or did you not say that Negroes who fight in Vietnam are black mercenaries?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I most certainly did, yes.

MR. SPIVAK: Will you tell us exactly what you mean by that?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I certainly do. A mercenary is a hired killer, and I think that when this country says to black youths in the ghetto and to black youths in the rural south that their only chance for a decent living is to join the Army—and then they throw in all sorts of rationalizations about, you can get skills and there is a chance for them to advance, etcetera, etcetera—they are saying to that black man that his only chance for a decent life is to become a hired killer because that is the sole function of an Army.

MR. SPIVAK: Is that all they are saying, or are they saying the same thing to him that they are saying to every American?

MR. CARMICHAEL: That is what they are saying to the black youth because unemployment for him is double what it is for everybody else, while he is only one tenth, as we are always reminded most recently, of the population.

MR. SPIVAK: Do you then stand by the statement you made on a recent television program that "There is no reason why black people should be fighting for free elections in Vietnam, for some other people to get free elections when they don't have it in their own country?"

MR. CARMICHAEL: I most certainly think, Mr. Spivak, that when you take black people from Washington, D. C., where they don't vote and send them to Vietnam.

MR. SPIVAK: But white people don't vote either, Mr. Carmichael.

MR. CARMICHAEL: Then white people should speak to that.

MR. SPIVAK: That's all right.

MR. CARMICHAEL: I represent the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee an organization that works with black people so therefore I speak for the needs of black people.

It seems to me that when you talk about taking a black man from Lowndes County, Alabama—Mississippi, Georgia—Chicago, where he doesn't have free elections and you send him to another country where he is to deliver free elections for somebody else, he is a black mercenary.

MR. SPIVAK: What about you? Do you vote?

MR. CARMICHAEL: Do I vote? I haven't voted.

MR. SPIVAK: Have you the right to vote?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I have the right to vote.

MR. SPIVAK: Are you a citizen?

MR. CARMICHAEL: There is some question about that.

MR. SPIVAK: Since you have the right—you say you have the right to vote, since you have the right, would you yourself serve in Vietnam?

MR. CARMICHAEL: No, I would not fight in Vietnam, absolutely not, and I would urge every black man in this country not to fight in Vietnam.

MR. ROWAN: Mr. Meredith, you have been described as a loner, as a man with no organization and no clearcut philosophy. There are some differences of viewpoint represented here. Is there any one of these groups with which you more closely associate yourself?

MR. MEREDITH: The group with which I most closely associate myself is the Negro. This is a misnomer, this "loner" business, because I know that no one, including—well, we will take the largest group, which is half a million. We have 25 million Negroes. My position has been and probably will remain for some time that in order for the Negro to accomplish what he deserves and needs, we are going to have to find something that everyone can attach to, say like the Democratic Party. You have Senator Kennedy, you have Senator Eastland, you have Senator Wayne Morse—all members of the same party, but men with different views. I think that the Negro is going to have to do the same thing. We are going to have to have something that a Dr. King or a Dr. Jackson or a Mr. Wilkins or Stokley Carmichael and all of the other peoples in this country—the store fronts, the hustlers and everybody else, can attach to and work toward.

MR. ROWAN: Do you think a declaration that Negroes fighting in Vietnam are black mercenaries is something every Negro can attach to?

MR. MEREDITH: Of course everyone knows my position on Vietnam. I fully support the war effort. I haven't supported the conduct of the war by the Administration, but I am a soldier. I have spent most of my adult life in the military, and I personally think that one of the greatest things in America today is the war in Vietnam, because for the first time black men, the Negroes, are fighting in a war. What this means to me is that these soldiers are not going to come back over here and accept white supremacy any more.

I think that if we lose in Vietnam, this nation will go down.

I want to be a part of a great nation, and I think the Negro wants to be a part of it. Consequently—Stokely hasn't been in the military. I don't want to argue with these fellows. I mean they can believe anything they want, but I am a military man, and I support soldiers fighting. I think everybody should support soldiers fighting.

MR. ROWAN: Mr. Meredith, the crux of the issue here today is how to go about wiping out white supremacy, which you have mentioned. Isn't the real issue whether the Negroes' objective is integration or isolation?

MR. MEREDITH: I don't think so, because here 99 percent of the Negroes are going to be isolated anyway. Certainly for many years to come. I am now concerned—and this is what I am devoting most of my effort to—with the Negro himself. Particularly right now in voter registration efforts throughout this country, the Negro in this country feels left out. I meet them every day. They tell me "Why register, because it is going to be fixed anyway?" I don't blame them for feeling this because in the past it has been fixed. If they have not been sold out, they have not been represented by the people who are up there and supposed to represent them.

MR. KILPATRICK: Mr. Wilkins, a few questions dealing with the desegregation of the schools. Here in Washington you are of course familiar with the process of desegregation that has resulted over the past ten or 12 years. In what way would you combat this tendency toward resegregation that is brought on by the flight of white parents to the suburbs?

MR. WILKINS: I think Washington gave a little of that answer itself in the early days. The answer of course lies in the strengthening of the whole system of public education, irrespective of whether it is in the city or in the suburbs or whether they are white children or black children.

I would say that the sentiment of the Negro community is for integration and quality education with emphasis on the latter.

MR. KILPATRICK: I had in mind the specific tools that have been proposed by the various persons such as Mr. Howe, the Commissioner of Education, the use of federal funds in such a way as to coerce or to compel the more complete integration of schools in suburbs and in cities. Have you thought of that?

MR. WILKINS: Yes, I have thought of it. I approve what Mr. Howe has in mind, and I go farther than he does. I feel that the education of the Negro minority in this country is something that has too long been neglected by the local school boards, by the cities, by the states, and that it is time that the federal government impose not only the restrictions that Mr. Howe talks about—and I applaud him for what he has done—but additional ones. In this case, Mr. Kilpatrick, just as in the case of lynching, the local communities have proved themselves unable to deal effectively with the situation, and yet they say, "We mustn't have federal interference."

I can't buy that. I am sorry.

MR. KILPATRICK: If I understand correctly the implications of some of the speeches Mr. Howe has been making lately, he is proposing to say to a city and its surrounding surburban county, which may be and ordinarily is under an entirely different government: "Neither one of your jurisdictions will receive federal aid unless your school systems are melded together and your children exchanged or bussed in or brought into more integrated situations." Is this what you favor and would like to see?

MR. WILKINS: I would like to see as much—first, I put quality education; second, integration. I don't think a child can have in this country a complete education, either a white or black child, if he goes to a segregated school all his life. He is going to have to live in a multi-racial community, he will have to function as an adult in a multi-racial community, and very shortly he is going to have to function in a multi-racial world, and he can't sell refrigerators in Nigeria with the kind of nomenclature that he uses in rural Georgia.

MR. EVANS: Mr. McKissick, I would like to ask you if you would try to explain for me the comment about CORE made recently by Lillian Smith, who, as you know, has just removed herself from the Board of CORE and is one of its oldest and most valued supporters.

She says, "CORE has been infiltrated by adventurers, annihilists, black nationalists and plain old-fashioned haters who have finally taken over."

Why do you think Lillian Smith has been affected this way by the developments in CORE over the last six months?

MR. McKISSICK: I can't understand—I really don't understand how Miss Smith has got such an impression. I think it is possibly because she has not been attending the meetings of the organization and has not met its Board of Directors and its chapter members. But I assure you that we regret the loss of Miss Smith, for she has made notable contributions to the organization, but I don't think that her interpretations, or the way she defines people in CORE would be a correct one in any sense.

MR. EVANS: Do you think, Mr. McKissick, beyond Lillian Smith there has been an alienation between white liberals and CORE in the last few months, and if so, does this disturb you as a Negro leader?

MR. McKISSICK: Of course we would like to have everyone love us if at all possible, and of course we hate to lose friends. There is no question about that. But because people get disturbed by a change in policy, simply means that we will have to move the organization alone without those people, if those people decide not to go with us.

MR. EVANS: Mr. McKissick, a last question: Since black power is one of the basic reasons behind Lillian Smith's move and some of this other alienation I talked about, could you define very quickly for us your concept of "black power"?

MR. McKISSICK: Yes, I will be quite happy to define it. That is CORE's philosophy of black power: One, we have stated that black people must decide for themselves. They must have self-determination to determine the direction and the pace in which they will become total citizens in this society. And in doing so, six basic ingredients are needed: One, political power. Two, economic power. Three, an improved self-image of the black man himself—as you well know that is not in the history books, what we have done and the contributions we have made. Four, the development of young militant leadership. Five, the enforcement of federal laws, abolishment of police brutality. And six, the development of a black consumer bloc.

That is basically what we describe as "black power."

MR. VALERIANI: Mr. Young, to follow up that question, don't most of the civil rights leaders go along with the concept of black power, but rather deplore the idea that the term is being used, that it has a bad psychological effect?

MR. YOUNG: I can speak for the Urban League. We took a position, number one, that we should be very cautious about trying to interpret the slogans of other organizations. Secondly, we deplored the country's obsession and preoccupation with a debate about a slogan which we felt deterred the country from concentrating on the problems of poverty and discrimination. The Urban League takes a position that power is something that one acquires through having sufficient economic means, educational resources and political know-how. We do not feel that one gets pride or dignity or power simply by being white or being black, but by mobilizing into various groups who have similar ideas and working toward those ends. I think I must admit that any slogan, any motto that is left open to so many interpretations always runs a risk.

MR. VALERIANI: You talk about developing pride, and Mr. Meredith has talked about making the Negro whole, and Mr. McKissick has also talked about pride. Yet the civil rights leadership seems extremely reluctant to face up to the implications of the Moynihan Report, which documents the disintegration of the Negro family. Why is this?

MR. YOUNG: I think the opposition or the reservations that many of us had about the Moynihan Report was, one, that it was entitled "The Negro Family," which tended to indict 75 percent of the Negro families that are stable and not disorganized. I think the fact that it pointed up the social pathologies of the Negro and highlighted those and did not point up the social pathologies of the white society that had caused them was unfortunate.

I think also we resented the fact that these various social disorganizations, such as illegitimacy and crime and various other things seemed rather high as far as the Negro is concerned. He did not point out that these are related to socio-economic conditions and while the illegitimacy rate might be much higher among Negroes—say, as 60 percent of the illegitimacy happens to be Negro, actually 90 percent of the abortion rate happens to be white, and I am assuming the initial activity was the same, so there is no question of morality. But the report really presented not anything too new to Negroes. We had talked about it in our presentation of the "Marshall Plan." Franklin Fraser talked about it years before. It was an in-house report. I have great respect for Mr. Moynihan. I think he is a genuine liberal in this cause, but it was an in-house document, it wasn't expected to be a published report. But since it became one, I feel free to make what I think is a valid criticism.

MR. NEWMAN: Mr. Carmichael, I think you were disturbed by something that was said by Mr. Young.

MR. CARMICHAEL: No, I was disturbed by the Moynihan Report. Never by what any fellow black man says. At least publicly.

I was disturbed by the Moynihan Report because what he was trying to do was put the blame on the——

MR. NEWMAN: May I just interrupt to make it clear we are talking about a report drawn up by Daniel P. Moynihan when he was Assistant Secretary of Labor.

MR. CARMICHAEL: He put the blame on the black family. It is the same old trick of the oppressor switching the blame to the oppressed and saying to the oppressed, it is your fault why you are the way you are, without admitting that the oppressors are the ones who put the people where they were.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Carmichael, may I ask in fairness, ask you this question—in fairness to Mr. Moynihan. Did he put the blame, or was he just reporting the facts? I have talked to Mr. Moynihan, and I don't believe he was placing blame. He was simply stating some facts.

MR. CARMICHAEL: No, he tended to place the blame. He tended to say, now, if all black men and black women got married and had two kids, all the problems would be over. That is what it led to. That was the conclusion and gist of the report, without stating in fact that in the black ghettoes of this country black employment runs rampant and that is not the fault of black people that black mothers have to work as maids away from their children while everybody else has a right to be home helping to bring their children up. That is not the fault of black mothers.

MR. NEWMAN: I think I had better cut off the discussion of the Moynihan Report since Mr. Moynihan is not here to defend himself.

I think—and I know him quite well—that you have mistaken what he said, but still—Mr. Spivak.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Meredith, in your Saturday Evening Post article recently you wrote, "There is much feeling that Dr. King's philosophy of nonviolence is no longer tenable."

Do you believe that or were you simply reporting on something?

MR. MEREDITH: Of course I believe it. In the first place, nonviolence is incompatible with American ideas. This is a military-minded nation, and it always has been. I am very afraid that if 25 million people start to go a different direction from what the mainstream is going—and let me say what I think that mainstream is: I think this country is one that basically is a tough country. It is a frontier-type of mentality, and everyone has the philosophy that you do right, but you make sure everyone else does right as well.

Now, my father never shot anybody, but he always had a gun above his bed and shells within reach, and I am sure that if someone had broke in his house to disturb his family he would have shot someone.

I see great dangers in nonviolence, although there are many advantages to the country.

MR. SPIVAK: But, Mr. Meredith, don't you think we ought to get straight on the difference between nonviolence and self-defense?

MR. MEREDITH: I think we should, yes.

MR. SPIVAK: Just a minute, may I say, I think that when Dr. King and others speak about nonviolence they say that groups of Negroes shouldn't take arms and shouldn't take, as some have advocated——

MR. MEREDITH: That is the trick in the whole thing. Nonviolence is not the opposite of violence, and this is where the whole trick is in this whole business of nonviolence, and I think we should clear that up.

MR. SPIVAK: I know, but there is a difference between self-defense—I don't think that there are many of us who don't believe in the right of self-defense of any Negro against anyone who attacks him.

MR. MEREDITH: Nonviolence is not the opposite of violence, and this is where this country has been trying to lead the Negro down a wrong road. They have been trying to say to him, "If you are not nonviolent—if you don't turn the other cheek, you are violent. The Negro has never been violent.

MR. SPIVAK: May I ask you a specific question? When we talk about nonviolence, we are saying that the Negro ought not in groups or alone take up a gun or do anything else—neither should a white man—in order to take what he believes belongs to him. That is the difference between nonviolence—self-defense is when somebody attacks him.

MR. MEREDITH: The Negro has never in his history engaged in the type of violence that people are talking about. The whites have always engaged in this type of violence.

What really happened with nonviolence, they took the Negro as he was in 1960, or whenever it was, and they attached this name "nonviolence" to him and thereby gave a legitimacy to a particular movement. This changed nothing. It just gave a name to what already existed and gave the implication that if this were not the case, there would be violence. The Negro has never entertained the idea of taking up arms against the whites and they cannot. But now I think the Negro must become a part of this mainstream, and if the whites—now you take Mississippi, for instance—I know the people that shot in my home years ago. They know the people that killed all of the Negroes that have been killed. The community knows them; the whites know them, and the Negroes know them, and I am here to say that these people have to be removed from our society. White supremacy will not allow itself to remove these people from its society. If they don't find a way, the Negro has no choice but to remove these men, and they have to be removed. You can't have killers running around in the society killing people themselves.

MR. SPIVAK: Are you suggesting then that if several Negroes are killed or any white men are killed and the law does not punish them, as happens very often in the case of white men too, that people ought to organize as vigilantes and go out and take the law into their own hands and commit violence? You are not saying that, are you, Mr. Meredith?

MR. MEREDITH: That is exactly what I am saying. Exactly.

MR. CARMICHAEL: If you don't want us to do it, who is going to do it?

MR. MEREDITH: I know personally the man who tried to kill my family when I was at the University of Mississippi, and everybody in the community knows him. I know that in all of the other communities in Mississippi—and you have read about all these killings—during the march they killed this 65-year-old man, shot him 16 times, shot his head off.

MR. SPIVAK: But you didn't pick up a gun and go out and try to kill that man because the law hadn't taken care of him; you don't believe in that, do you?

MR. MEREDITH: This is what we are going to have to move to. If the law doesn't take these men, then we've got to stop this. We cannot continue to tolerate this. Now, I know why——

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Meredith, do you mean to tell me that you believe the Negroes in this country ought to organize, take up guns and if the law doesn't take care of the wrongs that the white man or other Negroes commit against him, they ought to take the law into their own hands?

MR. MEREDITH: This is precisely, and I will tell you why, because the white supremacy is a system——

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Meredith, this doesn't even make sense against 180 million people. If you do it, they are going to do it.

MR. MEREDITH: Let me explain it. If you let me explain it, then you will understand.

You see in Mississippi, I know it to be a fact that most of the whites in Mississippi are good whites. They don't like this; but they condone it. They tell me—they dislike it, they tell me this, but they are powerless to do anything about it. They are just like a father who is incestuous and wants to stop his—he sleeps with his daughter, but he wants to stop his son from sleeping with his mother.

This is what white supremacy does. The whites in Mississippi don't like for whites to go around killing Negroes, but they have tolerated it so long until the law—they cannot bring themselves to enforce it. And we've got to stop this.

MR. ROWAN: Mr. Carmichael, do I detect that you agree with Mr. Meredith that the Negro may have to take arms?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I am here to answer Mr. Spivak directly that if in fact the law—and let it remain crystal clear that in this country we are the only people who have to protect ourselves against our protection. We have to protect ourselves against state troopers, against police in Mississippi, against Jim Clark, against Bova in California, against policeman Rizzo in Philadelphia, and we have to protect ourselves against these, and if we do not protect ourselves, since the police forces of this country and the federal government and the law officials are not protecting us, then who is going to protect us? And I agree 150 percent that black people have to move to the position where they organize themselves and they are in fact a protection for each other and in fact of that 180 million people, because I am a little bit tired of that 90 percent theory. I want to talk about that just for two minutes if I may. While we may be ten percent inside the country, continental borders of the United States, we want to make it crystal clear that we are well located in cities across this country and that if in fact 180 million people just think they are going to turn on us and we are going to sit there, like the Nazis did to the Jews, they are wrong. We are going to go down together, all of us.

And the second thing is that we want this country to be crystal clear to understand that its Army is integrated, and in Vietnam 40 percent* of your fighting forces are black people, and if you think those black people are going to fight a war while 180 million people turn on its fellow black brothers inside this country and continue fighting that war, you are mistaken.

And thirdly, while we may be ten percent inside the continental borders of the United States, outside the 180 are 10 percent. Understand that.

MR. ROWAN: Mr. Carmichael, let me ask how many Negroes do you think agree with what you have just said?

MR. CARMICHAEL: It will be left to be seen. The Harris polls tell me only 19 percent.

---

*Department of Defense estimate: approximately 20%.

MR. ROWAN: I notice that Newsweek Magazine said 19 percent of the rank and file Negroes approved of you as a leader, that 33 percent of what Newsweek called the Negro leadership approved of you and your activities. Do you believe your following is really this low among Negroes?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I don't know. I was just wondering when I looked at that poll that had several other "Negro leaders" above me—I wondered why they weren't invited to MEET THE PRESS, and I wonder why the country is then so obsessed with SNCC since only 19 percent of the rank and file are listening to us. It seems to me there would be no worry. We're a minority, forget about it.

MR. ROWAN: It could be that the press delights in misquoting you, Mr. Carmichael.

MR. CARMICHAEL: It could be the press speaks from a white power base.

MR. ROWAN: Let me ask you this, since we are back to black power again, is it that your organization decided not to define it again because it concluded that it was a public relations blunder to toss out a phrase whose meaning was so obscure and whose emotional impact was so great that it divided Negroes, alienated whites and confused everybody?

MR. CARMICHAEL: On the contrary. The protection of the term "black power" came from the white press, never from black people in this country. The debate about that was arranged among white people and the white press, and it is in fact an attempt to smear and distort SNCC, and it is crystal clear in my mind that any white man in this country knows about power. He knows what white power is, and he ought to know what black power is. For the newspapers which have analyzed the power structure of Vietnam and the power play in the cold war, not to understand what black power is in this country is certainly ludicrous.

MR. KILPATRICK: Mr. Young, let me pursue a somewhat different theme for a moment. The Equal Employment Opportunities Commission has now been in operation for a little bit more than a full year. Are you satisfied or dissatisfied with the record it set over this past year?

MR. YOUNG: I am dissatisfied. I feel that the Commission was slow getting organized, that it initially was not aggressive enough in carrying out what its basic mission was—and that was to implement the law. I felt that initially they were too much concerned about trying to get people to do something voluntarily which they were supposed to see that they did as a matter of law. I don't think the Commission has been aggressive enough. I don't think it has pushed enough the whole matter of training as a responsibility of industry. I think that it has been poorly organized and at this point is in need of a major reorganization.

MR. KILPATRICK: Do you have in mind such a reorganization as that contemplated in the bill passed by the House in April that would give to the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission in general the same powers that the NLRB has to issue its own cease and desist orders?

MR. YOUNG: I think this would greatly strengthen the Commission's work providing it had the right administrative leadership.

MR. KILPATRICK: Is the "civil rights lobby," if you will forgive the phrase, pushing that House bill?

MR. YOUNG: Oh, yes, we are supporting this. Mr. Wilkins, who actually heads the civil rights lobby, might be able to speak to this more in detail.

MR. KILPATRICK: In the field of employment opportunities the statement often is made on the part of many employers that they are perfectly willing to hire more Negro workers but that none apply, or that so few who are qualified apply.

How do you respond to that defense on their part?

MR. YOUNG: I think this is very feeble. We have in this country in the corporate circles the most creative minds, the most imaginative people. Anything they really want to do, any type of worker they really want to employ or to train, they can do it.

I think what has been happening is that many have assumed their responsibilities were met once they opened their doors. I think many have been looking for the exceptional Negro. They have been expecting a Negro to be superior to a white person when he had no opportunity to be. They have been looking for Lena Hornes for secretaries, and Ralph Bunches for accountant jobs. They have not been willing to say, "We will hire the whole range of Negroes as we hire the whole range of white people." They have not been willing to set aside the jobs that they have for mediocre white people or dumb white people and set those aside for the mediocre or the not-too-bright Negroes. I don't think industry has yet gone all out. It has certainly changed in its policies, its pronouncements. It certainly has opened its doors to the more talented, but I think it can do much more than what has been done up to now. It only convinces me of what more they could do if they really tried, because there has not been major disturbance in any of these areas where they have given new opportunities to Negroes.

MR. EVANS: Mr. Wilkins, I want to ask you, without trying to join in a fight between you and Mr. Carmichael about his last statement, do you think it serves the Negro or the white man, his purpose in any way, to threaten that the ten per cent of the Negro population can, if it has to, drag down this whole country?

MR. WILKINS: I didn't interpret Mr. Carmichael's remarks that way.

MR. EVANS: He said, "We are going to go down together, all of us," if certain things don't happen.

MR. WILKINS: I think Mr. Carmichael—if he weren't where he is, he ought to be on Madison Avenue. He is a public relations man par excellence. He abounds in the provocative phrase.

Of course, no one believes that the Negro minority in this country is going to take up arms and try to rectify every wrong that has been done the Negro race if somebody doesn't rectify it through the regular channels.

MR. EVANS: Mr. Wilkins, may I just ask Mr. Carmichael if he would agree with that, that nobody in this country believes, as Mr. Wilkins has just stated?

MR. WILKINS: I think that Mr. Carmichael is on record—

MR. CARMICHAEL: What Mr. Wilkins is saying and you ought to be clear in your mind, Mr. Evans, since you are a newspaper reporter, that we have been forced by statements in this country, which remind us of the 90 per cent and what they can do and the 180 million and what they can do—as if they say to us, "Now, if you don't do exactly as we want you to do, if you don't follow what we prescribe for you, then we have the power to wipe you out." That threat is not going to stand in my mind as a black man, and I am going to move to get the things that I have to get in this country to be able to function as an equal.

MR. EVANS: Mr. Wilkins, to go back, don't you think it is precisely this kind of approach to the civil rights problem, correct or incorrect, that has aroused so much basic concern, fear, perhaps hostility, over the whole "Black Power" concept? Isn't this precisely what is worrying so many white people today?

MR. WILKINS: I go back to—without a yes or no on that, I go back to the statement of Dr. King some moments ago in the difference between southern hatred and northern hatred, he went on to say that he was simply arousing—not arousing it, but exposing it.

The thing that I think he omitted or gave too little emphasis to was the direct job competition in the north, whereas you didn't have that sort of competition in the south. The people in north who feel that the Negro is a competitor for the job will be more fierce in their reaction than those down south who only had to defend a psychological superiority. They already had the physical superiority.

MR. EVANS: Mr. Carmichael has said in Chicago recently that there is a tendency for the middle class Negro, who has achieved exit from the ghetto, who has managed to get out of the ghetto, to forget the plight of the Negro in the ghetto once he has been emancipated.

Do you agree with that and, if so, is this endemic or is this peculiar to the Negro? Was this true of the Jew in this country, of the Italian and the other minorities?

MR. WILKINS: In the first place, I don't agree with it and, in the second place, I feel that it isn't peculiar to the Negro at all. Everyone is trying to better his condition in life. Everyone is trying to get ahead. If you can move away from a warehouse or on a street that has no paving to a street with paving and far from warehouses, you will do it. That is if you are normal. Whether you are an American or whether you are a Lebanese, it doesn't make any difference. There is too much evidence that the Negro middle class in this country, while not having done all it should have done, has nevertheless financed and supported and spearheaded the civil rights fight in the days when there were no people arguing philosophically about whether we should go this way or that way or the other way. There was only one way to go and that was to jam your head right into the wall and fight the man right on the firing line. That is what the Negro middle class did.

Now, because they have two suits and wear a white collar and can speak English reasonably well, they have to take a lot of vituperation from those who are still in bad and say they have been forgotten. They haven't been forgotten. They have been pretty well taken care of, but the Negro middle class can do more than it has done.

MR. VALERIANI: Mr. McKissick, what do you consider to be the No. 1 priority of the civil rights movement today?

MR. McKISSICK: I think that we have got two basic priorities that are facing us as a nation. I think one is racism, and the second is peace. I think they both are interwoven within our pattern of thinking. When we talk about "Black Power," for instance, and everybody gets excited—two little bitty words in the English language. One, "black"—everybody who has gone through the sixth grade knows what "black" means. "Power"—everybody who has gone through the sixth grade knows what that means, and I get a letter from a professor at Harvard saying, "Explain black power."

That means putting black power in black people's hands. We don't have any and we want some. That simply is what that means.

To answer the two basic questions you are talking about. I think we have really got to change some values in this country. I think the war is indicative of black men going over to Vietnam and dying for something that they don't have a right for here. I think that not only do we have the war, we've got racist thought. It is a racist thought to oppose black people having power, if I can put it like that. That is a racist thought—because what you are saying is, "I am opposed to black people having power."

Then, you join issue, and as a lawyer when you join issue, you start preparing and I start preparing, because the issues are joined. So when we say changing what are the most important issues today, I think you've got two. You got peace and you got racism. Racist thoughts.

MR. CARMICHAEL: Can I add to that? It seems to me that is very indicative in terms of the foreign policy of this country and its racistic attitude outside of the country, its exploitation of other non-white countries and the way it draws their resources and brings it back here to be industrialized. One of the reasons why I think that black people now across the country who have become politically conscious of what is being done in Africa and Asia and Latin America by this country are saying they must join up with these emerging countries in the Third World [is] because they have in fact a common need—that they must stop this system that has exploited and oppressed them because of their color.

MR. SPIVAK: May I ask Mr. Carmichael a question first? A short while ago, when I was questioning you, you said you weren't sure that you were a citizen of this country. Was that correct?

MR. CARMICHAEL: Yes, I meant that in the sense that many people question that right, not me.

MR. SPIVAK: I am only questioning you. Are you a citizen of this country?

MR. CARMICHAEL: Do you mean in terms of a paper?

MR. SPIVAK: In terms of actual rights.

MR. CARMICHAEL: Obviously not. My dear black brother, Dr. King, can't even march in Chicago without getting a rock thrown on his head.

MR. SPIVAK: I am talking about you. Do you have a right to vote here? Are you a citizen, or are you still a citizen of Trinidad?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I am a citizen of the United States, if that is what you mean.

MR. SPIVAK: That was the question.

MR. CARMICHAEL: In that sense, in the paper citizen sense, is that what you are talking about?

MR. SPIVAK: That is right.

MR. CARMICHAEL: A paper citizenship.

MR. SPIVAK: You just don't identify yourself with the United States as it is today, and therefore you have virtually thrown your citizenship out the window, is that correct?

MR. CARMICHAEL: On the contrary. It seems to me that what we are saying is that we see that there are some changes that have to be brought about in this country for people to live on the humanistic level that other people always talk about, and it seems that—that is where we say that we are going to move, to try to bring about those changes since people in this country do not live on the humanistic level everyone talks about.

MR. SPIVAK: Mr. Wilkins, the SNCC position paper which was recently published by The New York Times quoted SNCC as saying—and these are the words: "We are now aware that the NAACP has grown reactionary, is controlled by the "Black Power" structure itself, and stands as one on the main roadblock to black freedom."

Many of us have long believed that your organization is one of the oldest, has made one of the great contributions in getting civil rights laws through the country and in many, many other ways. What is your answer to this rather serious criticism made by the younger, more militant groups?

MR. CARMICHAEL: That was a private paper and was not for publication. I don't know how The New York Times got hold of that.

MR. SPIVAK: Do you repudiate that?

MR. CARMICHAEL: No, I am just saying that it was not a public statement. Privately, we have a right to analyze other civil rights groups, but we never do it publicly.

MR. WILKINS: Of course, we don't agree with it, and we feel it is a little uninformed. This is nothing unusual in these times. There are thousands of young Negro people in this country who believe that the civil rights movement started in 1960 when they became active in it, and so, anything before 1960 has to be aged and reactionary. This is not true. We feel that the NAACP is one of the most radical organizations because it addresses itself—that is, if the objective now, Mr. Spivak——

MR. SPIVAK: What is your goal? Does it differ in any way from theirs?

MR. WILKINS: If the objective is to reform America so that the Negro can live here in equality, if you can achieve his citizenship equality here—that is the goal, and that is our goal in the NAACP—then we have the radical approach, not the reactionary approach, because we want that equality with all the weapons we can muster.

MR. SPIVAK: Both SNCC and CORE seem to feel that integration is irrelevant in the civil rights fight. As far as I know, most of the older and those who are called more responsible leaders, have always felt that this is the fight, that this is the battle, to integrate the Negro into America society.

Have you changed your position on that?

MR. WILKINS: We haven't changed it at all.

MR. SPIVAK: Do you think it is irrelevant?

MR. WILKINS: The SNCC private paper—Mr. Carmichael says it was a private paper—uses a very significant phrase: "SNCC has become" it says "a closed society." We can't agree with this in any respect. No man is an island, to quote a familiar thing. You can't be a closed society and function in this world.

MR. ROWAN: Mr. Young, we all know that the Negro in the civil rights movement labors under a great many burdens. Do you think it wise to add to it this extra burden of the great debate over Vietnam?

MR. YOUNG: No, I find myself terribly distressed by a great deal of this conversation here today, that, instead of focusing on the basic gap, the situation where the Negro today has 55 per cent of the average family income of the white, that two and a half times to three times as many Negroes are unemployed, that 40 percent of all Negro families live in substandard housing.

As long as we have this situation, we will always have these problems that seem to upset people, and people forget that when they were in the same situation—the labor movement, the women, the Irish group—they demonstrated, they marched in the streets, they fought for all these things.

As far as Vietnam is concerned, the Urban League takes no position on Vietnam. We know this, that we had a race problem in this country before Vietnam; we will have a race problem after it is gone. We know well that the resistance, savage resistance we are running into in Chicago, has nothing to do with Vietnam. We know that the unemployment—certainly the lack of employment on the part of some industries, is not related to Vietnam. We think that as an individual, one has a right to take a position. Our concern is that there be no money diverted into Vietnam that ought to go into the poverty program, and we also are concerned about the 60,000 Negro fellows who are in Vietnam whether we like it or not, and we want to see when they come back that these men, their rights, are respected, because one man throwing a rock seems to upset more people in Watts than the hundreds of Negro boys who are dying in Vietnam.

MR. NEWMAN: Excuse me, gentlemen. We have just two minutes more.

MR. KILPATRICK: I wanted to ask a question of Mr. McKissick, if I could, relative to CORE and politics. In the book that he published back in February, James Farmer spoke quite candidly of the major change in CORE's policies that will take you into more direct political involvement. He called it "open political action, partisan and direct."

Can you tell us how widely CORE will be engaged this fall in congressional campaigns?

MR. McKISSICK: We will—when we talk about going into politics, we can talk on one level about parties, we can talk on another level about personalities, and then we can talk on another level about issues.

MR. KILPATRICK: Mr. Farmer talked on every level.

MR. McKISSICK: Yes.

MR. KILPATRICK: He talked even of CORE's running its own candidates for public office and supporting particular candidates and particular parties.

On that score, let me ask a question just for information. Are contributions to CORE tax deductible, or are they not?

MR. McKISSICK: Contributions are not tax deductible.

MR. KILPATRICK: So then you can involve yourself in politics?

MR. McKISSICK: That is correct.

MR. EVANS: Mr. Carmichael, were you invited by Bertrand Russell to that so-called "War Crimes Trials" in Europe?

MR. CARMICHAEL: It is not so-called. It is a war tribunal.

MR. EVANS: Are you going?

MR. CARMICHAEL: Yes, we of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee have certainly accepted——

MR. EVANS: You personally?

MR. CARMICHAEL: —the invitation.

MR. NEWMAN: Invitation to what, Mr. Carmichael? Let's make it clear.

MR. CARMICHAEL: To attend the war tribunal that is being convened by Mr. Russell and——

MR. EVANS: Bertrand Russell. Are you going yourself, Mr. Carmichael?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I am not sure, but I'd like to very much.

MR. EVANS: You think President Johnson is guilty. Is that fair?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I didn't say I did. That is why I am going to the war tribunal, to see the evidence.

MR. EVANS: You think he may be?

MR. CARMICHAEL: I certainly don't agree with the war in Vietnam. I think it is an immoral war, yes. I think it is an immoral war.

MR. NEWMAN: I am sorry, gentlemen. I must interrupt. Our time is up. Thank you, all of you, for being with us today on this special edition of MEET THE PRESS.

The Proceedings of

MEET THE PRESS

as broadcast nationwide by the National Broadcasting Company, Inc., are printed and made available to the public to further interest in impartial discussions of questions affecting the public welfare. Transcripts may be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope and ten cents for each copy to:

Merkle Press Inc. Box 2111, Washington, D. C. 20013

(Division Publishers Co., Inc.)

MEET THE PRESS is telecast every Sunday over the NBC Television Network. This program originated from the NBC Studios in Washington, D. C. and Chicago, Ill.

Television Broadcast 3:30 P.M. EDT
Radio Broadcast 8:05 P.M. EDT

August 30, 1966

Mr. Ronald Moskowitz
Associate Director Education Commission of the States
Suite 2575
Kroger Building
1014 Vine Street
Cincinnati, Ohio 45202

Dear Mr. Moskowitz:

Thank you, indeed, for your invitation to cover the quarterly meeting of the Steering Committee of the Education Commission of the States. While we will be unable to attend, we would like very much to have a report of the proceedings if that can be arranged.

Sincerely yours,

Robert E. Anderson, Jr.
Managing Editor
SRC Publications

REA,Jr/js

KATALLAGETE

SUMMER
1966

Journal of the Committee of Southern Churchmen

"They will no longer consider you members of the congregation and the time will come when the ones that kill you will think they do God a favor." John 16: 2 & 3

File

August 17, 1966

Mr. Al Lowenthal
Executive Assistant to the President International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers
1126 - 16th Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

Dear Mr. Lowenthal:

We will be most happy to provide an exhibit for your Miami Beach convention September 5. Thank you so much for offering us the space.

We are now in the process of putting together a three panel exhibit which will be shipped by express to the Americana Hotel around September 1. Each panel stands six feet tall and is four feet wide. However, the arrangement will not be spread out in the full width of 12 feet. Rather, each panel will be set at angle to the other so that I would think the total width would not exceed nine feet.

Thank you again for thinking of us.

Sincerely yours,

Robert Anderson
Managing Editor, NEW SOUTH

RA/mmj

Tonie's funeral

mass

2:00 PM

7:00 PM

Don Ashcraft -

Associated Designers

& Illustrators -

351-6411

Don: Ashcraft
Associated Designers

and Illustrations —	Herb Beard.
Union Label —
Current Costs	2025 Peachtree
Size	Suite D
Weight	Darlington
Type of "Card"	Bldg.

Could they send both —
if EU paid shipping ?

Address —

Ilisai, Bill

Lieyaue

Bekai —

~~Canon Rene Scott~~

Philippine — 5 yrs —

APSC — Wright Point

Duane Beck — hired —

Relate with people —

— Exp. for one Sophisticated

Plans well —

PHILIP MURRAY BUILDING

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF ELECTRICAL, RADIO AND MACHINE WORKERS

AFFILIATED WITH THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR and CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS AND THE CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

PAUL JENNINGS
President

PHONE: 296-1200 (Area Code 202)
1126 SIXTEENTH STREET N.W., WASHINGTON, D.C. 20036

July 29, 1966

Mr. Paul Anthony, Executive Director
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street N. W.,
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Mr. Anthony:

The International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, AFL-CIO-CLC, is holding its Twelfth Constitutional Convention at the Americana Hotel in Miami Beach, Florida, September 5, 1966 through September 9, 1966.

We expect that this will be one of the best attended conventions in our Union's history. It will be a delegates convention and the delegates will have the opportunity to express the ideas of those they represent for specific programs and policies.

Thus, the officers and membership of our International Union invite you to display an exhibit at what promises to be one of our most popular International Conventions.

If you wish to provide an exhibit, would you please let us know as soon as possible. In addition, would you please send us your space requirements in order that we can arrange proper space allocations.

Our official convention decorator will be in contact with you to work out the specific details.

Sincerely yours,

Al Loewenthal

Al Loewenthal
Executive Assistant to the President

opeiu2aflcio
mmh

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

®

J. C. MARSHALL
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

R. W. McCANN
PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS
DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LC = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is LOCAL TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is LOCAL TIME at point of destination

1231P EST SEP 10 66 AA436

SSE103 A MZA398 COLLECT TDMZ MIAMIBEACH FLO 10 1153A EST

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

54 ST ATLA 5 Forsyth St

SHIPMENT ONE BOX RECEIVE EMERY AIRFREIGHT ADVISE DISPOSITION

MANNCRAFT EXEO-CARTAGE

(14).

9/8a

Hansell

Sept 6th

Sept 2nd Shipped

Received Tuesday

SF1201(R2-65)

CCAP Bulletin

September, 1966
VOL 1, NO. 4

CITIZENS' CRUSADE AGAINST POVERTY

2027 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20036

File

PERISCOPE on POVERTY

The anti-poverty authorization bill continues to have trouble in Congress . . . current strategy is to press for passage of a bill in the Senate where the atmosphere is more friendly . . . then get the Senate Bill passed in the House . . . In the House, action has been postponed until the month's end. The House version sharply cuts funds available for community action programs, the heart of the anti-poverty effort.

The battle has been livened by a demand from House Labor Committee Chairman Powell that OEO chief Shriver resign. Shriver said he wouldn't . . . President Johnson, signing an appropriation bill containing $22 million for the Rent Supplement program, termed it "single most important breakthrough in history of public housing." Program will help poor meet rent bill provided they live in housing sponsored by non-profit or limited dividend groups . . . The $22 million is for year starting July 1.

The Demonstration Cities Program to combine physical rehabilitation of the slums in selected cities with social services passed by the Senate, but cut to $900 million from $2.3 billion requested to finance it, and is now before the House.

A cold shoulder and a deaf ear were all Gov. John Connally of Texas had for Rio Grande Valley farm workers who have been on a 400 mile march to Austin, the state capital, to dramatize their plea for decent wages. Connally intercepted the marchers . . . told them he

Continued on page 3

CRUSADE TRAINING PROGRAM FOR POOR MOVES AHEAD

Ford Foundation Provides Starter Grant of $375,000

National poverty interest focused on Washington this month with the announcement of an immediate start on a $4 million, three year program of the Citizens Crusade Against Poverty to train 1,000 community workers to help the poor organize and participate more effectively in the War on Poverty.

News of the program's launching was made public by Walter P. Reuther, chairman of the Citizens Crusade shortly after the Ford Foundation announced a starter grant of $375,000 to the Citizens Crusade for the program.

Walter P. Reuther

McGeorge Bundy

"Sufficient funds and commitments are on hand," Reuther said, "for us to launch the program and assure its continuation." Two training centers will be established, one on the east coast and the other on the west coast. Staffing of the centers has been started.

Backing for the Crusade's program, he said, has come from religious, civil rights, labor, academic, business, student and farm groups as well as foundations. The cost of the three year comprehensive training effort is budgeted at $4,000,000.

Reuther stressed that the Crusade was going to make a special effort to attract the "natural leaders of youth among the poor" to receive training in the program. "These are people with great leadership potential," he said. "Instead of being permitted to use their skills and talents they are too often blocked and frustrated and react with understandable anger."

"It is our moral and social duty to give these young people, who are now the object of fear and suspicion, the training and opportunity to improve the quality of their lives.

Ford Foundation President McGeorge Bundy commented in announcing the grant: "Front-line workers in the war on poverty need skills as well as commitment, and

Continued on page 4

The Poor in Action:

Freedom City in the Delta

In the heart of the black, fertile Mississippi Delta some 94 Negroes who no longer have jobs or homes on the white man's plantations have set up housekeeping on a 400 acre community farm they hope to make into a new town.

Unlike many previous communal experiments it is based neither on intellectual curiosity nor idealism.

People moving into "Freedom City," as it is called, have been forced off the land by cutbacks in cotton allotments and increased mechanization. Many left their homes with no more than the clothes on their backs and a houseful of children.

When their farm jobs and homes were eaten up by machinery, the residents of Freedom City stayed in the Delta rather than migrate to some northern ghetto where they almost surely would have been unable to find work.

"Mainly, they're coming here 'cause there's no place else to go," said one of the community leaders.

The new community was the idea of the Delta Ministry, an action arm of the National Council of Churches which has been working in Mississippi for the past three years. The new residents of Freedom City hope it will become a center of small industry and agriculture and a base for the full citizenship necessary to contribute to a new Mississippi. "The whole thing is cooperative development," said Isaac Foster, a young organizer helping plan the new town.

The farm and equipment cost $170,000, for which the Delta Ministry received donations from the North and the East. The farm includes a large frame buliding used for cooking and eating, five used tractors, two used trucks, and a used combine. Families sleep in 24 "igloo-like" pre-fabricated houses.

A major problem for the residents of Freedom City, according to Foster, will be for residents to accept the responsibilities which once rested with the plantation overseer. Most Negroes on plantations in Mississippi live in almost total peonage to the white man. They are taught no skills beyond cotton chopping and are not given enough schooling to learn how to read and write.

The residents of "Freedom City" first planted their acres in wheat and soybeans, after hours of discussions as to what kind of crops would be best. The wheat growing venture brought the group some $2,000 income, and the soybean crop should bring more. An attempt is also being made to start a modest quilt making cooperative to be run by the women while the men work in the fields.

Blackwell Will Head Southern Rural Action Project

ATLANTA — First results of the Southern Rural Action Project, an experimental anti-poverty program which seeks to mobilize private resources to build a social and economic base for grass roots communities in the rural South and Southwest have been announced by the Citizen's Crusade Against Poverty.

At the same time, CCAP Chairman Walter P. Reuther announced the appointment of Randolph Blackwell, former program director of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, as director of the Southern Rural Action project.

The first grass roots communities receiving support under the Southern Rural Action Project, aimed at assisting more than 100 rural communities over the next three years, will be Taliaferro, Lincoln, and Hancock Counties in Georgia and Greene and Perry Counties in Alabama.

A number of grass roots communities in Mississippi and Mexican-American groups in the Southwest are expected to join the program.

Under the new program, groups from more affluent sectors of the Nation — both in the South and the North — are linked with a grass roots organization in a two-year community development plan.

The following projects are already under way:

• The University of Illinois Small Home Council—Building Research Council, under the direction of Dr. Rudard A. Jones, will work with SRAP to develop a low-cost, self-help housing program for the grass roots communities participating in the project.

• The National Student Association will work with SRAP in developing appropriate support groups among its more than 300 affiliate chapters to provide marketing assistance for a small cooperative factory in Taliaferro County that produces athletic uniforms and other goods.

• A group of former Alabama

Continued on page 4

Crisis in the cities:

THE TRILLION DOLLAR PROBLEM

For the past several weeks more than a score of mayors and top administration officials have been testifying before a Senate subcommittee headed by Senator Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut, on the "crisis in the Nation's cities" and what should be done about it.

Clearly, the Senators didn't think enough of the right kind of things were being done, for they had stinging words about the way the Nation's housing program were being run, and short patience for witnesses who didn't have the facts and figures they wanted for their probe.

The harshest criticism was directed at Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty, who predictably could tell the committee very little specific about the problems of his city, other than he lacked jurisdiction over most of the key branches of city government. Senator Ribicoff told him bluntly that despite his city's glitter and claim to greatness that "right now Los Angeles doesn't amount to a damn thing." And Senator Robert Kennedy of New York snapped: "You might not have the responsibility but you are the mayor and it seems to me we could expect some leadership from you."

The Senators also heard testimony from Detroit's Mayor Jerome P. Cavanagh, who said his city would need $15 billion in federal aid the next decade, and Mayor John Lindsay, of New York, who claimed his city would need $50 billion in the same period to become a "thoroughly livable and exciting place to live." Doing some rough calculation, Senator Kennedy figured that if every city asked proportionately as much, the nation would have to come up with $1 trillion in the next decade.

Said Kennedy: "There's just not going to be those sums available." He advised the mayors that they would have to look to private sources to meet some of their needs.

All but obscured was testimony by two of the nation's most successful mayors: Richard Lee of New Haven and Ivan Allen of Atlanta. Both Mayors warmly praised a multi-million dollar plan proposed by Senators Kennedy and Ribicoff to rehabilitate slum areas and hire residents of the neighborhoods to do the work. Lee said that the Federal government had to help the cities attack problems of housing, education and employment regardless of the cost.

Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles on what must have been one of the rougher days of his life.

Welfare Revisions

The Advisory Council on Public Welfare recently recommended several radical revisions in federally aided public assistance programs in its report to HEW Secretary John W. Gardner. The crucial recommendations call for the establishment of minimum federal standards for public assistance which states would have to meet to have their federal support continued, and the elimination of special public assistance programs (Old Age Assistance, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, etc.) and the substitution of a single comprehensive program in which a persons public assistance payments is based solely on need.

While no specific standard of support was suggested by the report it has been estimated by experts that the new proposals would more than triple the present cost of $4 billion — to $13 billion for public assistance payments.

The advisory council also made several other far reaching recommendations including a mechanism to assure legal representation for recipients with complaints against welfare agencies, a positive program for informing welfare recipients of their rights, and a full range of social services available to all who need them as a matter of right.

Periscope—Continued from page 1

wouldn't be in Austin for their rally at the capitol . . . flatly rejected their plea for a special session of the legislature to enact a $1.25 an hour minimum wage . . .

In California preliminary results of a second election at the huge Di Giorgio Corporation fruit ranches showed a smashing victory for the newly chartered AFL-CIO Farm Workers Organizing Committee over the Teamsters . . .

The federal minimum wage will be raised to $1.60 an hour on February 1, 1968 . . . to $1.40 an hour by next February 1 . . . under an agreement reached by Senate and House conferees. An additional eight million workers will be covered . . .

Randolph Blackwell

Blackwell—Continued from page 2

residents, many of them ex-migrant workers who have settled in the North have agreed to provide direct financial assistance for Greene County, Ala. The group calls itself the "Alabama Greene County Club" and has affiliates in Chicago, Detroit, Toledo, Akron, and Brooklyn.

Ten national organizations will join with the Crusade in participating in the Southern Rural Action Project. They will locate support groups among their affiliate chapters and aid in the development of plans and strategy for the overall project.

They include: The National Council of Churches; The Southern Regional Council; The Southern Christian Leadership Conference; The Delta Ministry; The National Council of Negro Women; The National Council of Catholic Women; Wednesdays in Mississippi; United Church Women; National Council of Catholic Women; The National Student Christian Federation; and The National Student Association.

Training Program—Cont. from p. 1

community-action programs are growing faster than there are people to man them effectively."

He added: "Tangled issues in the poverty program are still being thrashed out, particularly the limits of governmental control and the real dimensions of 'maximum feasible participation of the poor.' In the meantime, though, there is a premium on a greatly expanded supply of purposeful, informed community workers. Without them the most ambitious government program will bog down right at poverty's door."

Under the training schedule a series of 10 week programs will be instituted that will train 1,000 persons skilled in helping the poor establish strong and effective local organizations. Between 250 and 300 of the trainees will be community action fellows who will be supported financially for the period of from four to 21 months. The remaining trainees will be tuition students selected and supported by their sponsoring organizations.

Part of the training program will consist of field work and the training center will arrange placement of workers in up to 400 selected locations. Emphasis will be on returning trainees to the communities from which they came.

Citizens' Crusade officials said the training program will be directed toward giving trainees:

1. techniques for organizing poor people in local communities
2. knowledge of the relevant programs for fighting poverty and how to obtain operating funds
3. commitment to the democratic processes of change.

Reuther emphasized that those attending the two training centers will be, in most instances, selected by the grass roots organizations of the poor. They will, he said, represent every group including Negroes, Mexican-Americans, Indians, Puerto Ricans, poverty-stricken farmers and farm workers.

Assisting in the plans for the training program was an Interim Program Planning Group. On the planning group were: Bayard Rustin, A. Philip Randolph Institute; Herman Gallegos, Community Services Organization, San Francisco; Dr. Robert Coles, Harvard University; Dr. Leonard Duhl, psychiatrist; Stokely Carmichael, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee; Dr. Charles Leber, Urban Church Mission for the Presbytery of New York; Jack Mansfield, Community Services Foundation, Largo, Florida; Dr. S. M. Miller, New York University; Dr. Frank Riessman, New York University; Brendan Sexton, Leadership Studies Center, Detroit; Rev. Leon Sullivan and Frederick Miller, Opportunities Industrialization Center; Cyril Tyson, Human Resources Administration, New York.

CC AP

CITIZENS' CRUSADE AGAINST POVERTY

2027 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20036

Chairman
Walter P. Reuther

Secretary
Rabbi Richard Hirsch

Treasurer
Robert S. Benjamin

Executive Director
Richard W. Boone

BULK RATE
Permit 42712
Non Profit Org.

MR AL ULMER DIRECTOR COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION
PLANNING 120
S FORSYTH ST N W
ATLANTA, GA

SOUTHERN EDUCATION REPORT

SEPTEMBER 1966

PRELIMINARY REGISTRATION
WINTER MEETING - STEERING COMMITTEE
EDUCATION COMMISSION OF THE STATES
ROYAL ORLEANS HOTEL, NEW ORLEANS
DECEMBER 8-9, 1966

COMMISSIONERS

The Hon. Allen R. Foley
State Representative
McKenno Road
Norwich, Vermont

Dr. Wm. J. L. Wallace
President, West Virginia
State College
Institute, West Virginia

Dr. Harold Eibling
Supt. of Schools
270 E. State St.
Columbus, Ohio

Dr. Walter McKee, Supt.
City-County Schools
P. O. Box 991
Montgomery, Alabama

The Hon. Karl Grittner
State Senator
516 Earl Street
St. Paul, Minnesota

Mrs. Sarah Folsom
State Superintendent of Public Instruction
Phoenix, Arizona

The Hon. Calvin Rampton
Governor of Utah
State Capitol
Salt Lake City, Utah

Dr. Rodney Berg
President
DuPage Junior College
Naperville, Illinois

Dr. James Allen
Commissioner of Education
State Capitol
Albany, New York

Rev. Albert A. Schneider
Supt., Archdiocese of Santa Fe
321 Washington, S.E.
Albuquerque, New Mexico

COMMISSIONERS

The Hon. J. D. McCarty
Speaker of the House of Rep.
State Capitol
Oklahoma City, Oklahoma

Dr. Andrew Holt
Pres., University of Tennessee
Knoxville, Tennessee

The Hon. Otto Kerner
Governor of Illinois
State Capitol
Springfield, Illinois

The Hon. Lucille Pinkerton
State Representative
Box 901
Ketchikan, Alaska 99901

Mrs. Eldra Shulterbrandt
Chairman, Board of Education
P. O. Box 544
St. Thomas, Virgin Islands

Dr. Leon Minear, Supt. of Public Instruction
318 Public Service Bldg.
Salem, Oregon

The Hon. Charles L. Terry, Jr.
Governor of Delaware
State Capitol
Dover, Delaware

The Hon. John A. Love
Governor of Colorado
State Capitol
Denver, Colorado

The Hon. Clarence Bell
State Senator
Parkin, Arkansas

Mr. John Driscoll
Chairman, State Board of Education
177 State Street
Portsmouth, New Hampshire

Mrs. Richard B. Kading, Jr.
Chairman, PTA Legislative Committee
Boise, Idaho

COMMISSIONERS

The Hon. Richard Webster
State Senator
204 South Garrison
Carthage, Missouri

The Hon. Richard Hughes
Governor of New Jersey
State Capitol
Trenton, New Jersey

The Hon. Robert McNair
Governor of South Carolina
State Capitol
Columbia, South Carolina

The Hon. Mary Nock
State Senator
914 Camden Avenue
Salisbury, Md.

The Hon. John Chafee
Governor of Rhode Island
State Capitol
Providence, Rhode Island

Mr. John Gray, Chairman
Coordinating Board
Texas College & Univ. System
P. O. Box 3391
Beaumont, Texas

OBSERVERS

Eldonna L. Evertts
National Council of Teachers of English
508 South Sixth St.
Champaign, Ill. 61820

Dave Darland
Journal of Teacher Education
1201 16th St., N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Eleanor D. Malmborg
American Assoc. of University
Women
2401 Virginia Ave., N. W.
Washington, D. C.

OBSERVERS

Paul Ackerman
Council for Exceptional Children
1201 16th St., N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Norman Burns
North Central Assoc. of Colleges & Secondary Schools
5454 South Shore Dr.
Chicago, Ill.

J. Andrew Holley
National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education
1750 Pennsylvania Ave., NW
Washington, D. C.

James K. Sours
American College Testing Program
P. O. Box 168
Iowa City, Iowa

Irvamae Applegate
NEA
1201 16th St., NW
Washington, D. C.

William P. Cunningham
Isidore Newman School
1831 Jefferson Ave.
New Orleans, La.

Charles F. Deubel
Nat'l. Education Assoc.
1201 Sixteenth St., NW
Washington, D. C.

John S. Hollister
Educational Testing Service
Princeton, New Jersey

Otis A. Singletary
American Council on Edu.
1785 Massachusetts Ave., NW
Washington, D. C.

John C. Evans, Jr.
Utah Education Assoc.
875 East 5180 South
Murray, Utah

OBSERVERS

Pat Watters
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N. W.
Atlanta, Ga.

Harold E. Wigren
National Education Assoc.
1201 Sixteenth St., N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Donald C. Agnew
Southern Assoc. of Colleges & Schools
795 Peachtree, N.E.
Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. H. A. Cory
Louisiana Congress P.T.A.
900 Booth Drive
Shreveport, La.

Jean Dye
Board of Education
2566 Stratford Rd.
Cleveland Heights, Ohio

Herman I. Orentlicher
American Assoc. of University Professors
1785 Massachusetts Ave., NW
Washington, D. C.

Trevor K. Serviss
American Assoc. for Gifted Children
15 Gramerce Park
New York, N. Y.

T. Leslie MacMitchell
College Entrance Examination Board
475 Riverside Dr.
New York, N. Y.

Robert Berdahl
American Council on Education
1785 Massachusetts Ave. NW
Washington, D. C.

William G. Shannon
American Assoc. of Junior Colleges
1315 16th St., NW
Washington, D. C.

OBSERVERS

Allan W. Ostar
Association of State Colleges & Universities
1785 Massachusetts Ave.NW
Washington, D. C.

Russell I. Thackrey
Nat'l. Assoc. of State Universities & Land Grant Colleges
1785 Massachusetts Ave.NW
Washington, D. C.

John R. Miles
Chamber of Commerce of the U.S.
1615 H Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Marvin Hurley
Chamber of Commerce
Box 53600
Houston, Texas

Arthur F. Corey
California Teachers Assoc.
1705 Murchison Dr.
Burlingame, Calif.

John Mallan
American Association of Junior Colleges
1315 16th St., N. W.
Washington, D. C.

James T. Stewart
American Technical Edu. Assoc.
Delgado College
615 City Park Ave.
New Orleans, La.

Winfred Godwin
Southern Regional Education Board
Atlanta, Ga.

JoAnn Smith
National Catholic Welfare Conference
1312 Massachusetts Ave.NW
Washington, D. C.

PRESS

John A. Roberts
The News-Journal
831 Orange St.
Wilmington 99, Delaware

James W. Brann
Chronicle of Higher Education
3301 North Charles St.
Baltimore, Md.

Mr. Howard Ravis
Scholastic Teacher
50 West 44th St.
New York, N. Y.

GUESTS

Robert F. Carbone
Lawrence Bilder
Mrs. Paul Ackerman
Mrs. Pat Watters
Robert Shultz
Eli Evans
Mrs. Herman I. Orentlicher
Frederic A. Mosher
Donald Layton
Mrs. Richard Hughes
Mrs. Robert McNair
Mr. & Mrs. Robert Hickman
Sgt. Henry Coker
William Marshall
Arthur Levin
John F. Taylor
Chris Viahoplus
James Bartelt
Benjamin Dickson
Mrs. J. D. McCarty
Mrs. Joe Wood
Robert Fowler
D. Schroyer
S. V. Martorana
Mrs. James Bartelt

STAFF

Wendell H. Pierce
W. Henry Cone
Ronald Moskowitz
Fred Stoffel
David Hazelton
Virginia Williams
Joan Ross
Bill Pope
C. Alden Baker
Robert McCall
Clement French
Elmer Ellis
Kenneth Hansen
Howard J. Koop

Host: The Honorable John J. McKeithen, Governor of Louisiana

EDUCATION COMMISSION OF THE STATES
FINAL AGENDA
WINTER MEETING OF STEERING COMMITTEE

ROYAL ORLEANS HOTEL
St. Louis at Royal Streets
New Orleans, Louisiana

December 8-9, 1966

Wednesday, December 7

5:00 p.m. - 7:30 p.m.	*Commission-sponsored reception for all commissioners and observers in the Toulouse-Dauphine Room, Royal Orleans Hotel.
7:30 p.m. - 10:00 p.m.	*Dinner hosted by the Honorable John McKeithen, Governor of Louisiana, for all commissioners and observers at Antoines Restaurant, 1/2 block from hotel, at 713-17 St. Louis Street.

Thursday, December 8

8:00 a.m. - 9:00 a.m.	Executive Committee breakfast in Petite Salon A, Royal Orleans Hotel. (All Governors are invited)
9:00 a.m.	Steering Committee convenes in Josephine Bonaparte Room to discuss policy matters regarding: Item A-1 Endorsing Projects of Other Organizations Item A-2 Administering New Projects Item A-3 Co-sponsoring Conferences and Workshops Item A-4 Relationships with Other Political and Educational Organizations
11:30 a.m.	Meeting recesses for lunch.
12:00 noon	Steering Committee Executive Session Luncheon, Toulouse-Dauphine Room.
12:00 noon	*Observers, Guests Luncheon, Petite Salon.
1:30 p.m.	Meeting reconvenes in Toulouse-Dauphine Room to discuss program matters regarding: Item B-1 Progress Report on Seven Commission Studies Item B-2 Action Targets and Format of next Commission Meeting Item B-3 Long-Range Information Services Program Item B-4 Interim Communications Program Item B-5 Report on State Membership Campaign
5:00 p.m.	Meeting recesses.
6:00 p.m. - 7:15 p.m.	No-host reception for all commissioners and observers at Brennan's Restaurant, 1/2 block from hotel, at 417 Royal St.

7:30 p.m. - 9:30 p.m.	*Dinner at Brennan's Restaurant.
10:00 p.m. - ?	Commissioners and observers will retire to Pat O'Brien's, 718 St. Peter Street, for a no-host after-dinner entertainment. (a three-block walk)

Friday, December 9

9:30 a.m.	Meeting convenes in Grand Salon East to discuss administration matters regarding: Item C-1 Site for Denver Headquarters Item C-2 Budget and Staffing and Organization Matters Item C-3 Blanket Bonding for Commission Employees Item C-4 Future Meeting Sites and Dates of Full Commission New Business
11:45 a.m.	Meeting adjourns.
12:00 noon	*Luncheon for all commissioners and observers in Escoffier Esplanade Room at Royal Orleans Hotel.
2:00 p.m.	Tours available of New Orleans for those who desire them.

*Denotes functions covered by observers' registration fee.

S.C. = fed prog study & reports.

NOTICE:

The Thursday, December 8, Luncheon for Observers and Guests has been moved from the Petite Salon to the Toulouse-Dauphine Room. The Executive Session Luncheon for the Steering Committee has been moved from the Toulouse-Dauphine Room to the Petite Salon.

The headquarters and press room for the Commission will be room 760 in the Royal Orleans Hotel.

ITEM A-1

THE DESIRABILITY OF THE COMMISSION OR STEERING COMMITTEE ENDORSING OTHER ORGANIZATIONS' PROJECTS

The staff and the Executive Committee concur that the Commission's policy on this matter should be as follows:

> The Education Commission of the States should not make formal endorsements of projects of other organizations. It should feel free, however, to recommend certain policy positions which might grow out of another organization's projects.

A resolution is attached for the Steering Committee's action.

RESOLUTION A-1

WHEREAS, the staff and the Executive Committee concur that the Education Commission of the States and its Steering Committee should not endorse other organization's projects,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee recommends to the full Commission that it adopt the following policy position regarding this matter:

> The Education Commission of the States should not make formal endorsements of projects of other organizations. It should feel free, however, to recommend certain policy positions which might grow out of another organization's projects.

ITEM A-2

DESIRABILITY OF THE COMMISSION AND/OR THE STEERING COMMITTEE ADMINISTERING NEW PROGRAMS OF INTERSTATE COOPERATION SUCH AS EDUCATIONAL TELEVISION

It is recommended that the Commission, which was formed by the Compact for Education, should do everything it can to prevent the need for splinter compacts between the states which concern education. Proponents of an Educational Television Compact have asked the Education Commission of the States to administer their project. The staff and Executive Committee agree now is not the time to act. Because the Commission is a new organization and because it is still in the stage of defining its key roles, taking over the administration of any program, especially an auxiliary program of such magnitude, could completely eclipse the primary goals it is trying to set and dissipate the energy, effort and finances of its staff.

In the case of educational television there are two other important reasons why the Commission, while leaving the door open for later action, should not act precipitously at this time. Both the Carnegie and Ford Foundations are nearing completion of massive studies in this area and the Commission should await these recommendations before acting.

Preliminary recommendations should be available next month from both foundations. It is recommended that the Executive Committee informally suggest to those considering the establishment of an interstate educational television compact that they, too, wait for such recommendations.

A resolution is attached for the action of the Executive Committee.

RESOLUTION A-2

WHEREAS, a group of persons proposing to establish a separate interstate compact for educational television has invited the Commission to administer that program, and

WHEREAS, the staff and the Executive Committee concur that the Education Commission of the States should minimize the need for splinter educational compacts between the states, and

WHEREAS, two major studies are now pending which concern educational television,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee takes no action at this time on the request of the group seeking to establish an interstate compact on educational television, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Steering Committee asks the group also to await the recommendations of the two major studies before acting, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that on other matters of interstate cooperation concerning education, that each be decided on its own merits after due consideration of the staff, the Executive Committee and the Steering Committee, and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that copies of this resolution be distributed to every governor and legislator member of the Commission and to governors of non-member states, territories and possessions.

ITEM A-3

DESIRABILITY OF THE COMMISSION AND OF THE STEERING COMMITTEE

TO CO-SPONSOR WORKSHOPS WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS AND AGENCIES

It is recommended that the Commission's policy on this matter should be as follows:

> The Education Commission of the States should feel free to sponsor its own workshops and conferences when it deems them necessary or advisable, but should be careful to plan them so that in the long run, they involve equally political and educational leaders. Since other organizations and agencies seldom need to seek such a balance, or do, the Commission should not attempt to co-sponsor conferences and workshops with them. The added advantage of sponsoring only its own workshops and conferences is that the Commission would maintain complete control over the programs as well as the invitation list.

A resolution is attached for the action of the Steering Committee.

RESOLUTION A-3

WHEREAS the staff and the Executive Committee concur that it is necessary for all workshops and conferences carrying the Commission's name to be -- in the long run -- equally representative of educational and political leaders, and

WHEREAS other organizations and agencies, of either a political or educational nature would be more likely to invite either one type or the other, and

WHEREAS the Commission should maintain complete control over its conferences and workshop programs,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee calls upon the full Commission to adopt the following policy regarding conferences and workshops:

> The Education Commission of the States should feel free to sponsor its own conferences and wrokshops when it deems them necessary or advisable, but it should not co-sponsor conferences and workshops with other organizations or agencies. All Commission-sponsored conferences and workshops should attempt to -- in the long run -- involve equally political and educational leaders.

ITEM A-4

ESTABLISHMENT OF POLICY REGARDING THE COMMISSION'S RELATIONSHIP WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

The Commission and other organizations involved in the field of education and politics must maintain a very close cooperative relationship so that the Commission staff will not duplicate the work of other organizations. Such a close relationship can produce a climate of mutual benefit for the Commission and other organizations, a climate whereby the Commission can complement the work of other organizations rather than compete with them.

This would enable an interchange of research and program ideas and an involvement of memberships of various organizations in the development of the Commission's program planning. There should be caution always, however, that the Commission and other organizations maintain their separate and distinct identities. The Commission's recommendation must, in the final analysis, be the sole responsibility of the Commission.

A resolution is attached for action by the Steering Committee.

RESOLUTION A-4

WHEREAS, the staff and Executive Committee concur that the Commission and other organizations involved in the field of education and politics must maintain a very close cooperative relationship so that the Commission staff can be careful not to duplicate the work of other organizations, and

WHEREAS, such a close relationship can produce a climate of mutual benefit for the Commission and other organizations, a climate whereby the Commission can complement the work of other organizations rather than compete with them;

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee calls upon the full Commission to adopt the following policy regarding the Commission's relationships with other organizations:

That in the development of the Commission's program planning there be an interchange of research and program ideas and an involvement of memberships of various organizations. There should be caution, however, that the Commission and other organizations maintain their separate and distinct identities, and that the Commission's recommendations be the sole responsibility of the Commission.

ITEM B-1

PROGRESS REPORT ON STUDIES

Progress is being made on three of the Commission-authorized studies. They are:

1. Methods of Financing Elementary and Secondary Education

2. Community-Centered Post High School Education

3. Trends and Needs in Vocational and Technical Education; What is Being Done, What Can Be Done, for the General Education of Vocational Students

On October 18 a dozen of the top minds in American education were convened in a one-day conference called by the Education Commission of the States, in part to review a progress report on the three studies and to discuss alternative next steps. As a result of this meeting and further staff thinking, two major conclusions evolved:

1. Each of the three studies should be done in two parts. The first part would be a status report, state-by-state. The second part would include an analysis of the nationwide picture and guidelines for state action for improvement.

2. For each study a small policy advisory board should be established. This policy body will be broadly based so as to represent divergent points of view and practices.

Study developments and foreseeable events follow:

1. Methods of Financing Elementary and Secondary Education: Dr. H. Thomas James, Dean, School of Education, Stanford University, has agreed to lead the study. A policy advisory board has been established. Its first meeting was held on November 23.

2. Community-Centered Post High School Education: Dr. S. V. Martorana, Executive Dean for Two-Year Colleges, State University of New York, has agreed to lead this study. Negotiations are now underway with Dr. Martorana regarding the limits of the study and the formation of a policy advisory board. Dr. Martorana will present to the Steering Committee a paper which will outline in brief the take-off point for further research when the policy advisory board is convened early in 1967.

3. Trends and Needs in Vocational and Technical Education: Dr. Leon P. Minear, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Salem, Oregon, has agreed to head a task force to explore this study. Dr. Grant Venn, Associate Commissioner for Adult & Vocational Education, U. S. Office of Education, has also agreed to serve.

4. Coordination of Higher Education at the State Level:
The American Council on Education initiated a study on this subject in September and employed Dr. Robert Berdahl, of San Francisco State College, to lead it. His preliminary outline for the study was reviewed at the Advisory Committee on Higher Education meeting held in early September. This report revealed limitations in the following areas of their study:

A. State Master Plans.

B. Relationships between private and public higher education institutions.

C. The influence of the new Federal legislation on coordination at the state level.

There were two reasons for these limitations. (1) The American Council did not have sufficient money to expand the study, and (2) Berdahl was unable to find qualified individuals to work on these particular areas.

At the recent American Council on Education meeting in New Orleans, a staff member attended a meeting of the Advisory Committee for the study. At that time, the center for the study of Higher Education from Berkeley, California, indicated it would pursue the study of state master plans. We recently received a request to serve on an Advisory Committee for that study also.

In view of these two studies, plus the fact that Louisiana has already published a status study in this field as of September, 1966, it seemed unwise for the Commission to attempt to initiate studies in this area at this time. When we have a staff member qualified in the field of Higher Education, we believe we can draw sufficient information from these studies to make adequate recommendations to the Commission concerning the coordination of higher education.

5. The States' Role in Urban Education:
Conversations have been held with numerous individuals who it might be possible to interest in this study. We have been unable, so far, to get any capable person with enough time available to work in this area.

Dr. James Allen, in cooperation with the Chief State School Officers of seven other populous states, is holding a meeting of urban superintendents, Chief State School Officers, and other important staff members in New York, in early December on this topic. It is hoped that from this conference, we will be able to select a task force of skilled personnel to deal with this problem. In addition, on November 19, the Executive Director met with the superintendents and board members of the Great Cities Project about their interest in cooperating with our organization in furthering this study.

6. Ways in which States can Better Communications between Educational and Political Leaders:
This study would seem to be easiest to implement before May. While we have two or three persons interested in pursuing it, we have hesitated to take positive steps because of our limited budget. If we get approval for additional money from the foundations, this should be one of our first activities, since there is hope, as indicated, that we can have something completed by May.

ITEM B-2

RECOMMENDATIONS REGARDING ACTION TARGETS

It has never been the intention of the Education Commission of the States to count on the seven studies initiated last June in Chicago as the only major activity with which the Commission would concern itself this year. Therefore, an attempt has been made to identify other programs with which the Commission might help states make immediate advancements for the betterment of education.

You will recall that the Commission's founding fathers, Terry Sanford and Dr. Conant, saw as one of the chief roles of the Commission, not only original research, but the spotlighting of other good ideas, which by virtue of previous research or general consensus, should be implemented.

It is recommended that the Commission should go into its May meeting in Denver with something else that will stimulate America's political and educational leaders who will be gathered there into action.

Therefore, it is asked that the Executive Committee and the Steering Committee approve the following idea for the next Commission meeting:

Basically, the plan is to utilize most of the meeting as a working session to develop recommendations for state action on 12 specific topics.

This would have the advantages of:

1. Making the Commission meeting a working session.

2. Ending the session with specific action alternatives on important topics which would be useful in planning legislation in the member states.

3. Giving the correct impression that the Commission is doing its job in stimulating state action for the betterment of education.

The commissioners would divide up into 12 section meetings the afternoon of the first day, where they would hear a small panel of experts debate the assigned topic. They would then join in the debate and later, during small dinner working sessions, draft a resolution outlining alternative courses which would be designed to spur state action on that subject.

The following day, the chairman of each section meeting would report back to the full Commission with a suggested resolution. The entire Commission would then be expected to take action on each of the 12 resolutions.

The governor and legislators of each of the member states would then have guidance from the most important educational and political leaders in the nation on 12 vital, and sometimes controversial topics.

Details of the plan follow:

Who Would Attend Section Meetings

There are presently 266 commissioners, seven each from 38 states. With 12 sections, there would be an average of about 22 commissioners in each section. Observers would be allowed but could only observe; could not discuss or vote.

Mechanics

Each commissioner would receive, at least a month in advance of the meeting, a section selection card on which all 12 sections would be listed. He would be asked to put a priority number by each of the 12 panels showing in what order he would choose to attend them if he had a choice. The staff would then try to give persons their first choice, based on first-come, first-served -- but also on a balance between educators and politicians. A computer would make final objective decisions as to who would attend each section. Two weeks before the meeting, each commissioner would receive a background paper regarding the subject he would be discussing in his section. Each section meeting would be led by a panel of experts on the assigned subject, probably no more than five nor less than three. A very strong chairman would be hand-picked by the staff. He would have to be able to control his panelists and the audience. Most important, he would have to be able to develop a lot of talk into a resolution containing alternatives for action. A recorder to take notes and aid the chairman would be designated in each section.

The night before the first meeting day, panel chairmen and panelists (only) would be invited to a dinner meeting where several items would be stressed:

1. No speeches by panelists; each chairman is to allow no more than 3 minutes to any speaker at one time, be he panelist or from floor. A stop watch would be supplied each chairman and he would be ordered to use it.

2. The talk must be resolved into resolution form by the end of the first day. This means debate must be cut-off and drafting attempts begun by 5:30 p.m. at the latest. It would be stressed that no panel would have done its job unless it turned out a positive resolution outlining useful alternatives for state action by that night. To help facilitate this, the chairman and panelists and recorder would be asked to draft a sample resolution which would be distributed to the audience so that they would have something on paper from which to work at dinner. After the cocktail party, each section would reconvene over dinner and approve a final resolution. The final forms of the resolutions would be taken to one staff man in a designated room between the hours of 10:00 p.m. and 11:00 p.m. He would give them to the production man who would run off enough copies of each to distribute to all commissioners the following morning.

The entire second day of the conference would be spent with each of the 12 chairmen presenting his resolution, leading discussion on it, and having the full Commission vote on it. Each recommendation of alternatives for action would then have the force of the full Commission behind it.

Criteria For Choice of Panel Topics

Criteria for the selection of the 12 topics below was as follows:

1. Empirical judgement would indicate that the item has promise of improving education in the states.

2. Each item has been identified as being of current interest, and perhaps even controversial, in the field of education.

3. By and large, further research would not clarify necessary action on the item.

4. Political and educational leaders could help clarify the potential importance of state action on the item, and could help direct the type of action which should be implemented.

5. The item is the type that states could take legislative or administrative action on for the betterment of education.

Panel Topics Chosen

It is hoped that following the lengthy discussion which each topic will stimulate the commissioners will draft a resolution outlining alternative solutions to the problem at hand. By listing alternative solutions, rather than a single solution, the Commissioners will avoid preempting legislative prerogative in any state; instead, they will merely point up to legislators in a brief, concise way what the alternatives are. Legislators will then be free to choose the alternative, or combination of alternatives, which best suits their state, if any do. Thus, the Commission will be providing leadership for state action without attempting to preempt decision-making in each state.

1. What are the advantages of early childhood education?

The systems which have resulted from Project Headstart have proven to the general public something that educators have known but have done little about for years -- the earlier a child begins school, the better his chances are for success.

This is especially true with children from deprived homes.

Political and educational leaders in other states are looking at various plans to get children into a formal education program earlier than at present.

The general public, polls show, has reached the general consensus that early childhood education is beneficial.

A resolution encompassing the advantages of various types of early childhood education, would be helpful to educational and political leaders in each state in forming their legislative and administrative programs.

For instance, the Commissioners in this section might list as alternative recommendations any or all of the following: (these are only examples) a.) each state should mandate kindergarten attendance for all 5-year-olds.

b.) each state should mandate kindergarten attendance for every 5-year old who comes from a family earning less than $3,500 a year.

c.) only the more populous states with large urban areas should mandate attendance for 5-year-olds.

d.) each state should mandate kindergarten for five-year-olds and the more populous states with large urban areas should mandate attendance also for 4-year-olds from families earning less than $3,500 annually.

e.) an extra grade should be added below the first grade in every state and the 12th grade should be eliminated; this way children could begin school a year earlier without additional cost to the state.

2. What are the advantages of using para-professional workers in the education process?

Today, there is a great shortage of competent teachers in almost every field. Yet, we still are misusing teachers' time by having them do menial tasks which could be done as speedily and efficiently by para-professional workers. In these days of exploding knowledge, these teachers' time could be better spent in learning more about their subject matter areas and better methods of conveying this knowledge to their pupils in an exciting and stimulating manner. Also, the effecient use of sub-professional workers has proven to be more economical. For these reasons, it is very important that techniques be developed at a state level to rain, certify and advance the usage of sub-professional workers in the education process.

3. What are the advantages for having each state or group of states draw up a master plan for all of education?

Master planning in the field of higher education is not new. But no state or group of states has ever taken a total look at all of the education needs from preschool through graduate school and come up with a single master plan. There is only a certain amount of resources at a state level that can be allocated to education in any given year. A state must also allocate its funds to other areas of need.

Instead of looking at the total picture of its educational needs, however, and allocating its resources accordingly, states today examine minute facets of the overall problem individually. Elementary-secondary needs are completely apart from higher education needs in the examination, yet the competition for funds between the two surely exists.

Such a master plan for all of education would have to encompass first, a survey of needs followed by a plan to meet those needs. This plan could include not only financial aspects, but could include such important aspects of long-range planning as the need for teachers and professors, classrooms, equipment and supplies, salary increments,new campuses, transportation, etc.

4. What are the advantages of each state or group of states having a separate master plan for higher education?

This is one of the most volatile topics in the field of higher education today, because of the conflict over the types of coordination and administrative structures used in coordination efforts. Before a state can really determine the type of structure it needs, it must take a careful look at the total higher education problem in a given state or group of states and must have some idea of the direction in which it hopes to go in order to render proper service.

The master plan seems to be the base upon which all of this structure hinges, although quite frequently, a state will have a coordinating program which helps evolve a master plan.

The question today seems not to be whether states or groups of states should have master plans, but instead what types of coordination should be included in those master plans. Should a plan include or exclude private education, for instance? Should there be one board over all public higher education units or should universities, four-year colleges and two-year colleges each have separate boards with another coordinating board? Should this coordinating board be composed of lay members or administrators from the various types of institutions, or both?

5. How far should legislatures go in influencing instructional programs in schools?

There is a growing feeling on the part of some school people that legislatures are increasing their influence in the instructional program, and are probably getting into areas where they are really not competent. This is probably due to the failure of local communities to pick-up the real educational needs and do something about them at the local level. In other words, it's actually the counterpart for what's going on within the Federal Government -- where the Federal Government is picking up the needs based upon state policy and attempting to do something about it.

This particular topic, will be extremely controversial and will have real value, particularly if some lines can be drawn and clarifications made for both educators and legislators regarding those fields of decision-making in which they are most competent to perform.

6. What are the advantages of establishing an equal opportunities commission in each state?

One of the greatest social problems today, and certainly one on which a great deal of publicity is being released, deals with whether each and every child has an equal opportunity, regardless of race or religion to have access to a quality education. The pressure to solve this particular problem is primarily coming from the Federal Government. The Federal Government deals with 25,000 school districts. It seems only logical that if you're going to attempt to change attitudes and approaches toward the equal opportunities for each child, it could be done more effectively by the state. The differences in regions and attitudes inherent in certain parts of the country would enable the state to more readily develop a program best suited to meet the needs of the people in that particular area while still achieving the sought-after goal.

7. How can states help utilize the talent of its college and university faculties in a systematized manner to improve the state?

This is a purpose which many universities and colleges do not accept -- to use their particular talents to help solve the state's problems. Many faculties feel that a university's sole purpose is to search for truth. But some think of truth only in a theoretical or abstract since, rather than applying these truths to concrete problems of air pollution, transportation, waste disposal, water, and other knotty problems facing each state today. There is a growing tendency on the part of governors and state legislators today to expect state-supported institutions -- and even private institutions -- to help states solve these problems by the use of the brainpower on their campuses. This is probably a good and reasonable trend, and should be encouraged. A resolution urging states to develop systematic methods of utilizing this talent with fair remuneration for those consultants used should be adopted.

8. How can states best help strengthen their departments of education?

Each state has a department of education which as a Chief State School Officer who is responsible, to some degree, for allocating state funds to various educational programs. Despite these similarities, comparisons show that there are vast differences in the staffing, organization, functions, financing and, therefore, influence of state departments of education.

Many states have various unique problems which need to be solved if their departments are to be effective in providing leadership in the educational program of the public schools. Low salaries limit competition for personnel in some; in many, there is too little state financial support. Others are plagued by restrictive legal limitations, in adequate professional leadership, partisan political interference, and an increased demand for state's services from taxpayers who don't want to pay any extra for these services. Further, the very organizational structure in some states which have elective Chief State School Officers and appointive boards makes efficiency of operation impossible.

State departments of education must be strengthened if quality is to be raised for they must provide the leadership toward quality. As more federal aid comes into education, these state departments will have an increasingly important relationship with the Federal Government. New roles will be demanded of these state departments to meet the challenges of change.

There are many ways in which various departments could be strengthened. Among these are included a re-examination of the legal structure, improvement in state financial support, an establishment of better relations between the leadership of the state departments and other educational and political leadership in each state.

9. How can institutions of higher learning better their teaching without sacrificing important research programs?

Originally, the sole purpose of a college or university, be it public or private, was to impart knowledge to students. Gradually, this role changed. Research to gain new knowledge and better society has, over the years, gained more and more importance on every campus. Today, on many campuses, in fact on some of our most prestigious campuses, teaching has taken a secondary place to research. The most renown professors and scholars on many campuses are involved solely, or at least a majority of their time, in research. On some campuses, the majority of undergraduate teaching is done by teaching assistants -- other students.

Many fear that the time has come when the cart is pulling the horse. Many feel strongly that the primary role of colleges and universities, be they public or private, is still the imparting of knowledge to students.

It is important that states take the leadership in redefining the primary purposes of colleges and universities so that there is a proper balance between teaching and research. Should the states fail to do this, it is feared that a public ground swell will cause the pendulum to swing so far the other way that important research might be minimized or even excluded.

10. How can state governments modernize their structure so that their policy decisions regarding education are approved in advance by a broad base of population?

For instance, one of the greatest problems in education today is the question of who decides policy matters concerning education at a state level. Each state must recognize that policies in education today must be jointly developed by those trained and/or interested in education, welfare, civil rights, law enforcement, health, labor, business, mental health, and lay citizens whose children are affected and whose taxes support the schools. If states do not structure policy-making in educational matters on this broad base of knowledge and interest, the Federal Government will be forced to turn directly to local governments, which have already grasped this modern concept of educational policy development.

The subsequent battle for power between the local and state leadership over federal money coming into the state would automatically lessen any chance of such federal programs working well. This is not just conjecture on the part of the staff. There are many instances where this is already the case.

State governments must adopt this modern concept of broad educational policy development if they expect the Federal Government to move away from categorical aid and switch to general aid, as a majority of educational and political leaders desire. General aid simply will not be made available to the states at the state level until such modern machinery is set up and operating well.

A resolution encompassing the need for this direction in each state would be helpful in getting state leaders to structure policy-making on a broad base.

11. What criteria should be used in determining minimum salaries and state salary structures for teachers?

In many states, there is no "system," as such, for determining minimum salaries or state salary structures for teachers. In some states, the entire matter is left to local school districts while in others the state does set a minimum salary and basic salary structure.

There seems to be a consensus that each state should set a minimum salary for its teachers, since there is a definite correlation between the salary scale and the quality of education in states.

But whether salary structures are determined by the state, or by local districts, having criteria available on which these structures could be based would be very helpful. A discussion of what these criteria are would be helpful both to state and local districts, especially if some alternative criteria could be suggested.

12. What should be the role of junior college, community college and two-year branch of universities as related to vocational-technical education?

A great deal of in-fighting is presently going on in many junior colleges, community colleges and two-year branches of university systems between those who would like to minimize the teaching of vocational-technical education and those who would like to minimize the academic orientation of these kinds of schools. There seems to be a general consensus that these types of institutions should offer both academic and vocational-technical curricula. The argument usually centers around how much of each.

A discussion of this problem might lead to the formulation of some alternatives for establishing criteria which would help states determine what would be best for their junior colleges, community colleges or the two-year branches of their universities.

Sample Time Table

Denver Commission Meeting

Monday

9:00 - 9:30	Welcoming, keynote address, introduction of notables.
9:30 - 10:15	Housekeeping items.
10:15 - 12:15	Progress report on studies.
12:30 - 2:00	Separate luncheons for legislators, governors, and other commissioners.
2:15 - 5:15	Break up into 12 sections which will discuss assigned topic in order to later approve a resolution containing alternatives designed to spur state action on assigned subject.
5:15 - 6:15	Drafting committee composed of chairman, recorder and panelists draw up resolution.
6:30 - 7:45	Reception for all.
7:45 - 9:30	Individual working session dinners where each section discusses and approves resolution.
10:00 - 11:00	Resolutions reproduced in quantity for distribution to entire Commission.

Tuesday

9:00 - 12:15	First six chairmen report with resolution, 1/2 hour each for discussion and vote.
12:30 - 2:00	Luncheon with speaker.
2:15 - 5:15	Remaining six chairmen report with resolution, 1/2 hour each for discussion and vote.
5:15 - 5:30	Closing remarks to end meeting.
6:00 - 7:15	Reception
7:30 - 9:00	Final banquet and speaker.

ITEM B-3

PROGRESS REPORT ON LONG-RANGE INFORMATION SERVICES PROGRAM OF THE COMMISSION

Attached is a copy of the prospectus describing the proposed feasibility study designed to determine the Commission's Information Services Program on a long-range basis.

If the prospectus meets with the approval of the Steering Committee, it will be distributed to several philanthropic organizations in hopes of raising the $135,000 necessary to commence the study.

Authorization to begin the study as soon as the money is in hand was already given to the staff by the Steering Committee at the Newport meeting. Therefore, no further formal action is required by the Steering Committee at this time.

In order to effectively implement these vital aims, we believe the Commission must establish a practical program of gathering, storing, and disseminating educational information. The scope of such a service should be in keeping with current and future needs of public policy-makers in education, but should not needlessly duplicate existing or planned educational data services.

In order to define the Commission's role in information services, we plan to:

I. Identify Present and Future Needs of the Educational and Political Leadership Within the States.

II. Inventory Existing and Planned Information Sources in Other Agencies That Bear Upon Needs.

III. Ascertain How Much of Available Information is in a Form Useful to Decision-makers.

IV. Define the Specific Information Services Which the Commission Should Provide and Recommend the Means to Provide Them.

I. Identify Present and Future Needs of the Educational and Political Leadership Within the States

Development of the Commission's role in information services requires a study plan which is orderly, yet flexible. While the Commission's staff is convinced that there is a need for recent and pertinent information and analysis, the extent, scope and kinds of queries to be expected are relatively unknown. Rather than initiate a data center which might gradually be adapted to meet the real needs of the states' educational and political leadership, a more economical and efficient approach would be to ascertain what is really needed in comparison and compare it with what is available or planned.

As the initial step in developing the program, representative potential users of the Commission's Information Services should be contacted to determine their information needs, both present and future, and the time interval necessary between inquiry and response. From this survey, information volume by subject area and user can be estimated and tentative priorities established. Without an independent and objective analysis of information needs and how the Commission can best fulfill them, there is the risk of initiating a program which does not meet the Commission's goals and users' needs.

In accomplishing this important phase, the following representative questions should be answered in detail:

- Who will be the primary users of information?
- What is the breadth of information needed?
- How frequently is similar information requested?
- To what extent would analyses and interpretation be required?
- How fast is information needed?

- What types and levels of other related services would be desired?
- To what extent can users' needs be anticipated?

These are complex and difficult needs to define. Therefore, it would be unwise at this time to overly specify an approach. Generally, the present plan of approach includes:

- Preparation of a preliminary interview guide for review with a selected panel composed of representative political and educational leaders. This guide will include a flexible list of current and predicted problem areas about which current data would likely be needed.
- Pretesting of guides with a representative sample of potential users.
- Finalization of guidelines with help of the selected panel.
- Selection of representative executive, legislative, and educational leaders to assure appropriate coverage.
- In-depth interview with each leader.
- Analysis and summarization of findings for review by the selected panel to define information needs of policy-makers in public education.
- Evaluation of determined needs by the Steering Committee and, if required, by the full Commission. (Commission composition: seven representatives from each member state -- one member is the Governor; two are members of the State legislature selected by its respective houses and serving in such manner as the legislature may determine; and four are appointed by and serve at the pleasure of the Governor.

II. Inventory Existing and Planned Information Sources in Other Agencies That Bear Upon Needs.

The Commission staff, with assistance and counsel from Ernst & Ernst, has preliminarily surveyed current and planned information services which have a significant bearing on this study proposal.

Our review has encompassed:

- The Educational Research Information Center (ERIC), including current and presently planned clearinghouses.
- Office of Education project for a center of statistical and management information.
- National Education Association statistics, sampling approach, and research projects.
- American Education Research Association.
- Midwestern States Educational Information Project (extension of Iowa Educational Information Center) statistical data bank for educators and school administrators in 13 participating states.
- Project Talent's data bank for the study of characteristics (achievements, aptitudes, and interests) school performance of the Nation's youth.
- National Referral Center for Science and Technology.

In addition, the Commission staff has reviewed information needs and methods of information exchange with the planning committees of various state education departments. The staff has also surveyed various non-educational information files of organizations including the American Chemical Society, the Ohio State Bar Association, and the American Society for Metals.

Thus, the second phase of the study would be to prepare a comprehensive inventory of educational information sources as these relate to determined needs. Federal, state, university, association, and private sources would have to be studied in enough depth to insure a relatively complete description. This inventory should assist greatly in identifying those information areas upon which the Commission should focus its attention. Sources of information would be classified and prepared as an index or catalogue.

The approach to this segment of the over-all study is, of course, dependent upon earlier findings. Authorities would be consulted and sources identified as these relate to determined needs. Non-duplicated information sources would be catalogued as to coverage, type, and scope by using individual and institutional contacts. Data restrictions, time required to obtain such information, and the form or purpose of such sources would be summarized.

III. Ascertain How Much of Available Information is in a Form Useful to Decision-makers.

This brief review has served to point up the myriad available statistics, primarily related to quantified data, and selective abstracting. The users of these data are often ill-defined and their real information needs often unfilled. The user of these services is expected to know where else to go to obtain further information, and can easily get lost in the maze.

Concurrently, there is too much of a time lag from research to publication of research summaries. In addition, we found no summaries of current information designed specifically to help political leaders make decisions. The Commission should attempt to end both the time lag and the information lack.

As Governor Sanford observed in a keynote address to the Commission, public policy-makers require up-to-date data, and even more important, they need informed trend analyses, interpretation and counsel.

Relating user needs to information sources, we would determine:

- Types of information the Commission should generate, store, and disseminate.
- Best method to compile, store, and disseminate this information, including a consideration of automatic data processing.
- Best method to keep such information current.

Answers to these questions must be determined on the basis of economics, and the speed and frequency with what data must be retrieved and updated.

IV. Define the Specific Information Services Which the Commission Should Provide and Recommend the Means to Provide Them.

It appears that the Commission can be most effective, not in compiling additional data, but in pioneering concepts and techniques to obtain timely information, disseminate information in a useful form, and provide the analysis and interpretation essential for informed action. Original data should be compiled only where it is not already available.

The other varied operations of the Commission would be affected by the plan chosen, for we would have to consider and determine over-all requirements with regard to policies, organization and staffing, current and planned programs, publications and public relations, cooperation with other agencies, financing and budgets, and planning of physical space requirements. These would affect the nature, extent, and location of Commission staffing required.

An important by-product of the proposed Information Services Program would be to assist the Commission to identify deficiencies in information and to determine conflicts in educational data or its interpretation. This knowledge would help initiate needed research.

A determination would be made of how the Commission should cooperate with other organizations involved in education information. Where there are gaps in educational information services, an evaluation would be made of whether the Commission or some other agency should provide such unavailable data. This decision would be based in part on the means, feasibility, and financing necessary to provide the needed data.

PROJECT PROCEDURE AND ESTIMATE

Based upon the foregoing outline, we estimate the anticipated time and expense costs to complete this proposed project as follows:

	Time Cost Estimates by Phase
I.	$35,000
II.	25,000
III.	15,000
IV.	40,000
Total		$115,000
Expenses (travel, and subsistance)		20,000
		$135,000

A detailed analysis of these costs will be prepared as required.

Fundamental techniques to be used in this study will include panels and steering committees, individual interviews, and clearly defined staff responsibilities. Contemplated panels include the Steering Committee of the Commission; representative administrators from the various levels of public education; and Federal, state, and private representatives of information centers. Individual interviews will be held with Governors, legislators, and appropriate staff associates of representative states; certain association executives; public education trustees, board members; and with administrators at all levels of public education.

Staff representatives and consultants will include specialists from a number of fields: education, information storage and retrieval, library science, data processing, management and organization planning, statistics, economics and government, and finance.

CONCLUSION

Based upon our review to date, obtaining and updating interpretative information on a planned and coordinated basis is vital if the Commission is to suggest alternatives and guidelines for those who must make policy decisions affecting education at the state level. Thus, the Information Services Program would be the key to a close working relationship with the multitude of educational agencies, key administrators and lawmakers throughout the United States. The Program would greatly assist the Commission in achieving its objective as an effective force in developing and coordinating better educational policies and practices throughout the Nation, without duplicating the work of existing agencies and organizations.

Most important, for the first time it would enable legislators to have current, accurate, carefully-interpreted data in synopsis form which would hopefully be used in drafting legislation for the most effective public education.

ITEM B-4

REPORT ON THE INTERIM COMMUNICATIONS PROGRAM OF THE COMMISSION

Attached is a copy of a memorandum which contains recommendations concerning the Commission's public relations program for the coming year.

These recommendations have been adopted and will constitute the Commission's interim program in this area until the long-range program can be formulated from the recommendations to be contained in the Ernst and Ernst report.

TO: Wendell H. Pierce

October 21, 1966

FROM: Ronald Moskowitz/jr

RE: Recommendations concerning the Commission's Public Relations program for the coming year.

In an organization which stresses communication and providing ideas for educational and political leaders, no department is more important than Public Relations. The Commission has many publics, each of which needs to be told different things at different times: its Executive Committee, its Steering Committee, its commissioners as a whole; the professional education organizations, the legislators, the governors, congress, the President, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the U.S. Office of Education, the various community action groups at a local state, regional and national level.

It is important that we reach each of these publics. In order to reach all of them, we must be doing something worthwhile; be skillful in telling about it.

Most of the ways in which we communicate with these publics will be through various written communications produced in our service center. (See accompanying memo.) It is recommended that:

1. Every written communication distributed in quantity outside the offices of the Commission shall be read for accuracy, content and style by the Assistant Director for Public Relations, and that his work shall be read by the Associate Director for State and Public Relations before going into production.

This is in keeping with our standard policy, perhaps the very first ever established for the Commission, that we should avoid pedaguese, and speak and write in plain English whenever and wherever possible.

2. A standard style be adopted for all printed materials coming out of the Commission and that that style follow the Associated Press Style Book, which emphasizes concise, clear sentences and short words familiar to all.

3. Special reports go out each Friday to the Steering Committee on a Staff Action form, reviewing the work of the staff for the previous week.

4. Special efforts be made to keep the Executive Committee informed by letter on almost a daily basis, if necessary, of any significant happening in the Commission offices.

5. The entire Commission receive each month, at the first of the month, a report summarizing significant action by the staff during the preceeding month.

6. Professional organizations receive special monthly reports from our Associate Directors, outlining our achievements and problems in their particular areas. The Associate Director for Higher Education would draft a report to professional organizations dealing with higher education; the Associate Director for Elementary-Secondary, for those organizations; ad infinitum for Junior Colleges, Research and Public Relations people.

7. State legislators and congressmen, and other governmental officials get no special reports at the end of the month, since the Compact Review of Education is designed to communicate specifically to them.

8. A new Hot Line memorandum form, for commissioners only, be used to announce very significant happenings, such as approval of a foundation grant.

9. Press releases be sent as often as there is something news worthy to report. Feature stories may be sent third class, but spot news, such as coverage from a Steering Committee meeting, should be mailed first class and air-mail to the Coast, so that it truly will be news worthy when it arrives. Along this line, it is further recommended that addressed, posted envelopes, ready for stuffing be taken with the staff to Steering Committee meetings and that a press release be written each afternoon of the two-day meeting and mailed out from the meeting site. It is further recommended that in order to facilitate the production of these press releases, one of the two production personnel attend every Steering Committee meeting. Although the decision has been made to use a court reporting service for an official transcript, a tape of the proceedings would still be very desirable. Sections of it could be made into radio broadcasts. It could also be used to refresh the memory of reporters who might have missed a portion of the meeting. One of the duties of the production man at these meetings would be to record the tape properly. A hundred other unforeseen details would keep him jumping the rest of the two days. The facilities of the A. B. Dick Company in each meeting city could be used for the actual duplicating work. Besides press releases, the production man might also be called upon to duplicate speeches which are given at the meetings by guests, since most of them always only have one copy with them.

10. A tape recorder which has speeds from 1-7/8 to 7-1/2 should be purchased for use by the Commission. The rental on the machine we used to transcribe the Newport tapes ran more than $100. and that rental can be applied toward the purchase of a machine.

11. A small, two-color flier-type brochure, with plenty of illustrations should be published at once. It should very briefly state the history and summarize the aims and present activities of the Commission and include some detail on how the commissioners are appointed and how the Commission operates. It would also include the list of state members, a list of the Steering Committee and staff, with a notation that for further information they could write or call us. This would allow us to acquaint new people with the Commission without the expense of sending them a Green Book. We have an order now for 1600 Green Books from Illinois. A flier would have served equally as well, and cost us 2¢ a piece, instead of 24¢ a piece. Distribution of the Green Book would then be limited to legislators and governors in prospective member states.

11. The Commission should, and must, start charging for large quantities of brochures or Green Books or fliers when they are sent to anyone except persons or organizations that could help us recruit or keep state members.

The little guy in San Diego who wants 50 for his political science class should be charged, since California is already a member and one would probably do as well anyway. A standard form on a postcard should be printed up for these people, saying thank you for your request for information about the Commission. If you will please send us a check for $2, we will put you on our mailing list for a year. The same notice should be sent to everyone on our general mailing list, since it is limited to people who have written in for information. The $2 would include a subscription to the Compact Review of Education, and that fact should be stated on the card. This is in accordance with the policies outlined by WICHE, The Council of State Governments, and almost every other organization which is at all comparable to ours. A good time to impliment that policy would be January 1, at the beginning of a new subscription year.

12. All speeches should be written in speech blocks -- several paragraphs of information that can be pieced together, depending on the type of audience and length of speech.

13. Every time any professional staff member plans a business trip, a note should go immediately to the Assistant Director for Public Relations, so that he can make a publicity evaluation plan of the trip. News media in cities where speeches are to be given can get advance notice this way and provide coverage we may not otherwise get. Likewise, the speech-writing unit will have plenty of time to start planning ahead the piecing together of some speech blocks.

14. The Commission subscribe to a press clipping service which would limit its services to supplying us with clippings about the Commission itself. This will enable us to find out what kind of a public image we have, if any, and take steps to improve it. It costs about 20¢ per clipping.

ITEM B-5

PROGRESS REPORT ON STATE MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN

AND STATE-BY-STATE SUMMARY

An oral report will be given to Steering Committee members at the meeting on the Commission's campaign to adhere states to the Compact for Education by legislation.

ITEM C-1

SITE FOR DENVER HEADQUARTERS

The Site Procurement Sub-Committee of the Education Commission of the States met in Denver on Saturday, November 12, to review sites for the Denver headquarters.

Members of the Sub-Committee are Governor John Love of Colorado, Mrs. Richard B. Kading, Jr., and Senator Richard Webster.

The report of the sub-committee was made on November 16, 1966, to the Executive Committee by Senator Webster. The Executive Committee voted to recommend to the Steering Committee that it:

1. Authorize the establishment of the permanent headquarters of the Education Commission of the States in the Lincoln Towers Building in Denver, Colorado between January 15 and February 1, 1967; and authorize the Executive Director to negotiate a lease for two years with the building's management at the rate of $4.50 per square foot per annum; and that the lease contain options for additional one-year increments at the discretion of the lessee.

2. Specify that all new personnel hired by the Commission be officed in Denver, rather than requiring new personnel to make two moves; and specify that the entire operation would move to Denver no later than July 1, 1967.

3. Request the staff to be on the lookout for a site for a Commission Building which could be erected after several years when the Commission has a better idea of how much and what kind of space needs it would require.

A resolution is attached for your action.

RESOLUTION C-1

WHEREAS there is a need to establish a permanent office of the Education Commission of the States in accordance with the Commission's policy that it be in the Denver area, and

WHEREAS the Site Procurement Sub-Committee has made its recommendations to the Executive Committee and has secured the concurrance of the Executive Committee,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee of the Education Commission of the States herewith:

1. Authorizes the establishment of the permanent headquarters of the Education Commission of the States in the Lincoln Towers Building in Denver, Colorado between January 15 and February 1, 1967; and authorizes the Executive Director to negotiate a lease for two years with the building's management at the rate of $4.50 per square foot per annum, with options for additional one-year increments at the discretion of the lessee.
2. Specifies that all new personnel hired by the Commission be officed in Denver, rather than requiring new personnel to make two moves; and specifies that the entire operation move to Denver no later than July 1, 1967.
3. Requests the staff to be on the lookout for a site for a Commission Building which could be erected after several years when the Commission has a better idea of how much and what kind of space needs it would require.

ITEM C-2

BUDGET AND STAFFING

On October 7, a memorandum was sent to members of the Executive Committee, outlining our staffing and budgetary problems, and asking for permission to request additional funds from the Danforth and Carnegie foundations. Permission was granted.

On October 31, a letter was sent to each member of the Executive Committee, notifying him that letters had gone out to Alan Pifer and Merrimon Cuninggim requesting an additional $492,000 to carry the Commission's maintenance and operation budget until January 1, 1968.

Attached are copies of various financial reports, a letter from Ernst & Ernst to the Commission, and a forecast of cash flow for the 16-month period ending January 31, 1968.

An oral report will be given on the results of those communications with Messrs. Pifer and Cuninggim by the Executive Director. The treasurer will deliver the financial report. The Executive Director will then discuss staffing and new organizational concepts.

BALANCE SHEET
EDUCATION COMMISSION OF THE STATES
October 31, 1966

ASSETS

Current Assets
Cash in the bank	$16,158.79
Petty cash	25.00
Accounts receivable - states	34,000.00
Accounts receivable - foundations	75,000.00
Investments - short term	77,689.62	$202,873.41
Deposits and Advances		425.00
Permanent Assets
Furniture and fixtures	$ 9,452.43
Leasehold improvements	1,707.94
Equipment	19,652.78	30,813.15
Total Assets		$234,111.56

LIABILITIES AND FUND BALANCES

Current Liabilities
Federal income tax withheld	$ 1,656.50
Other payroll taxes withheld	520.79
T.I.A.A. withheld	420.84
Accrued payroll taxes	490.87	$ 3,089.00
Deferred Income		109,000.00
Unexpended General Funds
Balance July 1, 1966	$129,941.93
Excess of expenses over income - four months ended October 31, 1966	7,919.37
	$122,022.56
Investment in equipment	30,813.15
General fund balance		91,209.41
Property and Equipment Fund		30,813.15
		$234,111.56

STATEMENT OF INCOME AND EXPENSES - GENERAL FUND
EDUCATION COMMISSION OF THE STATES
October 31, 1966

	Month of October	Year to-date
Income
State entrance fees	$ -0-	$16,000.00
Foundation grants	-0-	50,000.00
Registration fees	-0-	6,385.00
Interest on investments	-0-	208.21
Total Income	$ -0-	$72,593.21
Expenses
Salaries	$ 9,999.80	$25,522.24
Staff procurement expenses	226.09	3,254.93
Payroll fringe	393.47	1,758.55
Employee benefits	-0-	289.80
Rent	1,279.04	3,134.08
Equipment rentals	133.09	301.61
Postage	155.65	1,296.63
Supplies	1,809.81	2,723.65
Printing and duplicating	660.98	2,965.42
Printing and duplicating - other	1,159.41	2,183.72
Travel - staff	1,168.67	4,614.12
Steering Committee meetings	2,438.92	14,278.52
Steering Committee travel	1,287.55	7,852.34
Other conferences	3,067.95	3,582.33
Telephone and telegraph	921.17	2,767.78
Consultation fees	712.65	712.65
Legal fees	826.01	1,151.01
Books and periodicals	142.00	270.77
Secretarial services	406.50	1,070.75
Shipping charges	-0-	218.50
Miscellaneous	525.20	563.18
	$27,313.96	$80,512.58
Excess of expenses over income	$27,313.96	$ 7,919.37

COMPARISON OF FORECAST AND ACTUAL EXPENSE
EDUCATION COMMISSION OF THE STATES

4 Months Ended October 31, 1966

	July Expenses	Forecast Expenses August-October	Total	Actual Expenses July-October	Actual (Over) Under Forecast
Salaries	$ 3,008.45	$ 26,400.00	$ 29,408.45	$ 25,522.24	$ 3,886.21
Staff procurement expenses	26.60	-0-	26.60	3,254.93	(3,228.33)
Payroll fringe	-0-)	3,350.00	3,350.00	2,048.35	1,301.65
Employee benefits	-0-)
Rent	75.00	3,150.00	3,225.00	3,134.08	90.92
Equipment rentals	69.47	-0-	69.47	301.61	(232.14)
Postage	1,000.00	500.00	1,500.00	1,296.63	203.37
Supplies	28.95	1,000.00	1,028.95	2,723.65	(1,694.70)
Printing & duplicating-magazine	-0-)
Printing & duplicating-other	) 314.39)	-0-	314.39	5,149.14	(4,834.75)
Travel - staff	1,449.12	1,100.00	2,549.12	4,614.12	(2,065.00)
Steering committee meetings	9,224.95)	10,000.00	22,951.70	22,130.86	820.84
Steering committee travel	) 3,726.75)
Other conferences	-0-	2,000.00	2,000.00	3,582.33	(1,582.33)
Telephone & telegraph	662.90	2,000.00	2,662.90	2,767.78	(104.88)
Consulting fees	-0-	1,500.00	1,500.00	712.65	787.35
Legal fees	-0-	-0-	-0-	1,151.01	(1,151.01)
Books and periodicals	20.00	-0-	20.00	270.77	(250.77)
Secretarial services	1,263.95	-0-	1,263.95	1,070.75	193.20
Shipping charges	218.50	-0-	218.50	218.50	-0-
Miscellaneous	-0-	-0-	-0-	563.18	(563.18)
	$21,089.03	$51,000.00	$72,089.03	$80,512.58	($8,423.95)

ITEM C-3

BONDING FOR COMMISSION EMPLOYEES

At the September meeting of the Steering Committee, the staff was asked to arrange bonds of $100,000 each for the Executive Director, the Treasurer, and the Office Manager.

Investigation of this matter showed that it would cost $1875 for three years to bond these three persons. However, a commercial blanket bond in the amount of $100,000 applicable to all employees would cost only $559 for three years.

The Executive Director requests that the Steering Committee change its authorization so that the blanket bond rather than the three bonds can be secured. In addition, it is also requested that authorization for comprehensive liability insurance and insurance on the office fixtures, furniture, and equipment should be given. The liability insurance would be in the minimum limits of $250,000-$500,000 bodily insurance liability and $100,000 property damage liability. This will include non-ownership auto liability. Its cost would be $57.00 per year. The other coverage on office furniture and equipment would cover us up to $25,000 for an annual cost of $68.00.

A resolution is attached for your action.

RESOLUTION C-3

WHEREAS, it is desirable for the employees of the Education Commission of the States to be bonded, and

WHEREAS, it is also desirable for the Commission to carry liability insurance and insurance on its office furniture, fixtures, and equipment,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee of the Education Commission of the States authorizes the Executive Director to arrange with the John J. Schiff and Co., Inc., Cincinnati, Ohio:

1. A commercial blanket bond in the amount of $100,000 applicable to all employees at a cost of $559 for three years.
2. Comprehensive liability insurance as follows: $250,000-$500,000 bodily liability and $100,000 property liability, at an annual cost of $57.00.
3. "All Risks" coverage in the amount of $25,000 on the office furniture, equipment and fixtures of the Commission at an annual cost of $68.00.

ITEM C-4

DATES AND SITES FOR NEXT THREE COMMISSION MEETINGS

The staff was asked to bring to the Steering Committee recommendations for the 1968, 1969 and 1970 Commission meeting dates and sites. Staff recommendations were made to the Executive Committee on November 16, 1966 in Washington, D. C. The Steering Committee, not the Commission itself, is charged with final responsibility for the selection. Following are the Executive Committee's recommendations:

1968, May 2 and 3, Thursday and Friday, East Coast, Miami Beach

1969, May 8 and 9, Thursday and Friday, West Coast, San Francisco

1970, May 7 and 8, Thursday and Friday, Central, Lake of the Ozarks.

The Thursday and Friday meeting days were chosen because although legislators are still in session, they usually only work the first three days of the week that late in Spring. This would allow legislators and governors to freely attend the session. We have chosen the first two weeks of May because it seems to be a good time for both educational and political leaders. It hits them before graduations and vacations begin and usually after the major portion of legislation has been attended to.

If these recommendations are adopted by you, arrangements can be made to secure definite commitments at major hotels for these conferences. Tentative commitments have already been made in Miami at the Fontainebleu, in San Francisco at the Fairmont, and at the Lake of the Ozarks, Missouri, at the Tan-Tar-A Resort Lodge.

You will note that the 1967 meeting is to be in Denver, in the central part of the country, on May 8 and 9, a Monday and Tuesday.

We anticipate, following these geographical precedents, that in 1971 the meeting would be on the East coast again, probably around New York City, and that the 1972 meeting would be on the West coast again, probably around Portland or Seattle, and that the 1973 meeting would again return to the central part of the United States.

A resolution for your action is attached.

RESOLUTION C-4

WHEREAS the staff and Executive Committee agree that it's useful to plan in advance the dates and sites of future commission meetings, and

WHEREAS the Steering Committee is charged with the responsibility of selecting dates and sites for Commission meetings, and

WHEREAS the Executive Committee has recommended that the Steering Committee choose the following dates and sites,

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the Steering Committee selects as the dates and sites for the next three meetings of the Education Commission of the States the following:

1968, May 2 and 3, Thursday and Friday, East Coast, Miami Beach

1969, May 8 and 9, Thursday and Friday, West Coast, San Francisco

1970, May 7 and 8, Thursday and Friday, Central, Lake of the Ozarks.

File

THE EDUCATION COMMISSION OF THE STATES

ESTABLISHED BY THE COMPACT FOR EDUCATION

File

NEGROES ELECTED TO STATE OFFICES IN THE SOUTH

~~(1966 -)~~
As of Spring, 1967

ALABAMA

Lucius Amerson	Sheriff Macon County
L. A. Locklair	Tax Collector Macon County
William C. Allen	Justice of the Peace Macon County
William C. Childs	Justice of the Peace Macon County
The Rev. V. A. Edwards	Board of Revenue Macon County
Harold Webb	Board of Revenue Macon County
Dr. Charles Gomillion	School Board Macon County
Mrs. Elizabeth H. Richardson	School Board Macon County
The Rev. K. L. Buford	City Council Tuskegee
Dr. Stanley H. Smith	City Council Tuskegee
Dr. T. S. Williams	City Council Tuskegee
The Rev. Peter Kirksey	School Board Greene County

ALABAMA CONTINUED

James R. Weatherly	County Coroner Sumter County
Clyde Foster	Mayor Triana
David Barnes	City Council Triana
Mrs. Jessie J. Bennie	City Council Triana
Joe L. Fletcher	City Council Triana
William Griffin	City Council Triana

ARKANSAS

Mrs. Mabel Allen	School Board Eudora District
Alex Brown	School Board Plum Bayou-Tucker
Mabon Gladney	School Board Lakeview District
DeArthur Grice	School Board Linwood District
Arthur H. Miller	School Board Collarway District
Maleada Thomas	School Board Jefferson County
Dr. Morris A. Jackson	School Board Little Rock
T. E. Patterson	School Board Little Rock
The Rev. James D. Alexander	City Council West Helena
Dr. R. Frank Bryant	City Council Pine Bluff

FLORIDA

Walter M. Jackson	School Board Board of Trustees Vero Beach
William Blackshear	City Commission Vero Beach
F. Malcolm Cunningham	City Council West Palm Beach
Mrs. Athalie Range	City Commission Miami
Robert Scott	City Council Lawtey
Boisy Walters	City Commission Denis

GEORGIA

Leroy Johnson	State Senate Fulton County
Horace T. Ward	State Senate Fulton County
William H. Alexander	State House of Rep. Fulton County
Julian Bond	State House of Rep. Fulton County
Benjamin D. Brown	State House of Rep. Fulton County
J. C. Daugherty	State House of Rep. Fulton County
The Rev. J. D. Grier	State House of Rep. Fulton County
Mrs. Grace T. Hamilton	State House of Rep. Fulton County
John Hood	State House of Rep. Fulton County
R. L. Dent	State House of Rep. Richmond County
Albert Thompson	State House of Rep. Muscogee County
Earl Beggs	County Commissioner Liberty County
Henry Curry	County Commissioner McIntosh County
Dr. Rufus E. Clement	School Board Atlanta
Dr. Horace E. Tate	School Board Atlanta

GEORGIA CONTINUED

O. V. Williamson	Board of Aldermen Atlanta
David C. Albert	City Council Augusta
B. L. Dent	City Council Augusta
The Rev. C. S. Hamilton	City Council Augusta

LOUISIANA

Peter Smith	MayoroPro Tem Grand Coteau
F. J. Atlas	School Board East Carroll Parish
J. W. Holmes	School Board Iberville Parish
Raymond Minor	School Board West Feliciana
Alvin White, Jr.	School Board West Feliciana

MISSISSIPPI

Robert Williams

School Board
Jefferson County

NORTH CAROLINA

Felton J. Chapel	City Council Southern Pines
C. C. Ross	City Council Winston-Salem
Carl H. Russell	City Council Winston-Salem
John S. Steward	City Council Durham
The Rev. E. B. Turner	City Council Lumberton
John W. Winters	City Council Raleigh
Howard Hunter	School Board Hertford County

SOUTH CAROLINA

Leroy Brown	County Board of Directors Beaufort County
Dave Jones	County Board of Directors Beaufort County
Booker Washington	County Board of Directors Beaufort County
Paul Murray	Road Commission Williamsburg County
Mrs. Hattie Sims	Magistrate, Gadsden Precinct Richland County
Joseph Stroy	Magistrate, Hopkins Precinct Richland County

TENNESSEE

A. W. Willis	State House of Rep. Shelby
J. O. Patterson	State House of Rep. Shelby
Russell Sugarmon	State House of Rep. Shelby
M/.G. Blakemore	State House of Rep. Davidson
Mrs. Dorothy Brown	State House of Rep. Davidson
Robert J. Booker	State House of Rep. Knox
Blair T. Hunt	School Board Shelby County
Albert Lockard	School Board Lauderdale County
Dan Nixon	Magistrate, 9th District Haywood County
A. D. Powell	Magistrate, 9th District Haywood County
Gladys Allen	County Court Fayette County
Herbert Bonner	County Court Fayette County
William Hazlitt	County Court Fayette County
Sherman Perry	County Court Fayette County
Mrs. Geraldine Johnson	County Court Fayette County

TENNESSEE CONTINUED

Charlie Minor	County Court Fayette County
Cooper Parks	County Court Fayette County
H. T. Lockhard	County Court Shelby County
Jesses Turner	County Court Shelby County
The Rev. Robert Richards	County Court Hamilton County
Mansfield Douglas	City Council Nashville
John Driver	City Council Nashville
Robert Lilliard	City Council Nashville
Z. Alexander Looby	City Council Nashville
Harold M. Love	City Council Nashville
Robert Scales	City Council Nashville

TEXAS

Miss Barbara Jordan	State Senate Harris
Curtis Graves	State House of Rep. Harris
Joseph Lockridge	State House of Rep. Dallas
I. W. Brown	City Council Malakoff
Arthur Guiéry	City Council Port Arthur
The Rev. S. H. James	City Council San Antonio
Scott Johnson	City Council Huntsville
John Miles	City Council Hearne
Dr. G. H. Radford	City Council Waco
Asberry Butler	School Board Houston
Mrs. Hattie N. White	School Board Houston

VIRGINIA

William M. Cooper	School Board Hampton
Dr. Thomas H. Henderson	School Board Richmond
Charles B. Hutchenson	School Board Lynchburg
David L. Mackler	School Board Portsmouth
Dr. Waldo Scott	School Board Newport News
B. A. Cephas	City Council Richmond
Henry L. Marsh III	City Council Richmond
Winfred Mundle	City Council Richmond
Eubria Dynd	City Council Royal Port
Oliver Fortune	City Council Royal Port
H. E. Fountleroy	City Council Petersburg
Joseph Owens	City Council Petersburg
Ernest A. Gaines	City Council Tappahannock
The Rev. Lawrence A. Davies	City Council Fredericksburg
James W. Holley	City Council Portsmouth
John Wilmer Porter	City Council Dumfries

File

POWER-PLAY FOR CONTROL OF EDUCATION

Educator
vs.
Politician

Government
vs.
Government

May 8-9, 1967
Brown Palace Hotel
Denver, Colorado

Sponsored by the Education Commission of the States

WHO WON?
A SUMMARY REPORT

From: MW
To: PW
File

NEGOTIATION NOW! BULLETIN

Vol I — No. 1 184 A National Citizens' Campaign For New Initiatives To End The War in Vietnam June 21, 1967

KEEP PACE WITH THE ACTION

This is the first issue of NEGOTIATION NOW! BULLETIN, publication of the Negotiation Now! campaign. It will keep you informed on the progress of the campaign, and should provide a valuable tool for reaching tens of thousands of Americans with our message and program. The BULLETIN will also present coverage and analysis of political events and trends having a direct bearing on the prospects for negotiations in Vietnam.

At this moment the BULLETIN is scheduled to appear every two weeks, but it can come out more often. With your help, both financial contributions and articles and reports of progress and activities from your local area we can publish on a weekly basis.

We are working right now to insure sufficent staff and facilities to do this. The rest is up to you.

Urge New Peace Initiatives:

50 State Lobby For Negotiation

All state delegations of the Negotiation Now! campaign will converge on the nation's capital on Wednesday, June 28th to lobby with Senators, Congressmen, and administration officials. John Kenneth Galbraith, former Ambassador

Nationwide Campaign Underway; 700,000 Petitions Circulated — Goal of Over Million Signatures

The campaign for Negotiation Now! is mushrooming at a pace far beyond all expectations. In less than a month since the effort got under way, requests have been filled for over 700,000 petitions urging new steps to end the Vietnam war. These have been mailed out to individuals and organizations in every state in the nation. The staff has been so busy just processing these orders that they have fallen behind in tabulating the thousands of signed petitions that keep pouring in.

The petition which calls upon the United States to "take the first step and end the bombing of North Vietnam now," and asks the N.L.F. and North Vietnam "to respond affirmatively to any new U.S. initiatives and to join with the U.S. in a standstill ceasefire" to achieve peace, may well turn out to be the most effective popular effort towards a solution to the war that has ever been made.

New sponsors for the campaign — such as Norman Podhoretz, editor of Commentary, Monsignor Edward Murray, Boston, Massachusetts and Victor Reuthers, Director of International Affairs, Industrial Union Dept., AFL-CIO — are being recruited almost daily from among major figures in religious organizations, trade unions and the liberal community.

BROAD SUPPORT

Urge New Peace Initiatives:

50 State Lobby For Negotiation

All state delegations of the Negotiation Now! campaign will converge on the nation's capital on Wednesday, June 28th to lobby with Senators, Congressmen, and administration officials. John Kenneth Galbraith, former Ambassador to India and President of Americans for Democratic Action, will address a luncheon meeting of the combined delegations and plans will be mapped out to further national and local aspects of the campaign.

Also there are prospects that some of the Senators who have been most outspoken in support of a negotiated settlement in Vietnam will be on hand to consult with the delegations.

The June 28th effort will replace all previously scheduled delegation dates that were postponed during the Middle East crisis.

It will constitute a major thrust of the Negotiation Now! lobbying efforts, but by no means the only one. There has been lobbying begun already by some of the state groups especially the one in Maryland; follow-up work to the 28th activity will be carried on through the summer, by all state organizations.

This concentrated effort is particularly timely given the present climate in Washington in regard to Vietnam. In the Congress, as recent polls show, the hawks are flying higher than the doves. The John Birch Society is launching a massive campaign against Senator Frank Church of Idaho who is up for reelection in '68, and many other peace-concerned Senators and Congressmen will be facing uphill battles to retain their seats. Right wingers have had considerable success in their demagogic efforts to link, in the public mind, the doves with those who have demanded immediate withdrawal. To counter this, 16 of the dove Senators and a number of Representatives recently issued a statement directed to Hanoi, stating that they, as well as the overwhelming majority of Americans that have been critical of United States policy in Vietnam, support a negotiated settlement and not unilateral withdrawal.

Because of the continuation of the stalemate in Vietnam, the Administration is reported to be reviewing its strategy. As a result a new debate is being initiated that will be reflected in public concern throughout the nation. The hawks again are arguing that another round of military escalation "will do the trick."

(Continued on Page 2)

PETITIONS POUR IN: Staff members in the Negotiation Now! headquarters sorting petitions in the day's mail.

New Coalition of Conscience Seeking Vietnam Settlement

One of the major aims of Negotiation Now! is to mobilize the support of a broad coalition of organizations and concerned citizens behind new initiatives for a political settlement in Vietnam. This commitment to building a majority movement is similar in conception to the "Coalition of Conscience" that successfully pressed for passage of the major civil rights bills.

An impressive start has been made in this direction. The initial list of sponsors of the campaign include the following major leaders of the Labor, liberal, Negro, religious, academic and business communities:

John K. Galbraith will address Washington delegations.

Rt. Rev. George W. Barrett, Bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Rochester; Robert S. Bilheimer, Director, International Affairs Programs, National Council of Churches; Norman Cousins, Editor, Saturday Review, New York; Marriner Eccles, Utah Mining and Construction, Salt Lake City; John Kenneth Galbraith, Chairman, Americans for Democratic Action, Cambridge; Harold K. Hochschild, Industrialist, New York; Dr. Martin Luther King, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Atlanta; Philip M. Klutznick, former Ambassador to United Nations, Chicago; Reinhold Niebuhr, Theologian, New York; Prof. Louis Pollak, Yale Law School, New Haven.

And Victor Reuther, Labor leader, Washington, D.C.; Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., Attorney, Washington, D.C.; Msgr. John Scanlon, Archdiocese of San Francisco; Arthur Schlessinger, Jr., Author and Historian, New York; William L. Shirer, Author, Torring-behind an astounding the thousands of signed petitions that keep pouring in.

(Continued on Page 3)

The petition which calls upon of North Vietnam now," and asks the N.L.F. and North Vietnam "to respond affirmatively to any new U.S. initiatives and to join turn out to be the most effective popular effort towards a solution to the war that has ever been made.

New sponsors for the campaign — such as Norman Podhoretz, editor of Commentary, Monsignor Edward Murray, Boston, Massachusetts and Victor Reuthers, Director of International Affairs, Industrial Union Dept., AFL-CIO — are being recruited almost daily from among major figures in religious organizations, trade unions and the liberal community.

BROAD SUPPORT

The aim of Negotiation Now! is to mobilize a groundswell of support for new peace initiatives both on a grass-roots level and among major socially concerned organizations and institutions that cannot be ignored by the nation's political leaders.

First efforts indicate that this can be done. The full page Negotiation Now! ad that went into the New York Times on May 7th (reprinted on page 4) received a response almost unprecedented in the history of peace activities, including contributions that more than doubled the cost of the ad and won support from every area of the country. Other successful ads have been placed in newspapers around the country and more are planned.

The campaign is filling a tremendous need for meaningful

(Continued on Page 3)

Threats To Peace Corps Signers Meet Protest, Renewed Efforts

Ninety-two U. S. Peace Corps volunteers serving in Chile have been warned by Jack Vaughn, Peace Corps Director, to disassociate their Peace Corps affiliation from a Negotiation Now! statement urging the U.S. government to cease the bombing of North Vietnam and to begin initiatives to end the war. Negotiation Now! has issued a strong protest against Vaughn's action.

According to reports received by the American Civil Liberties Union, 57 of the signees have been threatened with dismissal if they refuse to withdraw their names from the petition. These reports reveal that volunteers were read a memorandum sent by Vaughn, and approved by Ambassador Ralph Dungan in Chile, asking for the withdrawal of signatures and advising volunteers who refused to co-operate to resign if they disagreed with the Peace Corps' view that government employees should not sign a petition of this nature. Most of the signers have refused to comply.

Negotiation Now! sent letters to Mr. Vaughn and President Johnson demanding that no reprisals be taken against Peace Corps volunteers and issued a public statement to that effect. The letter to Mr. Vaughn went official publication of Negotiation Now!

(Continued on Page 2)

Negotiation Now! Bulletin

Vol. I — No. 1 June 21, 1967

Editorial and Business Offices: Room 819, 381 Park Ave. So., New York, N. Y. 10016.
Telephone: 212-889-4018 Free copies or bundles available.

A Better Choice

Negotiation Now! is gathering together a wide spectrum of Americans in public, religious and political life who agree that the United States must take new initiatives to bring an end to the war in Vietnam.

It is clear that neither side can win a meaningful military victory, and we believe it is immoral for either side to seek one.

The American people are being presented today with three bad choices in Vietnam — the present course of gradual escalation; an all-out military effort to win; or simply to pull out. We reject all these choices, and present in this campaign a program which we believe has some chances of success in bringing about negotiations and an end to the killing in this tragic conflict.

We believe America can lead the way to peace. Our purpose is to find solutions, not simply to condemn our government or lay blame on one side or the other for continuation of the war.

We believe, therefore, that deeds rather than words are now required to bring about needed changes in the response of North Vietnam and the National Liberation Front to peace proposals. By these actions we can restore the credibility of our declarations that we want a peaceful settlement.

In addition to seeking a million signatures to this statement, Negotiation Now! will bring to Washington delegations of community leaders from each of 50 states urging our Senators and Congressmen to support the effort.

We present this as a positive program which can be supported by all Americans and invite their participation in gathering signatures throughout the land to make visible their desire for an early, honorable end to this tragic war.

—Statement of Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., Vice-Chairman, Americans for Democratic Action announcing NEGOTIATION NOW!

Peace Corps

(Continued from Page 1)

on to request an immediate appointment to discuss the matter.

D.C. Lobby

(Continued from Page 1)

However, according to New York Times correspondant, William Beecher there are also voices

'Idea Whose Time Has Come'

MARY TEMPLE, National Director

The first public and official response to the crisis in the Middle East tended to downplay concern for the increasingly bloody and dangerous situation in Vietnam. But the swiftly changing events in that area appear to have opened new possibilities for bringing about consideration of international issues on a wider scale, which could include moves toward a settlement of the Vietnam war.

C. L. Sulzberger, New York Times columnist, whose views are far from "dovish," in his column on Sunday, June 10th, outlined a program for Vietnam. Some of the new peace initiatives he urged parallel those of Negotiation Now! It includes the proposal that there "be no quibbling [on the part of the U.S.] about credentials for other participants, including the Viet Cong" in negotiations, and that the President order "an immediate end to the bombing of North Vietnam." He added that this should be "accompanied by an expressed hope [that our] adversaries take note of these developments and perhaps make tangible moves of their own encouraging the prospects of talks."

Perhaps the most significant aspect of Sulzberger's column is in regard to the question of timing. He maintains that as a result of recent events in the Middle East "American prestige has risen." and that this is the moment "for decisive efforts to end the Vietnam war."

His column closed with a quote that should be encouraging to everyone connected with Negotiation Now! — "No army can withstand the strength of an idea whose time has come."

Senator Mike Mansfield underlined this view in an interview quoted in the Christian Science Monitor, saying he sees the "strong possibility of events in the Mideast presaging a de-escalation in Vietnam." He said the Mideast crisis has awakened the administration to the dangers of having more than one military commitment in the world at the same time.

"The elements are there now," said the Senator, "for a reassessment of the Vietnam situation and a renewed drive for negotiations."

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr. and Norman Cousins, speaking for Negotiation Now! at a meeting in

It is clear, from these and other observers, that the climate has changed again in our favor. With over 700,000 petitions, distributed across the United States, with coordinators named in nearly every state, and with 5 field staff members covering the country, we are in a good position now to move quickly into the Phase II of the Negotiation Now! Campaign:

1. bringing the best possible delegations into Washington on June 28, and
2. bringing in the petitions, signed, as fast as possible.

Experiences with signature gathering indicate that the best way to get petitions signed is at special tables set up at meetings, churches and synagogues, on campuses, and other community gathering places.

Street corner tables seem to be slower. We have no conclusive reports on door to door work as yet. We would expect this to be slow in terms of signatures, but valuable educationally.

New materials available to help you promote the Campaign are:

1. Negotiation Now! buttons, 5¢.
2. Campaign brochure explaining the entire program and its aims. Free.

Negotiation Now! Needs You!

Volunteer workers urgently needed to assist the campaign in a variety of ways:

— canvassers — general office work
— typists — manning tables
— and many other jobs

If you can volunteer to work in this interesting and important effort, call or come in to our New York office, or get in touch with the coordinator in your state. (See list on page 3 for address.)

3. Attractive Blow-ups of
   (a) the Petition alone, and
   (b) the New York Times ad text plus the petition.

These can be affixed to cardboard and set up at signature gathering tables in store windows, on leaders from each of 50 states urging our Senators and Congressmen to support the effort.

We present this as a positive program which can be supported by all Americans and invite their participation in gathering signatures throughout the land to make visible their desire for an early, honorable end to this tragic war.

—Statement of Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., Vice-Chairman, Americans for Democratic Action announcing NEGOTIATION NOW!

Peace Corps

(Continued from Page 1)

on to request an immediate appointment to discuss the matter.

HEED VIEWS

The Negotiation Now! statement urged the Johnson Administration to "give careful and thoughtful consideration to the views of those volunteers who want to apply the constructive principles associated with the Peace Corps to the problems in Vietnam."

Mary Temple, Director of the campaign, stated: "Rather than punishing these young people, we would expect the Administration to welcome this effort to strengthen visible public support for the goals the President has stated repeatedly are his own — a negotiated settlement which will assure democratic self-determination for the people of South Vietnam."

Similar petitions to the Chilean ones are being circulated by Peace Corps volunteers in Ecuador and Venezuela, and already the national office of Negotiation Now! has received Peace Corpsmen's signatures from Peru, Mexico, and Ghana among others. The Chilean group as early as mid-May asked for enough petitions to secure 250 signatures.

This indicates that there is a considerable potential for large numbers of Peace Corps volunteers becoming involved in the Negotiation Now! effort which certain Peace Corps and State Department officials, hope to nip at the bud before strong sentiment among volunteers throughout the world for new peace initiatives can become organized and fully articulated.

The A.C.L.U. has agreed to represent peace corpsmen now in Chile should any dismissals or reprisals result from their refusal to withdraw their names from the petition.

In a telegram to Vaughn, the A.C.L.U. stated: "A long line of Supreme Court decisions makes perfectly clear that government employment cannot be made contingent upon the relinquishment of the First Amendment right to petition the government and to express opinions."

D.C. Lobby

(Continued from Page 1)

However, according to New York Times correspondant, William Beecher, there are also voices around the administration pressing for a move in the opposite direction; they are urging a scaling down of the bombing in a new effort to get Hanoi to the negotiating table. The weight of public opinion mobilized by Negotiation Now! can have a strong impact on the nature of Washington's decision.

Because of the importance of intervening effectively in this debate Mary Temple, National Coordinator of the Campaign, in a memo to all state and local coordinators, asked them to carefully "stress (to each prospective delegate) the major points of the campaign" which she enumerated as follows:

"1. the emphasis on a political settlement and rejection of unilateral withdrawal.

"2. the emphasis on initiatives by the U.S., but also asking an affirmative response from the other side.

"3. the need for visible and important support for this responsible approach to overcome the dangerous polarization of opinion around extreme solutions to the war."

LOBBYING SCHEDULE

The tentative schedule for the 28th is as follows:

9:30 — Registration, Mayflower Hotel.

10:00-12:00 — Briefing for delegates.

11:00 — Press conference (for Dr. Galbraith and sponsors).

12:15 — Luncheon, Mayflower Hotel.

2:00-6:00 — Lobbying.

6:30-10:00 — Dinner and workshop for co-ordinators and delegates. This will deal with the Petition Campaign and their Presentation and Community Action.

Note: Capital Hill Headquarters for rest, refreshment and information will be at the Methodist Bldg., 100 Maryland Ave. Delegates completing lobbying efforts before 5:00 are urged to participate in pre-dinner discussion of reports at Methodist Building.

If you are interested in being a delegate please notify your state co-ordinator immediately. A list of state co-ordinators is on page 3. If you have any difficulty in contacting the state co-ordinator, write the campaign's national office at 381 Park Ave. So. New York, N. Y. 10016, or call 212-889-4018.

'Heartened'

Gentlemen:

We are tremendously heartened by the Negotiations Now! ad in the New York Times Week in Review, May 7.

We have felt alone, and haven't known what steps to take, and we thank you for showing us the way.

Could we be named chairman of Negotiation Now! for our town, Altoona, Pa.? We would like to help, and enclose our personal contribution of $50, and ask that you please send us twenty copies of the whole page, or the statement, to start with.

We shall invite people over to discuss it, and ask them to circulate and contribute, also.

Sincerely,

Mr. & Mrs. Edward Petsonk

Altoona, Pennsylvania

His column closed with a quote that should be encouraging to everyone connected with Negotiation Now! — "No army can withstand the strength of an idea whose time has come."

Senator Mike Mansfield underlined this view in an interview quoted in the Christian Science Monitor, saying he sees the "strong possibility of events in the Mideast presaging a de-escalation in Vietnam." He said the Mideast crisis has awakened the administration to the dangers of having more than one military commitment in the world at the same time.

"The elements are there now," said the Senator, "for a reassessment of the Vietnam situation and a renewed drive for negotiations."

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr. and Norman Cousins, speaking for Negotiation Now! at a meeting in New York, emphasized the same point — that events have compelled "a fundamental reassessment of policy."

If the President begins this process, Mr. Schlesinger and Mr. Cousins agreed, he may welcome manifestations of political support for a negotiated settlement such as the Negotiation Now! campaign.

"Our efforts," Mr. Schlesinger added, "can also strengthen and reinforce support for the campaign of those gallant United States Senators who have refused to be intimidated by the government or generals on the Vietnam issue."

"For these reasons," he concludes, "I am happy to associate myself with the Negotiation Now! campaign."

Negotiation Now! Needs You!

Volunteer workers urgently needed to assist the campaign in a variety of ways:

— canvassers — general office work
— typists — manning tables
— and many other jobs

If you can volunteer to work in this interesting and important effort, call or come in to our New York office, or get in touch with the co-ordinator in your state. (See list on page 3 for address.)

3. Attractive Blow-ups of
   (a) the Petition alone, and
   (b) the New York Times ad text plus the petition.

These can be affixed to cardboard and set up at signature gathering tables, in store windows, on bulletin boards, etc.

4. Bumper stickers: "Support Our Boys—Negotiate Now!"
5. Campaign Workers Guide-Tips on how to promote the Campaign in your community. Free.

* * * * *

Vital to the success of the Campaign, as you are very much aware, is MONEY.

Have you tried a mailing of the New York Times ad reprint as a fund-raiser? Send for the "How To" Bulletin, on Raising Funds for a Local Ad. The May 7th ad in the Times was an astonishing financial success, recovering two and a half times its original cost of $5,600, in contributions ranging from $1 to $100.

Newark Evening News

NEWARK, N.J., FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1967 31

New Viet Peace Group Plans Canvass of Every N.J. Home

Newark News Photo

WANT TALKS—Bishop Leland Stark of Episcopal Diocese of Newark, seated, center, goes over plans for "Negotiation Now!" movement at conference yesterday. Looking on are, standing, Rev. Daniel Kilfoyle of St. Peter's College; Joel Jacobson of N.J. AFL-CIO; Dean C. Willard Heckel of Rutgers Law School, and Mrs. Howard Levine of American Jewish Congress, and seated, Rev. Francis Keating of St. Peter's College and Mrs. Maxwell Barus of League of Women Voters in Hotel Military Park.

YOUTH JOIN CAMPAIGN

PENN KEMBLE, Youth Coordinator

A commonplace rejoinder to the dismay young people have shown toward our policy in Vietnam is that those who dissent are really an unrepresentative and tiny minority. While it is certainly true that not all forms of anti-war protest reflect the general sentiments of American students, the experience of Negotiation Now! bears out that there is a reservoir of support on campuses for a responsible campaign to press for a settlement of the war.

This can be said even though our efforts to reach the campuses began when most students were dizzy with final exams, and everyone was holding his breath over the crisis in the Middle East.

Early in the campaign we received the support of a number of key youth leaders and activists. Only a sampling of them can be listed here; they include Eugene Groves, President, and Ed Schwartz, Vice-President, of the National Student Association, President James Fowler and Vice-President David Rosenbloom of the United States Youth Council, Frank Horacek, Student Secretary of the United World Federalists, Nicholas Robinson, President, Collegiate Council for the United Nations, Meg Green of the National Student YWCA, and Joe Berlant, Policy Committee Chairman, College Young Democratic Clubs of America.

NEW SOURCES OF SUPPORT

The Campus Coordinating Office, a new student organization, is planning a summer project in cooperation with Negotiation Now!, and a number of the group's members have volunteered to work directly in the campaign.

The involvement of the C.C.O. bears out the thesis that this kind of campaign reaches into a large and, for the most part, untapped vein of student support for a new policy in Vietnam. The C.C.O.'s constituency includes the more than 200 student body presidents who sent the widely publicised letter on Vietnam to the Administration last winter, 800 returned Peace Corps volunteers who sent a similar letter, a committee of Rhodes Scholars, and 1000 seminarians who are concerned with extending the limits of conscientious objection.

[illegible] by the C.C.O. outlined beginning. Thousands of signatures have been collected at tables manned by YPSL members at various campuses: at both Harvard and City College of New York well over a thousand signatures were gathered. A student who collected signatures at Sacramento State College (see photo) writes:

"While some people refused to approach the table we found that those who we were able to stop and talk to did accept the Negotiation Now! perspective. Of those we talked to the only ones who refused to sign were adamant about either annihilating North Vietnam or unilateral withdrawal. The signers represented a much wider cross-section of the public than signers of previous "peace" petitions. Conservative young students, faculty members who normally stay clear, and apolitical young and adult students praised this program. Some took petition forms to gather more signers."

The Campus Americans for Democratic Action has formally endorsed Negotiation Now, and has begun a petition drive among its members and contacts. The Independent Student Union, whose membership now includes what was formerly the Student Peace Union, is also cooperating in this way.

As young people get settled in jobs or in summer school we expect that they will come to play

[illegible] State College

A Moral Alternative

The following statement was issued by the Very Reverend Victor Yanitelli, S.J., President of Saint Peters College, Jersey City, N.J. as he added his name to the long and growing list of prominent public leaders who have endorsed Negotiation Now!

"I am happy to give my entire prayerful and moral support to any initiatives that will lead to negotiation now. It is my hope that this effort will produce an action which at one and the same time, begins talks without crippling pre-conditions and preserves the dignity of all the involved parties. Such action has been called for already by Pope Paul VI and U Thant.

"It is my hope that good faith will prevail and that the contending parties will see negotiation now as the only moral alternative to war and the only sure step to a lasting, just peace.

"I endorse Negotiation Now! because this movement calls for a response from both sides. Such bi-lateral action is essential in a quest for peace in Vietnam."

State Coordinators

These are the regional coordinators for NEGOTIATION NOW!

EASTERN STATES:
Thomas Ritt
60 Branford Place
Newark, New Jersey
201-623-2346

MIDDLE STATES
Edward Doty
22 West Monroe
Chicago, Illinois
312-263-4274

WESTERN STATES
George Mitrovich
5612 Carley Avenue (home)
Whittier, Calif.
948 Market St., Rm. 519
San Francisco, California
(Western Headquarters)
415-392-0614

The following are the state coordinators for NEGOTIATION NOW! as of June 15, 1967.

ALABAMA
P. R. Bailey
9149 9th Ave. West
Birmingham, Ala. 35204
(205) 328-7194

ARIZONA
Walter McClenaghan
8512 E. Virginia Ave.
Scottsdale, Arizona 85257
(602) 946-1000

ARKANSAS
Rev. Linwood Coleman
Pulaski Heights
Christian Church
4724 Hillcrest Street
Little Rock, Ark. 72205
Office: (501) MO 3-8149
Residence: (501) MO 6-5710

CALIFORNIA
Jane Burnett
548 Market Street
Apt. 519
San Francisco, California
George Mitrovich
5612 Carley Ave.
Whittier, California
(213) 695-6804
Robert Freeman
1730 Grove Street
Berkeley, California

John Howells
P.O. Box 276
Kittery, Maine 03904
(207) 439-1755
or 439-1785

MARYLAND
Prof. Charles Barker
4210 North Charles Street
Baltimore, Md. 21218
(301) 467-5041

MASSACHUSETTS
Rev. Richard Harding
Lexington Methodist Church
2600 Massachusetts Avenue
Lexington, Mass. 02173
Office: (617) 861-9301
Residence: (617) 862-3952

MICHIGAN
Rev. Harold Mondol
Mich. Council of Churches
205 W. Saginaw Street
Lansing, Mich. 48901
Mrs. Russell Fuller
403 Iroquois
Ann Arbor, Michigan
(313) NO 3-0473
John Fillion
8000 East Jefferson
Detroit, Mich. 48230
(313) TE 5-8804

OREGON
Rev. Ira Blaloch
3001 S.W. Dosh Rd.
Portland, Oregon
Church: (503) 246-7000
or: 228-6389
Home: 228-3046
Mary Anne Buchanan
1624 S.W. Upland Dr.
Portland, Oregon
(503) 223-9782
Monty Marshall
1642 Alder Street
Apt. 5
Eugene, Oregon
(503) 345-8077
Mrs. Hilda Welch
1795 Moss Street
Eugene Ore.
(503) 345-6619

PENNSYLVANIA
Peter Ainslie
2029 E. Homestead Street
Pittsburgh, Pa. 15212
(412) 322-6375
Jean Dole
20 South 12th Street
Philadelphia, Pa.
Norville Reece
ADA
20 South 15th Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW SOURCES OF SUPPORT

The Campus Coordinating Office, a new student organization, is planning a summer project in cooperation with Negotiation Now!, and a number of the group's members have volunteered to work directly in the campaign.

The involvement of the C.C.O. bears out the thesis that this kind of campaign reaches into a large and, for the most part, untapped vein of student support for a new policy in Vietnam. The C.C.O.'s constituency includes the more than 200 student body presidents who sent the widely publicised letter on Vietnam to the Administration last winter, 800 returned Peace Corps volunteers who sent a similar letter, a committee of Rhodes Scholars, and 1000 seminarians who are concerned with extending the limits of conscientious objection.

A statement drawn up by the C.C.O. outlined the following purpose for the group's Vietnam activity:

"Alternatives to the Administration's policy have not been formulated and presented in a fashion designed to appeal to the broad middle sector of the American political spectrum. We propose to develop projects which in tactics and philosophy will provide an attractive alternative to the current policy."

The statement went on to call for an end to the bombing and deescalation of the war.

The Young People's Socialist League has been active in Negotiation Now! since the campaign's

Petition signing at Sacramento State College

an extremely important role in Negotiation Now!, especially if the now-contemplated grass roots activities get underway. It is a most hopeful sign that a new and far larger constituency for foreign policy change is emerging on the campus. The policy and programs of Negotiation Now! have shown great potential for rallying these young people around an effective and responsible campaign for the shift in our Vietnam policy that is so desperately needed, and we look forward enthusiastically to greater student involvement.

Campaign...

(Continued from Page 1)

grass-roots activity offering specific alternatives to both the policy of military escalation in Vietnam and the proposal for immediate withdrawal.

This is true not only in areas of traditional liberal strength but also in myriad sections of the country where heretofore there had been little or no organized activities.

In Lawrence, Kansas, for example, a chapter of the Women's Internat'l League for Peace and Freedom writes that their original petition campaign met a "tremendous response" and asks for additional petitions.

A woman from Ashland, Kentucky writes that $55 has been collected for the campaign in her area and asks for more petitions. A high school student from Byram, Conn. is one of the many young people who have expressed interest in working for the campaign this summer.

The Board of Christian Social Concerns of Northern New Jersey has ordered 2000 petitions. And on the west coast, the Bay District Joint Council of Bldg. Service Employees requested 500 petitions.

The goal of the petition drive is one million signatures and this kind of response is making the prospect of achieving that figure by the end of the summer (or even earlier) extremely good.

If the enormous spontaneous response to the campaign can be sustained by solid, organizational work the likelihood of a peaceful solution to the war in Vietnam will be immeasurably enhanced. This, however, will only be accomplished through the continued devoted work of thousands of cencerned citizens.

Coalition...

(Continued from Page 1)

ton, Conn.; Earl P. Stevenson, former President and Chairman of the Board, Arthur D. Little Co., Boston; Allan Geyer, International Relations Director, United Church of Christ; and Philip Scharper, Senior Editor, Sheed and Ward.

Efforts are now underway to get the constituency organizations of the liberal community to place major institutional resources and manpower behind the campaign. Already a large number and variety of groups are participating and circulating Negotiation Now! petitions.

The number of different communities which have responded as well as the identities of the various sponsors, serve well in outlining the broad nature of interest in the project. Religious groups circulating the petition include the Unitarian Universalists, the Church of the Brethren, Disciples of Christ, American Jewish Congress, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the United Christian Missionary Society, the National Council of Churches, the Board of Christian Social Concerns of the Methodist Church, and the American Friends Services Committee.

Also circulating petitions are a number of mainstream political and social action groups including Americans for Democratic Action, The Committee for Democratic Voters in California, The California Democratic Council, The Independent Voters League of Illinois, National Committee For A Sane Nuclear Policy, the Socialist Party, Women's International League For Peace And Freedom and the New York Democratic Council.

There is also a large contingent of student groups participating in the petition drive. These include: The United States Youth Council, The Young Women's Christian Association, The National Student Association, Campus ADA, The Young People's Socialist League, the Independent Student Union and the Campus Coordinating Office.

The effort to build a broad coalition of conscience for negotiations in Vietnam is only in its initial stage. But the first signs are hopeful that such a broad coalition, stronger than any previous movement for peace, can be built.

8512 E. Virginia Ave.
Scottsdale, Arizona 85257
(602) 946-1000

ARKANSAS
Rev. Linwood Coleman
Pulaski Heights
Christian Church
4724 Hillcrest Street
Little Rock, Ark. 72205
Office: (501) MO 3-8149
Residence: (501) MO 6-5710

CALIFORNIA
Jane Burnett
548 Market Street
Apt. 519
San Francisco, California
George Mitrovich
5612 Carley Ave.
Whittier, California
(213) 695-6804
Robert Freeman
1730 Grove Street
Berkeley, California

COLORADO
Jack Gore
4200 Hanover
Boulder, Colorado
Residence: (303) 443-554

CONNECTICUT
Rev. Joseph Duffy
175 Ridgefield Street
Hartford, Conn.
(203) 522-4068
Mrs. J. W. (Stephanie) May
113 Duncaster Rd.
Bloomfield, Conn.
(203) 242-4771

DELAWARE
Rev. J. Clenent
505 Eastlawn Ave.
Wilmington, Delaware
(302) 762-9176
Mrs. Henry Hall
1900 No. Van Buren
Wilmington, Delaware
(302) 655-0429
Rev. Howell O. Wilkins
St. Johns Methodist Church
Seaford, Delaware
(302) 629-9466

FLORIDA
Rabbi Ben Kronish
Temple Beth Shalom
4144 Chase Avenue
Miami Beach, Florida
(305) 538-7231

GEORGIA
Mrs. Brittain Pendergrast
1700 W. Paces Ferry Rd., NW
Atlanta, Georgia 30327
(404) 355-0927

HAWAII
Mrs. Anita Truhitt
2703 Terrace Drive
Honolulu, Hawaii 96822

IDAHO
Rev. Orville Coates
P.O. Box 1692
Boise, Idaho 83701
Office: (208) 375-3430
Residence: (208) 375-3430

ILLINOIS
Ed. Doty
22 West Monroe
Chicago, Ill.
(312) 263-4274
Florence Field
22 West Monroe
Chicago, Ill.
(312) 642-8891
John Kearney
22 West Monroe
Chicago, Ill.

INDIANA
Dr. Barton Hunter
United Christian
Missionary Society
222 South Downey Avenue
Indianapolis, Ind. 46207
(317) 353-1491

MAINE
Dr. Allan Broyles

24 Oak Street
Orono, Maine 04473
(207) 866-2309

4210 North Charles Street
Baltimore, Md. 21218
(301) 467-5041

MASSACHUSETTS
Rev. Richard Harding
Lexington Methodist Church
2600 Massachusetts Avenue
Lexington, Mass. 02173
Office: (617) 861-9301
Residence: (617) 862-3852

MICHIGAN
Rev. Harold Mondol
Mich. Council of Churches
205 W. Saginaw Street
Lansing, Mich. 48901
Mrs. Russell Fuller
403 Iroquois
Ann Arbor, Michigan
(313) NO 3-0473
John Fillion
8000 East Jefferson
Detroit, Mich. 48230
(313) TE 5-8804

MINNESOTA
Rev. Willis Merriman
Minn. Council of Churches
122 West Franklin Street
Minneapolis, Minn. 55404
Office: (612) 332-2571
Residence: (612) 823-1650

MISSOURI
W. E. Faucett
6505 Harvard
Raytown 33, Mo.
(816) FL 6-4535
Mrs. Lee Rainwater
2 Ladue Hills
St. Louis, Mo.
(314) WY 3-5222

MONTANA
Rev. George Harper
P.O. Box 1080
Helena, Montana
(406) 442-5644

NEVADA
Arthur Johnson
961 Wilkinson
Reno, Nevada 89502
Residence: (702) 323-4738

NEW JERSEY
Miss Mary Kelly
N. J. ADA, Exec. Secy.
60 Franford Place
Newark, N. J. 07102
(201) 623-2346

NEW MEXICO
Elizabeth Thurston
SANE, 1427 Princeton
Albuquerque, N. M.
(505) 255-7032

NEW YORK
Sally Milstein
Rm. 819
381 Park Ave. So.
New York, N. Y. 10016
(212) 889-4018
Bert Weinert
ADA
156 Fifth Avenue
New York, N. Y.
675-7020

NORTH CAROLINA
Rev. Jack Crum
N. C. Council of Churches
Raleigh, N. C. 27607
Office: (919) 828-3273
Residence: (919) 787-3116

NORTH DAKOTA
Rev. Robert Branconnier
Box 8233
University Station
Grand Forks, N. D.
(701) 774-7129

OHIO
Mrs. Irvin Lev
ADA
Youngstown, Ohio 44504
(216) 747-8479

OKLAHOMA
Rev. William King
Church of Madelaine
2233 South Gary Street
Tulsa, Oklahoma
(918) WE 6-6773

1624 S.W. Upland Dr.
Portland, Oregon
(503) 223-9782
Monty Marshall
1642 Alder Street
Apt. 5
Eugene, Oregon
(503) 345-8077
Mrs. Hilda Welch
1795 Moss Street
Eugene Ore.
(503) 345-6619

PENNSYLVANIA
Peter Ainslie
2029 E. Homestead Street
Pittsburgh, Pa. 15212
(412) 322-6375
Jean Dole
20 South 12th Street
Philadelphia, Pa.
Norville Reece
ADA
20 South 15th Street
Philadelphia, Pa.
Sandy Weinrib
1524 Locust Street
Philadelphia, Pa.
(215) KI 6-4366

RHODE ISLAND
Rev. Richard Peck
Rhode Island College
148 Erastus Avenue
Providence, R. I. 02908
Office: (401) 831-6600
Residence: (401) 521-9733

SOUTH CAROLINA
Hayes Mizell
American Friends
Service Committee
704 Columbia Bldg.
Columbia, S. C. 29201
(803) 253-7159

SOUTH DAKOTA
Rev. Claire Mitchell
802 11th Ave.
Brookings, S. D.
Douglas Perkins
1102 3rd Street
Brookings, S. D. 57006
(605) 692-4255

TEXAS
Dr. George Crawford
9440 Brentgate
Dallas, Texas 75238
Residence: (214) 348-1335
Office: (214) 363-5611 Ext. 215

UTAH
Dr. Robert Wolbach
University of Utah Medical Center
Salt Lake City, Utah
Office: (801) 322-6354
Residence: (801) 364-6008
Dr. Sterling McMurran,
University of Utah
Salt Lake City, Utah
Residence: (801) 484-0223

VERMONT
Stewart A. Meacham
Vt. Council of Churches
Burlington, Vt. 05401
(802) 863-2222

VIRGINIA
Ruth Mirolli
317 So. Royal Street
Alexandria, Va. 22314
Temple 6-9048

WASHINGTON
Derek Mills
4235 Roosevelt Way N.E.
Seattle, Washington
(206) ME 2-8282
Linda Pope
4235 Roosevelt Way N.E.
Seattle, Washington
(206) ME 2-8282
Ann Statler
4235 Roosevelt Way, N.E.
Seattle, Wash.
(206) ME 2-8282

WISCONSIN
Rev. Richard Larson
312 Wisconsin Ave.
Madison, Wisconsin 53703
(608) 257-3578

You can't do a thing about the war in VIETNAM ... alone.
You and millions of AMERICANS together can help to end it. You can join in:

NEGOTIATION NOW!

A NATIONAL CITIZENS' CAMPAIGN FOR NEW INITIATIVES TO END WAR IN VIETNAM

This is America's chance to speak. Our names can save the lives of American soldiers and innocent Vietnamese. Our names can change history.

Right now, in every city in every state thousands of us are going into the homes of our friends, neighbors and families, into our churches and organizations, into our businesses, offices and factories — getting the signatures of all Americans who want this war ended honorably through negotiations, and who are ready to say so.

Put your name on President Johnson's desk. Sign the statement at the right. Ask others to sign. Support Negotiation Now!

WHY SIGN THIS CALL FOR THESE FIRST STEPS BY THE UNITED STATES?

Because it rejects our present tragic entrapment in a war we do not want;

Because it rejects the untenable choices of either unleasing our full military strength in an all-out war or "pulling out" and abandoning responsibility for establish-

"The present impasse can be broken and a halt put to the increasingly horrible slaughter and destruction of the Vietnam war only if one side or the other shows the wisdom and the courage and the compassion for humanity to take the initiative on a first step."

"A cessation of the bombing of North Vietnam is an imperative necessity to create conditions for peaceful talks."

U Thant, Secretary-General of the United Nations
March 28, 1967

- WE SUPPORT THE CALL BY U THANT FOR NEW INITIATIVES TO BRING ABOUT NEGOTIATIONS AMONG ALL PARTIES TO THE CONFLICT, LEADING TO A POLITICAL SETTLEMENT OF THE VIETNAM WAR.
- WE CALL UPON THE UNITED STATES, THE MOST POWERFUL NATION IN THE WORLD, TO TAKE THE FIRST STEP AND END THE BOMBING OF NORTH VIETNAM NOW AND WITHOUT CONDITIONS. WE ASK OUR GOVERNMENT TO TAKE FURTHER INITIATIVES LEADING TO A STANDSTILL TRUCE.
- WE ASK NORTH VIETNAM AND THE NATIONAL LIBERATION FRONT TO RESPOND AFFIRMATIVELY TO ANY NEW UNITED STATES INITIATIVES AND TO JOIN WITH THE U. S. IN A STANDSTILL CEASE-FIRE.
- WE ASK SOUTH VIETNAM TO RESPECT AND JOIN IN THESE STEPS.

THIS COURSE OF ACTION PRESENTS TO THE UNITED STATES A MORAL AL-

tories — getting the signatures of all Americans who want this war ended honorably through negotiations, and who are ready to say so.

Put your name on President Johnson's desk. Sign the statement at the right. Ask others to sign. Support Negotiation Now!

WHY SIGN THIS CALL FOR THESE FIRST STEPS BY THE UNITED STATES?

Because it rejects our present tragic entrapment in a war we do not want;

Because it rejects the untenable choices of either unleasing our full military strength in an all-out war or "pulling out" and abandoning responsibility for establishing conditions for a stable peace;

Because this call asks both sides to act responsibly to end the war;

Because U Thant's efforts must be supported and sustained, thus strengthening international instituions which can help prevent future Vietnams.

BUT WE'VE STOPPED THE BOMBING BEFORE AND IT DIDN'T WORK. WHY SHOULD IT WORK NOW?

Previous U.S. bombing halts have not made clear our willingness to negotiate with all of those actually fighting, including the National Liberation Front. We have maintained preconditions to negotiations which are unacceptable, as have North Vietnam and the National Liberation Front in the past.

Now the political situation appears to have changed, with North Vietnam indicating as recently as June 1 that an end to the bombing could lead to negotiations.

ISN'T IT UNPATRIOTIC NOT TO SUPPORT THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY IN VIETNAM?

The President has stated many times that his policy is to bring about a negotiated settlement of the war in Vietnam and assure the right of South Vietnam to a free choice of its own government. It is evident that the present course has failed. Taking the President at his word, we urge a new course of action which offers hope of success.

DOESN'T THIS KIND OF CAMPAIGN UNDERMINE OUR FIGHTING MEN AND GIVE COMFORT TO THE ENEMY, ENCOURAGING THEM TO FIGHT ON?

These American peace initiatives could provide assurances of our good faith and are more likely than our present policy to persuade the other side to join in negotiations. If our government adopts this policy it could be the first step to an honorable peace and bringing our soldiers home.

WHAT ABOUT THE NORTH VIETNAMESE? DO THEY REALLY WANT TO NEGOTIATE?

There are those in the leadership on both sides who prefer to continue the war. These actions by the U.S. could put the pressure of Vietnamese and world opinion on these leaders to join in the cease-fire and begin negotiations. If they do not, it becomes clear who wants to continue the war.

BUT IF WE STOP BOMBING, WON'T THE OTHER SIDE JUST BUILD UP ITS FORCES AND INCREASE THE DANGER TO THE LIVES OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS?

The great danger is continued escalation to a full-scale land war in Asia, or an all-out nuclear war.

For the sake of those young men who are now fighting and those who will be called upon to fight, we ought to try a new policy. Many more lives are endangered by prolonged fighting or by escalation to all-out war.

to create conditions for peaceful talks."

U Thant, Secretary-General of the United Nations
March 28, 1967

- WE SUPPORT THE CALL BY U THANT FOR NEW INITIATIVES TO BRING ABOUT NEGOTIATIONS AMONG ALL PARTIES TO THE CONFLICT, LEADING TO A POLITICAL SETTLEMENT OF THE VIETNAM WAR.
- WE CALL UPON THE UNITED STATES, THE MOST POWERFUL NATION IN THE WORLD, TO TAKE THE FIRST STEP AND END THE BOMBING OF NORTH VIETNAM NOW AND WITHOUT CONDITIONS. WE ASK OUR GOVERNMENT TO TAKE FURTHER INITIATIVES LEADING TO A STANDSTILL TRUCE.
- WE ASK NORTH VIETNAM AND THE NATIONAL LIBERATION FRONT TO RESPOND AFFIRMATIVELY TO ANY NEW UNITED STATES INITIATIVES AND TO JOIN WITH THE U. S. IN A STANDSTILL CEASE-FIRE.
- WE ASK SOUTH VIETNAM TO RESPECT AND JOIN IN THESE STEPS.

THIS COURSE OF ACTION PRESENTS TO THE UNITED STATES A MORAL ALTERNATIVE TO OUR STATED POLICY OF BRINGING ABOUT NEGOTIATIONS BY FORCE, OR TO THE DEVASTATION OF ALL-OUT WAR, AND A MORE REALISTIC ALTERNATIVE THAN UNILATERAL WITHDRAWAL.

WE BELIEVE THAT SUCH INITIATIVES NOW CAN BREAK THE IMPASSE AND LEAD TO NEGOTIATIONS AND A POLITICAL SETTLEMENT PROVIDING FOR THE REMOVAL OF ALL FOREIGN TROOPS AND FOR GENUINELY DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS IN WHICH ALL SOUTH VIETNAMESE CAN PARTICIPATE FREELY

NAME	ADDRESS	CITY	STATE	ZIP
1
2
3
4
5

SPONSORS OF THE STATEMENT (to date):

RT. REV. GEORGE W. BARRETT, Bishop, Episcopal Diocese of Rochester
ROBERT S. BILHEIMER, Director, International Affairs' Programs, National Council of Churches
NORMAN COUSINS, Editor, Saturday Review
MARRINER ECCLES, Utah Mining and Construction Co.
JOHN KENNETH GALBRAITH, Chairman, Amtericans for Democratic Action
HAROLD K. HOCHSCHILD, Industrialist, New York
DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Atlanta
PHILIP M. KLUTZNICK, Former Ambassador to United Nations, Chicago
REINHOLD NEIBUHR, Theologian, New York.
PROF. LOUIS POLLAK, Yale Law School
JOSEPH L. RAUH, JR., Attorney, Washington, D.C.
VICTOR REUTHER, Labor Leader
MSGR. JOHN SCANLON, Archdiocese of San Francisco
ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, Jr., Historian, Author
WILLIAM L. SHIRER, Author
EARL P. STEVENSON, Former President and Chairman of the Board, Arthur D. Little Co., Boston

GUIDING COMMITTEE: Dr. John Bennett, President, Union Theological Seminary; Rabbi Maurice Eisendrath, President, Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Cong. Don Edwards, Vice-Chairman, American for Democratic Action; Gerhard Elston, National Council of Churches; Robert A. Fangmeier, Director, Christian Citizenship, Disciples of Christ; Dr. Dana McLean Greeley, President, Unitarian Universalist Association; Eugene Groves, National Student Association; Rev. Herschel Halbert, Associate Secretary, Dept. of Christian Citizenship, The Episcopal Church; Rabbi Abraham Heschel, Co-Chairman, Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam; Rabbi Arthur Lelyveld, President, American Jewish Congress; Robert McGuire, Committee of Returned Volunteers; Elizabeth Polster, President, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; Dr. W. Harold Row, Church of the Brethren; Benjamin Spock, M.D., Co-Chairman, SANE; Norman Thomas, Post-War World Council; Rev. Herman Will, Associate Secretary General of the Methodist Board of Christian Social Concerns; Raymond Wilson, Friends Committee on National Legislation. (Organizations listed for identification only.)

HELP END THE WAR • SIGN YOUR NAME • SUPPORT NEGOTIATION NOW!

Here is $——— to help. (Make checks payable to NEGOTIATION NOW!)

Send me —— copies of citizens' signature statement for circulation in my community.

Name _____ Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip ____

Cut out the statement — Get others to sign — Return statement and contributions to Negotiation Now! 381 Park Avenue South, New York, N. Y. 10016 N.A.

381 Park Avenue South • New York, 10016 • (212) 889-4018

ulletin 1967

VIETNAM

A VOICE FROM THE VILLAGES

by

Katsuichi Honda

To Mrs Bernice Morrison
Mr. Pat Watter
Mr. Bob Anderson
Mr. John Lewis
Mr. Jim Wood and anybody in the Council who are interested in Japanese viewpoint on Viet nam War.

Mr. Hand, writer of the paughter and 1st class reporter for the Asahi Newspaper, will visit the council to ask your assistance very soon. For his is intending to write on the negroes in the South.

Committee for the English Publication of

《Vietnam—A Voice from the Villages》 (Senjo no Mura)

VIETNAM — A VOICE FROM THE VILLAGES

(Senjo no Mura)

by

Katsuichi Honda

Translated from Japanese

by Fujiko Isono

Third printing, 1968

VIETNAM — A VOICE FROM THE VILLAGES

Copyright © 1967 by Asahi Shimbun. Printed in Japan. All rights reserved. No part of this book may be used or reproduced in any manner whatsoever without written permission except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews. For information address: Committee for the English Publication of 《VIETNAM — A VOICE FROM THE VILLAGES》, c/o Mrs. Reiko Ishida, 2-13-7, Nishikata, Bunkyo-Ku, Tokyo.

Contents

To our Readers 4
Introduction 5
I Bases on the front 6
II Scorched earth tactics 8
III "Rice robbery" operation 10
IV With the APC tank company 12
V Anger of peasants 14
VI Tanks and ripe ears of rice 16
VII Search of houses 18
VIII Grief of the women 20
IX Arrest 22
X KHO QUA! 24
XI Reaping rice amid showers of bullets 26
XII In the fighting 28
XIII In the fighting (continued) 30
XIV A testimony 32
XV The secret of a boy 34
XVI Orphans 36
XVII Refugees 38
XVIII A letter for home 40
XIX Souvenirs of the battle 42
XX An old woman in the ruins 44
Postscript 46
Map 48

TO OUR READERS

We publish this booklet to share with you a report on what is going on in the villages of Vietnam, because everyone has the right to know the truth however painful it may be. And we feel that we have a duty to let the truth be known. In Japan, the report of Mr. Honda has made a very wide appeal, and there is a growing doubt about the attitude of our Government in supporting the U. S. policies in Vietnam.

It is not our intention to bring any special accusation against the individual soldiers who come out in the following pages. We know very well, from our own experiences, that we cannot expect young men always to remain sane in the brutal atmosphere of war, whether they be Americans, or Japanese, or of any other nations.

We want to share this report with you, because, it may not be very often that you will find in English a report from Vietnam written from an Asian point of view, by a correspondent who can directly talk and feel with the people living in villages on the battlefield of Vietnam.

January 1968

Committee for the English Publication of
"Vietnam—A Voice from the Villages"
(Senjo no Mura)

INTRODUCTION

From December 1966 to October 1967, I was in South Vietnam as a special correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun. During my stay there I sent back 100 serial articles, entitled "The War and People in Vietnam". The translation you find in this booklet is Part Five (20 articles) of this series. (Part Six is the report on the one month I stayed among the people of Mekong Delta in the area under the rule of the National Front for Liberation. What I saw there was, on the whole, not contradictory to the report of Mr. Roger Pic published in the Figaro of December 1, 1967.)

As to myself, I am a very ordinary reporter of the largest independent newspaper in Japan which belongs to the Free World. By training and inclination I am interested in "reporting the facts as accurately as possible." I am not committed to any "ism", nor am I subjected to pressures from any authorities. Therefore, in covering the situations in Vietnam, I did my best to be free from all prejudgements, and to see the facts as they were. I reported exclusively what I ascertained with my own eyes and ears, strictly refraining from inserting any information which I could not verify or which I heard as rumour.

What impression did I get from my experiences in Vietnam? It may be enough to say that I felt what you will probably feel on reading my report. It was a great regret to me that I had to write these things about the United States, the country which I hold in very high esteem. The American people who have created their glorious history—have they ceased to be great? I do not believe so. I believe that the American people are now making mistakes only because they are not told the truth. As a sincere Asian friend of the United States, I heartily hope, and believe, that the United States will regain her greatness, by withdrawing from this most dishonorable war in her history.

This English translation of my report is an outcome of the concerted efforts of several groups of citizens working voluntarily for peace. I am very happy to add that a number of the U. S. citizens now living in Japan kindly offered to help materialize this project. I am very grateful to all who have made my report available now to people to whom my original report in Japanese was inaccessible.

Katsuichi Honda

The U. S. base at night, guarded by flare bombs against attacks.

I BASES ON THE FRONT

Quang-Ngai Province in the central part of South Vietnam is one of the regions where the influence of the Liberation Forces has been very strong since the days when the Viet Minh were fighting against the French. Near the western border of this province rises Mt. Ngoc-Linh, the highest mountain in South Vietnam (8,500 feet). We had hoped to find time to climb to its top, but had to give up the idea. Not only the fighting, but also tigers and other savage beasts made it too dangerous for just two persons to attempt the ascent.*

In May, this year (1967), the Third Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division of the U. S. Forces launched an offensive called "Operation Baker" in the flat land, dotted with agricultural villages, lying along the coast of this mountainous province. As the first step to carry out this operation, a front base was established at Duc-Pho. From this base, they were to go up northward, through the coastal plain, "mopping up" and devastating the villages found on their way. We flew from Saigon on a C-130 (four-engined large military transport) to the U. S. base in Plei-Ku, in order to follow the U. S. troops on this Operation.

Four U.S. bases—in Saigon, Da-nang, and Cam Ranh Bay in addition to Plei-Ku—are serving as gateways at which the U.S. soldiers, leaving for home upon completion of the term of their service, are replaced by newly arrived troops. Besides these four, in Bien-Hoa, An-Khe, Chu-Lai and in other places, there are numerous U. S. military bases, which surpass all imagination of those who have not actually seen a U. S. base, in their enormous scale and formidable construction. Most of them are occupying vast tracts of land once cultivated by peasants.

The next day, we arrived at the front base of Duc-Pho (where the Brigade had its headquarters) on board a two-engined small transport called a "Caribou"(a reindeer living in the northern part of Canada and Alaska). There are hundreds of front bases of this type in South Vietnam. To reach the fighting front, one has to use a helicopter to the "front outposts" placed around each front base. Many thousands of such "front outposts" are scattered all over South Vietnam. From these bases, front bases and front outposts, amounting to an enormous number in all, large and small cannons keep showering tons and tons of shells day and night.

At the front base of Duc-Pho, an officer of the Public Information Office (PIO) took us to visit a refugee camp nearby, in a jeep made in Japan. The peasants who had their houses burnt in the Operation were crowded densely in an elementary school building. The huts which were being built to accommodate these refugees were mere long shanties with tin-plate roofs, looking almost like pigsties. What a difference from the quiet country side where they had been living in their cool thatched cottages surrounded by coconut and other fruit trees. I asked a few questions of some aged persons and children who were keeping their vacant eyes on us. Nothing but stereotyped "safe" answers came back. I realized the futility of trying to get true stories out of their mouths in the presence of a U. S. soldier accompanying us.

An officer of the Government troops showed us the "rice seized from the Viet Cong." The warehouse was packed with piles of sacks containing unhulled rice. But, in every refugee camp I had visited, the peasants complained to us,"That is really our rice," referring to the rice stored as "booty". On the following day, I accompanied a troop in action, and had an occasion to witness that the situation here was just the same as everywhere else.

Colonel S., Commander of the Brigade, invited us to the evening meal in the tent used as the officers' mess. He asked us whether relations between Japan and Republic of Korea (South Korea) had been improved. To my answer, "Perhaps, one ought to say that there has been some improvement", he commented, "I am very glad to hear that." Then, turning to the Vietnamese cameraman who was sitting at the same table, the Colonel asked, "By the way, what is your religion?" Finding out that he was a Catholic, he nodded, saying "Good!". If Fujiki, my cameraman, said he was a Buddhist, and if I answered I was an Islamite, would he have also exclaimed "Good"? I wondered in my mind, but he did not ask us the same question.

As it grew dark, a great number of flare bombs were sent up around the bases, and the bombardment from the artillery position, which had been heard all through the day, increased its intensity. A gun-ship (armed helicopter) was shooting rockets into the thicket quite close to the base. A captain of the PIO showed us a shelter reinforced with sandbags, saying, "If the Viet Cong troops start attacking us with mortars, take shelter here." Then, we entered our tent and lay down. Our sleep was broken from time to time by roaring bombardments. (See map on page 48)

* The author and the cameraman are veterans of mountaineering as well. They have taken part in expeditions to climb the Himalayas, the Andes etc.

Smoke shells to smoke out persons who may be hiding inside.

II SCORCHED EARTH TACTICS

At about 8:00 a.m. a helicopter took us from the front base of Duc-Pho to a front outpost named "Liz", situated on the top of a hill approximately four miles away. We were told that it was named after the wife of Lieutenant-Colonel G., the Commander of the Battalion stationed here. Most of the front line outposts are called by such arbitrary names, without paying regard to their original place names.

On the previous day, the U. S. Forces discovered a NFL (Viet Cong) unit of the size estimated at over one company, to the northeast of "Liz" nearer to the coast line. A tactical operation of encirclement commenced with two infantry companies and an APC tank* company, supported by ships and boats off the shore. That day, we decided to go with A-Company, one of the infantry companies which took part in the operation, led by Captain B., and immediately boarded a helicopter leaving Liz. The helicopter flew extremely low—less than 30 feet above the rice paddies—to evade sniping.

About 70% of the fields were now ready for harvest, 20% were in the course of plowing, and 10% were just beginning to be planted with rice for the next crop. It was said that one of the aims of starting this Operation at that time was to "achieve the mopping-up, before the Viet Cong should get hold of the rice" harvested by the villagers. The company had bivouacked near a village called Van-Ha, and had just finished preparations for deployment when we arrived.

Shortly after 9:00 a.m. the company started marching on the first hamlet of the Van-Ha village. The usual procedure of the U. S. attacks is to pound the place with bombs and shells with unreserved thoroughness before infantry men move in. Therefore, by the time the ground troops arrive at the spot, hamlets are almost wiped out. It was the case with this hamlet also. Nearly 70% of the houses were burnt down, and some of them were still sending up smoke.

Here and there along the road, there were pitfalls. Sharpened bamboo sticks were planted in the bottom of the holes. Most of these pitfalls were not covered. It may be that the suddenness of the attack did not allow them time to do so. All of the peasants seemed to have evacuated, and there was not a figure to be seen. Judging from the yards surrounded by trimmed hedges and amply planted with fruit trees, it seemed that the hamlet had been comparatively well-to-do. Every house had a huge shelter against air raid and bombardment. An unexploded 155-mm shell was lying beside one of these shelters. How many peasants must have been killed and wounded in this hamlet also! American soldiers went round throwing hand grenades or smoke shells into one shelter after another.

One thing struck me as unusual. In spite of the 30% of the houses still left unburnt, these American soldiers did not set fire to them. In all cases I had witnessed, hamlets considered as belonging to liberated districts had been burnt down 100%, without an exception. I then remembered the complaints of commanders of brigades and battalions, saying, "Cameramen always take pictures highlighting only the burning of villages." The question was given an answer, when, some time later, I had an opportunity of talking with an NBC-TV cameraman, who had followed an operation in the same region, about a week ahead of us. The scenes in the film he made were as follows:

Heavy tanks and APC tanks enter a hamlet, marching in columns. American soldiers file out of the tanks, and approach farmhouses. The inhabitants come out of their shelters. All are women, children and old people. They plead with the soldiers in a language which the latter do not understand. Brushing aside all their entreaties, the soldiers set fire to the houses with their lighters. In the central part of Vietnam, where the rainy season arrives later than in other parts of Vietnam, they still have a long spell of fine weather. In the mid-day, the houses, which have been completely dried up, are instantly turned into pillars of fire. Wailing women and children. An old man about to run into a flaming house, trying to save what little he can. A housewife clinging to him in frantic efforts to keep him from the danger —. Villages were turned into hell wherever the American soldiers arrived.

These scenes were telecast, particularly emphasizing the details of incineration. The reaction of people who saw the film in Washington was, "That is too merciless." As a result, the U. S. soldiers refrained from setting fire to the houses, at least in our presence. Over other hamlets attacked by the other companies, we saw thick clouds of smoke rising continuously.

All of a sudden, deafening sounds of machine-guns, and automatic-rifles broke out from among the infantry ranks advancing in silence; then, explosions of hand grenades. We threw ourselves down behind a levee, and watched. (See map on page 48)

* APC tank: Armored Personnel Carrier. Light, aluminum-armored, full-tracked vehicle. It has no cannon, but is equipped only with a machine-gun of high effectiveness as the main weapon.

「戦場の村」を世界に知らせましょう

――英訳本が出来ました――

「戦場の村」は、一九六七年十月、二十回にわたって朝日新聞に連載されたベトナム・ルポです。連載が終るころ、日本全国に大きな反響が起こり、投書も朝日新聞はじまって以来の多数を記録しました。それは本多勝一記者によるこのルポが、ベトナム最前線の一局点を、一人の〈人間〉としての眼と心でとらえ、事実とその事実の底にあるものを鮮明に描き出しているからです。

私たちは、自分たちがこのルポからベトナム戦争の裸の姿を知ると共に、さらにこの真実を、アメリカをはじめ全世界の多くの人たちに知ってもらいたいと考えました。今までにも世界に報道されたベトナム・ルポはいくつかありました、しかしアジア人の眼を通してとらえられたルポは、まだ無かったと思います。

たまたま同じ計画をあたためていたいくつかのグループ（平和のために手をつなぐ会、婦人国際平和自由連盟、思想の科学研究会、草の実会、ベトナムに平和を！市民連合、ベトナム反戦市民の声）のメンバーが協力しあって、運動を推進する機関へ「戦場の村」を世界に知らせる会〉が生まれ、このたび英文「戦場の村」が出来上りました。筆者に同行した藤木高嶺カメラマンによる写真二十枚も収められたA5版四十八頁の小冊子で、翻訳は磯野富士子が担当しています。

ベトナムに平和を求める世界世論をより大きな声とするために、この小冊子をアメリカをはじめ世界各国の人々に送りましょう！

英文「戦場の村」は、実費（六十五円）で頒布されます。あなたが買って海外の友人や知人に送るなり、この本の存在を広く知らせるなりしてください。とくにアメリカ本国のさまざまな層に、このルポが一日も早く届けられるよう、あなたにできることをしてください。

＊

〈筆者のことば〉より――私自身は、ごく普通の新聞記者として、「事実を正確に伝える」こと以外にすべての先入観を排して、白紙の目で見るように努力しました。また、自分の目と耳で確認したことだけを報道するようにし、確認できない情報や噂はいっさい報道しませんでした。その結果、私が何を感じたか。それはこのルポの中にあります。

私は、現在アメリカがおかしている誤りはアメリカ国民が、ベトナムの真実を知らされていないことから来ていると思います。一日も早く、アメリカにとって史上もっとも不名誉なこの戦争を中止し、本来の偉大なアメリカにもどってくれることを念願しています。

―賛助会員募集―

この運動を推進するために、賛助会費として、一口五百円の基金を募集します。基金のすべては、英文「戦場の村」の出版と頒布の費用に当てられます。

なお、基金をお寄せくださった方で、日本版「戦場の村」、あるいは英語版のいずれかを必要とされる場合は、事務局に若干の用意がございますので、お申し越しください。

英文「戦場の村」 本多勝一著 磯野富士子訳

A5判・48ページ・写真20枚入り

定価65円（送料／一部(85g)35円・十部195円 米国宛船便送料も右に同じです。）

―申込先―

東京都文京区西片二ノ十三ノ七・石田方

「戦場の村」を世界に知らせる会

電話（八一二）六三六一

振替・東京 五〇四三九

III "RICE ROBBERY" OPERATION

The attack continued with cracking shots of guns and grenade-launchers. All of them were from the side of the American troop. We were told that it was because a figure was perceived. No time nor patience was allowed to certify whether it was really a NFL (V. C.) soldier. Arriving at the place where the figure had been seen, I found in front of a farmhouse, which was completely burnt down and was still smoldering, a pair of black trousers washed and hung up to dry. Perhaps, it was the "figure" who had put them up there.

Around 10:00 a. m., in the debris of a burnt farmhouse that seemed to have been a comparatively handsome one, they discovered five paper bags of the size of a cement bag. The content was salt. The bags piled on the concrete floor were badly scorched by the fire. No time was lost to report by radio about this "booty". But the "salt" was not salt. When they turned over one of them, the unburnt part of the bag revealed letters UREA (for fertilizer). Moreover, it was "Made in Japan". The American soldiers winked at us and started laughing.

Side by side with the shelter with mud walls as thick as six feet, a cowshed and a henhouse remained spared by fire. A hen was sitting on her eggs and squawked angrily when a soldier held out his hand. A notebook was found on the ground nearby. It must have belonged to an elementary school child. "I suppose the child is 10 years old or so," said the Vietnamese cameraman. Exercises in arithmetic, dictation, verses of songs—the contents showed clearly that the child was receiving the education of the liberated zone. For example, among the dictation, there was "The Story of a Brave Girl Carrying Messages".

—Little Buoi dearly loves her homeland, and hates foreign enemies who devastate her homeland. Little Buoi has a very important task of carrying messages for the National Front for Liberation. Little Buoi was never late in taking messages to their destinations, and she has never let the enemies find out what she was doing. Nor has she let a letter of message fall in the hands of the enemies.—

As is always the case, the families of the burnt houses had made most pathetic efforts to invent all sorts of devices to preserve their precious rice (in the husk) from fire, storing it in the shelter, burying big jars of rice in the field, and so on. The American soldiers dug up the jars, and broke the covers with kicks of their military shoes, saying, "The Viet Cong are very cunning in hiding things." This company did not burn the rice, as did other companies I had accompanied. Instead, they called by radio for a helicopter, in order to transport the rice as "booty".

One helicopter arrived with a large number of sacks to carry off the unhulled rice. When it was about to land in the hamlet, two rifle shots were fired very near to the place. The NFL trying to hit the helicopter, no doubt. The helicopter, in consternation, soared up in the air again. Instantly,

The helicopter is loaded with sacks of seized rice.

M-16 automatic rifles and hand grenades madly attacked the spot from where the shots had come. As these villages have pits everywhere, which are connected with underground tunnels, the NFL soldier (very probably a militia-guerilla) who had just fired must have gone already underground and slipped away. Nevertheless, when the helicopter attempted the second landing, there was another shot. Once again, the bullets of the American troop fell on the vicinity like a cataract. As every farmhouse is surrounded by coconut and fruit trees, with hedges here and there, the view is generally not open.

The helicopter was obliged to move farther away, and threw down large bunches of cloth sacks. The American soldiers took the sacks into the farmhouses where rice had been discovered, to stuff them with rice and carry them away—all the rice that belonged to just ordinary peasant families. A wide vegetable field was chosen for landing the helicopter, and the sacks of unhulled rice were piled up there. Smoke candles were lighted. With American soldiers standing around guarding the helicopter, the sacks containing the rice of the peasants were taken one by one into the landed helicopter. Such an operation cannot but be called "Rice Robbery" equipped with helicopters, automatic rifles and machine-guns.

The rice carried off in this way may be rationed out to refugee peasants as "relief" rice. And the peasants are obliged to receive "gratefully" the rice that they cultivated with their own labor. This, however, happens only when the thing works out at its best. In worse cases, the rice is diverted into illegal channels by the Government troops or petty officials, to be transformed into their pocket money. Such is the commonly known fate of peasants' rice. Even so, one has to say that it is "less bad" than when the rice is destroyed with fire.

* NFL: The correct translation of the original Vietnamese name (Mat Tran Dan Toc Giai Phong Mien Nam Viet Nam) is "The National Front for Liberation of South Vietnam." The word "Viet Cong" denotes the Communist Party of Vietnam, and is used by Americans and supporters of the American policy in Vietnam, as a name of contempt. But, there is no such group as the Communist Party of Vietnam. Its equivalent is called the People's Revolutionary Party, consisting only of a part of the NFL. The NFL forces are divided into Regular Army, Local Troops and Militias. The NFL, on their part, call the Government troops "Puppet Troops" (of the Americans).

IV WITH THE APC TANK COMPANY

Having terminated the "Rice Robbery" Operation, A-Company began to leave the hamlet and go back toward the bivouac site of the previous night. Over the heads of the American soldiers walking leisurely in a stream along the road through the hamlet, tin-plate placards were seen, some hung up horizontally across the road, and some nailed on tree trunks.

"Heroes of Vietnam challenge American invaders to a decisive battle manifesting the might of our long tradition. We are convinced of our Victory."

"Nothing is more precious than Freedom and Independence. We will never live as slaves of foreign powers."

"Young men! Join the Liberation Army. Let us point our guns at American Imperialists!"

On the same day, A-Company was ordered to return to the front line outpost "Liz", and the soldiers waited for helicopters at the bivouac site. It was a place not far away from the seashore, and commanded a wide view, only with bushes here and there on sandy ground. B-Company appeared to have encountered the NFL in the village they had attacked, and sounds of fierce fighting were heard all through the day to the evening.

Suddenly, a gun was fired at the back of the soldiers of A-Company gathered together waiting for helicopters. An attack of a sniper from behind a tree in the hamlet. Immediately, a shower of bullets was discharged in that direction. The moment the attack ceased, there was another shot. Once again, a counter-attack with a downpour of bullets and hand grenades shook the air. Before long, about a dozen helicopters arrived, and carried us away from the bivouac site with the soldiers of the Company.

On that day, the APC tank company of the same battalion lost one tank, hit by rockets of NFL. Three American soldiers were killed and wounded. We were told that four NFL soldiers were also killed in the fighting. We chose this tank company for our next troop to follow, and returned to Camp Duc-Pho for the night.

The next morning, we were again on a helicopter to fly to "Liz", and around 8:00 a.m. started on the march with the company consisting of five APC tanks. We were given our place in a tank in which Lieutenant-Colonel G., commander of this tank company, was also in charge of a machine-gun. Each tank carried five or six infantrymen, in addition to the regular crew consisting of the driver, gunners etc.

The five APC tanks slowly went down the steep slope of the hill topped with the base. The caterpillars transmitted unreduced the ups and downs of the ground, and the tank rolled and pitched more violently than a ship out on a stormy sea. Containers of drinking water and various other articles in the vehicle rattled down over us. From time to time, we were thrown on or under other co-passengers in the tank. The inside was unbearably hot. They opened the flap on the top, to put their heads out, or to sit on the edge of the hatch.

U. S. bombardment has left huge craters, reminding one of the damage done. (In Quang-ngai)

At the foot of the hill spread fields of sugar-cane, sesame, tapioca and other crops, with huge craters dug here and there by bombing and bombardment. The tanks made their way as they chose, without paying a particle of attention to the crops in the fields. Needless to say, the ten wide caterpillars left in their wake all the crops miserably torn and crushed.

There was a farmhouse. The tanks passed through the field in front of the house at a distance of about 20 yards. An old man in black clothes, and a boy of ten years or so, stood looking on astounded. Two or three American soldiers sitting on the tank waved at the boy. But the expression on the boy's face was not changed at all. In the case of children in Saigon and in the vicinity of large bases, however, they would at once run up to the American soldiers, shouting "O. K.", or "Number One!", begging things from them as did the poor children in Japanese cities shortly after the surrender. At an American base in Binh-Dinh Province, I saw soldiers throwing canned foods and candies to the crowds of children they had called to come on the other side of the wire-net partition. They were amusing themselves by intentionally throwing the canned foods and candies as far away as possible to see the children run after them like dogs to get them first.

If, in slums of the United States, a Vietnamese should do a similar thing, scattering dimes to children, how would these soldiers feel about it? A Japanese cameraman, who is a personal friend of mine, saw an American soldier open a can of food and show the contents to children. When the children begged for it he emptied the can into the ditch, before the longing eyes of these children. Wherever American soldiers arrive, children are degraded to beggars. In this village, children had not yet been turned into beggars, so they did not run up to the Americans.

The herd of cows being driven by a boy ran away in all directions, frightened by the tanks. In the meantime, the tanks headed toward a paddy field region.

The peasant woman runs away, pleading "Do not enter my field."

V ANGER OF PEASANTS

The tank company left the vegetable fields and marched into a rice paddy region. In this area two crops a year can be raised and it was the busiest season for the peasants, reaping the first crop while planting the second. About 50 yards away from the tanks advancing through rice paddies, which had just been plowed, five women were planting rice. They were working in a row facing this way; but they never lifted their faces, looking as if they had not noticed the tanks that passed right in front of them. They intently bent over their work, pushing young rice plants into mud under the water. It was not that they did not notice the tanks, of course. They knew too well that it was safest to pretend not to see anything. Sorrow and anger must have been seething in their hearts.

The tanks broke through a levee and entered a rice-paddy which was being plowed. A man and his wife, aged around 50, were working with a plow drawn by an ox. They, too, pretended not to see anything at all. But they were obliged to stop working, as the tanks cut across their way at a distance of only 15–20 feet. The man lighted his pipe while waiting. He took a puff, and then, turned his face to us. The face I saw! I thought: I have never seen eyes burning with rage so furious as this. There are endless varieties in the expressions of men's faces when they laugh or smile; and these laughs and smiles have all sorts of meanings. But, the expression of anger is the same, and means the same thing, regardless of race and stock. The expression of anger can communicate its meaning directly to all different peoples on the earth. Without a word, he glared at the foreigners' tanks that broke through levees and packed hard the ground they had just finished plowing. His face testified that all U. S. "Pacification Programs" would be utterly futile.

The tank company advanced another three hundred feet, and approached a stream about 16 feet wide. A woman in black clothes, who was also plowing with an ox, rushed up at full speed to the foremost tank. As there was another tank between that tank and ours, I could not catch the words she was shouting, but only saw her shaking her fists at the American soldiers on the tank, her whole frame trembling with rage. She must have been telling them to go away. This tank company had no interpreter. That means that, right from the beginning, they did not care to listen to what the peasants had to say.

Two American soldiers descended from the first tank to examine the wading point with mine detectors. In the meantime, three soldiers went over to the three or four farmhouses on the other side of the stream, for investigation. They came back after a while, bringing two transistor radio sets. They had plundered them. "Booty", they said, and explained to us, "We should take these things away from them. For they listen to broadcasts from Hanoi and the Viet-Cong." Both of the radio sets were "Made in Japan". If this be a plausible reason to plunder radio sets, all Vietnamese homes in Saigon are in danger of being plundered.

"Anyway, American soldiers are still not too bad, one has to say," observed the Vietnamese cameraman by the name of W., who had been with the army six years already. "As for soldiers of the Government troops, they pocket most of the things they plundered in that way. But American soldiers generally hand them over to the Vietnamese Government."

Nevertheless, there is no guarantee as to how the Government officials will deal with them.

The work of detecting mines was over, and the tank company crossed the stream. Three children were standing side by side on a levee, watching the tanks moving away. They were the children who had seen the radio sets plundered from their own houses. Strangely enough, the soldiers who had robbed the family of the radio sets waved their hands to these children. Were they fools, or were they too naive? If not, their attitude showed that in the eyes of these Americans, Vietnamese people did not count as human beings. Naturally, the children stood looking at them coldly, without making the slightest move to respond.

The tank company once again entered an area of vegetable fields. Peanuts, sweet potatoes, red beans, water melons—the tanks crushed all these, and increased their speed. After a while, we came out on a vast plain covered with large sections of rice-paddies. Golden waves of ripe rice rolled over most of the paddies; and here and there, peasants were already reaping their harvest.

VI TANKS AND RIPE EARS OF RICE

The five APC tanks drove right into the golden waves of rice paddies. The ripe ears of rice, now ready to be harvested, were mercilessly trodden and kneaded in the muddy field under the caterpillars as they took their capricious ways all over the paddies. They did not even have the kindness to make each tank follow the wake of the preceding one. The seed beds of rice plants, and the newly planted paddies—all these were nothing in their eyes. The tanks chose their own respective routes, as sports cars driven for fun, each of them leaving new deep ruts in the rice paddies. In the heart of American soldiers, there was a hopeless lack of an element common to rice cultivating peoples. This lack makes it impossible for them to understand the mind of these peasants. The gulf lying between the two makes one despair.

Most of the peasants reaping rice were old people, women and children. As was always the case, they never turned their eyes toward the tanks. They continued their work, without uttering a word.

Near a small town on National Route I, one of the tanks got stuck in the mud which clogged the treads. To pull it out with ropes, another tank went round to one side of the bogged tank. On its way to the position, the tank hit a big fruit tree standing in a corner of a farm yard and broke it near the root. The children came from the town and stood in a wide circle around the tanks to watch what was going on. Infantrymen left the tanks, and holding automatic rifles in one hand, guarded the tanks, walking inside the circle traced by the crowd standing at a cautious distance. The soldiers on guard reminded me of the red and blue demons of a festival in a Japanese village, as they keep off the spectators of the lion dance with their thick hexangular staves.

The tank company resumed its march, and having driven through farmhouses situated in the form of the "dispersed settlements", arrived in the area which was designated for operation on that day. It had been reported that the NFL seemed to have CP (Command Post, local headquarters) in the vicinity. Around here, we found no hamlets where many farmhouses stood huddled together, as the one cleared by A-Company the previous day. Farmhouses were standing in threes and fours, scattered in rice fields, looking like a group of isolated islands floating on the sea.

The infantrymen who were taken here in the tanks now left the tanks, and walked towards a group of five or six farmhouses, composing one of these islands. The five tanks, in the mean time, marched on three houses about 600 yards away. We went with the tanks. Coming near to the houses, the tank company encircled the place and halted with machine-guns pointed at them. Soldiers with automatic rifles advanced slowly to the houses.

Two women came out. One of them was an old woman, and another was middle-aged. Each was holding up reverently a slip of paper with both her hands, and joined her palms in prayer facing the gun muzzles of the approaching American soldiers. The old woman had her head completely shaven. The legs of the old woman, who squatted down on the ground, were shaking with terror. The slips of paper they came holding out were their identification cards. All Vietnamese—strictly speaking, "all Vietnamese under the rule of the Government side" are supposed to have such Identification Cards (ID cards). These women were trying to make the soldiers understand that they were just ordinary, innocent peasants, who had nothing to do with the NFL, as the ID cards testified. It is true, however, that ID cards are being sold and bought at the rate of some 2,000 dongs (a little less than 15 U. S. dollars). They are particularly coveted by deserters from the Government troops and by those who are trying to escape from conscription. Therefore, when a robber breaks into a house, and cannot find anything of value, he sometimes robs the family of their ID cards. It often happens in the Government troops that a commander of a platoon does not report to superior officers desertions of his soldiers. For, in this way, he can put into his own pocket the salaries for the soldiers who deserted. So, the deserters are not tracked down. As they know that they will not be tracked down, there are more and more deserters. I heard the story directly from the mouth of one of these deserters.

The field of ripe rice ready for harvest becomes wide muddy roads.

According to the ID cards, the old woman was 64, and the middle-aged one was 43. They were mother and daughter. In addition to their work in the field, "We keep ducks, and are earning our living by selling the eggs. We are just innocent people," said the daughter in a trembling voice. But the tank company with no interpreter was deaf to all their supplication.

The soldiers started searching these houses.

VII SEARCH OF HOUSES

Another housewife, holding a baby, came walking up to the old woman and her daughter. She said she was 26 years old. First-Lieutenant G., commander of the tank company, asked, "What is your husband doing?" in English, though it was evident that she did not understand a word. The Vietnamese cameraman, Mr. W., was obliged to translate the question into Vietnamese.

"He is working near the National Route," she answered, and, like the other two women, she also joined her palms as in prayer, with her baby held against the right side of her waist. While she was making petition for mercy in front of the rifle muzzle pointed at her by the First-Lieutenant, her desperate face at last gave way to weeping. Her hands were still joined in supplication.

In the arms of the mother, the baby, a girl barely one year old, was looking up innocently at the huge figure of the American soldier holding the automatic rifle. Probably provoked by the weeping of the young housewife, the old woman, too, wept with tears streaming down the furrows of her wrinkled cheeks.

Two of the three buildings standing in a row were dwellings and the other was a granary of the godown style. The house next to the granary was the dwelling of the old woman and her daughter, and the other belonged to the young housewife. Next to her house, there was a bomb shelter common to the two families. It was covered with piles of rice straw.

The American soldiers searched all these buildings with unsparing thoroughness. In the granary were stored harvests of tobacco leaves, glutinous rice, unhulled rice and so on. The baskets of unhulled rice were overthrown, and the contents of gunny bags for clothes were scattered all around as when a ragman is sorting out his rags. The bunches of tobacco leaves, tied and piled up neatly, were kicked and torn to pieces. As the family was raising lots of ducks, in the granary they had made a device with piles of straw to hatch the eggs. Of course, all this was completely destroyed, and the straw was thrown out of doors.

" Don't break that, please!" cried the daughter of the old woman—"We cannot make a living without it!"

It was useless to shout no matter what. A soldier coming out of the house of the old woman brought a vinyl bag and handed it over to the Commander. The bag contained some medicines and 4,000 dongs (about 30 U. S. dollars) in cash.

"It is the money we earned by selling eggs," explained the daughter, and said that she was in the midst of boiling eggs to take them to the market. At that very moment, soldiers came out again, this time bringing two rain-cloaks, a mosquito net, and a pair of men's blue trousers. It was unfortunate for the women that the rain-cloaks were made out of air mattresses of the U. S. Forces.

The old woman joins her palms to us, pleading, "Please help us," while American soldiers are searching her house.

As most of the equipment of the U. S. Forces, except for rifles, guns and ammunition, can be bought at "markets of stolen goods" even by ordinary people, the presence of these rain-cloaks itself could not be something to be particularly suspected. But, in the eyes of the American soldiers, who were convinced, right from the beginning, that this was a "hiding place of Viet Congs", the rain-cloaks were important articles of evidence.

"Where did they come from?" The First-Lieutenant demanded an explanation. Without an interpreter, the meaning of this severe question was immediately understood. The daughter of the old woman answered, "I picked them up at a far off place a long time ago." The young housewife repeated "Khong biet" (I don't know). The old woman replied, "It is possible that someone left them here, while we were away selling eggs." The First-Lieutenant grew more suspicious, and, pointing to the ground, ordered, "Sit here and wait!" The search was continued.

Mr. W. and we went up to speak to the women. Finding out that we could understand their language, they began to tell us of their plight, as if catching at a straw in their despair. The daughter of the old woman had four children. As they were still very young, she had sent them to a safer place near the village office. Two days before, American soldiers came here for the first time. So, she let the children evacuate, intending to join them later. Those soldiers who came two days before had no interpreters with them either, and they could not understand what they said. At that time also, the American soldiers made the women sit out in the sun just like this. "In this heat, and with the baby! What a way to treat people!", the stout-hearted mother said angrily, and added that there were no rain-cloaks at that time.

"Kinh men (dear sirs)", the old woman now joined her palms at us, and implored, "Please tell the American soldiers. We have done nothing."

VIII GRIEF OF WOMEN

About 1.2 miles nearer to the coast on the east of the position where the tank company had arrived, at the farther end of the rice-paddy area, there was a long strip of thin copse. The shooting that had been going on under the trees increased its intensity. According to a radio communication, it seemed that C-Company had encountered a regular troop of the NFL there. Gun-ships (armed helicopters) were circulating over the place, incessantly firing rockets. White mushrooms of smoke went up one after another.

There was the debris of a burnt farmhouse, some 100 yards to the west of the three houses now subjected to search. The daughter of the old woman told us that the tank company that had come two days before opened fire, and a number of men took refuge in that farmhouse. The soldiers of the tank company took them out and carried them away in a helicopter. After that the soldiers set fire to the house. The owner of the farmhouse, who was about 50 to 60, and his son aged around 30, were also among those who were arrested.

One of the three women, ordered to remain sitting in the scorching sun —the young housewife—turned to us with a serious expression on her face, "Do tell this to the American soldier, please." So, we assured her we would do our best. Then she said, "I want to relieve myself." As it was really an urgent problem, we immediately transmitted her request to First Lieutenant G., the commander. He replied, "Do not let her go too far." She walked into a paddy field some 15 yards away. The old woman, having somewhat regained her presence of mind, said to us, "There are boiled eggs in the house. Would you like to eat them?" The young wife also had boiled eggs and cooked rice at home. Coming back from the field, the young housewife said that she had been about to take them for lunch to her husband and the eldest son (aged 5) who were out in the paddies reaping rice.

When the daughter of the old woman saw a soldier coming out of her house with a piece of paper, she cried, "That is the deed to our land. Don't take it away!"

What she said was true, and as this was also a very serious matter, we translated her pleading to the American soldier. If we had not been there with the company, all such pleadings must have been completely ignored. One Negro soldier captured five or six ducklings from among nearly one hundred ducks kept in a pond. He put the little fowl in a basket and petted them. He gave them unhulled rice, but the ducklings did not eat the grains. "They will eat if you let the grains float on water", the old woman told the Negro soldier. As far as I can judge from the experience I have had with the U. S. troops, generally speaking, Negro soldiers are often more sympathetic with local inhabitants than white soldiers.

A white soldier who was in the granary overturned a basket of rice in husks set aside for seeds; and in a rough manner he threw all the contents down from the high floor of the granary. The daughter of the old woman was infuriated. "Let them do as they like, until they have had enough of it!" she said, boiling with rage. Another white soldier came carrying a thick log and pushed it down into the well. Another brought out an oil can holding about 0.8 gallons, and emptied the oil in the rice-paddy. "Oh, that is the oil for lamps!" The daughter of the old woman looked on stunned. "Oil can be used to make fire bombs to attack tanks," said the soldier to us.

Four batteries were discovered in the house of the young housewife. First-Lieutenant G. demanded, "Are they not for radio communication?" Mr. W., the Vietnamese cameraman, translated the question for her. The housewife answered, "They are for an ordinary radio set." "What have you done with the radio set?" "I have sold it to my mother. If you do not believe me, I can take you to her to see it for yourself." "Where is she?" "There, in the hamlet with the palm trees, at the foot of that hill."

To sell things to one's mother is a practice not at all extraordinary in Vietnam. First-Lieutenant G. said, "Well, we will find out later on." Then, in a decided manner, he declared, "This woman is VC (Viet Cong)."

The radio apparatus for communication inside the tank reported, "C-Company has killed five Viet Cong men." The fighting in the western wood grew more and more fierce, and bombardment from warships now took part in the attack. The tropical sun, the blue sky, and the white clouds standing out dazzlingly against the blue—it gave me a queer feeling to see them over the village engulfed in the turbulent atmosphere of war.

At a distance of 300 yards or so to the west, a few farmhouses were seen standing together. Two buffaloes jumped out from among the houses, and ran away across the rice paddies. Three tanks of the company had been sent in advance, and they must have already started searching the houses.

It was decided that the three women were to be taken away. The waddling old woman was ruthlessly dragged into a tank by American soldiers. The baby in the arms of the housewife suddenly began screaming.

The two tanks started moving with a roaring sound.

The things found in the suspected "VC" supply base are examined.

IX ARREST

The two tanks with the three women arrived at the group of seven or eight houses, which had been searched by soldiers of the tanks sent in advance. The infantrymen who had been in other operations separately rejoined the tank company here. All the villagers were made to assemble at one place, and ordered to wait until the search of their houses was over. They were all women and children.

The three women were taken out of the tank. When soldiers made them sit down on a levee nearby, the young housewife holding the baby gave a loud choking shriek, half shouting and half crying.

A helicopter came over the spot. The tank company had asked for it to carry off the suspects (?). It landed in a rice-paddy. The women, now realizing that they were really to be taken away, broke down in tears, having no idea of what would become of them, and lamenting their unlucky fate in despair. The old woman still continued appealing in fragmentary words, in a voice strangled with tears, "We are—nothing.—Please—be patient—be patient—with us." Her daughter, who had so far held back her tears, clung to her mother, holding her in her arms. In spite of her strong character, all she could utter was, "Me oi, me oi!" (Oh, my mother, my mother!)

As the helicopter kept its propellers turning, violent winds blew up straw and dust all over the place. American soldiers took the screaming women one by one to the helicopter, three soldiers pulling and pushing them on both sides. The old woman, already in a state of terror and sorrow, was being forced to travel in a flying vehicle evidently for the first time in her life. She could hardly breathe due to the strong pressure of the wind, and was almost unable to stand on her legs. But, two soldiers dragged her to the helicopter, and pushed her up into it. Behind her back, the free ends of her costume flapped almost being torn off.

When the helicopter flew away, leaving a whirlwind more stormy than ever, we could hear again the sounds of fierce fighting between C-Company and the NFL troop, from the wood about 1.2 miles away to the east. Rockets, 105-mm shells and 155-mm shells of the U. S. Forces covered the actions of C-Company. It was really unbelievable that any human beings could be alive under the incessant downpour of all these explosives concentrated on that small space.

Just about noon, most of the soldiers of the tank company began to eat their lunch. They opened canned food called "C-ration" specially prepared for eating in action. Some of them were sitting on the tanks, some in the shadow of them.

A soldier came up to us hurriedly, and said, "Will you please come along with me? There is an old person, but we cannot understand what he is saying. At any rate, he is indeed astonishingly old."

Realization of being taken away.

There was a small room built under the eaves of a farmhouse. It was dark inside. A figure was wriggling slowly in the shed of less than six feet square, looking like a cattle fold. A faint shaky voice came from the shed, "Nuoc (water)....nuoc...."

When my eyes got accustomed to the darkness of the inside, it was really an extraordinarily old woman. She was so emaciated that one almost wondered whether she was not a ghost. She could not walk. The wooden bed was made with narrow planks nailed with open spaces between them, so that excrements would fall into a basin placed under the bed on the floor. I brought her water in an empty can which I found close to her head. The water from the shallow well was white with mud. To hold it in her hand seemed to be the maximum movement her strength was capable of. She drank the water at a draught. I brought her another can full. She drank it up again, and thanked me with a gesture.

"She is ninety years old," said a housewife of about 30 who was among the villagers packed into a hut with only a roof and poles. "As our house was burnt by bombardment, we moved to this place as refugees. It was about one month ago. Since then, grandmother has become unable to move, and vomits blood from time to time."

The old woman was her grandmother.

Twenty women and children were frightened at being herded together.

X KHO QUA!

About twenty women and children were there, made to sit together at the designated place. The granddaughter of the 90-year-old woman, a housewife of about 30, was a woman of character and had more presence of mind than the rest. Seeing that Mr. W. and we could understand their language, she addressed herself to us in a resolute manner, as if she was speaking as the representative of all the others, who were frightened and drowned in tears.

"We are just ordinary peasants. As they had burnt our houses, we had to come here as refugees. We have just managed to build our houses. Now, they come again to ravage and destroy everything. See what they have done. Where do they want us to go?!"

But, while she was talking her determined expression rapidly faded into distorted features.

"Why are we so unfortunate, so very unfortunate?" she continued with quivering lips. "Nothing is left...." She choked, and then burst into tears. The women sitting around and even the children started crying all at once. There were five or six mothers holding babies. Tears of a mother fell on the cheeks of her new-born child. A boy of elementary school age. A girl in her low teens. All cried. Another boy who had been eating rice with his hand cried with one of his hands still sticking in the pot. The voices of women and children crying streamed from the shed with only a thatched roof, and spread over the rice paddies. Even a dog looked desolate hanging his head beside the group in despair. The word "Kho qua!" (extremity of agony) was heard mingled with crying and deep moans. A gun-ship (armed helicopter) continued firing rockets in the battlefield nearby. The tearing sound of jet propulsions blended with the sobbing of the children.

The brave housewife suddenly went into the house standing opposite to the shed, as if something had occurred to her. Then, she hurried out of the house and came up to us. We were talking with an American soldier. She shouted:

"They threw away the rice soaked in water to make bun. What has the rice to do with the Viet Cong!"

Bun is a kind of noodle made from rice. The American soldier was watching intently the face of the woman who was pleading desperately half crying. Abruptly, he exclaimed:

"A PRETTY GIRL!"

The soldiers of the tank company ransacked every house in the hamlet, but could not find anything suspicious. So, the tanks took in the infantrymen and left the village of Tu-Son. Once again, the march was resumed, leaving in their wake ruthlessly trampled and crushed ears of rice. The amount of rice thus destroyed by U. S. tank companies per day must be enormous; and this is being done day after day.

The tank company was to drive into the battlefield about 1.2 miles away to the east, in order to cover C-Company fighting against the regular troop of the NFL. First-Lieutenant G. in command of the tank company was making contacts by radio. Listening to his words, I had an impression that he was full of enthusiasm to launch a battle of revenge for the tank hit by NFL rockets the day before. He was eager to dash in, without waiting for the order of the battalion commander.

C-Company was attacking the NFL troop from its northern side, in the wood along the coast. The tank company was to make a circuit to the south, and push into the NFL troop to stage a pincer attack.

As the tank company approached the place where the fighting was going on, artillery attacks were suspended, and four gun-ships covered C-Company from above with rockets and machine-guns. To outmanoeuver the enemies, the tank company traced a large semi-circle, and, leaving the rice paddy area, first entered one of the hamlets of Thach-Tru village, where houses were seen huddled together. (See map on page 48)

XI REAPING RICE AMID SHOWERS OF BULLETS

The tank company drove into the hamlet with houses built close together. The tanks passed through the hamlet, knocking down fruit trees, trampling down fences, almost scraping against the walls of houses, crushing the altars of incense sticks dedicated to "Ban Tho-Ong-Thien".*

Leaving the hamlet, the tanks shifted their direction and headed directly eastward toward the coast, once again marching across an area of rice paddies. They came up to a high bank, probably constructed to prevent floods. There the five tanks halted hidden behind the bank, and infantrymen made a reconnaissance of the vicinity. One gun-ship was just above our heads shooting rockets in front of us.

Taking into the tanks the soldiers who had been on the bank for scouting, the tank company suddenly rushed out from behind the bank, and charged at full speed, now all abreast. Peasants were engaged in reaping and threshing rice. The tank of the commander, in which we were riding, was in the middle of the row. Two of the other tanks were driving a little in advance of ours. All of a sudden, these two opened fire with machine-guns. "That's VC (Viet Cong)," said a PIO officer of the 3rd Brigade of the 25th Infantry Division. I watched carefully to the front, but could not find anything that might be the figures perceived. They must have slipped out of sight.

Instead, I saw an amazing scene before me. Around the charging tanks firing machine-guns, the peasants never ceased working, and resolutely refused to look up at the tanks. They continued moving their reaping hooks or threshing sheaves of reaped rice on the threshing-table, as if they had not noticed at all the bullets of heavy machine-guns flying about them, though it was evident that any of the bullets might kill them at any time. What does all this mean?

It is not that the peasants are ignoring the danger. This is the safest possible attitude for them to take. They know too well that if they should give way to terror and run away, they would very probably expose themselves to the greater danger of being shot at. In order not to get involved in the fighting that has broken out suddenly, there is no better way than to continue to do what they have been doing. Anger must be raging in their hearts; but to endure is the utmost resistance they can make under the circumstances.

Firing was suspended. The tank company advanced a few hundred yards and stopped in the paddies. Behind a levee on the right hand side, lay a body. Coming out of the tank, I found a dead soldier in a greyish-blue uniform, with the trousers rolled up to the knees. This uniform was very similar to that of the North Vietnamese troops I had seen in other battlefields. There was no gun with him. As he had been killed only a short time before, the intestines protruding out of his belly had not yet attracted flies. The pinkish-blue bowels looked like a long toy balloon wet with water, reflecting the brilliant sun of the South. His face was turned upward, tanned and copper-brown. He must be under twenty. The dilated pupils stared vacantly, a little downward, at nothing. Only about 50 yards away, five or six women and old people, all clad in black, were seen still bent on threshing as before.

The body of a boy soldier shot dead while running away along a levee.

The tank company, having left the rice paddy area, now entered the thin wood spread over sandy ground, continuously keeping contacts with C-Company and with the helicopter. It seemed that we were very close to the place where the NFL was holding on. The gun-ship above was desperately firing its machine-gun. The wood consisted mainly of trees called duong lieu in Vietnamese (Casuarina equistifolia), seemingly a species of needleleaf trees. There were also trees with thick, broad leaves as Theaceae, standing conspicuously here and there.

We were already fairly deep in the central arena of combat. But, due to the deafening roar produced by the tanks, sounds of shooting reached us but faintly.

A rapid succession of automatic rifle shots was heard on our right. At the same instant, bullets rebounded on the armor of the tank, and sprang back with a distorted sound. The PIO officer, who was sitting on the tank, jumped inside, his huge body bouncing like a rubber ball. An attack of the NFL. We, too, tumbled into the tank. It seemed that the marksman was hiding in a tree. First-Lieutenant G., the commander of the company, took to firing the machine-gun as if in frenzy. Hot cartridges fell scattering inside the tank.

* In Vietnamese houses, they have altars for Buddha and for their own ancestors; they also erect altars outside the houses dedicated to "The gods of heaven".

XII IN THE FIGHTING

After having been shot at by the NFL sniper hiding in the tree, we had to be more cautious in putting our heads out of the tank. On the other hand, if the tank should be attacked with rocket guns, as the one destroyed on the previous day, the possibility of being killed would be greater when one was inside the tank. From time to time, I peeped out to see what was going on outside.

Each tank of the company drove forward, firing its machine-gun, and came out on an edge of the wood, where there were fewer trees and more fields. Farmhouses dotted the scenery. The one close to our left was a very simple hut, almost a mere shed. A woman, apparently the housewife, stood looking placidly at the tanks passing in front of her house. On the battlefield where fighting had become a melee and a clear line between the two sides existed no longer, her placidity struck me as something strangely alien to the scene around her. The five tanks were now engaged in action separately, keeping contacts by radio. The gun-ship* circled around over the battlefield, and dropped smoke candles that emit colored smoke on the spots where NFL soldiers were discovered.

The tank, in which we were following the operation, was that of the commander of the company. It charged headlong, with the commander himself at the machine-gun, firing furiously. Only the seat of the gunner is constructed outside the body of the tank; but, naturally, it is protected with thick iron plates on all sides. To be inside is like being shut up in an iron box heated by the scorching sun. We were dripping with sweat more than when one is in a steam-bath. For this reason, tanks carry ample provision of water and salt.

"I've got them. Capture their arms," shouted First-Lieutenant G., the commander, and the tank came to a sudden halt. The soldiers jumped out. I climbed out on the tank. About 15 feet ahead, in a ditch between a field and a small lane, two bodies of NFL soldiers were lying one over the other. No, they were still living. They had thrown themselves down in the ditch. When the American soldiers went up, pointing M-16 automatic rifles at them, one of them staggered up to his feet. His head and face were all covered with blood, as if he had a bucket of vermillion paint poured on him. The American soldiers lost no time to grab his arms from both sides, and snatched away his gun. The other was seized by the collar and pulled up on his legs. He was also steeped in blood from the top of his head to the neck. His clothes were all stained with blood. The moment when he was made to stand up, he seemed to heave a long gasp. But the next moment, he fell limp. The American soldiers, perceiving that he was dead, threw him down again in the ditch where he had been lying. No gun was found on him.

The captured gun was an automatic rifle of 56-type made in China (1966). First-Lieutenant G. held it up high with both hands, and shouted to another tank that was coming nearer, "I've got them!"

A seriously wounded NFL soldier is dragged out by American servicemen. (In Hoi-An village, Quang-Ngai Province.)

The only Negro soldier in our tank brought along the NFL soldier who was still alive, half holding him in his arms. The Negro soldier wiped the blood roughly off the wounded man, and was about to take him into the tank. The PIO officer, however, refused to allow it, and ordered him to be put on the flat edge of the tank. The Negro soldier obeyed the instruction. The edge was about 25 inches wide, but the outer end was bordered with sandbags serving also as the support of rifles while shooting. The NFL soldier was laid beside the sand bags. His lifeless face was turned on one side. Blood kept streaming from the wound in his head. The pale face, vacant eyes. Watching him close at hand, I found that he was just an innocent-looking boy of around 15. It was communicated by radio that another NFL troop of even stronger force had been found in the neighborhood. The tank set out rushing across sugar cane fields, with the seriously wounded boy soldier lying on the edge.

The Negro soldier took one of the arms of the boy and felt the pulse. "Still alive," he said, and took bandages out of the first aid kit. The flowing blood trickled down inside the tank. As I happened to be sitting right below him, my cap was rapidly dyed all red. The blood then streamed down my left arm. The blood of the boy soldier spread over my left arm, mingled with sweat; and my wrist watch turned crimson.

* Gun-ship: A HU-1 helicopter (popularly called "Hui" and most extensively used in Vietnam) equipped with various arms, mostly with rocket guns or a considerable number of machine-guns, but it is also capable of carrying missiles. As it can be loaded with a large quantity of ammunition, it is playing an important role in covering the ground army in an operation within a limited area.

XIII IN THE FIGHTING (CONTINUED)

The infantrymen in the APC tanks also left the tanks to take part in the fighting. It seems that the NFL forces made a grave tactical blunder in this engagement. Probably, for them it was an unexpected encounter. It is possible that they were discovered while moving from one position to another. In principle, hand-to-hand fighting should be advantageous to the NFL. But, in this case, the U. S. forces could gain the lead, in the battlefield where they could make full use of the tank company, while it proved to be fatal for the NFL that they were forced into an engagement in a place where they were unable to resort to the guerilla type fighting with their tunnels.

The tank jolted and jostled violently; and from time to time the captive boy, lying on the edge bleeding all the time, was about to be thrown off. The Negro soldier, who had been taking care of him with evident sympathy, took the boy inside, disregarding the order of the white officer. Having placed the boy propped up against the iron wall, the Negro soldier felt his pulse again. He shook his head, and told us with his eyes, "Little hope." The boy seemed almost unconscious, while the bandage was wound around his head. His eyes were open, but he showed no response to what we said to him. He was wounded not only on the head, but also on the right side of the belly, and at the tip of the left hand. The wound in the head was most serious. Foamy blood came out from his nostrils, as well as from his mouth. His face was deadly pale. There seemed to be almost no chance for this boy soldier to live. The Negro soldier bound bandages all around the head of the boy, and laid him down with a sandbag as a pillow.

The battle turned the sugar cane fields into a hell. The heavy machine-guns of the tanks, automatic rifles of the infantrymen, rockets from helicopters—all were worked up to their utmost to lay down barrages. Now, jet fighter-bombers arrived to take part in the battle with Vulcan guns. The smoke bombs dropped to designate the targets of attack and the dust raised by the tanks screened the view. It was difficult to find out what was taking place where. Though I did not see it myself, we were told that one of the helicopters was shot down by ground fire of the NFL.

Once again, I caught a glimpse of an astonishing scene, through the clouds of dust. Only 50 yards away, in the middle of the confused fighting, six or seven women were walking hurriedly along the path in the fields, carrying things suspended from the poles on their shoulders. These figures, walking in a quick pace swinging their free arms to keep balance, were beyond anything I could imagine concerning the behavior of common people in a battlefield. It must be that, for these peasants, to "evacuate" in the showering shells and bullets, carrying their personal belongings, is far safer — no, "less dangerous" — than to be hiding in their houses, or to run away for their lives. If they run, they will be shot at as Viet Cong. It is a fact that the rate of casualties in the civilian population is lower in the middle of such operations, than under other circumstances. I will explain the reason for this peculiar phenomena in one of the following pages.

The Negro soldier nurses the NFL boy soldier fatally wounded. (Inside a tank engaged in fighting.)

The fields around here are mostly of sugar cane, with those of red beans, peanuts, sweet-potatoes, etc. in patches. Here and there the fields were partitioned by thin belts of trees standing as wind breaks. There were also many trees planted along dividing lines between two fields. Therefore, the view was not open. Suddenly, a NFL soldier dashed out of a strip of wood, right in front of the tank. He was alone. His face was distorted with surprise and terror at finding the tank there. Probably, he had not heard the approaching tanks, in the great confusion of roaring and explosive sounds that filled the battlefield. He made a desperate effort to escape. The tank chased after him at full speed, shooting the machine-gun at him. He fell tumbling over in a field. One of the soldiers got out of the tank to examine him. His head was smashed. A French light machine-gun, Chinese hand grenades, and an American ammunition belt—these were his equipment. In one of his pockets was found a photograph of the soldier himself standing side by side with a comrade.

Then, the tank company charged on the spot where a helicopter had dropped a "smoke bomb to indicate presence of enemies", the machine-guns furiously spitting fire. After a few minutes of fierce gun fighting, the battle came to an end. Four dead bodies of the NFL soldiers were lying around. First-Lieutenant G., the commander, said, "Our tank company alone has killed twelve." One apparatus of radio communication, and two heavy machine-guns were also captured. A report came from C-Company that they had killed 30, and captured a rocket gun on top of it. The casualties of the U. S. side were said to be "small", though there was no exact number given.

About 4:00 p.m. a helicopter arrived from the headquarters of the brigade, with a major sent for inspection. We left the battlefield taking advantage of the returning helicopter. Looking down from the air, we could see bodies lying scattered over the field. The earth around the bodies was dyed red with blood. At a short distance away, the National Highway was busy with people coming and going as usual.

XIV A TESTIMONY

Each large U. S. base has a huge field hospital. The only things that fit the name of a "field' hospital are tents and folding beds. All facilities necessary for treatment are there, with equipment of the newest type that compares well even with hospitals in big cities. The patients can watch TV programs of the U. S. Forces broadcasting station.

We visited the hospital of the base in Bien-Hoa, in order to cover how the soldiers, who had faced death and survived, were thinking and feeling about this war.

We were given permission to interview the patients of the ward for light cases for whom conversation would have no unfavorable effect. From among 30 odd soldiers, nearly 80% were draftees, and the rest were volunteers. Some were sleeping, and some were reading . To avoid disturbing them, we talked with four soldiers who seemed ready for conversation. Partly due to the boredom in the hospital life, they all willingly gave frank answers to my questions, for a considerably long time.

Two of the four were draftees, one a volunteer, and the other said, "Formally I am a draftee. But, as I was thinking of volunteering, in fact, I may be counted as a volunteer." What was common to all of them was that they had a very strong sense of duty, and were of the opinion that it was right and proper for citizens to accept the war policies being taken by statesmen elected by themselves. They had very little of the so-called "Holy War" consciousness, and said that they wanted to go home as soon as the obligatory term of one year would be over. As those who have completed the military service are entitled to receive college education practically free, these two told us, "When we get back, we want to study in college."

The conversation I had with one of them, G. T. C. (18), a volunteer from Detroit, is as follows:

—When, and from what motive, did you volunteer?

"I joined the army ten months ago, and have been in Vietnam for five months now. Before I volunteered, I had been working as a painter. As one has to finish military service anyway, I thought that I might as well get through the business as soon as possible. That was my motive. My parents supported my decision."

—How was it that you were wounded?

"On July 26th, we were four in a M48-A3-tank (a large tank) driving along National Highway No. 13. Then, our tank struck a Viet Cong mine. None was killed, but the two sitting on the tank were blown off. I was one of the two, and was hurt in the knee. The other got deaf."

—What do you think about this war?

"I believe in our Government. I think they cannot be wrong. I only hope they will put an end to it very soon."

—What do you think about those Americans who are taking part in the movements to refuse the draft, protesting against the Vietnam war?

"As military service is a duty of Americans, if they refuse it, they deserve to be put in jail, or expelled from the United States. I think such fellows aren't fit for American citizens."

—Some say that American soldiers indiscriminately kill and injure ordinary civilians. How was it in your unit?

"Concerning a tank company, for example, when one of the tanks struck a mine, those who are around the place may be all civilians. But, they had seen the Viet Cong lay the mine and should have known that it was there. As they did not report about the mine, knowing that it was there, it is their own fault if they are all shot."

—I have heard a rumor that if a mine explodes, you sometimes retaliate by killing all the peasants within sight. Is that true?

"It is true. But, in our unit, it depends on the situation. Tanks generally move in a unit of three or more. When a tank following the same track as the first one was blown up with a mine, we consider that there are Viet Cong men within 50 yards who pushed the ignition device with an induction wire. If it is the first tank that has struck a mine, we consider it to be an 'ordinary mine', exploded by the tank itself driving on the ignition device. So, in this case, we do not adopt an extermination policy. But, orders on this kind of thing depend very much on the commander of the unit. Some commanders order a wholesale slaughter, even in the case of an 'ordinary mine'."

C. tells us about the wholesale slaughter without hesitation.

XV THE SECRET OF A BOY

We visited a national hospital in My-Tho City, situated in the Mekong Delta. Six months before, I had been to this hospital with Shibata, also a special correspondent of the Asahi Newspaper. My purpose in visiting the same hospital again was to find out what differences had taken place there during the period of a half-year. I also wanted to make a fuller survey of the patients being treated there.

The ward for surgical cases was as full as it had been six months before, but there was no face that I had seen at that time. This means that the patients are rapidly replaced by new ones. This, again, indicates that war victims are incessantly being produced . This time, I spent a full half-day making a "thorough investigation" on each one of them.

The result showed that among the total number of 87 surgical patients, 21 had no connection with the war. The remaining 66 were war victims, wounded by bullets, shells, bombs etc. As this was a civilian hospital, naturally, there were no military men.

When these 66 are classified according to "the causes of injury", and listed with the most numerous item first, the result is as follows:

Shells (including mortar shells)	22
Machine-gun bullets or rockets from helicopters	19
Rifle bullets	12
Bombs dropped by planes	4
Launcher grenades*	4
Bombardment from warships	2
Hand grenades	2
Land mine	1

Another classification results in:

Those injured by the U. S. Forces or the Government troops	57
Those injured by the NFL	7
Do not know by which	2

All of the victims of the NFL listed above had been wounded by rifle bullets, launcher grenades, or mines. It happened that there was only one among them who had been wounded by a mine. But among the causes of injury in the case of victims of the NFL, probably mines produce the most numerous casualties. From time to time, civilian buses or light tricycle omnibuses strike mines laid for transports and tanks of the U. S. Forces and the Government troops. As these civilian public means of transportation are generally overcrowded, a great number of poeple are killed and wounded at a time.

Nevertheless, it must be admitted that the overwhelming majority of war victims are injured by gun-shots from helicopters of the U. S. Forces, and by bombardment of the Government troops. Besides, there were two cases in which hooligan type soldiers in the Government troops got drunk and made human beings their targets for shooting. One such victim was a girl of 14, and the other was a boy of 15.

Hit by rockets from a U. S. helicopter, farmhouses are in white smoke.

The case of the boy was—

Le-Van-Dinh. Born in the hamlet of Hoa-Phu, of Hoa-Thinh Village in Dinh-Tuong Province, the province in which My-Tho City is found. He was preparing a rice nursery about 80 yards away from his home. It was around ten o'clock in the morning. Two drunken soldiers of the Government troops came along the road nearby. They said in gruff voices, "You come here!" to the boy who was working all alone in the rice paddy. The boy remained standing there, frozen with fright, then, was shot. The rifle bullet entered from his navel and went out at the right side of the belly. The boy did not report the matter to the village office; for, if he had done so, those soldiers might have done something in retaliation. So, the boy had not told anybody about it—

The father of the boy had been killed four years ago, by sweeping fire from an airplane.

* Launcher grenade: One of the series of trick bombs called "booby traps" by the U.S.Forces. Mainly used by the NFL, and there are a large number of varieties of devices. For the explosive body itself, a hand grenade is used most frequently.

XVI ORPHANS

One example of the victims hit by shells, who were most numerous among those who were in the hospital:

There were three young patients, two sisters and one brother, from the hamlet of Long-Ti, of Bang-Long Village in Dinh-Tuong Province (My-Tho City is also in this province). The eldest sister Do-Thi-Hai was sixteen; then, ten-year-old Nam was the third daughter, and Sau, aged eight, was the eldest son. Hai told us how it happened that the three children became orphans within a few seconds:

About one month ago, around 11 o'clock at night, all of a sudden mortar shells came showering down. As there was no operation going on at that time, their family, as well as other families in the neighborhood, were sleeping in the house, without taking the trouble to go into the shelter. They were thrown into a hell before they could know what had happened. In the confusion, she had no idea how many shells fell on them. Out of the six children of the family, the second daughter (13), the second son (6) and the third son (3) were killed on the spot. The parents, fatally wounded, died before the next morning. The house was burnt to the ground.

Ten persons or so were killed in all, counting also the victims in the neighboring peasant families. As for the wounded, six of the most serious cases were brought to this hospital. The villagers in the neighborhood said that the mortar shells had been fired from a camp of the Government troops, at a distance of some 600 yards from these farmhouses.

During the night, the Government troops fire shells at random, in fear of the NFL. Sometimes, they continue bombardment for the purpose similar to when Japanese farmers explode carbide to scare away sparrows in the season of harvest. These harassing fires are producing this kind of tragedies all over Vietnam.

What were these orphans going to do after they left the hospital?

"Our only relatives still living are the grandfather on my father's side and a younger brother of my father. I have heard that there is an aunt in Chau-Doc, but I have never seen her," said Hai. Though the girl had been talking in a firm voice, tears came into her eyes when she told me this.

"Probably, we shall go to live with our grandfather."

Hai was wounded on the right ankle, little Nam on the left calf, on the head and the right buttock. The boy Sau was injured on the right instep and the left knee.

An example of the victims of machine-gun fire from helicopters, who were also as numerous as those of shells:

Gian, a boy aged 13, from the hamlet of My-Hoa of My-Long Village in the same province. As a bullet pierced him from the navel to the right thigh, it made him unable to urinate. So, a vinyl pipe was inserted in the hole made in his bladder, to conduct urine directly out of the body. Besides, his right arm had been virtually smashed, and had to be amputated just below the shoulder after he had been brought to this hospital. He was wounded also on the right chest, though lightly.

The three orphans share one bed in the hospital: Nam, Sau and Hai (from left)

Nearly two months before, around noon, they were going to have lunch. Gian was playing in the house. There was no operation or anything taking place. They heard a helicopter. That was all. Then bullets of a machine-gun shot through the roof. There were then three in the house, the mother, a housewife who lived near their home, and Gian. Only Gian was wounded. At least two bullets hit him.

This was the story told by his mother who was there to take care of the boy. Gian is the second of her three sons. While talking, she, too, began to shed tears.

"Piddling was painful. But, now, it is all right." Gian said, with his big eyes wide open. "He has got very thin." The mother's face was wry, trying to smile to hide her tears.

Later, we were to have a personal experience of how U. S. helicopters take to indiscriminate strafings. Indeed, we had a narrow escape then.

After having listened to the testimonies of these victims, we came to the conclusion that there were very few people who had been injured getting involved in actual fighting, but most of them were those who were hit or shot "quite suddenly, when nothing was going on."

XVII REFUGEES

This spring, we followed the Tiger Division of the ROK Forces during their O-chak-kyo Operation, in Phu-Yen Province which is in the central part of Vietnam. Tiger Division, with its headquarters in Qui-Nhon, was to move down southward from Cu-Mong Pass and join with the White Horse Division of the ROK Forces, coming up northward from Tuy-Hoa. By the time we arrived to accompany them, the operation headquarters had advanced already to Song-Cau, and the foremost front line was in the neighborhood of Chi-Thanh, where the railway from Saigon (now cut off) leaves the coast and enters a mountainous region. When infantrymen push into a liberated district, before the commencement of the operation, they put up groups of tents, not far removed from the main roads, to receive refugees; and they launch clearing operations, driving villagers out of their homes into these tents. Having interned all ordinary peasants in these tents, they will be able to fight without scruples, for, those who remain must be the NFL. Such is their tactic.

There were two groups of these tents pitched along the Provincial Road No. 6, which runs parallel with the railway turning inland from Chi-Thanh. As an operation had been started in this area only a few days before our arrival, the refugees were still quite new to the place. There were about 7,000 of them received in these two groups of tents, and the number was increasing all the time. What I called a "tent" was nothing more than a row of bamboo poles propping up canvas sheets. It may be better described as a long shed without any walls. There were seven or eight rows of such tents about 60 feet long. Several thousands of people were living crammed into accommodations no more than these. The place was teaming with all phases of human life.

For example, most of the 3 to 4 thousand refugees, assembled at one camp, were women, children, and old people. Naturally, there was a considerable number of pregnant women. In the camp nearer to Chi-Thanh, there took place one or two childbirths everyday. A straw hut, built next to the ruins of a church destroyed by bombardment, was used as one of the "maternity wards" for these women. I tried a conversation with one of them.

She gave birth to her baby on the roadside, while they were moving to this camp, having been driven out of their hamlet two days before. She was 22 years old, but was careworn. Her voice was so faint that it was difficult to hear what she was saying. When the baby was delivered, an old woman, who was also among the refugees passing by at that time, kindly helped her and cut the navel cord. As her father and mother were with her, she was carried to this camp. Her family had been tenants cultivating a patch of some 0.4 hectares. After the arrival of the NFL, the landlord was gone, and they became the owner of the land. All their cattle were killed by the bombardment.

While I was talking with her, a housewife of around 40 came and pleaded to us saying, "The baby is coming. But, I don't know whom I should tell."

The "refugee camp", where huts are made of waste carton boxes.

Indeed, her figure showed that she had come to her time. The woman was all flurried, with her face distorted in pain. I made haste to find a ROK serviceman and tell him of her situation.

Two old women, a woman aged about 50, and a young housewife were watching us with evident interest. When we rose to leave, the four women came to us pleading, "Please listen to our stories about the cruel doings of the American troops." One of the old women was weeping. They began to tell us their stories by turns.

Before this operation by the ROK troops started, an American troop came to the village for five days, counting from March 20th. Infantrymen arrived after they had hammered the village by bombardment. On March 20th, when one of the old women was about to return home from the early morning market, the infantrymen entered the village. Whenever American soldiers found a young woman, they threatened her saying, "Take off your trousers." Then, they clapped their hands and rolled with laughter. Most of the young girls fled into the mountains; but those housewives and girls who had failed to escape in time were violated. The old women witnessed these scenes. The women who had fled never came back from the mountains. A blind man in their hamlet was killed at that time. The woman of about 50 also said, "My daughter aged eighteen and my son who is fourteen were out with cattle when the American soldiers arrived. They have not come home since then. I am worrying over what has become of them."

American newspapers themselves have reported rapes and murders committed by U. S. servicemen.

*

In middle July, I visited the same place once more, to ascertain what had become of those refugees. The tents were no longer there. Instead, the refugees had been transferred into shacks made of waste carton boxes. As the NFL still continue to infest the area, the ROK troops had just re-opened another operation called Hong-Gil-Ton. The village was once again turned into a battlefield. (See map on page 48)

XVIII A LETTER FOR HOME

It was the time when the sun had just come out of the mountain range (about 2,000 feet above sea level) on the east side of the valley that our helicopter landed on the highest point of the An-Lao Valley. We had flown there from the front base "English" (the headquarters of the battalion) in Binh-Dinh Province, together with cameramen of UPI and PANA, in order to follow B-Company of the First Battalion of the Third Brigade of the First Cavalry Division of the U. S. Forces.

The helicopter landed by the side of a bivouac site where B-Company had spent the previous night. There were not a small number of dead NFL soldiers lying here and there on the turf at a distance of about 30 yards from the bivouac site. Beyond the turf, several white columns of smoke were seen rising from the burnt down farmhouses of the hamlet of Hung-Nhon, situated in the innermost part of the valley,—the aftermath of the fighting that had taken place the night before. One of the nine dead bodies was that of a young woman guerilla.

Putting together what we heard from a NFL boy soldier, who was wounded and taken prisoner, and what the commander of the company (a captain) told us, it appeared that a North Vietnam regular troop*of the size of a company came down this way during the night. They did not know that the U. S. company was bivouacking there; and a battle, which was unexpected to both sides, took place. The woman guerilla was a member of the local militia of the NFL, and was guiding the troop to its destination. The boy prisoner must have been suffering from malaria or undernourishment. He was lean and his face was abnormally yellow. He told us that ever since they had left Thanh-Hoa in North Vietnam ten months before, they had kept on walking all the way through jungles.

Ants were beginning to swarm on the bodies of the NFL soldiers which had been left scattered over the ground for several hours. Most of the dead soldiers were victims of grenade launchers rather than of rifles or machine-guns. The woman guerilla was clad in black, but the others were in greenish-blue uniforms, with the trousers rolled up to the knees, and wore Ho Chi-Minh sandals. The belongings found common to all of them were little more than their respective spare clothing and water-flasks. It seemed that they carried things allotting a different item to each one of them. There were quinine tablets, shovels, mosquito nets, tents that serve also as rain-cloaks, hand-made electric torches—. The 10-clip rifle bullets in magazine and the hand grenades were made in China. A big rice-ball was found thrown out among these things.

On the road traversing the village, a body was lying on its face. The back part of the skull was torn off, and the pinkish colored brains blown out of the head were smeared with mud on the ground. This young soldier, who was probably in his teens, had with him a letter for home. The letter, left unfinished, read as follows:

An American soldier examining the belongings of a NFL soldier shot dead.

My dearest Father and Mother,

How fast the time has flown since I left you and my brothers and sisters. Already three seasons have passed. I am now in a jungle in one of the theaters of battle in the Central Region. It is early afternoon now, and I am writing this letter in a very family-like atmosphere, which is at the same time full of high morale of revolutionary spirit.

Though I am so far away from you, and from all dear ones in the family, my heart is always with you. You know how dearly I am longing for you, and how anxiously I am thinking about you. But, if you should get ill, by worrying too much over me, that would be the most painful thing for me. I know very well that you and others of the same blood are anxious about me who am so far away from you. But, there are thousands and tens of thousands of people besides myself, who, having left their parents and brothers, having parted with their wives and children, are leading the life in which the love for kinsmen is transformed into the love of our homeland, so that the future of our beautiful homeland will be secure.

I always regret that I have done so little to repay my parents for the kind care and affection with which you have brought me up. Now that I am old enough to understand things, and to feel gratitude for your affection from the bottom of my heart, I am many thousands of miles away from you. All I can do now is to devote myself to my duty, and to fight to the best of my ability in order to distinguish myself in battle, and to bring about the unification of our homeland Vietnam as early as possible. This is the only way I can serve you instead of being near you and attending you with filial devotion.

My dear brothers and sisters. You, too, must be thinking of me all the time. I am also feeling for you. As I am now thousands of miles away, I cannot serve our parents, nor can I do anything to help you, but.... (the rest was blank.) (See map on page 48)

* Unless stated otherwise, the word "NFL" now includes North Vietnamese Forces also.

Every house evacuated by the peasants is set on fire. Notice the cans of rice on the roof and sweet potatoes scattered on the ground.

XIX SOUVENIRS OF THE BATTLE

Around 8:00 a.m., B-Company commenced a mopping-up of the hamlet of Hung-Nhon. The American soldiers advanced slowly, breaking up into platoons. Most of the coconut trees and betel palms (Areca catechu), which had been standing around each farmhouse casting cool shadows, were pitifully scorched by the bombardment.

Hand grenades were thrown into all air-raid shelters, one by one. Nearly half of the farmhouses remained unburnt, but fire was set to all of them, without an exception. The thatched roofs, parched by the hot sun of the South, immediately sent up pillars of flame, leaving only mud walls in the debris.

Usually, when peasants evacuate, they store un-hulled rice in their shelters, hoping that even though the houses may be burnt, at least their food will be spared. Generally, the rice is kept in oil cans (a can contains about 4 gallons). The American soldiers threw these cans of rice up on the roofs, and burned the grain together with the houses. Sweet potatoes were scattered all over the yards, and crockery was broken into pieces under the military shoes. The big jars of drinking water were, of course, overthrown and smashed.

Those things most precious to peasants were not worth a straw in the eyes of these soldiers. But, there was one thing which one of them put into his pocket. It was a pack of playing cards found in a shelter. Strangely enough, however, all the cards of the pack were aces.

After having done with the rough handling, the soldiers now returned to the bivouac site, in order to make preparations for going southward down the valley. Probably because they had ascertained that there were no signs of the NFL hiding around the place, there was an atmosphere of relaxation pervading the troop.

One of the American soldiers approached the corpse of the young woman guerilla, lying prone in a narrow depression of land like a ditch. Her head was turned on one side, but the flowing black hair covered her face. An ear-ring was seen on her ear. In Vietnam, almost 100% of the women wear ear-rings.

While I was looking on, standing only about 9 feet away, the American soldier snatched the ear-ring off her ear. Then, kicking her head to turn it over on the other side, he tore off the other one of the pair, and put the ear-rings in his pocket. Robbing corpses, however, was nothing compared with what I saw next.

Another soldier, stripped to the waist, walked up to another dead body lying on the turf, about 25 feet from the body of the woman. Holding a knife in one hand, he grabbed one of the ears of the NFL soldier. He deftly used his knife and cut off the ear, exactly in the same way as Eskimoes used their knives to cut off the tips of the horns of reindeer, to eat the tips.*

As the action was performed so casually, at first I could not make out why the soldier did such a thing. Feeling queer and puzzled, I walked to a bank where the cameramen were standing. While walking, I began to see the meaning of his action. At that very moment, Mr. P., a Vietnamese cameraman, said, "Mr. Honda, look at that!", calling my attention in a low voice. It was evident that he had seen the same thing. The American soldier was putting the ear into a vinyl bag.

Another cameraman, standing next to Mr. P. had also noticed the soldier. He turned to the American soldier with whom he had been talking and asked, "What is that boy going to do with the ear?" The soldier to whom the question was put answered bluntly, with a bitter scowl,—"For a souvenir."

"The Japanese correspondent has seen it. He is going to write about it, you know." The cameraman pressed the subject further. The American soldier, who was in charge of operating a tape-recorder with microphone for publicity use, looked extremely annoyed and tried hard to find some excuse. —"He is a neurotic. A very serious case, too."

Mr. P. added, "He is going to dry the ear, and take it home as a souvenir. This sort of thing is nothing special. I even saw a soldier cutting the liver out of a dead body."

*

The U. S. Forces Special Troops are saying to the mountain tribes in Vietnam, "We will give you money, if you kill Viet Congs and bring their ears to prove that you have done it." American soldiers themselves have testified to this fact, and this is reported also in the United States.

* In 1963, the author spent two months living in an Eskimo community in Arctic Canada, and published the report of his life among the Eskimoes.

XX AN OLD WOMAN IN THE RUINS

The valley of An-Lao has been turned into the arena of fierce battles several times in the past. It was not for the first time that the hamlets were reduced to ashes. Very often, the farmhouses to which American soldiers set fire showed clearly that the houses had been rebuilt with thatched roofs put on the mud walls left unburnt. No matter how many times they have their houses burnt, the peasants always come back to their own land. Whatever amount of "relief goods" the United States may pour into the refugee camps, she will never succeed in gaining the hearts of the Asian peasants.

In the hamlet of Hung-Nhon, all the inhabitants were supposed to have evacuated by the day before. Therefore, the U. S. Forces could regard all who remained as belonging to the NFL. Grenades were thrown into all shelters and any kind of holes. The houses flaming up by incendiaries; the dust blown up by exploding grenades; stinking smell of the buffaloes killed by shells; dead bodies of the NFL soldiers lying around....

In the ghastly scene of the last moment of the hamlet now burning down to the ground, an old woman came out like an apparition. Where did she come from? It was a wonder that she had survived all that. Emaciated, with her hair dishevelled, her figure emerged out of the hell-like background. It made one shiver with its weirdness.

This company was accompanied by a soldier of the Government troops, to serve as interpreter. The old woman was delivered to this interpreter. He pulled her toward the bivouac site of the U. S. troop. Wandering along over the turf dotted with corpses, the old woman, at least over 70 years, talked to white and Negro soldiers, when she passed by their side. It may be that she was talking to herself.

"I am going home, I tell you."

"Where is my stick, don't you know?"

"Oh, these are plates. I will pick one up."

It was one of the paper plates which the American soldiers threw away after meals.

"Do any of you have Cao? I haven't tasted it for the whole week."

Cao is a nut of the betel palm, which women of South-East Asia like to chew, to enjoy the flavor.

"Here is an empty can on the ground."

It was an empty fruit juice can also thrown away by American soldiers. The interpreter did not take any trouble to translate the words of the old woman to the American soldiers to whom she spoke. He just ignored her talking. Her hearing seemed to be weak. Even when we asked her age, and in a loud voice shouted into her ear, she said, "I don't understand." Her deafness might have been due to the terrible bombardment.

"Now, I am really going home."

The old woman continued in a hoarse voice her one-sided conversation without waiting for an answer.

"My legs are feeble. I go home, and when I get stronger, I will go with you."

Was she talking like this, fearing that the soldiers were going to take her away?

"I can't go, because I have children at home, and grandchildren, too."

Probably, she had gone out of her mind. There was not a single house left in the hamlet, where children and grandchildren could be found.

"I'm so hungry. I cannot stay here any longer."

With the paper plate and the empty can in her hand, she started walking in the direction of the hamlet. The interpreter took her back.

"Where do you want me to sit? You tell me."

"What do you think a woman of seventy or eighty like myself can do? Don't you understand?"

"I am hungry."

She began to walk again. Once again, the interpreter harshly pulled her back, almost dragging her on the ground. Most of the Vietnamese soldiers serving as interpreters treat ordinary civilians more cruelly than American soldiers. Wherever you go, you find this kind of men, who feel themselves superior to their own people, by identifying themselves with foreign powers....

"My bottom is all smeared. What are you going to do with it for me?" Probably due to the shock she had undergone, she had soiled her trousers.

"I want to go home, only to get my things."

"I promise you to come back. I leave this plate and the can here. So, you know I will be back."

She left the paper plate and the empty can on the turf, and started walking once again. As the interpreter was about to drag her back, an American soldier who was nearby stopped him, and said, "Let her alone." The interpreter shouted at her back, "If you want to die, get away quick!"

Toward her hamlet, still smouldering, the old woman went back, holding on her stick, walking very, very slowly.

The old woman on her way back to her hamlet.

Postscript

This reportage entitled, "Vietnam—A Voice from the Villages" (Japanese title: Senjo no Mura) was serialized in the Asahi Shimbun from September through October, 1967, as the fifth part of a more comprehensive on-scene report on Vietnam written by the newspaper's special correspondent to Vietnam, Mr. Honda. The whole report consists of the following parts:

Part 1	Vietnamese in Saigon
Part 2	The Montagnards
Part 3	Farmers in the Mekong Delta
Part 4	Fishermen in Central Vietnam
Part 5	(This reportage)
Part 6	People in the Liberated Area

The Asahi Shimbun, with a circulation of 9,150,000 (5,500,000 for the morning edition and 3,650,000 for the evening edition), is the most influential of the three major daily newspapers in Japan. It is in fact the largest newspaper in the world in respect to the number of readers. The Asahi Shimbun is known for its complete political independence, and as such it plays the role of an important opinion leader in Japan.

Mr. Honda's reportage, as soon as it began to be printed in the Asahi Shimbun, caused tremendous public repercussions. The readers' column of the newspaper was flooded with thousands of letters from readers impressed deeply by Mr. Honda's vivid description of the Vietnamese realities. In fact, the Asahi Shimbun had never received so many readers' letters on a single reportage as it did during that period. At a university in Tokyo, students composed a song of "Senjo no Mura" to express their feeling over war victims in Vietnam.

It must be mentioned in this context that Mr. Tadanoshin Yui (73), an old pacifist Esperantist had translated this reportage into Esperanto before he burned himself to death on Nov. 12, 1967 in protest against the war in Vietnam.

Those who read this reportage strongly felt that all people in the world must be given an opportunity to read this factual and prejudice-free report. Thus, an Committee for the English Publication of "Vietnam—A Voice from the Villages" was organized by volunteers from different peace groups to translate and publish this report in English. Prof. Sam H. Franklin of Tokyo Union Theological Seminary, who has lived in Japan for a long time, offered his cooperation in the work of translation although the English text was prepared on the responsibility of Japanese translator.

The Committee consists of the following persons:

Yayoi Aoki	(Citizens against the War in Vietnam)
Michio Azegami	(Society of Science of Thought)
Reiko Ishida	(Joining Hands for Peace)
Fujiko Isono	(Women's International League for Peace and Freedom)
Yasuteru Minemura	(Citizens against the War in Vietnam)
Ichiyo Muto	(Beheiren: Japan "Peace for Vietnam!" Committee)
Tsuruko Saito	(Kusanomikai: Seeds of Weed Group)

All the photos printed in this booklet, excepting those in the 19th and 20th sections, were taken by Mr. Fujiki Takane, a photographer who accompanied Mr. Honda to Vietnam. The two photos in the 19th and 20th sections were taken by Mr. Honda himself.

The reporter and the photographer, forming a team, have covered Eskimoes in Arctic Canada, highlanders in New Guinea and Bedouins in Saudi Arabia. They have been to the United States, too. They are both Alpinists. Mr. Honda climbed the Himalayas and Mr.Fujiki the Andes in their university days.

January 1968

Committee for the English Publication of 《Vietnam—A Voice from the Villages》

Map

I

II

X

XVII

XVIII

Pulse of the Public

Descendant of 300 Years of Southerners Asks the South Not To Degrade Itself

Atlanta—I have recently had a heart attack and I doubt if I will get to see you and talk to you in person. I am therefore writing to you on the subject of segregation.

I do not wish to waste your valuable time by writing to you to "brag" of my ancestors. But my people on both sides of my family, both father's and mother's sides, have been Southerners for nearly 300 years. My father fought in the Confederate Army at the Battle of Gettysburg when he was a boy of 15½. My grandfather was wounded in the Battle of Gettysburg. My grandfather Early's brother was Confederate Gen. Jubal A. Early who attacked through the town of Gettysburg with his Confederate division the first day of the battle. I had five Cabell cousins killed in the one little Civil War battle of New Market where the V.M.I. cadet batallion won the victory for the South.

My ancestors and kinsmen, Cabells and Earlys, have been governors of Southern states, including Gov. Peter Early of Georgia. John Cabell Breckinridge of Kentucky was the presidential candidate for the Southern Democrats in 1860. He was a near cousin of my mother's.

So if I am not a Southerner and a son of the Confederacy, who is?

Being a Southerner I do not wish to see the South do anything that degrades the South.

The wrongs and injustices perpetrated by Southern whites on Negroes in the past have injured the white South even more than they injured the helpless Negroes. Mark Twain said that the worst thing that could be said about a being was that he belonged to the human race. The actions of Negro - haters confirm Mark Twain's dictum.

I am now in my 81st year and have seen segregation longer and further back than you. As a native-born Southerner all my life I have heard the same thing from Southerners: "We like the Negro but like him in his place." That meant the white Southerner wished to see Negro slavery continued in a slightly different form. Instead of individual ownership of Negro slaves, which the end of the Civil War stopped, it was to be a community ownership of Negro slaves. Negroes were to serve in the lowest paid group of illiterate personal servants and nothing else.

My mother was a deeply religious person who before our Civil War ended, taught the family slaves something about the Christian religion. She taught her father's slaves the alphabet so they could read the Bible. Under the Virginia laws of those days my mother could have been put in the penitentiary for five years for teaching Negroes the alphabet.

I believe that segregation is morally indefensible.

A Southerner who is proud to be on your team,

CLIFFORD CABELL EARLY.

* * *

'Let's Be Faithful To Our Heritage'

Atlanta—One of the saddest days that came to Christian and godly people of the United States was the Supreme Court's outlawing Bible reading and prayer in the public schools.

The great majority of our citizens are against the decision. How can we teach our pupils moral and spiritual values without the Bible principles? The Bible and the Lord have not hurt America. They have rather built her into the greatest nation of the world. Let us be faithful to our heritage and hold it fast.

B. M. SHARIAN.

Turn to Page 5, Col 1

Turn to Page 5,

HUSKY NEGRO ATTACKS WOMAN AS SHE KNEELS FOR PRAYERS

WASHINGTON — "We have reached the point where a human being can't even go to church and pray with safety," a Congressman declared on the floor of the House of Representatives Monday afternoon.

Rep. Frank Becker (R. N.Y.) referred to an atack on his 45 - year - old secretary, Mary Lou Kosterlitzky, by a husky young Negro as she knelt to pray in a church just two blocks from the Capitol.

Miss Kosterlitzky was in solitary prayer at the altar of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church when suddenly there was a 6-foot Negro, 20 to 25 years old, behind her.

"Keep quiet," he said, "and you won't get hurt."

The secretary said the Negro grabbed her by the arm and forced her to walk to the confessional, where he choked her, stabbed her nine times in the back and hand, and took $7. She had pleaded with him not to hurt her, offering the assailant what money she had.

"It is a disgrace to the nation that this should happen in our capital city," Rep. Becker told his fellow members of Congress.

The victim was taken to Casualty Hospital, where her condition was described as serious.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Judge Tuttle Rules With Negro Leaders

By VIC SMITH
Herald City Editor

Tension mounted in this strife-torn center of activity along racial lines today, as national integrationist organizations threw their full weight into a political power battle designed to beat Albany to its knees.

The balance tilted toward the outside agitators with a ruling at noon today by Federal Judge Elbert Tuttle of Atlanta, who overthrew an injunction delivered by Judge Robert Elliott of Columbus Saturday.

Judge Elliott had decreed that agitators cease mass demonstrations, economic boycotts and other activities which City authorities, who beseeched the Federal judge for relief, said would get out of control—so far as law enforcement was concerned.

Elliott Agrees

Judge Elliott evidently agreed with Mayor Asa Kelley, City Manager Steve Roos and Police Chief Laurie Pritchett of Albany that unless something was done, the situation would deteriorate to a point where anything could happen.

Negro leaders, headed by Martin Luther King Jr., immediately applied for "relief" from Judge Elliott's injunction to Judge W. A. Bootle in Macon.

Meanwhile, more than 160 Negroes marched and demonstrated here Saturday night, in open defiance of Judge Elliott's ruling. They were arrested, and Mayor Kelley has said that actions for contempt of court will be brought against them and their leaders before Judge Elliott at a hearing Monday.

Judge Elliott set July 30, at 2 p. m. as the time for a hearing before him to determine whether his injunction should or should not be made permanent.

Judge Bootle, appealed to by the Negroes, said, in effect, that he had nothing to do with the matter and that any "relief" should be sought from Judge Elliott. The Negroes, through an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union and such other organizations, then went to Judge Tuttle.

In announcing his decision, Tuttle said he was acting as a member of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Tuttle announced he will stay an injunction issued against demonstrations and boycotts by Negroes at Albany.

Formal Order

He said he would issue the formal order this afternoon, and that it will not prevent Judge Elliott of Columbus from proceeding with a hearing at Albany next Monday on making permanent the injunction he granted Friday night.

Tuttle said he is acting as a member of the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, overruling objections by the state that he had no power to act.

Before announcing what his rul-

Turn to Page 5, Col. 4

MAYOR SAYS JUDGE'S RULE ON ORDER IS 'INCREDIBLE'

Mayor Asa Kelley Jr. of Albany, after the hearing, said "the City of Albany for many, many months has been striving all-out to maintain the peace and tranquility of our community against the mass demonstrations of Negroes whipped into a frenzy by the outside agitators.

"To me Judge Tuttle's ruling staying the injunction is incredible. On his shoulders now rests the responsibilities of overt events that could happen in a normally law-abiding community. Our record of peace-making is a matter of national record.

"We will continue, with all our resources to keep the peace, dignity and quiet of our city."

The Mayor continued, after Judge Tuttle's decision to stay the injunction, "no matter what happens in our city, no matter what the legal opinion of Judge Tuttle, we will continue to enforce our laws for the safety of all our citizens, Negroes or whites."

BIG CITIES GETTING MORE NON-WHITES

Those of Vote Age Make Up 17.6% in Top 25

By WILL LISSNER

Non-whites now account for 17.6 per cent of the voting-age population in the twenty-five largest cities, the Census Bureau has found.

In the 1960 census the bureau classified as non-whites Negroes, Indians, Orientals and 10 per cent of Puerto Ricans.

The classification is mainly Negro, however, as it contains only a relatively few members of the other races. Of the 18,871,831 Negroes in the United States, 6,025,193 live in the twenty-five largest cities and make up 19.7 per cent of the total population in those cities.

In only two of the five largest cities, the non-white, voting-age groups total less than 20 per cent of the population.

13.2% in New York

In New York this group constitutes 13.2 per cent of the total of citizen residents in the 21-and-over bracket. The Los Angeles figure is 15.4 per cent.

Of citizens qualified by age to vote in Chicago, 20.2 per cent are non-white. In Philadelphia the figure is 23.9 per cent and in Detroit 25.7 per cent.

In Baltimore, the sixth largest city, potential voters among non-whites amount to 30.5 per cent of the total.

Only seven of the largest cities have non-white, voting-age populations below 10 per cent.

Non-whites among citizens qualified by age to vote make up 15 per cent or more in sixteen of the largest cities, and 20 per cent or more in ten.

The Census Bureau's tabulation follows:

	Non-whites of Voting Age	P.C. of Total
New York	[illegible]	13.2
Chicago	471,[illegible]	20.2
Los Angeles	252,[illegible]	15.4
Philadelphia	313,551	23.9
Detroit	273,[illegible]	25.7
Baltimore	179,[illegible]	30.5
Houston	119,[illegible]	21.7
Cleveland	143,[illegible]	30.0
St. Louis	120,[illegible]	34.7
Milwaukee	32,[illegible]	6.9
San Francisco	88,[illegible]	15.2
Boston	39,[illegible]	8.4
Dallas	72,[illegible]	17.3
New Orleans	125,[illegible]	32.8
Pittsburgh	40,[illegible]	15.3
San Antonio	33,[illegible]	7.7
San Diego	23,[illegible]	7.0
Seattle	27,[illegible]	7.4
Buffalo	40,[illegible]	11.7
Cincinnati	43,[illegible]	19.8
Memphis	[illegible]	33.7
Denver	[illegible]	6.4
Atlanta	[illegible]	34.9
Minneapolis	[illegible]	2.7
Indianapolis	34,[illegible]	19.0
Total, 25 cities	2,473,[illegible]	17.6
United States	10,973,337	10.1

*Voting age in Atlanta is 18, not 21 as in all other cities listed.

These figures indicate that the minority groups, and candidates from among them, will play a greater role in politics in the next few decades.

Moreover, the percentages may be expected to grow significantly in the next decade. Americans have been moving from the country to metropolitan areas. This is a world-wide movement. Negroes, who account for most non-whites, have been moving to the central cities.

Migration among Negroes in the South has accelerated. Of those who have remained in the region, many have moved from the country to the big city.

Hundreds of thousands of Negroes have moved from the South to Northeast, North Central and Western regions. Most of these are from the cities, but many are from rural areas of the South.

During the last decade the South lost 1,457,000 non-white residents by migration to the three northern regions. This is a net figure; additional losses were offset by a movement of non-whites into the region.

Should the South fail to attract non-white migrants, its losses will rise sharply, for the out-migration has accelerated in recent years.

The South's net losses show [illegible] net gains to the three regions in the Census Bureau's [illegible] Northeast had a gain of 541,000 non-whites, and [illegible] North Central region 558,000.

The West, which had a negligible non-white population up to the turn of the century, gained 232,000.

These movements have raised the spectre of declining populations for some Southern states, a situation that may seriously handicap their efforts to develop industrially.

The loss of non-whites by migration offset the natural increase in the non-white population in two states, Mississippi and Arkansas. As a result, Mississippi's non-white population declined by 70,000, that of Arkansas by 37,000.

The excess of non-white births over deaths was substantially offset by a loss by migration in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama.

Florida gained 182,000 non-whites by natural increase, 101,000 by migration.

MISC.

Pulse of t[illegible]tic

These Murderers Shared a Motivation But It's Love That Makes Man Human

Forsyth — We have read much of the forces of hate that struck down a civil rights leader in Mississippi, Negro children in Birmingham and, in the most recent act of incredible horror, the President of the United States, a man who had dedicated his life to the defense of liberty for all. And even as the world shrieked in dismay at the death of Mr. Kennedy, his suspected assassin was slain.

The political leanings of the murderers differed, but they shared a motivation of hatred that so blinded their vision and dulled their sensitivity that they knew not what they did.

Other people hate; Oswald and Booth killed presidents. We are a kind and peaceful people. We do not hate. Or do we? Continually, the seeds of doubt and suspicion are planted in our souls and minds. The soil in which they fall varies: in faith in God and belief in the worth of His individual creatures, these seeds are examined and they wither; in ignorance and selfishness they find a fertile bed.

Most of us represent neither extreme: we are neither strong enough to resist the Prince of Darkness entirely, nor weak enough to turn ourselves over to him. Part of our weakness lies in failing to recognize the extent of the invasion of hatred in our lives. We encounter it thinly disguised as prejudice, snobbery, and resentment. In fact, we have let the poison seep down to our children: some high school students applauded; and their classmates wept, their grief compounded with shame.

We, the silent ones, share that shame. But grief and shame are not enough. We have been too polite, fearing to offend a friend who has made a derogatory remark. We have remained silent while those in the barbershop or other public gathering places have cursed those whose opinions were different from their own. We have said little or nothing when public officials have openly defied the Constitution of the United States, claiming that its assurances of liberty and equality for all would threaten their particular empire.

were privileged to have serve us even for so brief a time, has given me the courage to outwardly express what I feel. I shall no longer hold back in silence — displaying the same cowardice I have observed when our illustrious white citizens are backed down with the moral knowledge that they honestly know themselves wrong.

I shall, from this day, fight every vestige of evil and hate I see or hear — in the classroom, the faculty room, in every area with which I may come in contact — and I shall give to the America I believe in and to the memory of our great President John F. Kennedy every ounce of my being to help you children to understand what is happening around us and to love all people as he did.

A TEACHER.

Leo Aikman

The Face Was Familiar

O[illegible]When Bill Bowdoin and War[illegible] Joseph Ragen, the Illinois [illegible]al expert, were inspecting [illegible] prisons of [illegible]gia in [illegible]ring the [illegible]s Ra[illegible] Report, [illegible]ked in[illegible]kitchen [illegible] county [illegible] camp. [illegible]g nition [illegible] the face [illegible] fat con[illegible] cook and [illegible]aid, "Why, good mornin', [illegible]den Ragen, how are you?" [illegible]ainly the convict had the ad[illegible]ntage of the penologist.

"How do you know me?" the [illegible]tter wanted to know.

The cook smiled. "Oh, I know you," he said, "I used to be with you in Joliet."

Joliet is the Illinois state prison.

When the investigative group visited the Pulaski County camp, they found it in good order, one of the best.

They sat down in the office of

On Mental Health

Atlanta — Now after the sad death of The President of the United States, maybe something will now be done about the mental illness program in the United States.

F. A. JOHNS.

Truly a Leader

Milledgeville—President Kennedy was a straightforward, morally honest and sincere individual who carried these attributes with him when he dealt with the leaders and peoples of the world. I believe friend and foe alike respected him for this —whether they agreed with his policies or not. His strength lay in a personality which radiated integrity and forcefulness of purpose. He was truly a leader among leaders.

Let us hope that President Johnson and future presidents will be able to muster the dy-

Joliet is the Illinois state prison.

When the investigative group visited the Pulaski County camp, they found it in good order, one of the best.

They sat down in the office of Pulaski Warden Head to commend him on the camp.

"By the way," Bill Bowdoin asked, "how many prisoners do you have?"

"We have 84," the Pulaski warden answered.

Right then the phone rang. He picked it up, engaged in short conversation and said in embarrassment, "I'm sorry, gentlemen, we have only 83 prisoners. One of them has just escaped."

* * *

JEST FOR TODAY: The charge was assault and battery and the first witness, an old farmer, had taken the stand.

The defense attorney, notorious for the way he browbeat witnesses, fired the first question: "Now just how far were you from the parties when this alleged assault took place?"

"Exactly 15 feet 10 inches and a half," the farmer answered.

The defense attorney bristled. "Do you mean to sit here under oath and tell this court that you were exactly 15 feet 10 inches and a half away?"

"Yes, sir, I certainly do."

"How can you be so sure?"

"Because I expected some fool would ask me," the farmer said, "so I jest took out my rule and measured it."

* * *

HINT: Here's advice for the season overheard in a department store in the shopping rush: "If you don't know what you're looking for, you usually find it quicker than if you do."

* * *

HIGHLINES: Relatives are people whose shortcomings sometimes include long stayings. — Kate's Korner, Dawson Co. Advertiser.

or nothing when public officials have openly defied the Constitution of the United States, claiming that its assurances of liberty and equality for all would threaten their particular empire.

If it is true — that hate destroys the hater — then what is it that makes man human? The answer, of course, is love. It is the love of which Paul speaks when he reminds us that of faith, hope, and charity (love), "the greatest of these is charity." We find that this love makes lovely the loveless and unlovable. But it is not easy. For every action there is a reaction, and for a love this deep, there emerges a hate of terrible dimensions. We must be prepared to fight this hatred, not with hate itself but with love that transcends the limits of time and space and existence here on this earth. This is not an alternative: it is an imperative.

MRS. SAM H. FRANK.

A Teacher Speaks

Atlanta — As a school teacher in the Atlanta area who feels very strongly about the ignominious Nov. 22 assassination, I would like to say a few words to my school children which, I can only wish now, had been stated previous to that tragic day.

My dear children:

Being a somewhat recent newcomer to your lovely city I remained silent while listening to murmurings, jokes and parodies on our country, its laws and our President. May I say now that from the moment of my arrival here I have encountered more bigotry, more ignorance, more hatred—religious and racial—than I had ever thought possible.

However, this horrendous deed which took the life of a good, kind, honest, most intelligent and devoted man whom we in a personality which radiated integrity and forcefulness of purpose. He was truly a leader among leaders.

Let us hope that President Johnson and future presidents will be able to muster the dynamic resourcefulness to deal with world leaders as well as their predecessor. Perhaps the people of the United States should assess the qualities mentioned above in candidates they may vote for in the years to come.

ARTHUR E. ALPER, PH.D.

He Was Murdered

Atlanta—It is almost impossible to reconcile oneself to the death of a rare human being as President John Fitzgerald Kennedy was. It is more painful when all of the man's potentialities have not been realized because of his youth. And most horrible is the fact that his death was an assassination—this brilliant, visionary, compassionate, courageous man was murdered.

His death can be endued only when one realizes it is only the body of the man that is gone. His great spirit of humanitarian craving for freedom, peace, justice is among us, if we want it to be. I think a tangible proof of real grief for our great President would be to shower our senators and congressmen with mail asking them to pass the President's programs that he fought so hard for.

It would seem to me a particularly important bill to be passed is the Youth Conservation Bill. Perhaps that and the education bill and all of Kennedy's legislation might, and I believe would, prevent the maturing of misfits and unadaptable people such as Lee Oswald. They might have more opportunities for growth in the right direction.

ELIZABETH BOWERS.

Media Personnel sent VIOLENCE AND INTIMIDATION REPORT

Ashmore, Harry S.
Arkansas Gazette

Attwood, William
Look Magazine

Austin, L. E.
Carolina Times

Baggs, William
Miami Daily News

Baker, Robert
Washington Post

Baird, Joseph H.
Dekalb New Era

Barnett, Claude A.
Associated Negro Press

Clark, Dale
WAGA Radio Station

Beach, Clarke
U. S. News & World Report

Blair, Frank
TODAY

Boone , Buford
Tuscaloosa News

Briney, Russell
Louisville Courier Journal

Broder, David S.
Congressional Quarterly News Feature

Brown, Robert W.
St. Petersburg Times

Carter, Hodding
Delta Democrat-Times

Cater, Douglass
The Reporter

Clayton, Charles C.
The Quill

Daly, John
American Broadcasting Company

Davidson, Herbert M.
Daytona Beach News Journal

East, P. D.
Petal Paper

Emerson, William
Newsweek

Ernest, Harry
The Charleston Gazette

Etheridge, Mark
Louisville Courier-Journal

Eubanks, Bicknell
Christian Science Monitor

Fowler, Robert
Cobb County Times

Fowlkes, William
Atlanta Daily World

Friendly, Alfred W.
Washington Post

Fuller, Helen
The New Republic

Fullerton, Gary
Nashville Tennessean

Galphin, Bruce
Atlanta Constitution

Gitlin, Irving
Columbia Broadcasting System

Harrison, Gilbert
New Republic

Atlanta, Ga., AP Bureau
Hawkins, Lewis E., Chief

Jackson, E.O.
Birmingham World

Johnston, Harry
Time, Inc.

Johnston, John H.
Jet

Kaplow, Herb
National Broadcasting System

Kuettner, Al
United Press International

Lofton, John
Pittsburgh Post Gazette

Lumsden, Marsahll
Life Magazine

Marlowe, Jim
Associated Press

McAndrew, William
NBC News Department

McGill, Ralph
Atlanta Constitution

McKnight, C. A.
Charlotte Observer

McMillan George
Aiken, S. C.

McWilliams, Carey
The Nation

Meyer, Sylvan
The Daily Times

Mickelson, Sig
Columbia Broadcasting System

Montgomery, Jim
Atlanta Constitution

Morgan Edward P.
Washington, D. C.

Morse, Arthur
Columbia Broadcasting System

Oberdorfer, Donald
Washington, D. C.

Ochs, Martin S.
The Chattanooga Times

Orr, Edward B.
The Christian Science Monitor

Parham, Joe
The Macon News

Parrish, John R. Jr.
The Nashville Tennessean

Peters, William
Pelham Manor, N. Y.

Phillips, Cabell
N. Y. Times Magazine

Editor
Pittsburgh Courier

Popham, Joe
Chattanooga Tims

Poynter, Nelson
St. Petersburg Times

Price, Bem
McLean, Va.

Rubin, Morris
Progressive Magazine

Sarratt, Reed
Piedmont Publishing Company

Schwab, A.
Review of the Week--N. Y. Times

Shoemaker, Don
Miami Herald

Simmons, Paul
Associated Press

Sitton, Claude
New York Times

Spalding, Jack
Atlanta Journal

Stanley, F. L.
Defender

Stern, Phillip M.
Northern Virginia Sun

Stolley, Richard
Time-Life

Struby, Bert
Macon Telegraph

Watters, Pat
Atlanta Journal

Wesley, Carter
Houston Informer

Westfeldt, Wallace
Nashville Tennessean

Wyant, William K. Jr.
St. Louis Post Dispatch

Young, Thomas W.
Journal and Guide

Christian Century
Chigago, Illinois

Christianity Today
Washington, D. C.

Evangelical Press Service
Long Island, N. Y.

Religious News Service
Miss Lillian Block
New York, New York

Mr. Lyman Bryson
CBS

Mr. John Lessing
LIFE

LIST

(SRC Distribution of Violence Report)

Galen Weaver
Congregational Christian Churches

Miss Dorothy Hampton
Raleigh, N. C.

Wilton Dillon
Phelps-Stokes Fund

George Meany
AFL-CIO

Boris Shiskin
AFL-CIO

David J. McDonald
U. S. Steelworkers

Miss Thelma Stevens
WDCS - Methodist Church

Malcolm Calhoun
Presby. Church, U.S.

MASS MEDIA COMMITTEE:

Sidney Hollander
Baltimore, Md.

Al Hamilton
Auto Workers
Washington

Guichard Parris
Nat'l. Urban League

J. Oscar Lee
Nat'l. Council of Churches

Jacob Schlitt
Jewish Labor Committee

H. B. Sissel
Presby Church, USA

George K. Hunton
Catholic Interracial Council

Mr. Shad Polier
Amer. Jewish Congress

Oscar Cohen
Anti-Defamation League

Edwin Lukas
Amer. Jewish Cttee.

Harry Fleischman
National Labor Service

Alfred Bernheim
Amer. Jewish Cttee.

Alex Morisey
Amer. Friends Ser. Cttee.

Alan Reitman
Amer. Civil Liberties Union

William Oliver
UAW

J. Oscar Lee
Nat'l. Council of Churches

Tartt Bell
Amer. Friends Ser. Cttee.

Interagency people

Will Maslow
Amer. Jewish Congress

Haskell Lazere
Amer. Jewish Congress

Alexander Miller
Anti-Defamation League

Herman H. Long
Race Relations Dept.
Congregational Christian Churches

Lewis Deer
Disciples of Christ

National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church - Indianapolis

Cornelius C. Tarplee
Nat'l Council of the Protestant
Episcopal Church
Lynchburg, Va.

Harold Haas
United Lutheran Church
N. Y,

A. Dudley Ward
The Methodist Church
Chicago

Leon Adkins
The Methodist Church
Nashville

Gordon W. Lovejoy
National Conf. of Christians and Jews
Guilford College, N. C.

M. T. Puryear
National Urban League
Atlanta

Mrs. Jean Russell
Presby. Church, USA
Greenville, Tenn.

Martin Luther King, Jr.
Southern Leadership Conf. - Montgomery, Ala.

Miss Ella Baker
Southern Leadership Conf.
Atlanta

Mr. Benjamin Segal
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Galen Martin
Unitarian Ser. Cttee.
Knoxville, Tenn.

Carlton Parker
YMCA
Atlanta

Miss Florence C. Harris
YWCA
Atlanta

(Also sent to all State Councils on Human Relations of SRC)

19 10
6

Distribution of VIOLENCE REPORT

L I S T

Mr. Francis C. Shane
U. A. W.
1500 Commonwealth Bldg.
Pittsburgh 22

Mr. James C. Evans
Civilian Assistant
Office of the Asst. Secy.
of Defence
Washington 25

Miss Marguerite Hawkins
WDCS - Methodist Church
150 Fifth Ave.
New York 11

Senator Thomas C. Hennings, Jr.
Washington 25

Senator John A. Carroll
Washington 25

Senator Jacob R. Javits
Washington 25

Senator John F. Kennedy
Washington 25

Rep. Emanuel Celler
Washington 25

Mr. Gordon Tiffany
Civil Rights Commission
726 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington 25

Mr. J. Edgar Hoover
Washington

Mr. W. Wilson White
Dept. of Justice
Washington 25

Mr. Harris Wofford
Civil Rights Commission
Washington

Mr. Henry Shine
Civil Rights Commission
Washington

Mr. Jim Mathis
Boston Post
Washington

Mr. Herbert J. Blitz
Room 326 Senate Bldg.
Washington

The Embassy of Union of S. Africa
3101 Massachusetts Ave.
Washington
(Attn: Press Attache)

Mr. Charles Goodrum
Librarian
Library of Congress (12 copies)
Washington

Rep. Richard Bolling
Washington

Senate Constitutional Rights
Sub-committee
Washington 25 10 copies
(Attn: Miss Simons)

Mr. August Heckscher
Twentieth Century Fund
330 W. 42d St.
New York 36

Mr. & Mrs. DeJough Franklin
1585 W. Paces Ferry Rd. N.W.
Atlanta

Mr. Stephen Currier
Staunton Hill Farms
Brookneal, Va.

Mr. Galen Weaver
Congregational Christian Churches
287 Fourth Avenue
New York 10

Miss Dorothy Hampton
1503 Benehan Street
Raleigh, N.C.

Mr. John J. Scanlon
Fund for Advancement of Educ.
477 Madison Ave.
New York 22

List - continued
Page Two

Interagency
Mr. Jacob S. Potofsky
President
Sidney Hillman Foundation
15 Union Square West
New York 3

Mrs. Ruby Hurley
N. A. A. C. P.
859 Hunter Street
Atlanta

Mr. B. Tartt Bell
American Friends Ser. Cottee.
1818 S. Main St.
High Point, N. C.

Mr. Arthur J. Levin
Anti-Defamation League
41 Exchange Place, S. E.
Atlanta

Mr. Charles Wittenstein
~~Am~~ Amer. Jewish Committee
41 Exchange Place, S.E., Rm. 703
Atlanta 3

Mr. William Oliver
U. A. W.
8000 E. Jefferson Ave.
Detroit 14

Mr. Will D. Campbell
National Council of Churches
P. O. Box 1083
Nashville

Mr. Michael Straight
c/o The New Republic
1224-19th St., N.W.
Washington

Interagency
Mr. Roger Baldwin
c/o Amer. Civil Liberties Union
170 Fifth Avenue
New York 10, New York

Miss Georgene B. Lovecky
John Hay Whitney Foundation
630 Fifth Ave.
New York 20

Mr. Edgar B. Stern
2110 American Bank Building
New Orleans 12

Mr. David B. Silberman, Jr.
Sigmund Silberman Foundation

Dr. Grayson Kirk, President
Columbia University

Dr. Buell G. Gallaher, Pres.
City College of New York

Mr. Edwin Wolf, 2nd
Curator, Pennsylvania Library

Mr. Lloyd Garrison

Mr. Adam Yarmolinsky

Mr. Frank Loescher

Mr. Gordon Alport
Ella Lyman Cabot Trust

Mrs. Justine W. Polier

Mr. David Freeman
Rockefeller Bros. Fund

Mr. Montgomery Bradley
Rockefeller Bros. Fund

Dr. Harry Meserve
Rockefeller Bros. Fund

Mr. Jack Clareman
Christopher Reynolds Foundation

Interagency
Mr. ~~Milton~~ Wilton Dillon
Phelps-Stokes Fund

Dr. F. D. Patterson
Phelps-Stokes Fund

Mr. Edmund A. Rosenthal
Ben. R. Rosenthal Foundation

Mr. Frank A. Weil
Aaron E. Norman Fund

Mrs. Max Ascoli
20 Gramercy Park, S.
N. Y.

Mr. Stephen H. Stackpole
Carnegie Corp. of N. Y.

Mr. Alan Pifer
Carnegie Corp. ofN. Y.

Mr. Harold Evans, Chrm.
Chace Fund

Mr. Richard Hocking
Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. May E. McFarland
Doris Duke Foundation

Mr. Maxwell Hahn
Field Foundation

Mr. Sol Markoff
N. Y. Foundation

Mr. Vernon A. Eagle
New World Foundation

Miss Katharine Taylor
Cambridge, Mass.

Mrs. Gilbert A. Harrison
Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Marie K. Drigga
N. Y. Fund for Children

Mr. Solomon I. Sklar
(New-Land Foundation)
Sent as an individual

Mrs. David Levy
993 Fifth Ave.
New York

Dr. Prynce Hopkins
Hopkins Charitable Fund

Mr. W. H. Ferry
Fund for the Republic

Mr. Hallock Hoffman
FFR

Mr. Alexander F. Sharp
Presby. Church USA

Mr. Joseph Lyford
FFR

Mr. John Thompson
Farfield Foundation

Miss Nina Ridenour
Ittleson Family Foundation

Mr. John R. May
San Francisco Foundation

Inter agency

Mr. George Meany
AFL-CIO
Washington

" Mr. Wm. F. Schnitzler
AFL-CIO
Washington

" Mr. Boris Shiskin
Dept. of Civil Rights
AFL-CIO
Washington

Mr. George L. P. Weaver
AFL-CIO
Washington

Inter-agency

Mr. David Dubinsky
ILGWU
N. Y.

" Mr. David J. McDonald
USteelworkers of America
Pittsburgh

" Mr. Philip Randolph
Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters

Rev. William G. Wright
Protestant Episcopal Church

Dr. Leon M. Adkins
The Methodist Church

Mr. Vernon Middleton
The Methodist Church

Miss Thelma Stevens
The Methodist Church (WDCS)

Mr. Malcolm Calhoun
Presby. Church US

SRC Board

MASS MEDIA CTTEE:

Sidney Hollander

Al Hamilton - United Auto Workers

Guichard Parris
Nat'l Urban League

J. Oscar Lee
Nat'l. Council of Churches

Arnold Aronson
Nat'l Community Rel. Advisory Council

Jacob Schlitt
Jewish Labor Committee

H. B. Sissel
Presby Church USA

~~[illegible]~~

George K. Hunton
Catholic Interracial Council

Mr. Shad Polier
Amer. Jewish Congress

~~Mr.~~ Oscar Cohen
Anti-Defamation League

Edwin Lukas
Amer; Jewish Cttee.

Harry Fleischman
National Labor Service

Alfred Bernheim
Amer. Jewish Cttee.

Alex Morisey
Amer. Friends Ser. Cttee.

Alan Reitman
Amer. Civil Liberties Union

Violence

FOR MORNING PAPERS, MON. JUNE 15

In the past four years, the South has experienced widespread erosion of individual liberties, a report released today asserted.

It listed 530 specific cases of violence, reprisal and intimidation in the 11 Southern states during the four-year period from Jan. 1., 1955, to Jan. 1, 1959.

The report was issued jointly by the Southeastern Office of the American Friends Service Committee, the Department of Racial and Cultural Relations of the National Council of Churches, and the Southern Regional Council.

The cases were drawn from the general press of the nation and in large part from Southern newspapers. The list was confined to occurrences attributable to the increased racial tensions of the past few years. Crimes which are part of other continuing social and legal problems were not used.

The sponsoring agencies emphasized that while the report dealt only with the angry, violent reactions to the desegregation decisions, another account could be given of patience, responsibility, courage and good will by both whites and Negroes.

However, it was added, "We feel an obligation to call attention to the dangers posed by the record--dangers for which all of us, through silence or inaction, must share the responsibility."

The record, cited as evidence of the deterioriation of law and order in the South since the 1954-55 school desegregation decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, includes:

6 Negroes killed.

29 individuals, 11 of them white, shot and wounded in racial incidents.

44 persons beaten.

5 stabbed.

1 Negro emasculated.

30 bombings of houses (in one of these incidents, at Clinton, Tenn., 30 homes were damaged by a single blast); attempted blasting of 5 other homes.

15 homes struck by gunfire and 7 homes stoned.

4 schools bombed, in Jacksonville, Nashville, Chattanooga and Clinton, Tenn.

2 conspiracies to bomb schools, in Charlotte and Clinton.

7 churches bombed, one of which was for whites; an attempt made to bomb another church.

1 church burned, in Memphis, and another church stoned.

4 synagogues or JEWISH centers bombed, in Miami, Nashville, Jacksonville and Atlanta.

3 bombing attempts on Jewish buildings, in Gastonia, N.C., Birmingham and Charlotte.

1 YWCA building in Chattanooga and an auditorium in Knoxville dynamited.

2 schools burned.

Also, at least 20 towns and cities in the South were threatened in varying degree by mob action.

In all, the violence section of the report listed 225 acts against individual liberties and public peace. Included were the widely publicized incidents involving the appearance of Negroes at formerly white schools and colleges--the stories of Little Rock; the University of Alabama; Hoxie, Ark.; Clinton, Tenn., and Mansfield, Texas. Here, too, the Klan-Indian fight at Maxton, N.C., and the multiple attacks on Koinonia Farm in Georgia were recounted.

The section dealing with reprisals covered 95 cases. It was pointed out that this figure, as well as the overall total of 530 cases, could not tell the whole story, for some of the instances counted as a single item involved hundreds of men and women. For example, listed as one item were the voting purges of Louisiana, where names of thousands of Negroes were removed from registration lists.

Also, city-wide protest movements were counted as units. These include the stories of the bus boycott in Montgomery; economic protest movements in Tallahassee, Tuskegee, Ala., and Orangeburg and Rock Hill, S.C.

On a more widespread practice, the report commented:

"Some Southerners since 1954 have elaborated and organized the methods of economic reprisal until a recognizably new and modern instrument has taken form. Most commonly associated with the White Citizens Council, the weapon of reprisal has deprived Negroes and non-conforming whites of jobs, of credit, of supplies for their businesses."

The 210 instances of intimidation include mail and telephone threats, and at least some of the rash of bomb scares, Klan meetings and cross burnings. They range also from the arrest of Negro ministers in Alabama to police detention of a white Methodist minister who lectured on peaceful means to attain civil rights. Negroes seeking their rights under law and some white persons who have voiced their support of this ~~Negro~~ move for legal equality; churches; ministers, priests and rabbis; Negroes who have bought homes in predominantly white neighborhoods--all were among the victims.

The report said that while there have been men and women a cross the South who have expressed anger and disapproval over the intimidation, "too many of them since 1954 have acquiesced."

#

Maggie
Paul
Vernon
Mattie - please file

FACT SHEET

COMMONWEALTH v. THOMAS C. WANSLEY

On December 8, 1962, Thomas C. Wansley, then 17 years of age, was arrested without a warrant and charged with the rapes of Mrs. Kyoko Fleshman, a Japanese resident of Lynchburg, Virginia, and Miss Annie Carter, a white resident of the same city. Despite his youth and mental immaturity, Thomas was held for five days without an opportunity to consult a lawyer although he asked for permission to do so. It was during this period that he was supposed to have admitted the crimes to a Juvenile Officer and the police, although no written confessions were ever introduced in evidence against him at his trials.

Although Thomas was, in view of his youth, under the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court at the time of his arrest, the judge of that court declared, before Thomas' hearing, that he would be tried as an adult. In addition, pleas by Reuben Lawson, Thomas' trial attorney, to obtain a complete mental examination of his client in order to determine if he was capable of standing trial, were denied.

Thomas was first tried for the rape of Miss Carter, the white woman, although the rape of Mrs. Fleshman took place considerably earlier. At the Carter hearing, despite the efforts of Mr. Lawson to obtain a reasonable postponement in order to obtain a stenographer, Thomas was forced to stand trial for his life without a court reporter. Miss Carter could not identify her attacker and the sole evidence against Thomas was the recitation by police officers of his supposed confession. Nevertheless, after only 90 minutes deliberation, the all-white jury returned a verdict of guilty.

Thomas was then immediately tried for the alleged rape of Mrs. Fleshman. Although Thomas admitted to having sexual intercourse with Mrs. Fleshman, he took the stand in his own behalf to state that she had fully consented to such relations. The evidence at the trial completely sustained Thomas' version. In the first place, Mrs. Fleshman maintained that the alleged rape took place in her bedroom but that two of her children, who were sleeping beside her, never awoke during the "attack". In addition, after the supposed rape, Thomas fixed a broken slat in the bed and then spent an hour or so with her smoking in the kitchen. Moreover, he promised to return in a few days with a pack of her favorite cigarettes.

He was convicted of the second rape by another all-white jury and then sentenced to death in both cases by the same judge who was to sentence a white man, who had been caught in the act of raping an eleven-year old Negro girl, to only five years in the State Penitentiary.

The appeal from both convictions was recently argued before the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia and a decision is expected momentarily. If the convictions are reversed, Thomas will have to stand trial again for both crimes and funds will be urgently needed to pay the costs of an extensive investigation and the trials. If the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia affirms Thomas' convictions, then it will be necessary to appeal to the United States Supreme Court, which entails heavy legal expenses. The problem is complicated by the fact that Mr. Lawson, Thomas' original attorney, died shortly after the trials and it has been difficult for his present counsel to assemble the material necessary to prosecute these appeals.

Thomas' case has already had one very significant result. On March 31, 1964, Virginia enacted legislation making it impossible for a person to be tried for a felony without a court reporter. This case may well be the last one in the state in which a defendant may be deprived of his life or liberty without a stenographic record of his trial.

Recently one of Thomas' attorneys received a letter from him written from the death house of the Virginia State Penitentiary at Richmond. He writes:

> "Under the circumstances, I am truly in fairly good spirits. I completed my Bible course in March. Some times it is hard to be patient, but I know that with the help of God, I will be able to comprehend the problem. I know that all of you is doing everything in you all's power to help me and I am really grateful, truly I am."

Please help us save Thomas' life. A special account has been established known as the THOMAS C. WANSLEY DEFENSE FUND, and all contributions, large and small, will be greatly appreciated.

WANSLEY DEFENSE FUND

Helen Stein
Coordinator

1005 Fifth Street
Lynchburg, Virginia

July, 1964

Who Is My Brother?

by SAM MASSELL, JR.

Vice Mayor, City of Atlanta

The accompanying material has been adapted from a talk made by this dynamic Atlantan during the annual Brotherhood Observance of Savannah's historic Temple Mickve Israel. (See page 15 for article on Vice Mayor Massell)

Brotherhood is something I've thought about . . . many times, for I truly believe it is just as important to our well-being as is our economy, our defense, and all of the other problems with which we constantly struggle. I'm afraid, however, that in this day and time the word—brotherhood—has come to be considered, in some cases, a corny word. Brotherhood and patriotism and love and fellowship . . . these are words which don't seem to be often used any more. Patriotism — some say — is for crackpots . . . and brotherhood for do-gooders.

The word is much more meaningful than that to me, and it is far from being corny.

When I sat down one Saturday not long ago to assemble my thoughts for this material, I turned first to the dictionary, hoping there to find a definition of the word which would give me a starting point, and perhaps a new idea.

But the dictionary was of little help, as Webster's definition of 'brotherhood' is simply—"the condition of being brothers." I thought on that for awhile and realized that this is much less than what the word means to me.

I turned then to the little brochure put out by the National Conference of Christians and Jews . . . and there I found the real definition of this word. Here, it becomes a word which touches the human heart.

Brotherhood, it says, is "giving to others the rights and respect we want for ourselves."

Isn't that beautifully said? It brings the word into focus, so that you and I can have a feeling for it . . . so that it means something to us, personally.

The same thing has been said before, in another way . . . with other words . . . in another book. "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." That's the kind of brotherhood I want to consider.

As I go along it may appear that I'm mistaking the word for prejudice . . . and hatred . . . and bigotry. It may seem, in the beginning, that I don't see any signs of a true spirit of brotherhood in this world in which we live.

But that's not so. I do see love and compassion and brotherhood around me every day. Nevertheless, my eyes never close to the inhumanity which also surrounds us.

We are talking about brotherhood . . . but before I finish this speech and sit down tonight, men will go to bed on a small island off the coast of Florida with fear in their hearts for what may happen tomorrow. It is fear of their own countrymen, fear of their Cuban brothers.

As you read this, an elderly German couple, carrying all their worldly possessions in a paper bag, may steal through the night toward a high wall in Berlin, seeking freedom. If they are caught, they will die at the hands of their German brothers.

Tonight, in Mississippi, an American youth will go to bed in a college dormitory with guards standing at the door to protect him from his fellow Americans. He is not a criminal, nor a maniac dangerous to society . . . but an American Negro pursuing his God-given rights.

Tonight, here in Savannah or over in Macon, or somewhere — two young boys may attack an old man in a service station and beat him unmercifully for the two dollars in his billfold.

Tonight, in Birmingham or Denver or Kansas City, a respected—but Jewish—citizen will discover that he can't buy the home of his choice because the neighborhood is "restricted."

Tonight, somewhere in this great land of ours, a man will check his fallout shelter before going to bed. He checks it every night, fearing that this might be the date when the brotherhood of man comes to an end forever. He will grumble at the prospect of such inhumanity, and righteously so. But in his own fallout shelter there is a rifle . . . put there to keep out the uninvited neighbor in case of disaster. This, my friends, is the state of brotherhood in the world today.

Yet, man has come a long way in recent years. Today, the mind of man has created a machine which can answer almost any question. Man has built missiles which can travel the breadth of

Ideal Heating & Plumbing Company

OUR MOTTO: "Conscientious Service"

HEmlock 6-1587 107 Flint Ave.

D. W. GARRISON

ALBANY, GA.

Lilliston Implement Company

ALBANY, GEORGIA

Manufacturers of Farm Implements

RILES HARDWARE

EVERYTHING IN HARDWARE

Bicycle, Gun and Pistol Repairing
Paints and Oils, Sporting Goods, House Wares,
Guns, Pistols, Ammunition, Fishing Tackle

1004 N. Slappey Drive HE. 6-1472

ALBANY, GA.

Bobs

Candies Inc.

Albany, Georgia

CORONET

Jewelers

"The Store for Fine Jewelry and Firm Friendship"

HE. 6-7523 220 Pine Ave.

ALBANY, GEORGIA

CHAMPION BRAND FERTILIZER

ALBANY WAREHOUSE CO.

ALBANY, GA.

Exchange Fair - 1960

the globe in a matter of minutes, and has created warheads which can destroy whole nations in the time required to fix a flat tire. Man has found a cure for polio, and doctors in research laboratories around the nation are rapidly closing in on other dread diseases.

Very definitely, man has demonstrated that there is no limit to what the mind can achieve.

As I reflect on the accomplishments of mankind, I realize—as you must—that the mind has far outraced the heart. We can put a man in orbit, but we cannot yet guarantee every man his rights. We can solve the mathematical problems confronting the mind . . . but we still let prejudice and discrimination into our hearts.

We have, in Atlanta, a saying that I believe in very firmly. In the face of racial problems we say, and rightly, that we are too busy to hate. And we are. I think the feeling in Atlanta is that too much hard work has gone into building a great city to see it all destroyed or hindered at the hands of violence born of hatred.

I'd like to think there is more to it than that; to think it is more than just being too busy to hate. I'd like to believe that we simply have more love in our hearts than hate. And I hope that we never get so busy that we are too busy to love.

Perhaps I'm being overly optimistic about it, but I believe there is still hope for brotherhood in the South . . . and, for that matter, throughout the world.

As Vice Mayor of the city of Atlanta, I am in a position to see more prejudice than I care to see . . . but I also see progress. I see discrimination often . . . but I also see men of good will working together to get rid of it.

When a group of citizens, however small, work hand-in-hand to assure the rights of even a single person . . . then that, in itself, is brotherhood and—with time—will foster further brotherhood.

We know that the seeds of prejudice are sown deeply in the South and cannot be uprooted overnight. It is extremely difficult to change a belief that one has held for all of one's life . . . beliefs held by one's parents and grandparents and their parents before them.

There are in the South today honest, earnest, hard-working men and women who believe with all their hearts that integration is morally wrong. There are men—however wrongly — who would give up their lives before giving up segregation. Their backgrounds and training, and the traditions of their hometown are such that they may never be convinced that their racial or other prejudices are wrong. They've believed all their lives that every Negro is unclean . . . that every Jew is a merchant who will cheat you . . . that every Catholic is a heathen who worships the Pope instead of God . . . and that every Northerner is a

Wiggins Heating & Appliance Co.

Head Pumps—
Our Specialty

Also

Warm Air - Gas & Oil Fired

AIR CONDITIONING

143 East Broad Ave.

Dial HE. 2-6783

Albany, Ga.

George D. Wier Distributing Co.

HEmlock 6-4835

311-313 North Davis Street

Albany, Georgia

CARLING BLACK LABEL BEER

RED CAP ALE

JIM DENSON Transfer & Storage Co.

STORAGE • PACKING

CRATING • SHIPPING

LOCAL AND LONG DISTANCE MOVING

Phone HE. 2-2911

743 E. BROAD —

ALBANY, GA.

slick-talking Yankee who is not to be trusted.

It is important that we realize that these people's beliefs are sincere. We cannot change their views by putting them in jail . . . nor would we want to do such a a thing. Our great hope lies in love and understanding. No man is born a bigot; bigotry must be learned. And what can be learned can—through patience and understanding—be unlearned. Love can overcome traditions. Compassion can rise above ignorance. Brotherhood, itself, can be learned.

In Atlanta, we have had events develop which even the boldest would not have predicted fifteen years ago. Just recently, a young Atlanta Negro named Leroy Johnson ran for and was elected to the General Assembly of Georgia, from Fulton County. He ran first against white candidates and then, in the General Election, defeated a Negro Republican. He went to the Legislature, and still the few extremists cried: "Blood will flow in the streets. The white man won't stand for this!"

Well, the white man did stand for it. There were no incidents, no hatred—and he is getting on very well with his white colleagues.

One advantage which accrues in every situation of this sort—that of a single Negro (or single Jew, or single Japanese) — in with a large number of whites (or Gentiles, or Americans) — is that everyone soon learns that we are all pretty much alike. In fact, we sometimes discover that the supposedly inferior can turn out to be superior.

Senator Johnson is a case in point, for the Atlanta Junior Chamber of Commerce, an all-white organization of young men, has just honored this Negro by naming him as one of the city's "Five Outstanding Young Men of the Year." No federal troops, no federal rulings were involved in the decision to so honor him. It was not a forced decision, but an honest determination arrived at by reasonable men in a spirit of brotherhood and fair play.

Just who is our brother . . . and why don't we recognize him? I think first we need to understand what prejudice is, and what causes it. Some of it I feel I do understand. In a way, prejudice is another form of competition.

As a husband and father I'm strongly prejudiced in favor of my family over any other. All the husbands and fathers on my block feel the same way about their families. But if a crisis comes up involving all of us, such as a detrimental change in zoning, prejudices are forgotten and the block stands together.

The same is true of cities. I am as strongly prejudiced in favor of Atlanta as you are in favor of Savannah. We have a rivalry of sorts going on all the time. But if a crisis arises involving us both, such as preservation of our University System, rivalries and prejudices are forgotten and the two cities stand together.

We want new industries to select Georgia over every other state, but all fifty states of the Union stand shoulder-to-shoulder in the face of a common problem, such as the threat of Communism.

If you have ever driven through the country on a clear, pretty day . . . you would have noticed the way cattle graze in the pasture. They're spread out all over everywhere . . . one here, one there . . . and only rarely will you ever see as many as two standing together.

But on a cold and windy day, things change. If the weather is bad, creating a common problem for all, they huddle together to help each other.

Humans are the same way. A young child can be stricken with a dread disease . . . a disease, say, which will be fatal before his next birthday. How many times have you seen such a story in the newspaper? Frequently, I believe. And the next day's paper always tells of great numbers of total strangers who have come forth to help the child or to offer gifts. The region is swept by a wave of compassion for the stricken youngster.

There are other examples.

I remember once when an apartment building burned, leaving a good many people temporarily homeless. And immediately, others in the neighborhood began taking their helpless neighbors into their own homes. These were people who had lived in the neighborhood for years without even getting to know the people next door. What brought forth their compassion in this case?

Did you ever attend a house of worship which was destroyed . . . . . by fire, by an explosion, or by some other means? If so, you may have been surprised to find men and women of all denominations and faiths working together to help restore the church. What makes them do it?

A common crisis seems to bind us together, overriding and overcoming all prejudices. In today's headlines we frequently read of the difficulties among France and England and this country. But the beaches of Normandy are lined with the blood of Frenchmen, Britons and Americans who died fighting for a common cause. Prejudices and problems were forgotten then.

The islands of the Pacific and the continent of Europe are dotted with the graves of brave American men who died fighting for the freedoms we enjoy in this country. The graves show no prejudice. There are Negroes in them, and white men; there are Southerners and Northerners, Republicans and Democrats — Jews,

"KEEP GEORGIA GREEN"

• GROW MORE TREES

STOP FOREST FIRES

UNION BAG - CAMP PAPER CORP.

SAVANNAH, GA.

GREAT DANE TRAILERS

Savannah, Ga.

National Metal Products Co.

Manufacturers of Galvanized Steel Building Products
Naval Stores Products

Factory and Offices: Central of Georgia Terminals

P.O. BOX 364 • ADams 6-4426 - 6-4427

SAVANNAH, GA.

Electric Equipment and Repair Co.

All Types of Electrical Work

LIGHTING FIXTURES

W. E. DAVIS - S. W. SKINNER

Telephone AD. 2-1169

2402 Whitaker Street Savannah, Ga.

Wachtel's Physician Supply Co.

HOSPITAL SUPPLIES

Established 1914

PAUL H. EWALDSEN, President

402 - 410 Bull Street P. O. Box 623

Telephone AD. 6-7135

Savannah, Ga.

Reach For
BATTER WHIPPED

One Bite is worth a thousand words!

DERST BAKING CO. SAVANNAH, GA.
E. J. DERST JR., President

Chatham Pipe & Supply Co.

PIPE • VALVES • FITTINGS

Kohler Plumbing Fixtures

"Where Superior Service, Quality Products and Better Values Prevail"

513 West Jones St. - Phones AD. 2-0142-3-4 AD. 6-1709

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA

Estates Managed — Rents Collected — Loans Negotiated BUILDING — LAND DEVELOPMENT

WE BUY AND SELL ON COMMISSION

A. E. KING & SON
REALTORS
RENTING BUYING-SELLING LOANS
INSURANCE
9 E. YORK STREET SAVANNAH, GEORGIA

AD. 3-5025
AD. 2-5371
AD. 2-6292

Agents — Northwestern Mutual Fire Assn. (World's Largest) Fire, Storm and Auto Insurance at Less Than Standard Cost

Phone AD. 2-3754
Watch Inspector For S. A. L. R. Co.

RAY MIXSON
Jeweler
WATCH, CLOCK and
JEWELRY REPAIRING — DIAMOND SETTING
North Side of Post Office
22 West State Street Savannah, Ga.

Protestants, Catholics, atheists, and men of every faith. Prejudices were all forgotten on the battlefield.

Where is the solution to this problem of prejudice? I think the solution is understanding. Why do you think so many strangers come instantly to the aid of a stricken child? Or why were people who had been formerly aloof from their neighbors so compassionate and understanding in a time of crisis?

I think I know the answer.

Most of us have children. The child that was stricken could — next time — be our child. This is something we can understand.

We all have homes. We can all feel for the family whose home has burned. It could happen to us.

We can forget our prejudices anytime that we can have understanding. We can best understand when we can relate ourselves to the problem . . . when we can imagine having a personal stake in the matter at hand.

Why, then, can't we understand the problems of a minority group?

Take the poor, sick individual who is prejudiced against every Negro and every Jew and every Catholic . . . or every anybody. If, somehow, we can make him understand that someday he may be part of a minority . . . that someday he personally may be the victim of prejudice . . . then progress will have been made in the cause of brotherhood.

Perhaps we can remind him that right after the Civil War, during the bitter days of reconstruction, all Southerners were victims of unfair prejudice throughout the rest of the country. Or maybe we can make him realize that if the law breaks down and fails to protect one Negro at the University of Mississippi now, then one day the law will surely fail to protect him in another matter.

The history of mankind is replete with examples of prejudice . . . and the tragedies which have followed closely on its heels.

The people of Moses suffered from prejudice at every turn; both Jews and Christians suffered at the hands of Roman prejudice; for hundreds of years, black men and white men were sold into slavery by their own countrymen.

I could go on and on, for prejudice is very much a part of world history. But so is brotherhood.

There is still time. There is still hope for the cause of brotherhood in this country. Sometimes brotherhood must be worked at, and perhaps we will have to work at it now to achieve it.

We all have lost loved ones and, later, reflected on how much more love we could, and should, have bestowed upon them. Let us work at brotherhood and understanding, but let's not wait too late. Each man has the capacity. May God guide his children to be their brother's brother.

Colonial Oil Industries
INCORPORATED

HIGH GRADE
Fuel Oil
Kerosene
Diesel Fuel

610 East Park Ave.
Phone AD. 41616

SAVANNAH, GA.

ROLLINSON ENGINEERING CO.

ELECTRICAL CONTRACTORS

114 W. Bay St.
SAVANNAH, GA.

by HELEN BULLARD

FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND ATLANTA'S SAM MASSELL JR.

Full-Time Man on a Part-Time Job

This enterprising Jewish leader earns his living at real estate —when he can break away from his Aldermanic Board and Vice Mayorality duties.

A newspaper man intent on getting some background material about Atlanta's new Vice Mayor, Sam Massell, Junior, asked him what civic organizations he belonged to. "I'll give you a list," Massell replied, rather hesitantly.

The newspaper man protested he didn't want a list; he just wanted the name of the organizations. Whereupon Mr. Massell handed him a list. It was two typewritten pages, legal sized, single spaced.

The reporter was aghast. The list was longer than his story. Intrigued and skeptical, the reporter decided to check the list in hopes, perhaps, of being the first to point out the fact that Massell was a joiner of first rate proportions . . . not a non-participant — the story never materialized. And a random check list proved not only that Sam Massell belonged to the organizations; he was an active worker.

"Sam doesn't find time," his friends and co-workers say. He literally MAKES time."

Soft spoken, never seemingly in a hurry, he has somehow carried his gift of accomplishing an astonishing number of things during his first year in office, a list of things that threaten to rival his list of organizations of previous years. For instance: he has welcomed 90 famous guests to the city representing the Mayor and the city of Atlanta: made 131 speeches, also representing the city; he has at-

. . . with actress chanteuse Jayne Mansfield.

. . . with "His Beatitute, the Most Reverent and Most Blessed" Paul Peter Meouchi, Maronite Patriarch of Antioch and all the East (second to Pope in Catholic authority) and Atlanta Archbishop Paul J. Hallinan of Atlanta.

Reduce Your Fire Insurance Costs

The Atlantic Mutual Fire Insurance Co.

OF SAVANNAH

FRED WESSELS, JR., President — W. C. BROWNE, Secretary

INSURES

ALL PREFERRED RISKS

Agencies in All Principal Southern Cities

Resources Over $5,000,000.00

ANNUAL DIVIDEND SAVINGS TO POLICYHOLDERS

17 McDONOUGH ST., WEST — SAVANNAH, GEORGIA

Your newspaper is the eyes, ears, and conscience of your community. It champions human dignity and the rights of man. To inform, to interpret, to entertain—this is the role of your newspaper.

Thomas (Tommy) C. Anderson
Owner and Designer

Anderson's Florist
& DESIGN SERVICE

De Soto Hotel - AD. 3-7304

FLOWERS — AT THEIR VERY BEST
Bar Mitzvahs, Weddings, Parties; Vase Arrangements, Plants, Corsages, Funeral Designs.

OFFICIAL AAA SERVICE

BOB'S GARAGE

Rebuilding Wrecks Our Speciality

Telephone AD. 2-8186 — 120 E. Liberty St.

SAVANNAH, Georgia

Phone EL. 5-7316—EL. 5-7317 — 12 E. DeRenne Avenue

GEFFEN'S PHARMACY

"Prescriptions A Specialty"

A COMPLETE DRUG STORE—Free Delivery

In the DeRenne Shopping Center

tended 152 committee meetings where he has no vote but where he can find the city government in action; and he has served as Mayor of the city of Atlanta 85 days during the first year in office. (The Vice Mayor is officially the Mayor of Atlanta during the Mayor's absence).

Sam Jr., at almost 36 (he was born in Atlanta on August 25, 1927) is one of the younger men on the Atlanta Board of Alderman. As Vice Mayor, he is president of the Board of Alderman and presides at all meetings. This he does with a firm hand, and has astounded some of his older colleagues with his knowledge of parliamentary procedure. He cannot vote except in case of a tie, which means that he is always at the mercy of a truly controversial question.

He was first graduated in 1951 from the Atlanta Law School, and the recipient of a degree from Georgia State College, from which he also received a postgrdauate certificate in selling and postgraduate diploma in real estate, the field in which he is now identified. He won the Alvin B. Cates trophy, presented by the Georgia Association of Real Estate Boards, for the "Most Outstanding Real Estate Transaction of the Year in 1955 and again in 1957 and 1959. He was elected to membership in the Million Dollar Club of the Atlanta Real Estate Board in 1959 and 1960. He taught real estate at the Smith Hughes Vocational School for one year

. . . with Senator Abraham Ribicoff at the dedication banquet last fall for Beth Jacob Synagogue.

. . . greeting General Wilfred Kitching, international leader of the Salvation Army.

and was cited by the National Institute in 1958 for "his constructive contribution to the literature of real estate brokerage."

During this time he was also one of the most tireless workers on the City Executive Committee, an elected body responsible for the conducting of the city elections and for framing new laws under which elections were held. During these years he won the affection and the enormous admiration of the other members of the committee for his seemingly limitless energy, his faultless attention to detail, and his unquenchable desire for perfection of performance.

Perhaps it is in his own home that some of the answers to "How Sam Does All He Does" may be found. Sam credits his wife, the former Doris Middlebrooks, with much of his success, particularly in politics. Mrs. Massell, diminutive and most attractive is indeed an asset from the standpoint of liking people, being flexible as to family living, and obviously revolves the household around Sam.

"She's a good wife, a good mother and a good cook," Sam declares, "and she has an unerring instinct about people. She can spot a phony person a mile off, but the people she likes, well, they're fortunate, because she is a warm and understanding friend."

The Massells met on Valentine's Day and a year later they were married, after quite a tempestuous courtship. They went to Augusta for a three-day honeymoon and Doris remembers vividly the trip back. Their car—a very old model—broke down three times. They moved to a small apartment, went on a cash basis, and lived on a strict budget, so strict that Doris still has trouble buying clothes that "didn't come out of the food budget." She does her own house work, sews, likes to read and is a Brownie leader. "I don't like the bugs in the woods . . . but the Brownies have taught me a lot."

She regards being in politics as "interesting and exciting" and when she says this, you believe her. She went with Sam to almost every rally during his hard and strenuous campaign and insists that she loved every minute of it. Sam says she gave him the best piece of advice he got during his campaign: "Sam, don't ever say or do anything that isn't completely honest. If you win or lose this election this won't be the last thing you'll run for, so don't ever say or Atlanta's Vice Mayor and Vice President Lyndon Johnson exchanging views at the recent American Municipal Association Congress in Houston.

Seaboard Construction Co.

GRADING - PAVING

CLEARING

BRUNSWICK, GA.

GOULD MOTOR COMPANY

Ford

SALES • SERVICE

1608-12 NEWCASTLE STREET TELEPHONE AM. 5-2020

BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA

Georgia Theatre Company

JOHN H. STEMBLER, President
B. F. McCULLOUGH, City Mgr.

BRUNSWICK, GA.

RITZ - ROXY - CASINO - STARLIGHT DRIVE-IN BIJOU

GLYNN ELECTRIC SUPPLY COMPANY

Electrical Equipment and Supplies

1210 Newcastle Street

Brunswick, Georgia

The Brunswick News

Published

Every Business Afternoon

Established 1902

BRUNSWICK, GA.

ATLAS SIGN & MFG. CO.

Silk Screen Printed

- SIGNS
- POSTERS
- DECALS

Displays, Lettering, Commercial Art

106 Gloucester St. AM. 5-7812

BRUNSWICK, GA.

GEORGIA HARDWARE
& MARINE SUPPLY
INCORPORATED
205 Monk Street Phone AM. 5-1320
"One Call Gets All"
Brunswick, Georgia

CITY DRUG STORE
WILLIAM H. WALLS
PRESCRIPTION SPECIALISTS
PHONE AM. 5-7630 - BRUNSWICK, GA.

Edo Miller & Sons, Inc.
FUNERAL DIRECTORS
Over 50 Years of Service
AMBULANCE — CHAPEL
AM. 5-3636 - Telephones - AM. 5-3637
BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA

C. McGARVEY, Inc.
"TRENDITION HOUSE"
For Fine Interiors
1709 Reynold St.
BRUNSWICK, GA.

AMERICAN National Bank
Brunswick, Georgia
Member F.D.I.C.
TWO CONVENIENT LOCATIONS TO SERVE YOU
GLOUCESTER & ELLIS
NORWICH & FIRST

GLYNN FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION
706 Gloucester Street
Brunswick, Georgia
Savings Accounts Insured Up to $10,000 do anything you'll ever have to take back."

It is obvious to even the casual visitor that much of the Massell endeavors involve them as a couple and as a family. Both like to dance, and Sam was a little chagrined recently when he made an impassioned speech on the evils of ward courtesy to a television audience. A few nights later he was televised just a few minutes at the city employee party . . . doing the twist. "Everybody congratulated me on being a good dancer . . . and hardly anybody said anything about my speech on ward courtesy," he said ruefully.

The Massells three children participate in any political activity that the parents think they, the children, will enjoy. Cindy, who is 8½, Steve who is 7, and Melanie (who is, according to her father, 3 going on 13) all like the parades, like sitting on the reviewing stands and sometimes going to the airport. In this way the family can sandwich in many more family activities. At home, there is much activity in the Tree House, which the vice mayor built the children, and a rather awe inspiring hand-made truck, constructed from a garbage can and a few other selected items found in junk yards. "I have been expecting any day to see a picture in the paper with the caption "Vice Mayor on the Scrap Pile."

Sam gave his wife a trip to Hawaii as an anniversary present, and they timed their trip so that he could represent Atlanta at the recent United States Conference of Mayors in Honolulu. "I met President Kennedy in Hawaii. This is something I would not have missed for anything. As soon as I said I was from Atlanta, The President stopped and instead of going on to the next person, he said "Oh, yes . . . You have done such a lot there. I have just read the statement of your Chamber of Commerce." "(This was the statement in which the Chamber urged the restaurants and hotel operators to open their facilities to all citizens.) Doris Massell was equally enthusiastic. Exclaiming: "Hawaii was even more beautiful than the movies have shown it to be . . and of course it was most interesting to meet the mayors from other parts of the country. We particularly liked the Vice Mayor of Honolulu and I was greatly impressed with the Mayor of New Haven, Mayor Richard Lee."

In commenting on the people he had welcomed to Atlanta, Sam listed former Presi-

Glynn
Concrete Company
BRUNSWICK
GEORGIA

The Lemmond Letter Shop
1410-A Reynolds Street
AMherst 5-7294
BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA
TYPING PRINTING
OFFICE SPACE
ANSWERING SERVICE
DIRECT MAIL
Prompt - Efficient Service

Your Beauty Center
For
Nationally Advertised
- PERMANENTS
- CREATIVE HAIR STYLING
- COLORING & TINTING

Male Hair Stylist
Keller
Beauty Salon
AM. 5-4134
1410 REYNOLDS
BRUNSWICK, GA.

dent Truman, whom he described as "tops. Very alert, keen, interesting and interested." He also commented on Dr. Ralph Bunche and described him as a "fine gentleman and a very learned man. I also greatly enjoyed General Walters, the Commanding General of the American Armies. This was his first trip to Atlanta and I was delighted to show him Atlanta from the Top of the Mart."

One is apt to leave Sam Massell Jr. still puzzled by the fact that this comparatively young man has already accomplished so much in such a relatively short time. Basically, he is a rather shy person and it is extremely difficult to get him to talk about himself. (Instead you find that you've been led down the primrose path of hearing about his favorite topic, which is Atlanta, or you've agreed to help him with one of his organizations or "projects" as he refers to them. Perhaps the answer can only be found by talking to his friends, to people who have known him and worked with him over a period of years.

"I've never known anybody to question Sam's honesty or his motives. I think the answer, is that he is a deeply committed, deeply dedicated man whose concern for the city in terms of its people, preys on him and has always preyed on him,"

"Sam's feeling that everything and everyone is important . . . that's what I think makes him tick," said a woman who had worked with him before he became the Vice Mayor of Atlanta. I think he will always be this way, in public office or out of it."

Or perhaps an anonymous woman caller, the one o'clock in the morning hate variety caller who phoned him several times to say all the things that people feel they have a right to say as long as the person on the other end of the wire does not know who the caller is. Sam Massell talked to her each time as long as she wanted to talk. He talked quietly and courteously and tried to answer to diatribes. Finally one night she said: "Mr. Massell, you sound like a nice sort of man. I won't bother you any more." And she never has.

Whatever is the fountain from which this young man derives his apparently inexhaustible energy, his courtesy, and his devotion to his city, (and his facts with which he backs up his opinions), may not have a single name: perhaps it is a triangularly shaped source, bounded by his family, his city and his compulsion to make his contribution now. Whatever the source, the fact remains that it is there . . . and the city of Atlanta is the beneficiary.

W. W. PARKER J. C. KAUFMAN

Parker Realty Company

SALES — RENTALS — LOANS — LEASES

APPRAISALS — PROPERTY MANAGEMENT

PARKER BUILDING

BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA

St. Simons Island Branch

FIRST FEDERAL SAVINGS and Loan Associaton
Of Brunswick

Main Office

Current Dividend 4½% Per Annum

An Institution for Savings and Home Owning
BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA

FIVE TRANSPORTATION CO.

1517 Grant Street — P. O. Box 293

BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA

GORDON'S
DEPARTMENT STORE

Newcastle, Cor. Gloucester Streets

BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA

BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA
ZELL INSURANCE AGENCY
Phone AM. 5-5100

ELITE BEAUTY SHOP
Beauty is Your Duty
602 "G" St. Brunswick, Ga. Phone Amherst 5-8950

Grandpa's

Last Erev Yom Kippur

by

DAVID

L.

BARUCH

SHORT STORY

It was noon on the day before Yom Kippur. Grandpa, then reaching 90, had invited his two out-of-town sons, who were visiting the homestead for the High Holy Days, to bring their children for a noon dinner. The sons, Ben and Hyman, complied. Grandma was dead by that time, but Grandpa had arranged for his local daughter-in-law to prepare the Erev Yom Kippur meal. It was indeed a festive table as the 14 present—including eight children ranging in ages from seven to not-quite-thirteen — gathered for that memorable high, High Holiday dinner.

Over the second course, the rich chicken soup, Grandpa answered the first of the questions posed not only by his grandchildren, but indeed, by his grown sons: Why this feast?

"There are two reasons," Grandpa answered "and you may take your choice. One is this. You eat a great meal just on the eve of Yom Kippur so that, when the fasting is on, you miss food and drink more than ever. In that way, the good Jew heightens the ordeal he is about to face. But there is another reason given by some of the Masters. On Yom Kippur, the Ten Days of Awe come to an end. Each Jew knows that, by tomorrow's twilight—at the end of the long day of Yom Kippur prayers—God would seal his fate. The Jew, therefore, faces his Maker early--with confidence. If he ate poorly on the eve of Yom Kippur, he might lead one to think he feared the morrow's verdict. But if he feasts—he proves that he is secure in the knowledge of his own rectitude because he is not a sinner. Therefore, he eats heartily this day."

There were many other expositions of traditional tales as the meal proceeded. But it was when the feast was done, the children disposed themselves comfortably, some on the rug, some on the couches of the living room adjoining the dining room, that Grandpa revealed the real reason for this meeting with his grandchildren. He reached into the bookcase in the corner and brought out his 200-year-old Mahzor. He turned to the page where he found the prayer entitled "Unetanna Tokef" — "let us give strength to the sacredness of the day." And he told the story of that prayer.

"Years ago," he said, "there were quite a few Jews living in certain localities of what, today, we call Germany. In one area, there were three neighboring cities — Mainz, Worms and Speyer, where—"

"Worms?" asked one grandchild, "funny name for a town." Two little girl grandchildren giggled.

"Yes, that city is still there now," answered Grandpa. During the Crusades, thousands, many thousands of Jews were killed in those cities because they refused to become Christians. The Jews of the three citiies made a treaty—and they fought back against their attackers."

"Like they did in the Warsaw Ghetto?" asked one of the older grandchildren.

"Exactly," said Grandpa—" and often with similar results. But I want to tell you mainly about what happened later, after the Crusades, in this city of Mainz."

Grandpa held up his Mahzor, added: "This prayer book was printed in Mainz, 200 years ago; but what I'm going to tell you about happened long before that."

"In Mainz," continued Grandpa, "there were two great Rabbis—Rabbi Kalonymus and Rabbi Amnon. And there was an archbishop in Mainz, a very vicious man. The archbishop decided that, to set an example before the rest o fthe Jewish community, Rabbi Amnon must accept conversion to Christianity. He ordered Rabbi Amnon several times to do so. Finally, he threatened that, if the rabbi did not follow the order—he would be killed. The archbishop ordered Rabbi Amnon to come to his palace within three days and either accept conversion or else—" Rabbi Amnon, to pacify the policemen who gave him that order, said, "okay, I'll be there in three days."

"But the rabbi did not keep that promise. He did not show up at the archbishop's palace in three days. So, after waiting and waiting, the archbishop sent his soldiers to the rabbi's home, and the soldiers brought the rabbi to the palace.

"The archbishop argued for hours with the rabbi trying to talk him into converting to Christianity. The rabbi refused. Finally, angry, the archbishop said: 'Don't you agree that you deserve punishment just for lying to me; you promised to see me in three days, and failed to keep your promise.'

"Yes, Rabbi Amnon agreed, for that he did deserve punishment. Asked by the archbishop to name his punishment, he answered: "Because I lied to you, and because I really never intended to come here to convert—you should have my tongue cut out.'

"You see, Rabbi Amnon thought that sacrificing his tongue would be better than giving up his Jewish religion. But the archbishop was not satisfied. He ordered that the tongue be left intact; instead, he had the rabbi's hands and feet cut off.

"That happened just before Rosh Hashannah. On Rosh Hashonah, as the congregation was at prayer, Rabbi Amnon had himself brought to the synagogue on a litter. With his mutilated hands and feet bandaged, he lay there in pain and recited a prayer that no one had ever heard before. As he prayed, his voice became stronger and stronger. When he finished, his voice was so loud it shook the walls of the old synagogue it penetrated through the roof, it sounded out over the valley in which the Jewish Quarter was located, right up to the hill where the archbishop had his palace. Rabbi Amnon's voice rang out: "Penitence, Prayer and Charity shall avert the evil decree!" Then he expired, right there in the synagogue. And when the men in the synagogue looked at the bloody litter, it was empty. Rabbi Amnon's body was not there. Of course, all knew that his body had ascended to heaven.

"All mourned Rabbi Amnon. And they noted that no one knew the beautiful, moving prayer that Rabbi Amnon had uttered. For it was on Rosh Hashonah, and no one could write down those words.

"Three nights later the other rabbi, Rabbi Kalonymus, had a dream. In the dream, Rabbi Amnon dictated to Rabbi Kalonymus the words of that lost prayer. "Spread this prayer among your people," Amnon told Kalonymus.

⊙ Himeji Castle—Sometimes known as "The Castle of the White Heron," Himeji Castle was constructed in 1609. It is well known for its sugar cake appearance and delicate design, almost like a fairy story castle.

⊙ Le Château de Himeji ⊙ Castillo de Himeji

Japan

tsuzumi

376

PUB BY NBC NIPPON BEAUTY CARD CENTER INC

桜の姫路城—別名白鷺城。1609年池田輝政によって築かれた。縄張り（設計、城郭の仕組）の妙なること、往時の面影がそのまま残っていることと相まち、現代日本における美と華麗のお城として最高の存在である。

©

PRINTED IN JAPAN NBC

POST CARD

Yoriko Nakajima
OBIRIN COLLEGE
Machida-city.
Tokyo, 194-02
Japan

NIPPON 45 JAPAN

PAR AVION
航空郵便

address

Mrs. Bernice Morrison
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St.
Atlanta 30303
Ga.
U.S.A

June 13.

Dear Bernice:

What happened to you? I've been waiting to hear from you about your trip. It's already June!

My friend, Mr. Katsuichi Honda who is the first class reporter for the Asahi Newspaper - Japan, is coming to the South in order to write about the life of negroes in urban as well as rural - the South very soon. I'm sending a pamphlet which is translated his writing about Vietnam - separate mail. Please pass it to Pat, Bob, Jim, and John Lewis who'll help him after you finish reading it. Write to me, any way. Give my best regards to all the SRC.

File — Sunday Fringe

GOD is A RACIST

Isaiah 13:14 is a racist statement saying someone is trying to mix the races and God does not like it that God wants every man to turn to his own people and flee everyone into his own land"

Isaiah was a prophet who predicted the future: of a time when someone would try to intergate us. 1954 AD

Isaiah 13:14 And it shall be as the Chased Roe and as a sheep which no man taketh up: they shall every man turn to his own people and flee everyone into his own land"

"if every man is to turn to his own people then you do not date, dance have sex or marriage with another race and if you FLEE every one into your own land you are having racial trouble because of intergation and it will not work that God wants SEGREGATION

Martin Luther King was a liar and the NAACP is a pack of lying negro dogs

Brainwashed white Christian swine .....5...8

LOUIS PODA
17211 OMIRA
Detroit 48203

GEORGE C. WALLACE is RIGHT

King James Version of the Holy Bible

NEGROES

Song of Solomon 5:10 "My beloved is WHITE and RUDDY.

Song of Solomon Chapter 1:5 "I am black (Negroes) but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem as the tents of Kedar (Negroes) as the curtains of Solomon 6. Look not upon me because I am black (negroes) (do not look upon Negroes means don't desire to date, dance, have sex or marriage with them) because the sun hath looked upon me; my mother's (Adam's white wife Eve) children were angry with me (whites angry with Negroes) they made me keeper of the vineyards (whites made Negroes slaves), but mine own vineyard have I not kept." Solomon was a white man and King David's son and he lived in a palace and being the king's son no one could make him a keeper of the vineyards. Solomon is using himself as an example to predict and he is saying that white women should not go with negroes and made them slaves. If Solomon was black, why would he tell the daughters of Jerusalem not to look upon him; because Solomon knew that white women are not supposed to go with negroes. Proves Solomon was white and Solomon's people are a white race!

Look not upon me because I am black, is a statement telling people who are not black not to date, dance, have sex. or marriage with negroes. Black means negroes — look not upon me means do not date, dance, dance, have sex or marriage with me. The logic of this proves Solomon had to be white. The person saying Look not upon me because I am black knows that being black is the reason why people who are not black are not to date, dance, have sex or marriage with negroes. In God's eyes, negroes have NO RIGHT to date, dance, have sex or marriage with other races of people is what, Look not upon me because I am black. means. O ye daughters of Israel look not upon blacks, meaning white women are not to date, dance, have sex or marriage with negroes.

An example of using self to predict about someone else is Psalms 22:16-18 King David predicting about Jesus, a death

PUBLIC ACT No 44 of 1968 SENATE BILL No 925 Section 789c. GIVES PARENTS CONTROL OF THEIR SCHOOL CHILDREN. WRITE WASHINGTON, D.C. FOR THIS LAW. DO NOT TEACH SEX EDUCATION IN SCHOOLS

READ JEREMIAH 50:16 + 23 HAMMER SAYS TO FIGHT AND SICKLE COMMUNISTS

OCT 1971 PHIL DONAHUE TV SHOW FROM DAYTON, OHIO, A CATHOLIC NEGRO PSYCHIATRIST SAID CATHOLIC CHURCH TOLD HIM NEGROES HAD WHITE SOULS IN HEAVEN AS EVERYONE AFTER DEATH IS MADE WHITE BY GOD.

GOD GAVE LAWS BUT MAN MADE HIS OWN LAWS

GENSIS 1:23 "BE FRUITFULL AND MULTIPLY" ABORTION IS WRONG NO BIRTH CONTROL.

on the cross.

I am black but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar. The tents of Kedar are black meaning Kedar are negroes.

Isaiah 21:1-17 is about KEDAR and from the Songs of Solomon 1:5-6 we learn that Kedar are negroes so 21:3 "I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it" (is negroes going with white women is wrong) 21:16 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Within a year, ([redacted]) according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar (negroes have great influence) shall fail: 17. And the residue of the number of archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar (negroes), shall be diminshed for the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it." (God of Israel wants Kedar who are negroes to lose all their influence because of what's written here) . . .

Jeremiah, Chapter 8:19, "Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people (Jeremiah was a white man and his people are a white race) and something has been done to hurt white women) because of them that dwell in a far country (far country is the United States and what it has done for negroes has hurt white women); Is not the Lord in Zion? Is not her king in her? Why have they provoked me to anger (God is angry at negroes going with white women) with their graven images, and with strange vanities? 20. The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. 21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt (something has been done to hurt white women and the next sentence says that the Negroes are hurting white women); I am black (Negroes) astonishment hath taken hold upon me. (astonishment means something will be taught about negroes not considered nice; proves Jeremiah was white because of the word astonishment). 22. Is there no balm (medicine) in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

Jeremiah was a white man and he is using himself as an example to predict a future event and he is saying something wrong has been done involving white women and negroes, that white women who go with negroes are sick and need medicine and a physician to recover their health.

What has being black got to do with benig astonished,

ARABS ARE BROTHERS OF ISRAEL SO ARABS SHOULD NOT DATE OR MARRY NEGROES

FORCED BUSING OF WHITE CHILDREN IS KIDNAPING, NEGRO CHILD STEALERS. CHILDREN BELONG TO THEIR PARENTS NOT THE STATE.

Answer is O ye daughters of Israel look not upon blacks, meaning white women are not to date, dance, have sex or marriage with negroes. The person saying I am black astonishment hath taken hold upon me knows that being black is the reason for astonishment meaning that there is something to wonder about about being black. Notice how black astonishment is worded in with daughters of Israel are hurt, God is angry, And Israeli women are sick needing a doctor and medicine to recover their health. How it reads is "For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt because of theblacks." Both King Solomon and Jeremiah are saying in God's eyes, negroes have NO RIGHT to date, dance, have sex or marriage with the white race also meaning negroes have NO RIGHT to be PRIESTS OF GOD.

Job, chapter 6:15: "My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as the stream of brooks they pass away. 16. Which are BLACKISH (blackish is negro race) by reason of the ice (ice is negro lies), and wherein the SNOW is hid (snow is white race — snow is hid means negroes are causing whites trouble and the truth about negroes is not known).

17. What time they wax warm, they vanish; when it is hot, they are consumed out of their place. 18. The paths of their way are turned aside; they go to nothing, and perish. 19. The troops of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them. 20. They were confounded because they had hoped; they came thither and were ashamed. 21. For now ye are nothing; ye see my casting down, and are afraid. 22. Did I say, Bring unto me? or give a reward for me of your substance? 23. Or, deliver me from the enemy's hand? Or redeem me from the hand of the mighty? 24. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue: and cause me to understand wherein I have erred. (Negroes are in error and the truth about negroes will be taught.) 25. How forcible are right words."

Genesis 10:2-5, Sons of Japheth is yellow race, Japs, etc.
Genesis 10:21 Sons of Shem is white race.
Genesis 10:6-20 Sons of Ham is negro race.
God changes not same today, yesterday and forever.

GENESIS 9:25, — "And he said cursed be Canaan (negroes); a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren. (servant of servants means negroes are not to rule over white race). 26. And he said Blessed be the Lord God of

SERVANT OF SERVANTS MEANS NEGROES ARE NOT TO VOTE OR HOLD POLITICAL OFFICE AMONG WHITES. SOUTH AFRICA IS RIGHT ABOUT NEGROES.

NEGRO SEX WITH WHITE RACE IS GENOCIDE OF WHITE RACE AS CHILDREN ARE NEGROES. NO MORE BLONDS, BRUNNETS OR RED HEADS ONLY NEGROES. THERE WILL BE NO NEGROES

Shem (white race) and Canaan (negroes) shall be his servant. 27 God shall enlarge Japheth (more of yellow race) and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem (whites) and Canaan (negroes) shall be his servant. Genesis 9:18. "And Ham is the father of Canaan (negroes)."

Cursed be Canaan a servant to Shem and Japheth shall he be means that white and yellow race are equal and that negroes are not to intermarry with white or yellow races. Japheth shall dwell in tents of Shem means that white and yellow race are equal.

Isaiah 13:14 "And it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sheep which no man taketh up: they shall every man turn to his own people (means no interracial dating, sex or marriage between whites and negroes) and flee every one into his own land (means segregation). DEUTERONMY 32:8

Jeremiah 50:16 "for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land."

Isaiah 13:14 is God's Will on Race in saying God does not want interracial dating, sex or marriage WITH NEGROES

New Testament, St. Matthew, 24:37-38, the words of Jesus Christ, "As it was in the days of Noah so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man. They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage."

What was going on in Noah's time was considered evil so marrying and giving in marriage means that interracial marriage between whites and negroes is wrong. Jesus Christ made this statement about marrying and giving in marriage so Jesus Christ is against interracial marriage between whites and negroes. If God and Jesus Christ puts this difference between whites and negroes that He is against interracial marriage between whites and negroes, then from this it can also be concluded that negroes can NOT be priests of God. This is God's reason for a negro race.

Chinese, Japanese and all Asiatics are not considered negro and can be priests of God!

Isaiah 60:7: "All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee" means that some day large groups of negroes will accept the truth.

All religions have the right to interpret the Holy Bible so I too have the right to interpret the Holy Bible.

ISAIAH 13:14 SAYS NEGROES HAVE NO RIGHT TO INTERGATE. "EVERY ONE INTO HIS OWN LAND"

JESUS CHRIST WAS MARRIED AND HE HAD 3 WIVES.

POLYGAMY SHOULD BE LEGAL.

File

Does Gandhi have any significance for the American Negro?

Mahatma Gandhi, Father of the Indian Nation had evolved a revolutionary technique for fighting the British Government for freedom. It was the technique of non-violent action based on the Christian principle of "Love thy Enemy."

The technique had two broad aspects: (i) to build up strength and competence through constructive effort i.e. deserving through self-improvement before desiring; (ii) to quicken the moral conscience of the opponent through passive resistance, civil disobedience of immoral laws or satyagraha in a strictly non-violent manner. The idea was to induce a change of heart through self-suffering based on the unexceptionable justice of your demand.

This technique worked wonderfully in India and within a short span of thirty years Gandhi changed the very face of the country leading it from bondage to freedom. Its success was accelerated because it was directed against a constitutional Government which may have been autocratic and imperialistic in character in India, but which was democratic at home sustained by British public opinion and a free press.

Similar conditions prevail in the United States of America-- even better, on account of absence of autocracy and imperialism. The question arises: Can not the American Negro achieve his objective of civil rights based on social equality and dignity through the technique of non-violent Gandhian revolution?

Gandhi had once expressed the hope that "It may be through the Negroes that the unadulterated message of non-violence will be delivered to the world."

Dr.Martin Luther King, the Nobel Peace Prize Winner says:

> "I am convinced, in spite of the tragedies that we recently faced, that non-violence is the most potent weapon available to the Negro in his struggle for freedom and justice."

Expressing his preference for the Gandhain method as against the violent one, Dr.King Adds:

> "Just as a Hitler can lead men to the darkest and lowest depths, a Gandhi can lead men to the highest heights of non-violence and goodness."

But the racial riots in Detroit and other places in the U.S. show that young and impetuous hot-heads stand far away from the path of non-violence, even as those who indulged in language riots in India do. Even the land of Gandhi has drifted away from his teachings in many ways causing a great deal of misery and suffering to the common man.

Nevertheless, Gandhiji had asserted: "There is no hope for the aching world except through the narrow and straight path of non-violence. Millions like me may fail to prove the truth in their own lives, that will be their failure, never of the eternal law."

It is, therefore, the duty of those who believe in this eternal law, to continue to work for its promotion in the hope and faith that human society may ultimately be weaned away from the path of violence and hatred and live in peace and brotherhood as God had willed it. The alternative is grim and disastrous and therefore unthinkable.

The Book Project

It is in this background that it is proposed to work on a book-project based on study and research dealing with the burning question: "Does Gandhi have any significance for the American Negro?"

The book is intended to serve two purposes:

(i) To demonstrate that the Gandhian technique is neither utopian nor theoretic but it is a practical, dynamic, result-producing approach which has succeeded in India; there is no reason why it should not succeed in the U. S.

(ii) To demonstrate the futility of violence which only leads to hatred and bitterness and thereby to induce those who are engaged in the Civil Rights struggle, both Negro and White, to abjure violence in preference to non-violence.

The work to be effective must be born out of life and experience rather than be academic or bookish. The authorship of this project would, therefore, need specific competence.

About the Writer

One of the writers who could perhaps be considered for undertaking the project is Mr.Anant Gopal Sheorey, Author and Publicist, Ramdaspeth, Nagpur, India. Apart from his contribution to creative writing and literature, Mr.Sheorey is closely associated with English journalism in India for more than 33 years. He is now the Managing Editor of the NAGPUR TIMES, a leading English newspaper of the Central region and is a member of the Press Council of India and a Director of the Press Trust of India Ltd.,

Mr.Sheorey took active part in the Indian freedom struggle under Gandhiji's leadership. He took part in the satyagraha movement of 1930-31 and was secretary of a District "War Council" set up to conduct the non-violent struggle in his district. He was arrested in 1932. In 1942 again he took active part in the "Quit India" movement launched by Gandhiji and was sent to prison for three years. During this period he had for his prison-companions stalwarts like Vinoba Bhave, Kaka Kalelkar, Kishorlal Mashruwala and Dada Dharmadhikari--all close associates of Gandhiji.

While introducing him to the American Ambassador in India (H.E.Mr.Chester Bowles) Mr.R.R.Diwakar, Chairman of the Gandhi Peace Foundation wrote:

> " I have great pleasure in introducing to you Mr.A.G.Sheorey of Nagpur who is an established creative writer and journalist and who is known as an exponent of Gandhian thought. His novel based on the Gandhi-inspired non-violent Indian revolution of 1942--THE VOLCANO--is due to be published in New York in January next (since published). It is an English translation of the original Hindi novel "Jwalamukhi" written by the author himself and is being published by the National Book Trust, India, in all the fourteen languages mentioned in the Indian Constitution. Mr.Sheorey who spent three years in prison during the freedom struggle, was nominated to the All-India Mahatma Gandhi Award in 1960-61, an honour which was conferred earlier on Vinoba. His published works number more than a dozen. At present he is the Managing Editor of the Trust-Managed English newspaper, the NAGPUR TIMES..... I am sure you will be pleased to meet an intellectual of his dedication to Gandhian ideology as well as to creative writing."

The attached bio-data will give further information about the background and work of the author.

...

File

INTRODUCTION

* Voting power gives you a say-so in your city, county and state government.

* There is nothing secret about voting power. It comes about when you and others who share your views organize to get people to:

1. register to vote.
2. go to the polls on election day.

* But to get voting power you must do more than just register and vote. You must learn and teach others how to use their voting power wisely. In order to use your voting power wisely, one of the things you need to know is how the government is set up.

* This book explains some things about how the government in North Carolina is set up. In North Carolina, as in other states, we have three kinds of government: city, county and state. Everybody comes under the state government. It has more power than the other two. Everybody comes under a county government but only those people who live in a town or city come under city government.

(Illustration)

Page 2 of booklet:

CITY AND COUNTY GOVERNMENTS

GET THEIR POWER FROM THE STATE GOVERNMENT

* The General Assembly, the state law-making body which meets in Raleigh, governs the state with the help of the city and county governments and other governing bodies. The General Assembly tells the city and county governments what kinds of jobs they can do. It gives the local government the power to do these jobs.

* The General Assembly does not give all the 100 county governments exactly the same jobs and power. This is also true for city governments. Some cities have more power than others.

Page 3-7 of booklet:

CITY GOVERNMENT

* Town and city governments are called municipal governments. The main job of municipal governments is to provide services to the people who live in the towns and cities. Another job is to protect the people.

* Some of the jobs of the municipal governments are to:

Provide police and fire protectin

Build and keep up the streets

Provide street lighting and sidewalks

Pick up garbage

Inspect buildings and houses to make sure they are safe

Build and maintain a water and sewage system and other public works, such as playgrounds, community centers, libraries and housing

Plan for the growth of the city.

* In order to do these jobs, municipal governments have certain powers. Some of these powers are to:

Plan the spending of city money

Collect property and other taxes

Appoint heads of departments, such as police chief, fire chief and head of water department who hire and fire other city wprkers

Pass ordinances (laws) about municipal affairs---local speed and parking laws, rules about garbage collection, rules about how and where buildings and houses can be built and so on.

* There are two major forms of municipal government in the state: the council-manager form and the mayor-council form. Most towns and cities with over 5,000 people have the manager-council form. Most of the smaller towns have the mayor-council form.

* Under the mayor-council form, the voters elect a goopp of people to care for the city business. This group is called the City Commissioners (or City Councilmen or Aldermen). It makes city laws. The voters choose one man to head their municipal government.

He is the Mayor. The job of running the government is divided into departments---fire, police, water, sewage, street, building inspection and garbage collection. An important officer is appointed to head and run each department.

* Under the council-manager form of government, the voters elect a City Council (or City Commission or Board of Aldermen). One of the members of the city council serves as Mayor. The Mayor is elected or appointed. The City Council makes up the budget and passes city laws. The City Council appoints a man to carry out the laws and to serve as head of the government. He is called the City Manager. Often he appoints the heads of the different departments. In some cities the City Council appoints all or some of the department heads.

* Each municipal government makes up rules about how the Mayor and Councilmen are elected. Most of the municipal governing bodies are small. (They usually have five members.) Most municipal elections are non-partisan. This means that people do not run for office as a member of a political party. City officers usually are elected for a four year term.

City officers are often elected at-large, that is by all the voters of the city. In some cities the voters of each ward (a voting district) elect a city officer. Other cities require that the officers be from the different wards but elect the officers at-large. In some cities both methods are used.

In most municipalities a person must register to vote on the city registration books. This is a separate set of books from the county voter registration books. But cities and counties may combine their voter registration books. Then a person can register only once in order to vote in all elections. Only a few cities and counties have combined their books.

Pages 8-11 of booklet:

COUNTY GOVERNMENT

North Carolina has 100 counties. The main job of county government is to act for the state in providing services for the people---education, health, welfare and so on. Another important job of the county government is carrying out laws. They do not have much power to make laws.

*q Some of the jobs of the county government are to:

1. Decide how much money is needed to give the people the services they need. The county government must then set the local tax rate and collect the taxes.
2. Run the schools and the health and welfare departments.
3. Build and keep up the courthouse, ~~$~~jail other public buildings, such as libraries.
4. Enforce state laws.

5. Keep records of important papers, such as marriage licenses and deeds to property
6. provide a place for some of the state courts.
7. Help run the elections.

* The job of running the county government is divided between elected officials and persons that are appointed to offices and boards. Some of the elected officials are: County Commissioners, Sheriff, Register of Deeds, Clerk of Superior Court, and School Board. Some of the appointed officers and boards are: County Accountant, Tax Collector, Welfare Board, and Health Board.

* The County Commissioners have more say-so in running the county government than anyone else.

1. They decide how much money is needed to run the county government and set the tax rate.
2. They appoint other people to county jobs, such as County Lawyer, County Bookkeeper, County Tax Supervisor and Tax Collector, Building Inspectors. In some counties, they appoint a County Manager.

3. They serve on some boards themselves. They serve on the Board of Equalization and Review (holds hearings about the tax value of property). One member serves on the County Health Board.
4. They appoint other people to other boards, such as the County Welfare Baord, ABC Board, Hospital and Housing Boards and Jury Commission.
5. They have some power to start projects to help the people. They can do this by calling for a bond election to improve and build hospitals, schools, libraries, sewages and water systems.

* Most counties have fime members on the County Commission. In most counties, the County Commissioners serve for four-year terms. In some counties, all the County Commissioners are elected at one time, but in many counties some of the members are elected in each election. In many counties, the Commissioners are elected at-large by all the voters of the county. Some counties divide the county into districts. Each of the Commissioners must live in a different district, but they are elected by all the county voters.

* Some of the other elected county officials are:

1. Sheriff. His main job is to enforce state law.
2. Register of Deeds. He keeps records of important papers.
3. Clerk of Superior Courts. He keeps court records.
4. School Board. The job of this board is to run the schools at the local level. The School Board---like the Welfare, Health, and other boards and officials---must present a budget to the County Commissioners each year. The County Commissioners may approve the budget or they may cut the budget. (Some cities have a City School Board, but the City School Boards also must present the city school budget to the County Commissioners for their approval.)

* All the county officials, except for some county school boards, are elected in partisan elections. This means that people run for office as a member of a political party. County officials are elected in primary and general elections.

STATE GOVERNMENT

* The State government is divided into three parts just like the United States government. The three parts are:

1. Executive. This part is made up of the Governor, other elected officials and appointed officials and boards. The job of this branch is to run the government and enforce the laws.
2. Legislative. This is the General Assembly which meets in Raleigh. This branch makes the laws about how the government is to be run.
3. Judicial. This part is made up of the different courts of law. The job of this branch is to decide questions of law and help punish those who are proved guilty of crimes.

THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH

* The job of the executive branch is to run the government and see that the laws are carried out. The Governor is head of the executive branch. The Governor has persons who help him do the work of the executive branch. Some of these people are appointed by him. Others are elected.

* The Governor has a lot of power. He serves on many important boards himself. He appoints others to offices and boards. He tells the state legislature what laws he thinks are needed. He is the commander of the Highway Patrol and National Guard.

* Probably the most important power of the Governor is the power to appoint people to state offices, boards, and commissions. Boards and commissions are a group of people given the orders and duty to do a certain job. This power to appoint people gives the Governor great power in the state government but also in the political party of which he is a member. People are willing to be loyal to the Governor and work for the party if they have a chance of getting jobs that pay well. The people appointed to these jobs and boards have a lot of power. They have a lot of say so on how people live---whether they get good school, highways, health card.

* Some appointments made by the Governor are the:

1. State Board of Education. Most of the members of this board are appointed by the Governor. This board oversees the running of the public schools in the counties and cities. It decides such things as teacher requirements and salary schles.
2. State Board of Public Welfard. The job of this board is to oversee the running of the welfard department at the state and county level. This board hires a Commissioner of Public Welfard to run the State Department of Public Welfard.
3. State Board of Health. The Governor and Medical Society of the state appoint the members of this board. The board hires the State Health Director. One of the jobs of this board is to enforce health laws.

4. Chairman of the Employment Security Commission. A job of this commission is to run the employment offices in the state. It also has some say-so in who can get unemployment insurance.
5. Chair of the State Highway Commission. One of the jobs of this commission is to decide what highways and roads to build and repair.
6. Chairman and Members of the Industrial Commission. The job of this commission is to run the workmen's compensation system.
7. Commissioner of Motor Vehicles. He is head of the State Highway Patrol.
8. Chairman and Members of the Board of Paroles. Their job is to decide when prisoners whall be released from jail.
9. Commissioner of Revenue. He collects state taxes.

10. Chairman and Members of the State Utilities Commission. This board sets the rates that people have to pay companies for electricity, telephone, natural gas, and bus and railroad fares.

11. State Board of Elections. The Governor appoints all the members of this board. This board hires and Executive Secretary. His job is to help see that voter registration and election laws are followed. The State Board appoints the members of the County Boards of Elections.

* Another important power of the Governor is to help make the laws. The Governor tells the General Assembly what laws he thinks are needed. He also tells the General Assembly how much he believes it should cost to run the state government and on what the money should be spent. The Governor can not veto (veto means forbid) laws passed by the General Assembly. But because he has something to say about the budget and can make many appointments, he still has a lot of power with the General Assembly.

* The Governor may call a special session of the General Assembly. He can do this when he thinks there is some important matter the General Assembly must take up.

As we said earlier, some executive officers of the state are elected. The elected officers are:

1. Lieutenant Governor. Sometimes the Governor is not able to serve all of his term of office. Then the Lieutenant Governor takes the place of the Governor. The Liewtenant Governor presides over the State Senate.
2. Secretary of State. He keeps the records of the state. He has state laws printed. He helps carry out elections in the state.
3. Attorney General. He is the chief lawyer of the state. He advises the Governor ' and other state officials about state laws. He represents the state in the courts.
4. State Auditor. He is the state bookkeeper. He looks at the public bills of the state. If he feels bills are fight, he asks the Treasurer to pay them.

5. State Treasurer. He takes care of fees and tax money that come to the state. He pays all the bills of the state.

6. Superintendent of Public Instruction. He works with the schools of the state. Some of his jobs are to help the schools have better education programs and to see that state school laws are obeyed.

7. Commissioner of Labor. He is head of the Department of Labor. Some of the jobs of this department are: to enforce child labor laws, minimum wage and hour laws, settle strikes, and help train workers for better jobs.

8. Commissioner of Insurance. He is head of the Department of Insurance. Some of the jobs of this department are: to make sure that the insurance compaines have the money to pay claims, to see that the companies do not charge too much for insurance policies.

9. Commissioner of Agriculture. He is head of the Department of Agriculture. The job this department is to see that laws having to do with farming are carried out.

The Governor and the other executive officers are elected in primary and general elections. The executive officers are elected every four years on even numbered years, like 1968, 1972 and 1976.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

* The law-making body of the state government is the General Assembly. The General Assembly has the power to make many kinds of laws.

* The General Assembly can make laws about money matters. It can make laws about how much and what kind of taxes people and companies have to pay. It can decide how much of the tax money the different departments--- education, health, welfare, highways, prisons and so on--- will get.

* The General Assembly can make laws about companies that do business intthe state. For example, it can require that the companies pay their workers a certain minimum wage. It can pass laws that make it easy or hard for workers to join unions. The General Assembly can pass laws to start new projects that will give people jobs and help people live better. It can pass laws so that the state and local governments can take part in the many federal (U. S. Government) programs that will help the people.

The General Assembly of North Carolina is made up of two parts: the State Senate and the State House of Representatives. The Senate has 50 members and the House 120 members. The General Assembly meets in Raleigh every odd-numbered year, like 1969, 1971, 1973.

Members of the General Assembly are elected in primary elections (in May) and general elections (in November) just like the executive officers are elected. They are elected every even-numbered year, like 1968, 1970, 1972, for two-year terms.

The state is divided into Senatorial and House of Representativerdistricts. Members of the Senate and House are elected by the voters in each district. Every district is made up of one or more whole counties. Some districts have only one county. Many districts have two or more counties. Some districts elect only one member. Others elect two or more members.

COURTS AND JURY SYSTEM

The state has a system of law courts. It is called the judicial branch of the government. In 1962 and 1965, the state system of courts was changed. This was done so that there would be the same system throughout the State. It will be late 1970 before all the changes are made. Under the new system there will be three kinds of courts: the Appeal Courts, Superior Courts and District Courts.

The Appeal Courts

This is the highest level of courts. One job of the Appeal Courts is to hear appeals from lower courts---the Superior and District Courts. If a person does not believe he has been given a fair trial in the lower courts, he may appeal his case. Another job of the appeal courts is to decide if laws are in agreement with the North Carolina Constitution.

There are two kinds of appeal courts. They are the North Carolina Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. The North Carolina Supreme Court is the highest state court. The North Carolina Supreme Court has seven justices. The justices are elected by all the state voters for eight-year terms.

The Court of Appeds was set up in 1967 to help the North Carolina Supreme Court. It does this by hearing the less important cases. Thesccourt will have nine judges. Six took office in 1967 and the other three will take office in 1969. All nine judges willbbe elected by the state voters. They serve for eight-year terms.

In appeal courts there are no jury trials.

The Superior Courts

One important job of the Superior Courts is to try the more serious criminal and civil cases. Criminal cases are cases in which a person breaks a law that protects people---robbery, murder and the like. Civil cases are when tow or more persons cannot agree about something, such as who owns a car, land, furniture. Cases are tried by juries in the Superior Court.

The state is divided into 30 judicial districts. In nearly all the judicial districts, there are two or more counties. Each of the 30 judidial districts has a Superior Court. Each district has one or more Superior Court Judges. The judges are nominated by the voters of each district. They are elected for eight-year terms by all the voters of the state. Also there are eight Special Superior Court Judges. They are appointed by the Governor for four-year terms.

The state lawyer who represents the state in criminal cases is called the Superior Court Solicitor. He is elected by the registered voters of his district for a four-year term. There will be a Solicitor in each of the 30 judicial districts when the new system is complete.

The District Courts

The District Court system is being set up.to do away with the many different kinds of courts at the local lever---recorder's court, juvenile court, mayor's court, justice of peace court. By December 1970 there will only be one court at the local level: the District Court. The job of the District Court is to try the less serious criminal cases such as traffic violations. It also tries the less important civil cases---cases involving less than $5,000. In most trials in the District Court, there is no jury. But in some cases a person can request a jury trial. Also if a person does not believe he has been given a fair trial, he can appeal his case to the Superior Court.

Each of the state's 30 judicial districts has a District Court as well as a Superior Court.

The voters of each district elect the District Court judges that hold court in their district. The judges serve for four-year terms. Each district has from two to six judges.

Each county has a magistrate. The magistrates assist the District Court Judges by issuing warrants, setting bail, and accepting pleas of guilty in certain traffic cases. In short, they replace the job now done by the justices of peace. Magistrates for each county are appointed by the Superior Court Judge of each judicial district.

Jury System

Another new law about the court system was passed in 1967. The new law sets up a Jury Commission for each county. The Jury Commission has three members. One member is appointed by the Superior Court Judge, another by the Clerk of Superior Court, and the other by the County Commissioners.

The job of Jury Commissioners is to choose people who might serve on juries. They make up the list of people to serve by using the tax and voter registration lists.

CONCLUSION

This booklet doesn't tell you all you need to know about government in North Carolina. To do that would take a booklet many times this size. But we hope it does tell you some of the important things you need to know.

There are other booklets that can tell you more about certain parts of your local government. These are booklets, pretty much like this one, written by the North Carolina Voter Education Project. These booklets are about school boards, county commissions, voter registration, election rights, and precinct meetings. Other booklets like these are being written. If you would like copies of these booklets get in touch with:

North Carolina Voter Education Project
213½ West Main Street
Durham, North Carolina 27701

Telephone: (919) 682-1222

Bedford

FROM: EDW BEDFORD

(Chas. Sherrod's office in Americus gave this to me for SRC consideration)

File

Proposal for a Newspaper for Southwest Georgia

I: Need

In order to promote any project some sort of communication is necessary. The Southwest Georgia Project has been functioning since 1961, and during this time the only means of communicating between counties what was happening was by word of mouth or bydepending the Southern press. In order for the program to be more effective it has to have a newspaper that can cover all of the counties. The Southwest Georgia Project works in the second congressional district of Georgia which comprises some twenty counties. The project is presently working in nine of those couties and has contacts in all of them. Work is being done to develop and enocourage local movements in political, economical, and cultural development of negro communities. A key to the furthering of this work lies in the local people's understanding the issues they face and in having adequate facts to deal with. A newspaper could provide these facts plus some ideas of how to deal with them. It could also be an important organ in unifying the effort over the entire Southwest Georgia area.

It is important to understand that the Civil Rights Movement is over for the American Press, that is to say, the news is no longer sensational, so that it does not make headlines unless in the extreme cases of people being killed or churches burning down etc. The press is no longer concerned with the issues that lead up to these incidents of violence but only with the incidents themselves. For example, there was a distinct lack of reporting of the issues involved in the recent killing of a civilrightsworker in Mississippi and the church burnings in Lowndes County, Alabamafactxis . The fact is that the issues are still very much there and will continually lead to other incidents if they are not faced directly and honestly. It is the failure of the press today that it isolates out incidents from the all important contexts from which they arise. It is not to say that the American press necessarily intentionally isolates incidents from issues but that this act of isolation blocks the development of community organization, and it is this latter which we are dealing with here in Southwest Georgia.

Likewise the Negro press has also failed in its responsiblity of dealing with issues. Often it has failed to report important occurrences or when it did, it failed to take a stand on the issues. The negro press, while it possesses the potentiality for being the spokesman for the black community is infact tied to the present power structure and is not able to break free from it to express threatening views because it depends on it economically. It is our intention to attemot to provide a voice for the black community that will not be bound to the system, but will belong to the people.

II. Distribution

A. The base of the operation will be in Albany.

B. Distribution will cover 9 counties initially:

Baker Co.	59%	Negro
Doroughty	34%	"
Sumter	53%	"
Worth	48%	"
Grady	49%	"
Crisp	43%	"
Lee	63%	"
Terrell	64%	"

Doroughty county, having the smallest % Negro has 2 negro newspapers which are not distributed outside of the city of Albany. None of the other counties has a black organ.

C. Distribution will be about 4,000 copies per county or 36,000 copies each issue, every other week. Some copies will be sent to the contacts we have in other counties and some will be sent to friends and supporters in the North and West.

III. Staff

The philosophy which we operate with in the Southwest Georgia project places great emphasis on people coming to have control over their own lives as individuals and as a community. Therefore it is our objective that the newspaper will eventually be run by the people themselves. So that from the beginning of its operation local people will be included in the staff in every phase of the work. Working with the newspaper will also provide individuals the opportunity to increase their skills at communicating their grievances and ideas ~~which will go a long way to insure the success of the paper~~.

A. Editor

B. Reporters
- 3 permanent reporters
- 4 highschool students for work on weekends and evenings

C. Photographer
- 1 permanent photographer with 2 assistants interested in learning this skill.

note.

Hawk, dig this.

I did some figgerin' on costs which might be interesting to you if you can find some of th is equipment.

1.	1250 multilith press	$ 3,800.00
2.	I. B. M. typewriter	300.00
3.	photo equipment	2,000.00
4.	paper	200.00	per month
	Total initial cost	$ 6,300.00

These figures do not include the cost of mailing or of further operation.

NEWS BULLETIN from Rev. Ashton Jones, Asso. Pastor

The People's Independent Church of Christ, 1025 E. 18th.St., Los Angeles,Cal.

I am one of the Civil Rights demonstrators who has been classed in the role of Judas Iscariot in the L. A. newspaper articles and editorials of Mar. 11th & 12th. for Civil Disobedience in the attempt to throw the light of Truth upon the Department of Justice of our United States. We are deeply concerned because for 1o these hundred years the Department of Justice has failed to legally uphold our Constitutional Rights which guarantee to EACH citizen (regardless of color, creed or national origin) equal respect, dignity and equality in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness.

I am happy to have expressed my solidarity by joining the 98 high school and college students who were arrested Wednesday, Mar. 10th and the vast numbers of youth throughout the world in their willingness to suffer police brutality, manhandling, beatings and jails because of Civil Disobedience. I believe they are practicing the principles of Jesus, Gandhi, Henry David Thoreau, Martin Luther King, Jr., and others who have felt a deep compulsion to disobey " man-made law " to follow the higher law of Love, Justice and Freedom for all people everywhere.

After 35 hours in jail I was sad at heart to read for the first time the L.A. news accounts to find them slanted in favor of it being RIGHT for the U.S. Marshalls and deputy sheriffs to use methods of brutality in handling non-violent demonstrators.

I witnessed others, and experienced myself, being beaten, kicked, stomped, roughly dragged, handcuffed and bloodied up. I was thrown, nude, in a solitary windowless cell onto a cold plactic - covered mattress until I shook with chills. Three hours later I was examined for blood pressure. No doubt, because of my refusing to cooperate with the evil of brutality, I was then diagnosed as " being in a drunken stupor and all I needed was another bottle of liquor. " After giving me a hypodermic they tried to force me to take some kind of pills and a liquid. Immediately, in another windowless solitary cell I was strapped (hands and feet) to a bed, covered with a sheet and spread. I was forced to lie flat on my back for the next 12 hours before a doctor removed the shackles. Shackles and solitary cells are supposed to be used only in cases of violent or dangerous prisoners or for punishment.

We demonstrators were accused of deliberately blocking the entrances to the Federal Building when in Truth the doors were locked and blocked by guards. Dozens of people, who were not demonstrators, reached the guards at the doors without difficulty but were refused entrance. Furthermore, I know all mail trucks could have been guided through the driveway by the guards without any arrests or harm to demonstrators.

To me, it was disgraceful, UnAmerican, UnDEMOCRATIC and UnConstitutional to arrest people as we were arrested-for non-violently expressing our sympathy with all people around the world and especially in Selma, Alabama who stand for Freedom for all mankind.

My God forgive those who knew no better way to deal with non-violent fighters for RIGHT.

Sincerely yours,

Ashton B. Jones

Ashton B. Jones

P.S. C.O.R.E. has again come to the rescue of such an unorganized group of Freedom fighters and secured Bail Bond for us. This runs into around $90.000. Money to take care if bond and legal expenses is urgently needed. It is wonderful to have the American Civil Liberties Union to represent us. Please, if you can help, send any amount of $1.00 or more to C.O.R.E 1115 Venice Blvd., Los Angeles, Cal. 90015.

WON'T YOU PLEASE READ THE INSIDE NEWS BULLETIN

DESCRIBING THE ARREST AND BRUTAL TREATMENT OF

THE 98 YOUNG PEOPLE AT THE FEDERAL BUILDING

MAR. 10th 1965 IN LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

THANK YOU.

People's Independent Church of Christ
1025 East 18th. Street
Los Angeles, Cal.
Ashton Jones , Asso. Pastor.

NON PROFIT ORG

U.S. POSTAGE

PAID
Permit No. 22856

Editor
New South
5 Forsythe St., NW
Atlanta 3, Ga.

Santeeson
Alice
Jonathan
8 years old

These are cities of 25,000 or more from which additional control cities might be drawn.

Mere

Chief of Police

ALABAMA

Anniston
Bessemer
Birmingham - Eugene Connor (E.C.) (Commissioner of Public Safety)
Decatur
Dothan
Florence
Gadsden
Homewood
Huntsville
Mobile
Montgomery - P.O. Box 159
Phenix City
Prichard
Selma
Tuscaloosa

ARKANSAS

Dumas
Fort Smith
Hot Springs
Little Rock - R.T. Glasscock
North Little Rock
Pine Bluff — NORMAN D. YOUNG

FLORIDA

Brownsville
Clearwater
Coral Gables
Daytona Beach
Fort Lauderdale
Fort Pierce
Gainesville
Hialeah
Hollywood
Jacksonville
Key West
Lakeland
Miami
Miami Beach
North Miami
Orlando
Panama City
Pensacola
St. Petersburg
Sarasota
Tallahassee
Tampa
West Palm Beach

GEORGIA

Albany — LAURIE PRITCHETT
Athens
Atlanta - HERBERT C. JENKINS
Augusta
College Park
Columbus
East Point
Macon
Marietta
Rome
Savannah
Valdosta

KENTUCKY

Ashland
Bowling Green
Covington
Lexington - E. C. HALE
Louisville
Newport
Owensboro
Paducah

LOUISIANA

Alexandria
Baton Rouge
Bossier City
Lafayette
Lake Charles
Monroe
New Iberia
New Orleans
Shreveport

MISSISSIPPI

Biloxi
Greenville
Gulfport
Hattiesburg
Jackson —
Laurel
Meridan
Vicksburg

McComb - George Guy

SOUTH CAROLINA

Anderson
Charleston
Columbia

SOUTH CAROLINA (cont'd)

Greenville
Rock Hill P.O. Box 222
Spartanburg

NORTH CAROLINA

Asheville
Burlington
Charlotte
Durham
Fayetteville
Gastonia
Goldsboro
Greensboro
High Point
Kannapolis
Raleigh
Rocky Mount
Wilmington
Wilson
Winston-Salem

OKLAHOMA

Bartlesville
Enid
Lawton
Midwest City
Muskogee
Norman
Oklahoma City
Tulsa

TENNESSEE

Chattanooga
Jackson
Johnson City
Kingsport
Knoxville
Memphis
Nashville
Oak Ridge

VIRGINIA

Alexandria
Charlottesville
Danville
Hampton
Lynchburg
Newport News

VIRGINIA (cont'd)

Norfolk
Petersburg
Portsmouth
Richmond
Roanoke

TEXAS

Abilene
Amarillo
Arlington
Austin
Baytown
Beaumont
Big Spring
Brownsville
Bryan
Corpus Christi
Dallas
Denton
El Paso
Fort Worth
Galveston
Garland
Grand Prairie
Harlingen
Houston
Kingsville
Laredo
Lubbock
McAllen
Mesquite
Midland
Odessa
Orange
Pasadena
Port Arthur
San Angelo
San Antonio
Texarkana
Texas City
Tyler
Victoria
Waco
Wichita Falls

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Cities over 10,000 which are not on 25,000 or more list

Georgia

Americus
Bainbridge
Brunswick
Carrollton
Cordele
Dalton
Dublin
Forest Park
Gainesville
Griffin
Hapeville
La Grange
Milledgeville
Moultrie
Newnan
North Atlanta
Smyrna
Thomasville
Warner Robins
Waycross

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT IN GEORGIA

Present Situation:

Today in Georgia, we have a number of educational institutions carrying on research programs. We normally speak, in conversation and promotional literature, of these efforts and schools in composite numbers which gives us an impressive-sounding capability.

If an unified effort existed, Georgia would certainly have this comprehensive research potential. But unity does not exist. The reality is that each of the programs goes its own way, and the full talents of the state are not brought to bear on a particular project or problem.

There are some problems of overlapping capabilities brought on by the different philosophies under which some of the research groups operate. But this is not the major problem... it is that you cannot contract with any single group and get the best talents Georgia has available to do the job.

In order to understand the present situation, it is necessary to understand the underlying philosophies of certain of the research groups.

A self-contained research unit with the ability to respond quickly to problem solving is one of the present approaches to research in the University System. Such a group does not go out of its own organization to solicit expert assistance on particular aspects of a particular problem. Given a project, it seeks to hire the best talent that can be hired to add to the capabilities of its organization. Though connected with an institution, it does not reflect necessarily the best minds of that institution on various problems; but the best minds within the self-contained research unit.

The other philosophy is reflected in the Institute programs at the University of Georgia. These are loosely-knit organizations which have very small permanent institute staffs, but feel free to call upon the resources of the University in approaching particular problems.

Two things should be noted at this stage:

(1). Though the institute system can bring to bear the full capabilities of the University of Georgia, it has no lines which would involve the other schools of the University System, or private institutions.

(2). The self-contained unit approach has a shorter reaction time and a better system of management because of being self-contained... but it has only its own resources.

This state of affairs means that the prospective purchaser of research has two alternatives... either to approach one group or the other. Regardless of the special abilities he may want from one group, he must contract with the group that can give him the better job of the two... not the best job the two could provide together.

This situation can be seen also in the field of new product development. The Food Technology Center at Georgia might develop a new consumer product; the engineering skills of Tech might be needed to investigate packaging and production problems; the talent of Georgia State, Georgia, and Tech might be utilized to research market potential and possible local producers. At this moment, there is no way to bring these efforts together.

The situation is equally acute in the field of joint research efforts between the private institutions and the University System. As an example, the new field of "bionics" (biology and electronics) is an obvious natural for joint work by Georgia Tech, Emory, and the University. There is no frame-work, at present, wherein these three schools could jointly enter into a contract for work in this field.

Contrary to initial impressions, the present situation of research in Georgia is not so much one of overlapping work and wasteful rivalry, but the lack of some unifying framework that would bring all the talents together in an unified effort. There is also a problem of lack of information. At present, no one in the state seems to have an overall picture of all of the capabilities of all of the institutions. It is very hard to avoid duplication of work, or to form "task forces" to approach certain problems when the left institution does not know what the right one is doing or is capable of doing. It would probably be the case that a complete analysis of capabilities and work actually being carried on in "faculty" research would result in the new knowledge that we have more talent and more research going on than we suppose.

Market Potentials:

The market potentials for a unified research effort in Georgia are of large proportions. In 1962, approximately $10 million (this is a rough figure and probably conservative) was received in contractual work by Georgia Tech, the University, and Georgia State alone. This figure does not include the private institutions. This dollar amount of research was contracted for without the unified effort which the situation demands.

A larger amount of research may be expected from the new Department of Trade and Industry than has been contracted for by the Department of Commerce in the past.

But this is peanuts to the dollar figures of Department of Defense research work done by other universities and non-profit institutions. Attached to this memorandum is a listing of the top fifty DOD non-profit contractors in 1961 to show the amount of work some groups are obtaining from the government alone.

At this time, Georgia is simply not competing. Though we have a host of research capabilities in the state, without an unified program no agency or individual is able to compete with the full force of these resources behind him. Until such an unified effort is possible, Georgia cannot expect to receive much of the R & D dollar being spent in the United States.

We, also, cannot expect the growth of satellite research groups and industry until we have become competitive and have obtained some of the large federal expenditures.

The market is there. What other institutions are doing is proof of that. It is also true that we have research capabilities in the state, that, coordinated, could get the business. The problem is how to present our unified research resources and harness them to work for the state and project work for government and private enterprise.

Action Alternatives:

A number of approaches to the problem of coordinating and upgrading the research efforts in the state are being discussed in all quarters. This portion of the memorandum reviews some of them, and offers one as the best course of action.

One proposal entails an expansion and relocation of at least sections of the Georgia Tech Experiment Station. This proposal is a product of the philosophy of a self-contained research unit which does not work on the "task force" concept, but utilizes, in the greater part, the talents contained in the research unit.

This alternative does not seem to be a constructive approach to the problem for the following reasons:

(1). It does not include a coordinating function between "faculty" research and faculty talent of the school of which it is a part.

(2). It does not offer a means of coordinating the efforts of all the University System or other research abilities of the state.

(3). It offers the state and others seeking research the "either-or" situation and not the "all capabilities" approach which seems desirable.

Though this approach is not the solution, it should not be totally discounted for there is a great need to improve the Tech capabilities. As stated before, there is also merit in a self-contained unit, for it has the ability to produce work with short lead times. However, this upgrading of the Tech Experiment Station should be considered as only a part of the needed overall action.

A second alternative under discussion is a reasearch coordinator at the Regents' level of the University System. This is an obvious approach to the need of coordinating the efforts of the University-System schools. Unquestionably, this coordination is desirable and necessary, but it is not far-sighted enough. It is only an immediate need:

Some of the problems of this alternative are:

(1). Would the coordinator be of such stature and have the authority to contract for the University System? If not, he would become part of the problem instead of the solution.

(2). This alternative says nothing of the other academic institutions outside of the University System and the utilization of their resources. It seems unlikely that the private institutions would participate in full with the University System because of their cherished autonomy.

This course of action does answer some immediate problems and should not be wholly discounted. It does, however, speak only to immediate problems in the University System and not to the future and the state at large.

A third alternative which has been suggested is a Director of Research in the new Department of Trade and Industry with powers to contract and then subcontract with various schools and private concerns.

There is no question that the new Department will need a strong research effort, but this alternative leaves some major questions unanswered:

(1). How will the director approach the total capabilities of the state? Will he not still be caught in the "either-or" situation?

(2). Will the private institutions participate in a program at state government level?

(3). Is it possible to hire a director of research of such stature that he can truly manage a major research program without weakening the director of the department because of the higher pay he would require and the position of power he would hold?

(4). Can we expect national firms, NASA, and federal agencies to contract for work with the State of Georgia, considering the prevelant attitude of the nation toward state political entities?

There will certainly be a need for a director of research in the new Department of Trade and Industry, but it seems a confusion of roles to believe that this man in this job is the proper place to begin an overall research program.

A fourth alternative would be the formation of a non-profit corporation with a major executive officer who would have the power to make contracts and manage projects for the state, private industry, foundations, and national agencies. As this alternative has not been discussed as fully as the others, it is outlined in some detail below:

A Non-Profit Research Corporation:

The corporation, which would be chartered under Georgia law, would have as members of its board the presidents of the colleges and universities of the state, both public and private, which have research capabilities: the chairman of the Board of Regents; the governor; the president of the Georgia State Chamber of Commerce; and the presidents of private corporations with statewide interests such as Southern Bell and Georgia Power.

The Board would recruit as its executive officer a scientist-administrator of national stature...not the best in the state, but the best in the nation...at whatever salary it took to get him.

This executive officer would hire a management team with capabilities of managing major research projects for the state of Georgia, private companies, and federal agencies.

The executive officer and his team would have the two-fold responsibility of soliciting major research contracts and grants, and the management of the projects obtained.

He would sub-contract the work of these projects to the various universities that have the best talent for various phases of a project. He will be in close contact with his board and also the working level research people in order to utilize the full research capabilities of the state.

This executive officer would be able to speak for all of the research capabilities of the state.

This alternative offers certain advantages not offered in the other alternatives:

(1). The corporation would not be another research group, but a coordinating, soliciting, and managerial agency for all research groups.

(2). The corporation would not be a state agency nor connected with a state agency, nor the spokesman for just the research capabilities of the University System.

(3). The corporation would not eliminate the character of any other research groups now in existence, nor would it inhibit "faculty" research, nor would it override the individual perogatives of participating colleges and universities.

Initial capital outlay for this corporation would be minimum. An executive officer and his staff would be hired. It would also be advantageous to put these people in an administration building with a lot of surrounding land so that schools might build facilities in the area if the future demands, and to allow for the construction of facilities that might be included as "brick and mortar" clauses in some federal contracts.

With these provisions, a "research center" would grow up as the facilities were demanded by the contractual work ... not before the market need was evident.

The initial capital might be obtained by a grant from the State, or from grants by private individuals and foundations. Monies to be spent by the Department of Trade and Industry for research would be expended through this corporation.

These are only preliminary notes on the nature and function of this corporation, but it seems to be the far-reaching type of solution which the future of research in Georgia and for Georgia demands.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE RESEARCH CONTRACT
EXPENDITURES
GOVERNMENT AGENCIES AND NON-PROFIT INSTITUTIONS

Rank	Agency or Institution		Thousands of Dollars
1.	Massachusetts Institute of Tech.	$	80,513
2.	John Hopkins University		44,549
3.	Aerospace Corporation		32,430
4.	Mitre Corporation		22,844
5.	Columbia University		15,079
6.	Rand Corporation		13,868
7.	Michigan, University of		12,920
8.	Stanford Research Institute		12,155
9.	California, University of		11,571
10.	Armour Research Foundation		10,523
11.	Standford University		8,571
12.	Cornell Aeronautical Lab. Inc.		8,009
13,	Illinois, University of		7,452
14.	Cornell University		6,496
15.	Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute		5,217
16.	Pennsylvania State University		4,377
17.	Chicago, University of		4,174
18.	System Development Corporation		3,986
19.	United States Department of Commerce		3,980
20.	Ohio State University		3,862
21.	Battelle Memorial Institute		3,745
22.	New York University		3,583
23.	Washington, University of		3,402
24.	Texas, University of		3,255
25.	George Washington University		3,051
26.	Princeton University		2,986
27.	Harvard University		2,783
28.	Defense Analysis, Institute of		2,575
29.	Minnesota, University of		2,432
30.	Southwest Research Institute		2,331
31.	Brooklyn, Polytechnic Institute of		2,220
32.	California Institute of Tech.		2,142
33.	Franklin Institute of Pennsylvania		2,097
34.	National Academy of Sciences		2,008
35.	Pennsylvania, University of		1,899

(over)

36.	Denver, University of	$	1,831
37.	Illinois Institute of Tech.		1,790
38.	Dayton, University of		1,784
39.	Northwestern University		1,637
40.	Midwest Research Institute		1,379
41.	Southern California, University of		1,360
42.	New Mexico State University of Agriculture, Engineering & Science		1,324
43.	Stevens Institute of Technology		1,321
44.	Syracuse University		1,200
45.	U. S. National Aeronautics & Space Administration		1,173
46.	Colorado, University of		1,149
47.	Maryland, University of		1,120
48.	Alaska, University of		1,093
49.	U. S. Atomic Energy Commission		1,062
50	Purdue Research Foundation		969

File

A CHRISTMAS DREAM

This Christmas, I am dreaming
About a place I'll never forget -- AMERICUS.
I am dreaming that it is Christmas Sunday;
It is the most beautiful Sunday in all the South.
THE WHOLE TOWN IS GATHERED IN FRIENDSHIP BAPTIST CHURCH!

After the main part of the service is over,
Rev. Thomas leads us in singing,
"Amazing Grace, How Sweet It Sounds".
Because it is our movement church, and we are rejoiced,
Willie Mae leads us in "We Shall Overcome."
There is an electricfeeling of ecstatic joy in the air....

Old wealthy Charles Wheatly slowly rises,
"I've come here today, y'all, this Christmas, 1965,
'Cause I just can't go on living the way I have:
I've tried to rule little Americus,
From the mayor to the moonshine maker.
I want to confess that this summer past
I did way too much,
To keep the merchants from hiring y'all
And a Bi-racial Committee from forming at all!
All generations of Wheatlys tried to rule this town,
But justice has been coming, it's nearly '66.
And I've too few years left to hate!"

"Amen, yes brother", responds the congregation.

Before the surprised faces of the town,
Sheriff Fred Chappell rises to respond.
His huge form shakes, his face, as usual, is very red.
"I'll never beat another in yonder courthouse,
The drinking fountains will stay on, the door unlocked,
We'll all meet together in the old courthouse!
I was the one this summer who kept
The Negro women voters under arrest.
I was too damn proud to let white folks think
I'd be the first to give in to VOTING INTEGRATION!"

"Amen, yes brother."

Then, puffing, rises Police Chief Ross Chambliss.
"We on the police force just felt we HAD to win,
I confess we committed a terrible sin.
On August 28, when y'all were marching up Lee Street,
We broke into a rage and arrested y'all
For marching without a permit for parades and ordinances.
We knew, uh, you were on the sidewalk, not the street,
And the constitution supports your right to protest.
But the wicked thing called "hate" broke lose,
And we threw y'all in Lee County prisons."
Then others rise, like the manager of Kresses:

"I knew Gloria Wise was right when she said
'you'll lose all Negro business for not hiring'.
I know we cursed y'all when you picketted for the boycott,
But we were blind to the fact, I guess,
That you're OVER HALF OUR POPULATION!"

Suddenly, a tall blond youth breaks in,
"Let me speak for all us white folks,
I guess I'm the worst of all.
I know that hate killed my brother, Andy Whatley,
Possibly by the Negro youths last August.
It is the same growing hate
That made me try to kill John, the white civil rights worker.
Every night we'd come in my car and wait,
And then chase him and shoot at him on the winding roads.
This same hate made all of us beat and chase you in the last marcl
So you'd never march again.
I'm still young, and I want to start a new LIFE.
I've expressed as much hate as I possibly can, and I have nothing left but to love my black brother,
For we all are in poverty and without decent jobs."

Then Mayor Walker rises:
"I have some news to greet y'all,
For Warren Fortson and Lloyd Moll shall return!
We must prove to them that we can accept them
As the best and most honest folks in town,
And hope they can forgive us
For excluding them from the human race!
We need Fortson for our lawyer;
Dr. Moll can unite us all
To revive the now dormant anti-poverty council.
Most of all, we need the guidance of these humanitarians."

"Amen, yes brother", responds the congregation.

Minnie Jewel Wise rises, her dark eyes flashing,
"I trully believe now what I hear,
For you are not merely coming to us with promises,
But asking forgiveness for your sins.
I've done hard things:
I've survived the blows, frustrations, and humiliations.
With those that dare to attend white schools.
I speak now for my mother, worn out from scrubbing kitchens,
For teacher and Rev. Freeman, who did not, after all,
Get fired for standing up for his rights; For Rev. Campbell, who led the past eventfull summer, For Sammy Mahone, of SNCC, who said, "Never Turn Back", And never did.
If this love will trully exist, as you now say, Then let Americus citizens ask forgiveness, If they EVER think ill of one just 'cause he's black or white. Most of all we'll show the world what TRUST AND LOVE CAN BRING."

In the congregation, there was a moment of grateful silence.
Then all stood to sing the glorious hymn,
"JOY TO THE WORLD, THE LORD HAS COME!"

File

THE NON-COMMUNIST FELLOW TRAVELER, ETC.

In The liberal democrat last month, we printed the text of a broadcast by Robert Pickus on "The Non-Communist Fellow Traveler Problem", and a dissenting view of Pickus's thesis by Gene Marine. We said then that we would open the pages of this issue to Mr. Pickus to expand and defend his position. Meanwhile, Sheldon Pollack, Northern California Executive Secretary of Americans for Democratic Action, asked us for space to explain his organization's position on the question--since Marine had criticized ADA in his piece. Finally, we received a number of letters commenting on the symposium of last month, which appear under COMMUNICATIONS at the end of this issue.

"TO THOSE WHO CAN BE SPOKEN WITH"

by Robert Pickus

I have tried to raise an important problem for discussion within the liberal-radical community in the Bay Area. Since there are a great many pressures blocking discussion, I am grateful to the editors of The liberal democrat for requesting permission to print my broadcast on the Non-Communist Fellow Traveler. I am not grateful for their editorial handling of my piece and Gene Marine's response. By mistitling the discussion, by their cartoons, by their own editorial, they reinforced Marine's angry success in advancing the confusion and the emotional attitude which block honest discussion.

Who said "Infiltration" was the problem? I did not. The operation of the Communist apparatus in the Bay Area is an interesting topic, but it is not the problem I raised for discussion. Or examine the editorial which moves equably to the conclusion that it is not necessary to exclude Communists from our organizations. Who said it was?

My article did not discuss "Communists". The term "non-Communist" was in fact the key word in the title. The focus of my discussion was not people, but ideas. The issue was not whether people of certain viewpoints should be excluded from our organizations. The issue was preventing this viewpoint from damaging the organization's work and from distorting its message. I believe there are values in our society, with all its imperfections, which must be preserved. I believe world Communist power, ideology and organization threaten those values. They are also threatened by the demands which a military response to Communist expansion makes on our own society. I said that ideas, which, in their basic analysis, their omissions, their distortions, their perceptions of enemies, even their style, reflect Communist propaganda, were moving--sometimes dominant—in some Bay Area liberal circles. I gave examples (and had given others in a previous broadcast). I examined the reasons some non-Communists give for not challenging these ideas. The reaction to American stereotypes and half truths is understandable. The acceptance of other half truths is not. I presented the case for a vigorous attempt to distinguish a genuine peace or civil-liberties effort from fellow-traveling politics. I gave my reasons for believing this was essential if we were to deal adequately with the realities of international conflict or make headway in our attempt to strengthen traditional American conceptions of civil liberties.

I made serious charges. I expected hot discussion. This was perhaps naive. Given the strength here in the Bay Area of the political position I attacked, I should have known there would be enormous obstacles to discussion.

The issue is falsified when the editors run a cartoon suggesting I favor loyalty oaths (despite the fact the City of Chicago owes us $1,300 wages lost because of my wife's principled refusal to sign such an oath); honest discussion is blocked when one organization's newsletter charges that I want to "purify" the peace movement of "knowing and unknowing fellow travelers", and implies that I favored "witch hunting for the FBI". Did the student who adopted a similar line in his KPFA broadcast attacking my article read it? He devoted some time to the harm in trying to identify the Communists to be excluded. My article (pg. 6 Tld) made the same point and specifically rejected the policy of oath, investigation and exclusion he ascribed to me.

I have, in fact, spent some time urging those who are worried about infiltration to use the only prophylactic acceptable to those committed to democratic values: a clear statement of ideas, which the Communist or fellow traveler will seek to silence, but which if heard will prevent him from encouraging half truths, and might even teach him something. The problem I am concerned about is why non-Communists join in preventing an adequate statement; worse, join in reinforcing the distortions, the false labels, the omissions, of a fellow-traveling line.

When non-Communists do this, they are taking a political position which should be discussed. The difficulty arises when a climate is established in which any political position may be identified and discussed except one of the most clearly patterned and recognizable. Raise the question of fellow-traveling politics, and immediately a whole series of positions you have spent a lifetime fighting against are attributed to you. The real issue you raised is safely covered.

I respect the emotion that may have prompted Marine's piece. I share it, in fact. McCarthyism has done great harm. Its remnants still clearly pose a more clear and present danger to democratic values in this country than do the operations of the American Communist party. Fear continues to limit needed discussion. But appreciating Marine's eagerness to do battle against the remnants of McCarthyism, and the strong stand he takes in favor of courage, I am left with the fact that his article is truly irrelevant to the problem I raised for discussion. This failure to meet the issue under discussion is particularly dangerous when joined to another response which makes discussion impossible. Let me demonstrate what I mean. Read the following and see if it reminds you of anything in Marine's article.

> "I raised the inadequacy of ideas moving in certain liberal and pacifist circles for discussion. Marine did not discuss the ideas I presented. He attacked me for presenting them. He devoted most of his article to urging his view of my motivation: 'timid', 'fear-ridden', 'power'-seeking, 'status' concerned, etc.
>
> "Since Marine is intelligent enough to know what is under discussion, since he deliberately tried to prevent this discussion and, by the nature of his attack, to damage my ability to raise this issue with the audience I wrote for (liberals and radicals opposed to McCarthyism and to a dominantly military foreign policy), one can only assume that he was assigned to this task by the Communist party. For, clearly, what the Communists fear most is a position which makes clear to liberals and radicals that a challenge to the main drift of ideas in this country at present, need not line one up on the Communist side; that, in fact, if the ideas one acts on are aimed at a just peace and at the defense of the idea of a free society, one would perceive the Communists just as one sees the 'patriotic' Legionnaire: as opponents."

Isn't anger a just reaction to so transparent an attempt to avoid discussion by labeling and ascribing motivation? The thing that is most depressing is that in the corrupt climate of the discussion here in the Bay Area, it is necessary to point out that the insert above is a parody of Marine's article. The argument inset above is a McCarthyite argument. So is Marine's. Both refuse to deal with the ideas under discussion. Both substitute attacks on supposed motivation for discussion. Marine attacked me for who he said I was ("mouse", "scurrier", "redbaiter", "witchhunter"); and why I raised the issue ("fear-ridden", etc.); but he never joined discussion on the issue raised. His name-calling was perfectly suited to a climate which recognizes McCarthyism only in one guise.

I would apologize for laboring these elementary points were it only Marine who argues this way. It is, unfortunately, a constant in this discussion.

The effort required to initiate serious discussion is matched by the difficulty in advancing it. The issue is whether peace groups, for example, should silence those aspects of their ideas which directly challenge fellow-traveling politics. In the climate of Bay Area political discussion, the first difficulty is demonstrating that there is such a thing as "fellow-traveling politics". A political position exists. It is heavily influential in Bay Area liberal and pacifist circles, and yet, incredibly, it appears necessary to demonstrate its existence. "Fellow traveler" is an ugly term. It has been badly misused. But to deny the term any referent, to describe it as "barren of meaning", simply requires us to find another term to describe those, not members of the Communist party, who, in the style and content of their political position, advance the main lines of Communist propaganda and analysis.

Is it desirable to refer to this position as "liberal"? Is it really so hard to identify this position?

Holding certain policy positions, e.g., admittance of Red China to the U.N., or condemnation of U.S. policy in Cuba, which the Communists also advance, is not a sign of fellow-traveling politics. But something distinctive is present when there is added to these agreements with Communist policy a total lack of disagreement. U.S. policy is subjected to a withering criticism, and Soviet culpability on any issue is either not discussed at all or discussed within an apologist framework. Thus, the rearming of West Germany is attacked, but no criticism is made of the rearming of East Germany. When this pattern is characteristic, one is dealing with a defined political position.

The steady apologetics for the Soviet or Chinese position can be illustrated by the manner in which Adlai Stevenson's non-fellow-traveling summary of the breakup of the last Geneva summit conference--"We gave Khrushchev a crowbar and he used it"--is truncated to simply an attack on U.S. U-2 policy. No responsibility is ascribed to Khrushchev's decision to put other goals ahead of negotiation for peace. There is always a point of view from which Soviet policy can be justified. U.S. policy is simply condemned.

The position is characterized by a pattern of omissions. Compare, for example, two statements on American policy in Cuba. One is by a Bay Area group which omitted any discussion of developing totalitarian tendencies in Cuban life, ignored Communist control of the political police, and the reversal of the regime's position on a free press and a free labor movement able to bargain collectively, etc. The fact that Cuba stands in real danger of becoming a Soviet satellite is ignored. The other statement, by a group of Harvard students, was equally critical of American policy and fully appreciative of the enormous progress Castro has achieved. But it did not omit honest discussion of those points at which the Revolution has betrayed its own values or a serious assessment of the role of the Communist party.

Perception of enemies. Love and understanding are desperately needed in this divided world, we are told. (But hate Teller.) Herman Kahn's claim to a concern for peace and the assertion he makes that his policy is best calculated to produce peace do not prevent his being treated as a devil figure. (He takes Pentagon money, doesn't he?) People maintaining that survival is the issue somehow make a hero of Mao, who maintains that war is inevitable. Teller's and Kahn's ideas do, in my judgment, pose a threat to the peace. But the emotion that was in the faces of people holding this political position when they criticized Dulles for brink-of-war statements, is wholly absent when they are asked to confront Khrushchev's missile-rattling.

Persistent distortion, e.g., equating the functioning of the HUAC with the control of opinion and the penalties for challenging, by word or organization, those holding power in China or the Soviet Union.

Where there is added to this lack of disagreement, to a pattern of omission and distortion, to the perception of enemies--where there is added a fundamental analysis of the causes of war which limits these to the structure of the American economy and the existence of a power elite in this country, you are dealing with a clear political position. Add a certain style, characterized by attacks on motivation and a steady falsification of issues, and the portrait is wholly recognizable. If those holding it are members of the Communist party, it is rightly called Communist. If it is held by non-members of the party and, as a final indicator, if it in fact moves with the changes in the Communist line, it is accurately described as fellow-traveling politics.

At this point, if the other party to the discussion is not wholly mastered by emotional resistance to an ugly term, he states what he has in fact known all along--that, of course, this political position exists. But the reason for not dealing with it now shifts. It seems it isn't important; it has no weight.

Well, how do you decide whether a defined political position is influential? When a leader of a student group explains that he doesn't want to raise this issue for discussion because a major source of money for his group would likely be cut off if he did, that's an indication. When one of the organizers of a peace rally explains that since more than a third of the people attending the rally share the political point of view under discussion and he doesn't want to offend them, lest it damage the size of the rally, that's an indication. When a student group discussing peace decides to invite four speakers, all of whom represent variations of this position, and denies its platform to a position which, though radically critical of American foreign policy, does not exhibit the characteristics listed above, that's an indication. When a responsible non-Communist group structures a forum on peace so that an adroit and able spokesman of this political position is the one who presents the "peace" position, that's an indication. When a 16-year-old returns from a religious organization's youth discussion having heard an unchallenged straight Stalinist version of the Spanish Civil War, that's an indication--as is another teenager's assurance that the National Guardian is an objective newspaper to read on issues of international politics. When with a rueful shake of his head, the same man who told you the political position doesn't exist, now tells you that a significant portion of the essential workers in his organization take it, and that criticizing it would offend them and damage the functioning of the organization, that's an indication. When any attempt to discuss the position subjects the person attempting the discussion to character assassination, that's an indication.

At this point there is another shift in the discussion. It turns out now that far from not existing, and far from not having influence, this position is so influential that it is politically imprudent to challenge it. This is in a sense true, since it appears that a high proportion of the 700,000 people who went through the Communist party and never really broke with it, but just left, left for California. They do constitute a sizeable block of opinion. Their ideas would not have the censoring influence they do if this corrupt climate for discussion had not been established in liberal circles.

Gene Marine is concerned about courage. The liberal democrat lifts its pen to battle the "expedient half truth in American life". But when it turns out that it takes courage within the Bay Area liberal community, not to attack HUAC, but to protest against the influence of a half-truth political position, a whole line of tactical arguments are raised: it will cost us money, workers, numbers, to do so.

This tactical argument is usually joined to another. Why waste time and energy on this issue? Now again I ask: how do you decide what is a waste of time? Tactical arguments are not contemptible. Where truth and principle are not sacrificed, it is in fact essential to ask what must be done to advance the ideas and values and to build support for the policies we want. Far from believing it tactically wise to propitiate or shield this position from critical analysis, I say it is essential to our effort to distinguish it from this position. Building on this position and the money and workers it provides is building on unsound ground. It is not a waste of time to deal with one of the major obstacles to the successful growth of our effort. When a young man who has been presenting the case against the meretricious film on the "riots" recently, reports in an offhand way that "only" two kinds of people raise questions about Communists and fellow-travelers, namely "political sophisticates" and the "general public", he is right. Now I submit that that is enough to make it legitimately important--given no sacrifice of principle--to answer the questions and to distinguish our position, since it is our position, from one wholly compromised--and for good reasons--in the minds of thoughtful Americans and anathema to the general public.

This understanding of what is necessary to build a strong peace movement is contemptuously referred to as "public relations" by those who tortuously erect into a principle the refusal to distinguish your politics from a fellow-traveler's. Some people who reject contemptuously the argument: "Don't say that, that's what the Communists want you to say", themselves insist there are some things you must not say in public because "That's what HUAC wants." In both cases, it's bad advice.

There is a relevant standard here. That standard is truth. If there is a distinct political position which often occupies common ground with ours but which is, in fact, fundamentally different from ours, pursuing different objectives, operating on values we reject, identified with a power position we resist, we should say so.

Most of the peace groups I know are opposed to totalitarianism wherever it appears, and reject elements--very fundamental ones--in contemporary Communist theory and practice. Marine is quite right: if a non-Communist peace group has faith in its principles and its ideas, there need be no problem...if these principles and ideas are voiced. This is done less divisively by positive statements, but there are some situations where a clear negative is needed, too. Thus, while general statements about civil liberties are needed, it is important to say a "no" to HUAC. Or, while our "yes" to world law or foreign aid is important, our position becomes more meaningful when we decide to say "no" to bomb testing or missile development. This is not a matter of "spending 90 per cent of your time in non-red disclaimers". The real situation is exactly the opposite. In a 100-line statement, it is the one line which summarizes our opposition to a fellow-traveling position that is fiercely resisted. Here in the Bay Area a good deal of energy is put into trying to remove it.

The reasons why many non-Communist-oriented people join the fellow-traveler in seeking to withdraw that one line are complex. One important reason is the desire for unity: for tactical reasons, for those building strength for a political position; for principled reasons, for those concerned to reconcile people in a divided world. This latter reason leaves religiously oriented peace groups especially vulnerable--given conditions in the Bay Area--to accepting half truths in the name of harmony or unity. A. J. Muste in a recent article spoke best to this problem, in a section entitled: "The United Front Fallacy":

> "To love a fellow man does not require that we cooperate with him in lying or exploiting others or some other evil thing. It requires the opposite, that we do not cooperate in these things, that we do not let him live, if he is so living, under the delusion that these things are good...To love, to be truly human, is always to deal with others on the basis of reality. Therefore it does not mean to trust a man whom you know to be deceiving; it means to try to change a man and make him trustworthy, and this means trying to get him to see himself as he is."

At another level, Paul Lacey, writing in a recent issue of the Friend's Journal of the difficulties encountered in seminars with the Russians, scored the temptation to simply avoid discussion of differences and concentrate on mutual desires for "peace and friendship": "Reconciliation means restoring to harmony, and the very definition recognizes that the true causes of tensions and frictions must be acknowledged in order for a proper balance to be struck."

A sick climate in the Bay Area has prevented a genuine confrontation of issues. That climate was not created by a Communist conspiracy. The root cause is the futility and immorality of recent American policy in the world and the betrayal of our own central values at home. A justified reaction to that situation has, I believe, made it possible for fellow-traveling politics to again achieve influence.

Those of us working for a just peace and the extension of the idea of a free and nonexploitative society, need now to challenge that influence. This issue must be raised if we want to reach those who, in E. B. White's phrase, "want to set off on a different journey under good auspices".

I have tried to avoid self-justifying anger in this response, but I have been conscious in the writing of it that many parties to this discussion simply cannot be spoken with. If the cost of raising this issue is division, one is left then--in Silone's phrase--with a choice of comrades.

Robert Pickus is Executive Secretary of Acts for Peace in Berkeley.

Reprinted from:

The liberal democrat
February 1961

Subscriptions $2/year ($3 after Feb. 15)

Marshall Windmiller and Thomas Winnett, co-editors
2440 Bancroft Way
Berkeley 4, California

COMMUNICATIONS

Editors:

All heaven and earth and the history of the last forty years offer witness to the accursed nature of the relationship of Communism to genuine movements of the political left. Even a little light on this dark problem is a good thing. In this particular geographic region, it is an especially good thing. I therefore welcomed the articles in your January issue by Robert Pickus and Gene Marine.

But we can let a stronger light upon the problem only when those discussing it observe certain elementary rules. A first step would be an agreement to argue issues and not motives. An egregious instance of what beginning students of logic learn to call ad hominem arguments is to be found in the article suggestively entitled "The Afraid We Have Always With Us". Even at the predictable risk of having my remarks written off by Gene Marine as the squeaks of a fear-ridden academician "doomed to tremble forever in that frightened grove where the barest unorthodoxy can bring the administrative frown that ruins careers"--even at this grave risk, let me observe that a flood of rhetorical name-calling takes us exactly nowhere--or, worse, takes us back to a polemical era when one could demolish a socialist opponent by calling him a "social Fascist". Any careful reader must realize that it is not Pickus who is fighting Paper Dragons, but Marine who is fighting Paper Pickuses by calling out against "timidity, and the mice who squeak its chorus", by charging "Red-baiting", and by calling down imprecations on "these worriers, these scurriers after a little security, these men of fear." But my intent is not to belabor the obvious, not to do more than point out that this epithet-hurling beclouds the issue. The issue is not whether infiltration is a problem, not Red-baiting, not bare fear, not lust for status--it is how in hell does one help further a movement for peace and freedom everywhere?

In our work against war and totalitarianism--in both its running and its creeping manifestations--the issue of Communism is not "a bit of tearjerking semantic nonsense"; it is something we have to face up to. There are really three audiences we are trying to reach: 1) The left-inclined political sophisticates who are not about to heed ill-advised injunctions to forget the tragic experience of past decades; 2) the concerned unsophisticates who rightly take a dim view of Communism, but too frequently fail to express their concern in an intelligent way; and 3) ourselves. Now to reach 1) and 2) and to be able to live with 3), we must have a single standard of political morality. If we are opposed to the death penalty, then we must oppose executions in California, Cuba, Israel, China, Hungary, Spain. If we are opposed to militarism, then we cannot afford to oppose only the Pentagon. Just as we reject the Air Force absurdity that "Air Power is Peace Power", so we must reject the Soviet Army absurdity that theirs is a "Peace Army". When someone holds that peace is identical with the interests of the Communists, that even when Communist forces are fighting they are "peace forces", that Communist weapons are "peace weapons", and that only anti-Communists are warmongers, then we have an effective answer to the question of "What's a Communist?"

Obviously the Communist or his apologist need not be searched for by heresy hunts, loyalty oaths, and the rest of the unworkable, odious apparatus. All we need to do is have an intellectually honest statement in public circulation of what we are for and of what we are against. Should the Communist or his sympathizer then wish to work for any of the good causes, well and good. Some may not, and this is just as well and good--I was struck by the absence of some familiar faces when a group of pacifists recently left Union Square on a "Walk to Moscow". But either way, we shall reach people who would be repelled by a phony peace movement. And not less importantly, our own intellectual and moral house will be in order. Never will we have to carry around Koestler's skeleton in the cupboard of our conscience: "How our voices boomed with righteous indignation, denouncing flaws in the procedure of justice in our comfortable democracies; and how silent we were when our comrades without trial or conviction, were liquidated in the Socialist sixth of the earth."

PAGINATION INCORRECT

Richard Drinnon
--Berkeley

Editors:

I read with great interest the two articles by Bob Pickus and Gene Marine on "Non-Communist Fellow Travelers" in your January issue.

I agree a little with both men. I agree with Gene Marine that McCarthyism is still with us, but I find a great deal more of it in his article than I do in Mr. Pickus's article. The lasting damage of McCarthyism is evident in the manner in which Mr. Marine discusses, not Mr. Pickus's arguments, but his motives, his fears, and leaves the implication that Mr. Pickus has adopted the principles of McCarthyism.

I have always felt that liberals discussed issues on their merits, while McCarthyism discussed motives and fears, and pasted labels on people in order to avoid the truth of what they say. It is unfortunate that liberals can't discuss Communism without having other liberals call them McCarthyites, just as it is unfortunate that liberals can't question the tactics of some labor leaders without being called reactionary by other liberals. "Liberalism" now consists of an orthodoxy of viewpoint on such subjects as Communism, disarmament, segregation, labor and civil liberties that amounts to a dogma that admits of no critical inquiry. Yet the word "liberal" used to mean that one was an opponent of orthodoxy and dogma.

Mr. Pickus's article questions the current article of liberal dogma that states...

McCarthyism and the HUAC are bad;
McCarthyism and the HUAC attack Communism;
Therefore, any liberal who attacks Communism is "bad".

The error in the logic of this "syllogism" is as apparent as the error in logic of...

Communists are bad;
Communists are against segregation;
Therefore, the NAACP is bad because it is against segregation.

The liberal movement will be handicapped, divided and confused until it is possible for us to freely examine, question and discuss our own positions on Communism, disarmament, segregation, labor, civil liberties, etc. It is easy to point out the errors of our enemies. It is much harder to search out our own errors, but much more helpful to our cause.

Fred F. Cooper
--Berkeley

PAGINATION INCORRECT

File

THE HISTORY OF FREEDOM PARTY

FREEDOM PARTY at the University of Florida was originated by student activists in January of 1965. With characteristic dash, the idea of forming a student political party was conceived four days before the final filing date for student government elections. The campaign which followed ended with the largest student vote in the history of the university.

FREEDOM PARTY nominated Jim Harmeling for president of the student body, Jim Dacey for vice-president, and 23 candidates for the legislative council, honor court, and other offices. The top of the ticket, Harmeling and Dacey, had both been arrested and jailed in civil rights demonstrations (as had the faculty advisor to FREEDOM PARTY), and most of the party's candidates had participated in public demonstrations. Nevertheless, the campaign which FREEDOM PARTY ran was free not only of demonstrations but of banners, last-minute poop sheets, gooning, and other traditional features of student politics. Instead, the party made a straightforward appeal through its platform and its candidates to the ideals of the student body.

FREEDOM PARTY's platform was built upon the idea of a student-centered university, an institution in which the education of students is the first concern of the university. It attacked the existing order for its preoccupation with physical plant, grants, appropriations, publications, degrees, and image-making.

The platform also called for abolition of compulsory ROTC, student participation in the anti-poverty program, rigorous elimination of all vestiges of racial discrimination on campus, and personnel and disciplinary procedures -- for faculty and students -- which were written, formal, and public.

Harmeling and Dacey received 879 votes, a little more than 10% of the total vote. One candidate, Chris Benninger, was elected to the legislative council from the College of Architecture and Fine Arts. Following the election, student government incorporated a part of FREEDOM PARTY's platform by forming a Community Relations committee to run a tutorial program for educationally disadvantaged children in Gainesville and Alachua County. Jim Harmeling was asked to head the committee, and he accepted. Subsequently, student government withdrew all financial and secretarial aid to the program. However, it continues to operate with volunteer workers and contributions under the purely nominal auspices of student government.

FREEDOM PARTY continued to work for its platform and goals after the elections. In April it sponsored, together with the National Student Association, Southern Project, a "Symposium on Concern" which was held April 24 in the Florida Union Building. The all-day seminar featured talks and discussions on academic reform, capital punishment, migratory workers, and desegregation of public accomodations.

In the past, student political parties at the university have sought only to get elected. Between elections they were inactive and were not authorized by university regulations to be active, to bring in speakers, use university facilities, etc. FREEDOM PARTY broke with this tradition in July, 1965, when it applied for a charter as a permanent student organization.

The Administration recognizes two kinds of student formations: permanent student organizations and political parties. The organizations are required to state their membership and have a constitution; their funds are open to scrutiny. In return, they may use university facilities on a year-around basis. The political parties -- except for FREEDOM PARTY -- have no constitutions, no stated membership, and their funds cannot be scrutinized; between elections they do not function.

To help it decide what to do, the Committee on Student Organizations called in Bruce Culpepper and other student government types, Dean Hale, and Vice-President Mautz. The student-government people were opposed to the application. "It would be disruptive to student government as it now exists," said Bill McBride, student assistant to Culpepper. "A political party," said Andy Hall (another student politician), "is formed solely to seek student government offices and is only a temporary group. You-all want to arouse the campus and capitalize on the influence you gain during the year to win the election."

On the advice of student government, i.e., Culpepper et al., Hale, and Mautz, the Committee on Student Organizations rejected FREEDOM PARTY's application for permanent organizational status. FREEDOM PARTY remains a political party, but between elections it must operate off-campus.

FREEDOM PARTY began as an elite formation of student activists. However, the ideals which motivated these students included grass-roots democracy and local control. FREEDOM PARTY has prepared a tentative constitution which insures that any student can participate in the party's work to the same extent and with the same rights and privileges as any other. At its Fall Convention which will be held at 7:30 on September 14 in the Florida Union Auditorium, this constitution will be submitted to the students for adoption. Any student present at the Convention is qualified to vote, to run for party offices, or to seek nomination as a FREEDOM PARTY candidate for office in student government. Any student who is interested can participate equally with any other in determining the platform and policies of the party. The tentative constitution eliminates all possibility of top-down control of the party. FREEDOM PARTY is the only student political party which

a. has a constitution

b. elects party officers, determines party policy, and nominates candidates in an open convention

c. Operates on a year-around basis, on-campus during elections and -- by administrative edict from Tigert Hall and the Florida Union -- off-campus between elections.

Come to the Convention!

FREEDOM PARTY CONSTITUTION

(A proposed constitution to be submitted to the 1965 Fall Convention of FREEDOM PARTY)

Article I: Name

The name of the organization shall be the University of Florida FREEDOM PARTY.

Article II: Purpose

1. To establish a student political party at the University of Florida which is comparable in structure and style to the major political parties of the United States, is popularly based, and maintains year-around activity.

2. To promote by all means at its disposal a University of Florida which is student-centered, free, and actively concerned with the larger society in which the University is set.

3. To nominate candidates for office in student government, to conduct campaigns for their election, to provide assistance for its candidates, and between elections to do whatever it can to gather public support for the stated purposes of FREEDOM PARTY.

4. To write a platform, issue policy papers, publish a newsletter, maintain a headquarters, hold rallies, conferences, lectures, debates or casual meetings, sponsor off-campus speakers, and in other ways initiate projects and public events.

Article III. Membership

1. Membership in FREEDOM PARTY is attendance at its Fall or Winter Conventions.

2. Only student members have the right to vote or to hold office in the Party.

3. Nonstudent members shall have the freedom of the floor and all other rights and privileges of student members, except those reserved to students in the preceding section.

Article IV: Organization

1. The highest policy-making organs of FREEDOM PARTY shall be its Fall and Winter Conventions.

2. The 1965 Fall Convention will be held on September 14, 1965, i.e., the Tuesday preceding the final filing date for candidates in the fall elections.

3. The business of the 1965 Fall Convention will be: adoption of a FREEDOM PARTY constitution, election of Executive Committee members from living areas, and election of candidates for the fall elections.

Article V: Executive Committee

1. The Executive Committee shall consist of 100 members, 50 of which shall be elected from living areas at the Fall Convention and 50 of which shall be elected from colleges at the Winter Convention. The term of office for Executive Committee members shall be one year.

2. Of the 50 members of the Executive Committee elected at the Fall Convention 25 shall be from off-campus and 25 from on-campus residential dormitories. The 25 on-campus members shall be distributed to the residential dormitories in proportion to the numbers of students who live in them.

3. The 50 members of the Executive Committee elected at the Winter Convention shall be distributed to the colleges in proportion to the numbers of students who are registered in the colleges.

4. Executive Committee members shall be nominated and elected in caucuses of the Conventions composed of students in the electoral districts (living areas or colleges) which the Executive Committee member represents.

5. The Executive Committee shall meet at least twice a year. Further meetings may be called by the Steering Committee or upon petition to meet by 10 members of the Executive Committee.

6. Between Conventions FREEDOM PARTY shall be represented by the Executive Committee.

Article VI: Steering Committee

1. The Executive Committee shall elect from its members a Steering Committee of 20 members. Ten shall be Executive Committee members who represent living areas and 10 Executive Committee members who represent colleges. The term of office for Steering Committee members shall be one year.

2. The Steering Committee shall have powers of initiative. Unless countermanded by the Executive Committee, actions taken by the Steering Committee represent FREEDOM PARTY.

Article VII: Officers

The officers of FREEDOM PARTY shall be a chairman, a secretary, and a treasurer. The Steering Committee shall nominate and the Executive Committee select the party officers. The officers shall be elected shortly after the Fall Convention and hold office for one year.

Article VIII: Election of Candidates

1. FREEDOM PARTY candidates in student government elections shall be elected at the FREEDOM PARTY Convention immediately preceeding the elections.

2. Candidates for Chancellor and Clerk of the Honor Court, the Lyceum Council, and the Board of Student Publications will be nominated by the Steering Committee and elected by the Convention as a whole.

3. For the purpose of electing candidates for President, Vice President, and Treasurer of the Student Body,

a. Each college will be assigned a number of electoral votes proportionate to the number of students enrolled in the college,
b. Nominations will be from the floor of the Convention, and
c. Election will be by absolute majority of electoral votes.

4. All other FREEDOM PARTY candidates will be nominated and elected in caucuses of the Convention composed of students in the electoral district (college or living area) in which the candidate will run.

Article IX: Nonstudent Organizations

FREEDOM PARTY may affiliate with any local, state, regional, or national organization it chooses. Affiliation may be accomplished by vote of the Steering Committee, Executive Committee, or any Convention.

Article X: Finances

FREEDOM PARTY may accept money, funds, or grants of labor, help, resources, assets, or equipment from any source it finds appropriate.

Article XI: Platform

The platform of FREEDOM PARTY shall be prepared during the fall term of each academic year by the Steering Committee and submitted to the Executive Committee prior to the close of the fall term; the Executive Committee shall debate the platform and submit it with or without amendments, reservations, minority reports, or recommendations to the Winter Convention; upon a simple majority vote of the Winter Convention, the platform will be adopted as a public statement of the goals of FREEDOM PARTY.

Article XII: Adoption and Amendment

This constitution shall be submitted to the 1965 Fall Convention. It may be adopted or amended by a two-thirds vote of it or any other Convention of FREEDOM PARTY.

BAKER COUNTY

History: Bad Baker the heart of Southwest Georgia, is a symbol of the WORST in Georgia. This small county, population 4543, 58% Negro, has seen racial violence for years. To a large extent, this still continues. Three high school students were beaten this week. In the summer of 1965, Negroes were beaten in the shadow of the court house with local police and FBI watching.

Economically, Baker is a picture of deepest poverty and greatest wealth. A large percent of its land is owned by the very wealthy, Robert Woodruff, John Olin, one of the Pittsburg Mellons who maintains the property as hunting preserves. There is little future here for the poor man. However, there are Negro farmers who own their land and more who are tenants on the white man's land. These farmers need help. Baker has no railroad, no bus line and often in rainy weather, the principle highway through the county is closed because of flooding.

Mr. Sherrod with a band of deeply committed and courageous men, went into Baker in 1965 and have been working with the people to organize a movement. He has a group of faithful followers. A CAP program is in the process of being organized, however, there is dissension within the Negro group as well as between white and Negro.

Proposal to the Field Foundation for $28,500 to operate a cooperative effort in Baker, to be called COP (Community Organization Project).

It is proposed that several civil rights groups coordinate their efforts to gain maximum results in Baker County.

A Baker Study needs to be made in order to know the facts. SRC has agreed to bring their Baker study up to date and to conduct other needed research. Special emphasis must be placed on sound research and effective publicity. The public should be aware of some of the problems in a community where much of the land is controlled by the wealthy absentee land lords. $2,500 is needed for this important part of the project. This will cover field trips and technical assistance as needed.

Center: There is need for a Community Center. No church or store building is available for renovation. However, a new building could be a tangible evidence of the new cooperative effort and give a place for all organizations to hold classes or meetings. Mr. Thomas, with the Georgia Council, formerly a contractor, can supervise the building of such a building. He proposes the enclosed type building.

This can be built for approximately $12,000. After the project is over, this building would remain as a Community Center for the people of Baker.

Local Coordinator: Mr. Charles Sherrod, because of knowledge and ability to work with the people of the county, will be the local coordinator of this center. $3,500 will be set aside for Mr. Sherrod.

VEP: Mr. Sherrod will administer the VEP operation in Baker. Mr. Jordan suggests that $3,000 of the regular VEP money be used to make it possible for local people to continue their work in voter registration and education.

CEP: The new building shall also be a center for CEP operation, with Mr. Sherrod's help, the SCLC's trained workers will have a place to hold Citizenship Education classes. The CEP work is already underway with a group of Baker County citizens attending a training session in October.

Federal Programs: Baker County needs many federal programs. In order to obtain these, $3,500 should be set aside for consultant's fees in writing programs for Baker. Mr. Walt Sharpe in his present job with the Sharecroppers could spend time working with such programs, exploring the possibilities and writing the programs. Mr. Tilman Cothran, formerly with the Atlanta EOA, might act as a consultant for a per diem fee. We realize the difficulties under the present administration of OEO in this area, however, we think there are possibilities for certain demonstration projects, as well as possibilities of working through the local and regional CAP programs. It will take time and knowledge and stubborn commitment if these programs are actually put into operation in Baker.

Possible Programs:

1. Self-Help Housing (Mr. Hubert Thomas has one such program in the making in Thomas County).

2. Neighborhood Service Center (This could pay for the maintenance of our center plus personnel for other services such as a case worker to work with Health & Welfare problems, local aids to work with the various programs).

3. Farm Programs, such as, diversified crop training program.

4. Job training (MDTA), for jobs which might be available in nearby Albany (23 miles) and Camilla (10 miles).

5. Home management courses, (the welfare recipient receives cash payments while she is being trained in home management. Part of her time is spent in the field working with other welfare recipients in teaching them what she has learned).

6. Day care center.

7. Neighborhood Youth Corps.

Farm Programs: Under the guidance of Mr. Thomas and Mr. Jac Wasserman, a carefully planned farming program can go into effect before the next planting season. $2,000 for extra part time help either for people in the county who will help carry out the program or for outside technicians would make this program possible.

Education: The American Friends will cooperate with the project by giving special attention to the problems of school desegregation. They plan to give emphasis to Baker in their regular programming.

Court Cases: The ACLU will assist with court cases that fall within their purview.

Administration: An advisory committee, elected by the participating agencies shall guide the policies of the project.

The Georgia Council will assume the responsibility of coordination and administration. Extra help will be necessary to free Frances Pauley and Hubert Thomas for field work in Baker. Overhead, such as, extra bookkeeping, mailings, etc., must be met. $5,000 is requested for this purpose.

Budget:
	Study	$ 2,500
	Center	12,000
	Local coordinator	3,500
	Federal program consultant	3,500
	Farm program	2,000
	Administration coordinating	5,000
		$28,500

Baker County

COP

Center

Office file copy

CENSORSHIP !!

A PAID POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT THEY REFUSED TO USE

The advertising department of Atlanta Newspapers, Inc., our so-called "free press", refused to publish the following advertisement for reasons best known to the management. (Their political sympathies are well known!) The sections marked with an "X", as their censor marked our copy, are those they claimed might expose them to a libel suit. It is obvious that something other than the libel code has governed Atlanta Newspapers, Inc., in their treatment of the write-in!

THIS WE BELIEVE

That ELLIS ARNALL is the man of the hour in Georgia's need for proven and progressive leadership.

That ELLIS ARNALL'S campaign platform offered Georgia the best possibilities for continued progress.

X That ELLIS ARNALL is the one man all Georgians could proudly point to as Governor.

THIS WE BELIEVE

That the "crossover" vote by Republicans was responsible for the choice of Maddox.

That the choice between Callaway and Maddox is no choice at all, but only an echo.

That several hundred thousand Georgians simply will not vote for either Callaway or Maddox, regardless of whether there is a write-in.

THIS WE BELIEVE

X That Georgians fed up with the old crowd, whatever the party label, will stand up and let it be known that the politics of "lesser evils" insults their hopes and aspirations for a better Georgia.

That reform efforts in both parties will be spurred by a strong write-in vote, saying to the politicians that they are going to have to return to the center if they want the support of moderate voters.

That a write-in vote for ELLIS ARNALL could put him into a run-off, and would certainly prevent either Maddox or Callaway from claiming a mandate from the people, if it did not cause the courts to order the retention of the incumbent or a run-off election.

THIS WE BELIEVE

That Callaway's votes in Congress against the minimum wage, Federal aid to education and cities, civil rights, medicare, etc., speak more loudly than his recent efforts to appear moderate. (Previously, copy on Bo's record was refused for a Write-In Ga. ad.)

X That there is no essential difference between Callaway and Maddox, but, as the former has said, it is only "in approach" - vowing that he "would fight for our way of life in the South..."

X That neither is the lesser of two evils! Both are wrong for Georgia's future!

THIS WE BELIEVE

X That a write-in vote for ELLIS ARNALL FOR GOVERNOR is the one way we can exercise our franchise honestly and responsibly, given the equally bad alternatives, and thereby strike a blow for a return to integrity and progressive government.

THIS WE BELIEVE AND ON NOVEMBER 8TH WE WILL WRITE-IN

ELLIS ARNALL FOR GOVERNOR

Paid for by Ad Hoc Committee of Concerned Georgians
Suite 1422 40 Marietta St., N. W. Atlanta, Ga.

TWO WRONGS MAKE ONE WRITE-IN ELLIS ARNALL GOVERNOR

File

"LAY MY BURDEN DOWN"

A 16 MM film documentary

by

Jack Willis

May now be ordered from

National Educational Film Service
Audio-visual Center
c/o Mr. James Cole
Indiana University
Bloomington, Indiana

"Lay My Burden Down" is a very well done one hour documentary of social and political conditions among rural Negroes in the vicinity of Selma, Alabama —— more specifically in Dallas and Wilcox counties.

It can be used to illustrate

a) How little recent laws have changed the lot of Negroes in Alabama who have marched.

b) Simply what it is like in "Selma" now-a-days

c) What the conditions are that drive southern rural Negroes into northern ghettoes. It answers effectively the northern white man's question, "Why do they want to come up here to these terrible conditions?"

d) The sort of people who come to northern ghettoes

e) The persons and conditions served by the Selma Inter-religious Project, an inter-faith ministry sponsored by:

The Commission on Religion and Race of the National Council of Churches of Christ
The National Catholic Conference for Inter-racial Justice
The Synagogue Council of America
The Unitarian-Universalist Association.

The director of the Selma Inter-religious Project served as a consultant to the N.E.T. producer and provided him with introductions to some of the persons and groups portrayed.

A follow up film is planned showing what organized local efforts are being used in Alabama to combat the conditions portrayed.

PW
Jim Wood

Friends of India Committee
256 South 16th Street
Philadelphia, Pa. 19102
Telephone: (215) KIngsley 6-1133

T. K. Mahadevan
Publications Secretary
Gandhi Peace Foundation
221 Rouse Avenue
New Delhi 1, India

Age: 47
Married
Nonvegetarian

636
5002

Biographic Statement:

Born in Colombo, Ceylon (then a part of the British Empire, along with India) on 30 August, 1919, but took up permanent residence in India in 1941, acquiring Indian citizenship soon after Independence in 1947. Hindu by birth, but by preference non-religious. Married Miriam Aaron Jacob in 1955; one son. Never a member of any political party, though holding strong political views.

"Uneducated" in the Shavian sense of the term. His formal education was interrupted by an early period of spiritual search which took him to many places in India. But these were years which brought him great opportunities for philosophical study and meditation and may be said to have laid the foundations of his later career.

Edited UNITED ASIA, a journal of Afro-Asian affairs published from Bombay, 1948-56. In June, 1953, the journal issued a special number, "The American Negro", carrying contributions from John Home Franklin, Charles Johnson, Langston Hughes and others, probably the first systematic Indian attempt to highlight the Negro problem.

Now since 1957, editing GANDHI MARG, a journal of Gandhian thought, especially concerned with explorations in the area of peace, nonviolence, conflict resolution and disarmament. Simultaneously also publications secretary of the Gandhi Peace Foundation and editor of books and pamphlets published by the Foundation. Also, for the forthcoming Gandhi Centenary (1869-1969), convener of a special committee for publications.

Has recently edited two books: GANDHI: HIS RELEVANCE FOR OUR TIMES (a collection of essays on Gandhian themes with the focus on nonviolence -- its history, theory and practice) and CIVILIAN DEFENSE: AN INTRODUCTION (containing exploratory essays on the concept and techniques of non-military defense), both books published by Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay. Also edited a shorter book, FREEDOM FROM FEAR, 1962. Freelance journalist and broadcaster.

Resume of: T. K. Mahadevan
Sponsored by: Friends of India Committee

Objectives of Visit:

Mr. Mahadevan is writing a book on NONVIOLENCE AND THE NEGRO REVOLUTION. He wishes to meet Negro and white civil rights leaders of all political persuasions, visit Negro areas and examine significant documentary materials on the subject not available in India. "Wherever possible, I should like to live within or near Negro neighborhoods. I have always identified myself with the poor and downtrodden--and you know how rich India is in them!"..."In order to get a feel of the kind of life that average Negroes live in America, perhaps there may be a chance, both in the South as well as in the North, for me to stay two or three days with an average middle class Negro family. The book I am planning will be a study in depth of this most intractable of human problems, and I naturally want to bring out the human element in the tragedy as vividly as I can."

Other quotable comments:

"The time at my disposal is probably even more limited than present day Indian food rations (despite continuing American largesse!), so I must be careful in husbanding my hours and minutes. /Routine sightseeing/ is definitely out. I want to savor 'the other America' more than the one that is dished out tediously around the world in 70 mm. panavision."

"My stay in the United States falls into two clear parts, as I have planned it. In the first phase I go around absorbing -- ideas, opinions, people, places. In the second phase I reduce my movements to a minimum and concentrate on study, reflection, argument and a process of systematisation and assimilation.

"Each day I should like to have the morning free for writing. From early afternoon till late in the evening I shall be at the mercy of my hosts or friends -- meeting people, visiting places. I am rather a poor mixer and so would like to have social engagements reduced to the barest minimum. I revel in serious, intellectual get-togethers and in the starchless informality of unplanned encounters.

"In my food habits I am cosmopolitan and without inhibitions, eating anything that is edible, though I have a secret liking for simple, old-fashioned food. I shall, of course, be coming in formal Indian dress, made mostly of hand-spun, hand-woven materials -- what Gandhi popularized as 'khadi'.

"I am confident I shall be able to go through a gruelling schedule every day of my stay in your country--partly because of the weather and partly because I have what could pass for an iron constitution (though nearing my half-century, I am mistaken -- tragically! -- for a young man.)"

Dr. and Mrs. Alex M. McPhedran (Winnie)
1748 Vickers Circle
Decatur
378-0507

Mrs. Eleanor Richardson (Merlyn E.)
(President of the Georgia League of Women Voters)
755 Park Lane
Decatur 30033
636-5892

Mrs. Fred S. Patterson, Jr.
399 Brentwood Drive, NE
237-8523

Mrs. Frances Pauley (William C.)
943 Clifton Rd., NE
373-6735

Mrs. Cathy (James N.) Wood
378-5186

Mr. Cecil Alexander
44 Broad St., NW
688-3313

Res: 2322 Mt. Paran Rd., NW
237-2812

Rev. Austin Ford
1790 La Vista Rd., NE
634-3336

Mr. De Jongh Franklin
1585 W. Paces Ferry Rodd, NW
355-0224

Bus: First National Bank Bldg.
521-1200

Mr. Albert L. Henry, III
251 Berean St., SE
525-0242

Mr. Al Kehrer (E. T.)
Anderson Rd., Austell, Ga.
948-1427

Bus.: Southern Area Dir., AFL-CIO
First Federal Bldg., Suite 1422
40 Marietta St., NW, Atl. 30303

Mr. John Glustrom
1860 Wellborne Dr., NE
872-8402

Bus.: 3030 Peachtree Rd., NW
261-7040

Mrs. Eliza Paschall (Mrs. Walter G.)
1957 Westminster Way, NE
373-1966

On The Role of Martin Luther King

August Meier

THE PHENOMENON THAT IS Martin Luther King consists of a number of striking paradoxes. The Nobel Prize winner is accepted by the outside world as the leader of the nonviolent direct action movement, but he is criticized by many activists within the movement. He is criticized for what appears, at times, as indecisiveness, and more often denounced for a tendency to accept compromise. Yet, in the eyes of most Americans, both black and white, he remains the symbol of militant direct action. So potent is this symbol of King as direct actionist, that a new myth is arising about his historic role. The real credit for developing and projecting the techniques and philosophy of nonviolent direct action in the civil rights arena must be given to the Congress of Racial Equality which was founded in 1942, more than a dozen years before the Montgomery bus boycott projected King into international fame. And the idea of mass action by Negroes themselves to secure redress of their grievances must, in large part, be ascribed to the vision of A. Philip Randolph, architect of the March on Washington Movement during World War II. Yet, as we were told in Montgomery on March 25, 1965, King and his followers now assert, apparently without serious contradiction, that a new type of civil rights strategy was born at Montgomery in 1955 under King's auspices.

In a movement in which respect is accorded in direct proportion to the number of times one has been arrested, King appears to keep the number of times he goes to jail to a minimum. In a movement in which successful leaders are those who share in the hardships of their followers, in the risks they take, in the beatings they receive, in the length of time they spend in jail, King tends to leave prison for other important engagements, rather than remaining there and suffering with his followers. In a movement in which leadership ordinarily devolves upon persons who mix democratically with their followers, King remains isolated and aloof. In a movement which prides itself on militancy and "no compromise" with racial discrimination or with the white "power structure," King maintains close relationships with, and appears to be influenced by, Democratic presidents and their emissaries, seems amenable to compromises considered by some half a loaf or less, and often appears willing to postpone or avoid a direct confrontation in the streets.

King's career has been characterized by failures that, in the larger sense, must be accounted triumphs. The buses in Montgomery were desegregated only after lengthy judicial proceedings conducted by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund secured a favorable decision from the U.S. Supreme Court. Nevertheless, the events in Montgomery were a triumph for direct action, and gave this tactic a popularity unknown when identified solely with CORE. King's subsequent major campaigns—in Albany, Georgia; in Danville, Virginia; in Birmingham, Alabama; and in St. Augustine, Florida—ended as failures or with only token accomplishments in those cities. But each of them, chiefly because of his presence, dramatically focused national and international attention on the plight of the Southern Negro, thereby facilitating overall progress. In Birmingham, in particular, demonstrations which fell short of their local goals were directly responsible for a major Federal Civil Rights Act. Essentially, this pattern of local failure and national victory was recently enacted at Selma, Alabama.

Reprinted from
NEW POLITICS
Volume IV, No. 1

King is ideologically committed to disobeying unjust laws and court orders, in the Gandhian tradition, but generally he follows a policy of not disobeying Federal Court orders. In his recent Montgomery speech, he expressed a crude, neo-Marxist interpretation of history romanticizing the Populist movement as a genuine union of black and white common people, ascribing race prejudice to capitalists playing white workers against black. Yet, in practice, he is amenable to compromise with the white bourgeois political and economic Establishment. More important, King enunciates a superficial and eclectic philosophy and by virtue of it he has profoundly awakened the moral conscience of America.

In short, King can be described as a "Conservative Militant."

IN THIS COMBINATION OF MILITANCY with conservatism and caution, of righteousness with respectability, lies the secret of King's enormous success.

Certain important civil rights leaders have dismissed King's position as the product of publicity generated by the mass communications media. But this can be said of the successes of the civil rights nonviolent action movement generally. Without publicity it is hard to conceive that much progress would have been made. In fact, contrary to the official nonviolent direct action philosophy, demonstrations have secured their results not by changing the hearts of the oppressors through a display of nonviolent love, but through the national and international pressures generated by the publicity arising from mass arrests and incidents of violence. And no one has employed this strategy of securing publicity through mass arrests and precipitating violence from white hoodlums and law enforcement officers more than King himself. King abhors violence; as at Selma, for example, he constantly retreats from situations that might result in the deaths of his followers. But he is precisely most successful when, contrary to his deepest wishes, his demonstrations precipitate violence from Southern whites against Negro and white demonstrators. We need only cite Birmingham and Selma to illustrate this point.

Publicity alone does not explain the durability of King's image, or why he remains for the rank and file of whites and blacks alike, the symbol of the direct action movement, the nearest thing to a charismatic leader that the civil rights movement has ever had. At the heart of King's continuing influence and popularity are two facts. First, better than anyone else, he articulates the aspirations of Negroes who respond to the cadence of his addresses, his religious phraseology and manner of speaking, and the vision of his dream for them and for America. King has intuitively adopted the style of the old fashioned Negro Baptist preacher and transformed it into a new art form; he has, indeed, restored oratory to its place among the arts. Second, he communicates Negro aspirations to white America more effectively than anyone else. His religious terminology and manipulation of the Christian symbols of love and non-resistance are partly responsible for his appeal among whites. To talk in terms of Christianity, love, nonviolence is reassuring to the mentality of white America. At the same time, the very superficialities of his philosophy—that rich and eclectic amalgam of Jesus, Hegel, Gandhi and others as outlined in his Stride Toward Freedom—makes him appear intellectually profound to the superficially educated middle class white American. Actually, if he were a truly profound religious thinker, like Tillich or Niebuhr, his influence would of necessity be limited to a select audience. But by uttering moral cliches, the Christian pieties, in a magnificent display of oratory, King becomes enormously effective.

If his success with Negroes is largely due to the style of his utterance, his success with whites is a much more complicated matter. For one thing, he unerringly knows how to exploit to maximum effectiveness their growing feeling of guilt. King, of course, is not unique in attaining fame and popularity among whites through playing upon their guilt feelings. James Baldwin is the most conspicuous example of a man who has achieved success with this formula. The incredible fascination which the Black Muslims have for white people, and the posthumous near-sanctification of Malcolm X by many naive whites (in addition to many Negroes whose motivations are, of course, very different), must in large part be attributed to the same source. But King goes beyond this. With intuitive, but extraordinary skill, he not only castigates whites for their sins but, in contrast to angry young writers like Baldwin, he explicitly states his belief in their salvation. Not only will direct action bring fufillment of the "American Dream" to Negroes but the Negroes' use of direct action will help whites to live up to their Christian and democratic values; it will purify, cleanse and heal the sickness in white society. Whites will benefit as well as Negroes. He has faith that the white man will redeem himself. Negroes must not hate whites, but love them. In this manner, King first arouses the guilt feelings of whites, and then relieves them—though always leaving the lingering feeling in his white listeners that they should support his nonviolent crusade. Like a Greek tragedy, King's performance provides an extraordinary catharsis for the white listener.

King thus give white men the feeling that he is their good friend, that he poses no threat to them. It is interesting to note that this was the same feeling white men received from Booker T. Washington, the noted early 20th Century accommodator. Both men stressed their faith in the white man; both expressed the belief that the white man could be brought to accord Negroes their rights. Both stressed the importance of whites recognizing the rights of Negroes for the moral health and well-being of white society. Like King, Washington had an extraordinary following among whites. Like King, Washington symbolized for most whites the whole program of Negro advancement. While there are important similarities in the functioning of both men vis-a-vis the community, needless to say, in most respects, their philosophies are in disagreement.

It is not surprising, therefore, to find that King is the recipient of contributions from organizations and individuals who fail to eradicate evidence of prejudice in their own backyards. For example, certain liberal trade union leaders who are philosophically committed to full racial equality, who feel the need to identify their organizations with the cause of militant civil rights, although they are unable to defeat racist elements in their unions, contribute hundreds of thousands of dollars to King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC). One might attribute this phenomenon to the fact that SCLC works in the South rather than the North, but this is true also for SNCC which does not benefit similarly from union treasuries. And the fact is that ever since the college students started their sit-ins in 1960, it is SNCC which has been the real spearhead of direct action in most of the South, and has performed the lion's share of work in local communities, while SCLC has received most of the publicity and most of the money. However, while King provides a verbal catharsis for whites, leaving them feeling purified and comfortable, SNCC's uncompromising militancy makes whites feel less comfortable and less beneficent.

(The above is not to suggest that SNCC and SCLC are responsible for all, or nearly all, the direct action in the South. The NAACP has actively engaged in direct action, especially in Savannah under the leadership of W. W. Law, in South Carolina under I. DeQuincy Newman, and in Clarksdale, Mississippi, under Aaron Henry. The work of CORE—including most of the direct action in Louisiana, much of the nonviolent work in Florida and Mississippi, the famous Freedom Ride of 1961—has been most important. In addition, one should note the work of SCLC affiliates, such as those in Lynchburg, Virginia, led by Reverend Virgil Wood; in Birmingham led by Reverend Fred Shuttlesworth, and in Savannah, by Hosea Williams.

(There are other reasons for SNCC's lesser popularity with whites than King's. These are connected with the great changes that have occurred in SNCC since it was founded in 1960, changes reflected in the half-jocular epigram circulating in SNCC circles that the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee has now become the "Non-Student Violent Non-Coordinating Committee." The point is, however, that even when SNCC thrilled the nation in 1960–1961 with the student sit-ins that swept the South, it did not enjoy the popularity and financial support accorded to King.)

King's very tendencies toward compromise and caution, his willingness to negotiate and bargain with White House emissaries, his hesitancy to risk the precipitation of mass violence upon demonstrators, further endear him to whites. He appears to them a "responsible" and "moderate" man. To militant activists, King's failure to march past the State Police on that famous Tuesday morning outside Selma indicated either a lack of courage, or a desire to advance himself by currying Presidential favor. But King's shrinking from a possible bloodbath, his accession to the entreaties of the political Establishment, his acceptance of face-saving compromise in this, as in other instances, are fundamental to the particular role he is playing, and essential for achieving and sustaining his image as a leader of heroic moral stature in the eyes of white men. His caution and compromise keep open the channels of communication between the activists and the majority of the white community. In brief: King makes the nonviolent direct action movement respectable.

Of course, many, if not most, activists reject the notion that the movement should be made respectable. Yet, American history shows that for any reform movement to succeed, it must attain respectability. It must attract moderates, even conservatives, to its ranks. The March on Washington made direct action respectable; Selma made it fashionable. More than any other force, it is Martin Luther King who impressed the civil rights revolution on the American conscience and is attracting that great middle body of American public opinion to its support. It is this revolution of conscience that will undoubtedly lead fairly soon to the elimination of all violations of Negroes' constitutional rights, thereby creating the conditions for the economic and social changes that are necessary if we are to achieve full racial equality. This is not to deny the dangers to the civil rights movement in becoming respectable. Respectability, for example, encourages the attempts of political machines to capture civil rights organizations. Respectability can also become an end in itself, thereby dulling the cutting edge of its protest activities. Indeed, the history of the labor movement reveals how attaining respectability can produce loss of original purpose and character. These perils, however, do not contradict the importance of achieving respectability—even a degree of modishness—if racial equality is ever to be realized.

There is another side to the picture: King would be neither respected nor respectable if there were not more militant activists on his left, engaged in more radical forms of direct action. Without CORE and, especially, SNCC, King would appear "radical" and irresponsible" rather than "moderate" and "respectable."

KING OCCUPIES A POSITION OF STRATEGIC IMPORTANCE as the "vital center" within the civil rights movement. Though he has lieutenants who are far more militant and "radical" than he is, SCLC acts, in effect, as the most cautious, deliberate and "conservative" of the direct action groups because of King's leadership. This permits King and the SCLC to function—almost certainly unintentionally—not only as an organ of communication with the Establishment and majority white public opinion, but as something of a bridge between the activist and more traditionalist or "conservative" civil rights groups, as well. For example, it appears unlikely that the Urban League and NAACP, which supplied most of the funds, would have participated in the 1963 March on Washington if King had not done so. Because King agreed to go along with SNCC and CORE, the NAACP found it mandatory to join if it was to maintain its image as a protest organization. King's identification with the March was also essential for securing the support of large numbers of white clergymen and their moderate followers. The March was the brainchild of the civil rights movement's ablest strategist and tactician, Bayard Rustin, and the call was issued by A. Philip Randolph. But it would have been a minor episode in the history of the civil rights movement without King's support.

Yet curiously enough, despite his charisma and international reputation, King thus far has been more a symbol than a power in the civil rights movement. Indeed his strength in the movement has derived less from an organizational base than from his symbolic role. Seven or eight years ago, one might have expected King to achieve an organizationally dominant position in the civil rights movement, at least in its direct action wing. The fact is that in the period after the Montgomery bus boycott, King developed no program and, it is generally agreed, revealed himself as an ineffective administrator who failed to capitalize upon his popularity among Negroes. In 1957, he founded SCLC to coordinate the work of direct action groups that had sprung up in Southern cities. Composed of autonomous units, usually led by Baptist ministers, SCLC does not appear to have developed an overall sense of direction or a program of real breadth and scope. Although the leaders of SCLC affiliates became the race leaders in their communities—displacing the established local conservative leadership of teachers, old-line ministers, businessmen—it is hard for an observer (who admittedly has not been close to SCLC) to perceive exactly what SCLC did before the 1960's except to advance the image and personality of King. King appeared not to direct but to float with the tide of militant direct action. For example, King did not supply the initiative for the bus boycott in Montgomery, but was pushed into the leadership by others, as he himself records in Stride Toward Freedom. Similarly, in the late Fifties and early Sixties, he appeared to let events shape his course. In the last two years, this has changed, but until the Birmingham demonstrations of 1963, King epitomized conservative militancy.

SCLC under King's leadership called the Raleigh Conference of April 1960 which gave birth to SNCC. Incredibly, within a year, the SNCC youth had lost their faith in the man they now satirically call "De Lawd," and had struck out on their own independent path. By that time, the Spring of 1961, King's power in the Southern direct action movement had been further curtailed by CORE's stunning Freedom Ride to Alabama and Mississippi.

The limited extent of King's actual power in the civil rights movement was illustrated by the efforts made to invest King with the qualities of a Messiah during the recent ceremonies at the State Capitol in Montgomery. Reverend Abernathy's constant iteration of the theme that King is "our Leader," the Moses of the race, chosen by God, and King's claim that he originated the nonviolent direct action movement at Montgomery a decade ago, are all assertions that would have been superfluous if King's power in the movement was very substantial.

It is, of course, no easier today that it has been in the past few years to predict the course of the Negro protest movement, and it is always possible that the current state of affairs may change quite abruptly. It is conceivable that the ambitious program that SCLC is now projecting—both in Southern voter registration and in Northern urban direct action programs—may give it a position of commanding importance in civil rights. As a result of the recent demonstrations in Selma and Montgomery, King's prestige is now higher than ever. At the same time, the nature of CORE and NAACP direct action activities at the moment has created a programmatic vacuum which SCLC may be able to exploit. Given this convergence of circumstances, SCLC leaders may be able to establish an organizational base upon which to build a power commensurate with the symbolic position of their president.

It is indeed fortunate that King has not obtained a predominance of power in the movement commensurate with his prestige. For today, as in the past, a diversity of approaches is necessary. Needed in the movement are those who view the struggle chiefly as a conflict situation, in which the power of demonstrations, the power of Negroes, will force recognition of the race's humanity and citizenship rights, and the achievement of equality. Equally needed are those who see the movement's strategy to be chiefly one of capitalizing on the basic consensus of values in American society by awakening the conscience of the white man to the contradiction between his professions and the facts of discrimination. And just as necessary to the movement as both of these are those who operate skillfully, recognizing and yet exploiting the deeply held American belief that compromise among competing interest groups is the best modus operandi in public life.

King is unique in that he maintains a delicate balance among all three of these basic strategy assumptions. The traditional approaches of the Urban League (conciliation of the white businessmen) and of the NAACP (most preeminently appeals to the courts and appeals to the sense of fair play in the American public), basically attempted to exploit the consensus in American values. It would of course be a gross oversimplification to say that the Urban League and NAACP strategies are based simply on attempting to capitalize on the consensus of values, while SNCC and CORE act simply as if the situation were purely a conflict situation. Implicit in the actions of all civil rights organizations are both sets of assumptions—even where people are not conscious of the theoretical assumptions under which, in effect, they operate. The NAACP especially encompasses a broad spectrum of strategies and types of activities, ranging from time-tested court procedures to militant direct action. Sophisticated CORE activists know very well when a judicious compromise is necessary or valuable. But I hold that King is in the middle, acting in effect as if he were basing his strategy upon all three assumptions described above. He maintains a delicate balance between a purely moral appeal and a militant display of power. He talks of the power of the bodies of Negro demonstrators in the streets, but unlike CORE and SNCC activists, he accepts compromises at times that consist of token improvements, and calls them impressive victories. More than any of the other groups, King and SCLC can, up to this point at least, be described as exploiting all three tactical assumptions to an approximately equal degree. King's continued success, I suspect, will depend to a considerable degree upon the difficult feat of maintaining his position at the "vital center" of the civil rights movement.

Viewed from another angle King's failure to achieve a position of power on a level with his prestige is fortunate because rivalries between personalities and organizations remain an essential ingredient of the dynamics of the movement and a precondition for its success as each current tries to outdo the others in effectiveness and in maintaining a good public image. Without this competitive stimulus, the civil rights revolution would slow down.

I have already noted that one of King's functions is to serve as a bridge between the militant and conservative wings of the movement. In addition, by gathering support for SCLC, he generates wider support for CORE and SNCC, as well. The most striking example is the recent series of demonstrations in Selma where SNCC had been operating for nearly two years with only moderate amounts of publicity before King chose that city as his own target. As usual, it was King's presence that focused world attention on Selma. In the course of subsequent events, the rift between King and SNCC assumed the proportions of a serious conflict. Yet people who otherwise would have been hesitant to support SNCC's efforts, even people who had become disillusioned with certain aspects of SNCC's policies during the Mississippi Summer Project of 1964, were drawn to demonstrate in Selma and Montgomery. Moreover, although King received the major share of credit for the demonstrations, it seems likely that in the controversy between King and SNCC, the latter emerged with more power and influence in the civil rights movement than ever before. It is now possible that the Administration will, in the future, regard SNCC as more of a force to be reckoned with than it has heretofore.

MAJOR DAILIES LIKE THE New York Times and the Washington Post, basically sympathetic to civil rights and racial equality, though more gradualist than the activist organizations, have congratulated the nation upon its good fortune in having a "responsible and moderate" leader like King at the head of the nonviolent action movement (though they overestimate his power and underestimate the symbolic nature of his role). It would be more appropriate to congratulate the civil rights movement for its good fortune in having as its symbolic leader a man like King. The fact that he has more prestige than power; the fact that he not only criticizes whites but explicitly believes in their redemption; his ability to arouse creative tension combined with his inclination to shrink from carrying demonstrations to the point where major bloodshed might result; the intellectual simplicity of his philosophy; his tendency to compromise and exert caution, even his seeming indecisiveness on some occasions; the sparing use he makes of going to or staying in jail himself; his friendship with the man in the White House—all are essential to the role he plays, and invaluable for the success of the movement. It is well, of course, that not all civil rights leaders are cut of the same cloth—that King is unique among them. Like Randolph, who functions very differently, King is really an institution. His most important function, I believe, is that of effectively communicating Negro aspirations to white people, of making nonviolent direct action respectable in the eyes of the white majority. In addition, he functions within the movement by occupying a vital center position between its "conservative" and "radical" wings, by symbolizing direct action and attracting people to participate in it without dominating either the civil rights movement or its activist wing. Viewed in this context, traits that many activists criticize in King actually function not as sources of weakness, but as the foundations of his strength.

AUGUST MEIER teaches at Roosevelt College. He is the author of Negro Thought in America, 1880-1915 and his books, Negro Protest Thought in the 20th Century, (co-editor) and Short History of American Negro will be published this year.

NEW DIRECTIONS FOR GEORGIA

COOPERATIVES

IN RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION

IN A COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM
MEMBERS OF A COOPERATIVE HAVE AN EQUAL VOICE
WORK TOGETHER
IMPROVE FAMILY INCOME

CAP

COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM
OFFICE OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20506

CREDIT UNIONS

IN RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION

CREDIT UNIONS CAN HELP MEMBERS

- MEET CREDIT NEEDS
- LEARN GROUP ACTION
- OBTAIN FINANCIAL COUNSELING
- ACQUIRE THE HABIT OF SAVING

CAP

COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM
OFFICE OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20506

FOOD DISTRIBUTION

IN RURAL COMMUNITY ACTION

A FOOD DISTRIBUTION PROGRAM CAN HELP TO

- CORRECT SUBSTANDARD FOOD HABITS
- IMPROVE HEALTH
- RESTORE VITALITY
- INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY

CAP

COMMUNITY ACTION PROGRAM
OFFICE OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY
WASHINGTON, D. C. 20506

- FCH COMPANY
- FCH INTERNATIONAL

THE FOUNDATION FOR COOPERATIVE HOUSING

Delta Ministry

Box 139
Edwards,
Miss. 39066

File

contemporary social action collection

THE STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF WISCONSIN

816 State Street
Madison,
Wisconsin
53706

FREDERICK DOUGLASS
FELLOWSHIPS IN JOURNALISM

EMPLOYMENT SERIES

* CHANGING EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES IN THE CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY experience report 102

COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE
U. S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

FREEDOM SCHOOL

File

By Eugene A. Kelley

The critics who continue despite the weight of evidence to deplore the labor movement's indifference to anything but bread and butter, should look at the latest in a series of union-sponsored community activities.

They could discover, for instance, the past summer's Freedom Schools in the Deep South—an activity by the American Federation of Teachers that brought hope and courage to several thousand Negroes of all ages who were desperately in need of the kind of reassurance these schools offered.

All the rules of physical criteria for schools were waived in the Freedom School project. The classroom was as likely to be a crossroads church as it was to be a humble dwelling or a store with makeshift accommodations.

The faculties—mainly AFT members from larger cities augmented by volunteers—received stipends of about $10 a week, barely enough for existence. Most of them dipped into their own savings to accomplish a job that sorely needed doing. They lived with the families of their students and most of all, in some areas, they lived under the constant threat of physical harm.

Teachers Union Southern Project brings education where doors were closed before.

There was no formal curriculum. Subject matter varied from place to place, with only such common denominators as teaching of practical skills, Negro history, self-expression, political education and creative action. Teachers were free to select their own subjects with the advice of the class. There were none of the formal school trappings like report cards, principals, or attendance sheets.

The AFT's Freedom School operation was divided in two parts. Coordinating their activities in Gadsden, Ala., and Quincy, Fla., with Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference for the first time, the AFT established two schools. In Florida they helped with the SCLC voter registration drive and with the Southern Community Organization and Political Education (SCOPE).

It was in Mississippi, though, that the AFT projects achieved their most notable gains. Twenty-six Freedom Schools, staffed by some 30 teacher-volunteers from every part of the country, reached out to more than 2,000 people from the capital city of Jackson to remote rural hamlets.

Two AFT members, Arthur and Carolyn Reese, from Detroit coordinated the schools working closely with the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party.

The personal hazards involved were made clear to every volunteer. Security bulletins were issued to all personnel with cautions against travel by night, appearing in windows of Freedom Houses after dark, giving police the names of friendly local people, and the avoidance of bizarre or provocative clothing and beards.

Threats against the person and property of the volunteers were common. In Issaqueena City, Miss., the Freedom School held in a church was put to the torch and leveled one night.

Despite all this, the work of the schools was carried out. Teachers soon learned that the most popular area of interest was the history of the American Negro—a course giving to previously unaware people a new knowledge of their heritage and contributions.

Some of the children who attended the freedom schools.

Next in importance to the students of all ages was political education. They wanted to know who could help them and how, they wondered about what they could expect from the Civil Rights Act.

Valuable lessons discovered in Mississippi in 1964 and in Prince Edward County, Va., two years ago, were put to the test by the AFT volunteers this year. The teachers learned as they taught. They sought to draw out the students, to hear from them about their needs, their hopes and even their fears.

Self-expression was encouraged in many ways. Some of the Freedom Schools published their own mimeographed newspapers in which the students articulated problems closest to their hearts. In

Photo: A.F.T.

Freedom schools gave a new meaning to the word for many this past summer.

Canton, Miss., the school led by Nancy Polin and Nancy Lester, AFT teachers from New York City, put out the Youth Freedom Voice whose main concern in one issue was an attempt to use the facilities of the public library.

In Amite County, Miss., the Freedom School is named for Herbert Lee, a Negro gunned down in broad daylight by a state senator. To Negroes he is a martyr, killed because he persisted in his efforts to become a registered voter. The Freedom School at Pilgrim Church in Amite County was directed by Sheridan Peterson, an AFT teacher from Seattle, and its publication is understandably concerned with Negro voting rights.

There were health and hygiene classes in all of the schools. The Reeses conducted a secretarial school in Jackson, Miss. Any vehicle that would give confidence and self-expression was tried. In one area a folk festival found Negroes 75 years and older singing folk songs, playing harmonicas and strumming banjoes in the true Mississippi Delta style.

In all the discussions there were patient efforts to impress local groups with the necessity for keeping up the schools' momentum so that none of the ground so painstakingly won would be lost through neglect. As a result, there are now some year-round Freedom Schools with local high school students replacing the teacher-volunteers who have returned to their own classrooms.

Much of the cost of the Freedom School project was financed by contributions from AFT locals, with generous assists from other unions and individuals. Advertisements early in the season pointed out that $10 would provide six to eight weeks of schooling for a Negro youngster, $100 would buy a bus ticket for a Northern teacher and pay her entire summer's expenses. A $1000 gift would open and sustain a school for the summer.

AFT President Charles Cogen pointed out that "this was a free project—all on its own—not connected with any governmental authority." He added that the possibility of later federal assistance through anti-poverty legislation was under study.

Cogen said the volunteer teachers were cautioned to confine their activities to the educational aspects of the civil rights effort and to avoid involvement in local civil rights campaigns. The Freedom Schools, he went on "exist not in competition with public schools, but out of love for the idea of free—really free—public education."

The need for Freedom Schools will continue as long as quality education is not available to all children. The AFT recognizes the need and its convention in August urged greater efforts for the summer of 1966.

Cogen expects that more of his members will staff Freedom Schools next year. "We went into the South," he said, "as much to learn as to teach, to be inspired as to inspire, and to have our own stereotypes demolished as to tear down Southern prejudice."

Eugene A. Kelley, author of this article, is a longtime reporter of labor's activities.

Reprinted from the October 1965
IUD Agenda
for the
American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO

An Introduction to the Freedom School Project

American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO

The dramatic growth and accomplishments of the Freedom Schools in the South during the last two years have made them a major motivating force in the civil rights movement.

The Freedom School project is now directed by the American Federation of Teachers (A.F.T.) and is financed by a nation-wide A.F.T. sponsored campaign for contributions.

One of the unique features of the A.F.T. Freedom School Project, and also one of the greatest factors in its success, is the living arrangements of Freedom School teachers. Obviously, the ten dollars per week provided to help defray living cost is completely inadequate for independent subsistence. Like the Peace Corps, the major aim of the project is to bring people together in "in depth" living situations which commit them mutually to the task of educating people. Unlike the Peace Corps, Freedom School teachers live in the homes of the local people who share what they have with them in every way possible. Both the teachers-guests and the parents-hosts declare that the experiences of mutual dependence and mutual respect resulting from these relationships are some of the most enlightening and gratifying aspects of the project.

The conditions under which teachers live provide the best way to understand the conditions, traditions, race relations and education problems of the South. However, preparatory orientation sessions are conducted before the teachers are sent to their teaching locations. These orientation sessions must be attended by all teachers sponsored by the A.F.T. to provide the vital insights absolutely necessary for success and safety in the South.

The preparatory orientation provides the teachers with insights into all civil rights activities going on and planned in the areas. The teachers meet key people working in all civil rights activities and gain first-hand information from the leaders via lectures and group discussions. The teachers also get their introduction to the problems of the local areas by the local Negro people themselves. Thus both teachers and students begin their experiences in sharing at the very outset of the program and continue throughout the duration of the summer. The teachers also evaluate one another's attitudes and conceptions of what their roles are and should be in the unique setting of the freedom schools and the purposes for which they are intended by the people who attend them, the people who organize them and those who conduct them.

opeiul0aflcio

GENERAL

FREEDOM SCHOOL

INFORMATION

The American Federation of Teachers Freedom School Project is a voluntary service arrangement. The funds raised will provide a minimum amount of assistance to the volunteers in terms of (1) reimbursement of transportation cost to and from the southern area of participation, (2) school supplies, (3) small reimbursement for those who use their own transportation in the freedom school area and (4) a small stipend for subsistence to each volunteer. Thus the volunteer must be prepared to live under circumstances much different than that to which they are accustomed.

The only money that will be available for use in the Freedom School project will be that which is raised in the spring and summer A.F.T. Freedom School Fund Drive. This money will be used to provide round-trip bus fare for the A.F.T. sponsored teachers who volunteer to serve in the project. The teachers may use whatever mode of transportation they wish; however, reimbursement for transportation cost will be the equivalent of round-trip bus fare in every case.

School supplies will be purchased with some of the money raised in the fund drive. The kinds and amount of materials will be determined by the availability of the requested materials and the teacher making the request. Teachers must be prepared to exercise their "creative genius and ingenuity" in providing themselves and their students with teaching aids at a minimum cost.

Those teachers who drive their own cars into the South and use them for transportation while serving the Freedom Schools will be provided a small stipend for gasoline purchases. Transportation is a crucial problem for volunteers in the South. However car pools provide a major solution in all areas where Freedom Schools are held. The local citizens involved in civil rights work and who own some kind of vehicle always help as much as possible.

In past summers occasionally a Freedom School teacher has been arrested. We must face the fact that this harrassment tactic may well be stepped up as the diehard segregationists realize the effectiveness of the Freedom School Program in building voter registration and participation in other civil rights activities.

Our teachers therefore are asked to arrange for some one "back home" to be responsible for producing bond money immediately upon request, in the sum of at least two hundred dollars ($200.00), in case of emergency. All such "harrassment" cases are invariably reversed by higher courts and the money returned.

AR:ws
opeiu10aflcio

SUGGESTED READING
FOR
PROSPECTIVE FREEDOM SCHOOL TEACHERS

There are many books which deal with the nature of southern racial thought and attitudes. Any person considering going into the south as a civil rights worker should have some idea of the direction and pattern of thought dominant in the southern mind. The following books are suggested as aids in getting the southern point of view.

Canzoneri, Robert, I Do So Politely, Houghton Miffin Co., Boston, 1965.
Cash, W. J., The Mind Of The South, Random House, N.Y., 1941
Griffin, John Howard, Black Like Me, Riverside Press, Cambridge, 1961.
McGill, Ralph, The South And The Southerner, Brown & Co., Boston, 1964.
Lord, Walter, The Past That Would Not Die, Harper & Row, Pub., N.Y., 1965.
Rose, Arnold, The Negro In America, Beacon Press, Boston, 1962.
Silver, James W., Mississippi: The Closed Society, Harcourt, Brace & World, Inc., 1964.
Smith, Lillian, Killers Of The Dream, Doubleday & Co., Inc., Garden City, N.Y., 1963.

One cannot begin to serve effectively in building the self-image and skills of Negroes if he or she does not keep constantly aware of the basic perceptions and conceptions which generally underlie their position, role and relationships in American life. These attitudes can be gleaned to some extent in the books listed below.

Baldwin, James, Nobody Knows My Name, Dell Pub. Co., Inc., N.Y., 1961
_____ Notes Of A Native Son, Beacon Press, Boston, 1955.
Bennett, Lerone Jr., Confrontation Black and White, Johnson Pub. Co., Inc., Chicago, 1965.
_____ The Negro Mood and Other Essays, Johnson Pub. Co., Inc., Chicago, 1965.
Clark, Kenneth B., Editor, The Negro Protest, Beacon Press, Boston, 1963.
_____ Dark Ghetto, Harper & Row, Pub., 1965.

The persons who make up the on-going civil rights forces in the south and the character of the movement itself have been written about by many people. Prospective Freedom School teachers should have some idea of what has gone on in the civil rights movement before them and the personalities which have helped to shape the course of the movement. Thus, among the books that they might use as references are the following:

Holt, Len, The Summer That Didn't End, William Morrow & Co., N.Y., 1965.
McCord, William, Mississippi: The Long, Hot Summer, W.W. Norton & Co., Inc., N.Y., 1965.
Zinn, Howard, S.N.C.C., The New Abolitionists, Beacon Press, Boston, 1964.

(Suggested Readings, Cont'd.)

There has been much talk of Negro history; however, many people have confused Negro history with Negro biography. In order to assure that this mistake has not been made by prospective freedom school teachers, the following list is offered as suggested books on Negro history. At least one, and in some cases more than one, of these books should be seriously read and studied by any person entering into civil rights and human relations work.

Aptheker, Herbert, Editor, A Documentary History of the Negro People in the United States, 2 vols., The Citadel Press, N.Y., Vol. 1, 1962; vol 2, 1964.

Bennett, Lerone Jr., Before The Mayflower, Johnson Pub. Co., Inc., Chicago, 1962.

Franklin, John Hope, The Emancipation Proclamation, Doubleday & Co., Inc., 1963.

_____ The Free Negro In North Carolina - 1790-1860, University of N. Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 1943.

_____ From Slavery To Freedom, Alfred A. Knopf, N.Y., 1963.

_____ The Militant South - 1800-1861, Beacon Press, Boston, 1964.

_____ Reconstruction After The Civil War, University of Chicago Press, Chicago, 1962.

Hughes, Langston & Meltzer, Milton, A Pictorial History of the Negro In America, Crown Publishers, Inc., N.Y., 1963.

Logan, Rayford W., The Negro In The United States, D.Van Nostrand Co., Inc., N.Y., 1957.

Nordholt, J. W. Schulte, The People That Walk In Darkness, Ballantine Books, N.Y., 1960.

Quarles, Benjamin, The Negro In The Making Of America, Collier Books, Macmillan Co., N.Y., 1964.

Woodson, Carter G. & Wesley, Charles H., The Negro In Our History, The Associated Pub., Inc., Washington, D.C., 1962.

All groups of people in America gain or loose their pride in themselves as human beings on the basis of their knowledge and conceptions of their historical past and the degree of cultural development achieved in the areas of their ancestors. The American Negro is no different than anyone else in this matter. Thus, as all other people's pride is rooted in their past in other lands on other continents, so must the pride of the Negro have roots elsewhere. Some knowledge of that area of the world in which the Negro's past is rooted is exceedingly important to the Freedom School teacher. The following books are suggested as sources from which this knowledge can be gained.

Davidson, Basil, A Guide To African History, Doubleday & Co., Inc., Garden City, N.Y., 1965.

_____ The African Past, Atlantic Monthly Press Book, Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1964.

_____ The Lost Cities Of Africa, Atlantic Monthly Press Book, Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1959.

_____ The Years of the African Slave Trade, Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1961.

(Suggested Reading, Cont'd)

Fordham, Paul, The Geography of African Affairs, Penguin Books, Baltimore, Md., 1965.

Kingsnorth, G. W., Africa South of the Sahara, Cambridge University Press, 1963.

Oliver, Roland & Fage, J. D., A Short History of Africa, Penguin Books, Baltimore, Md., 1964.

Rogers, Joel A., Africa's Gift To America, Joel A. Rogers, N.Y., 1961.

Poetry is an expression of the deepest desires and protests of people. It has been, is, and will always be a most reliable means of gleaning the deepest concerns and involvements crucial in the lives of people. Prospective Freedom School teachers and Human Relations workers should be well aquainted with at least one of the following books of Anthologies of Negro poetry.

Hughes, Langston & Bontemps, Arna, Editors, The Poetry Of The Negro 1746-1949, Doubleday & Co., Inc., Garden City, N.Y., 1949.

Hughes, Langston, Editor, New Negro Poets U.S.A., Indiana University Press, Bloomington, 1964.

Johnson, James Weldon, Editor, The Book Of American Negro Poetry, Harcourt, Brace & World, Inc., N.Y., 1931.

Kerlin, Robert T., Negro Poets And Their Poems, Associated Pub., Inc., Washington, D.C., 1935.

Pool, Rosey E., Editor, Beyond The Blues, Hand and Flower Press, N.Y., 1962.

Every person teaching or working in Human Relations in America should be familiar with the outstanding Negro writers of America. The following books are excellent as means of becoming aware of the great number and variety of writings by Negroes that have and are contributing importantly to America's store of literature.

Brown, Sterling A., Davis, Arthur P., Lee, Ulysses, Editors, The Negro Caravan - Writings by American Negroes, Dryden Press Pub., N.Y., 1941.

Davis, John P., The American Negro Reference Book, Prentice-Hall Inc., Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1966.

Hill, Herbert, Editor, Soon, One Morning, Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., N.Y., 1965.

ws:opeiul0aflcio

SOMETHING OF

part II

SOMETHING OF OUR OWN; Copyright 1965
Mary E. Varela. Published by H.J.K.
Publishing Co., Jackson, Mississippi.

NOW Your Town Can Have a 'Professional Riot!'

No More "AMATEUR" Demonstrations

Demonstrators, Inc.

"OUR TRAINED TERRORISTS CAN TIE UP ANY TOWN!"

Name Your Cause --- We Will Demonstrate 90 Days Advance Notice Needed to Guarantee Spontaneity

Tailor-Made--Name Your Poison!

Black vs. White	White vs. Black
Left vs. Right	Right vs. Left
Red vs. Blue	Blue vs. Red
Labor vs. Management	(No Training)
North vs. South	South vs. North

(Special Centennial Rates)

Teachers vs. Students Students vs. Teachers (College Degree-Types are extra cost for educational disturbances)

We Specialize in the Dramatic!

Please Check Type

VIOLENT_____ NON-VIOLENT _____

Walk-In_____ Sit-In_____ Drive-In_____

Chain-In_____ Other_____

(Bloodshed costs more west of Mississippi)

NOTE: If intervention by Attorney General is desired please send down payment in advance.

We carry extra lunch-counter stools, chain whips, pop bottles, stones and chemical toilets.

Our Banner Painters Can Misspell Anything . . . Our Chants Are Written Specially For Any Occasion . . . Special Bus Rates To Washington, D. C. . . . Our Trained Cats Guaranteed To Decoy Police Dogs . . . . Our Printers Can Forge Membership Cards In Any Organization.

We Specialize In Hand-Picked Hoodlums That Can't Speak English . . . All Have Passed The 'Go Limp' Test!

RIOT KITS Riot Kits Include Extra Sheriff's Badges and Night Sticks In Case You Need Help On Both Sides . . . Absolutely No First Aid Kits To Assure Blood And Tears.

PRESS "SERVICE" Please Advise The News Service You Prefer . . . All Other Cameras Will Be Smashed and Reporters Slugged. Advance Release Prepared For Your Approval 30-Days Prior To Spontaneous Demonstration.

EVERYBODY'S FIGHTING SOMETHING . . .WHY AREN'T YOU? . . . WE GUARANTEE TO CONFUSE THE ISSUE SO NOBODY CAN ARRIVE AT SOLUTION !

WRITE TODAY! Reference furnished upon request . . . C H E C K TODAY'S NEWSPAPER FOR CURRENT ADDRESS.

DON'T DELAY. PRICES WILL RISE WHEN WE ADD "SUICIDE BY FIRE" TO OUR SERVICES !

(Volunteers for this dramatic finale gladly accepted)

Organized Confusion is Best!

REPRODUCTION RIGHTS: WE BELIEVE IN EQUAL RIGHTS: PRINT YOUR OWN

American Opinion Bookstore of Atlanta, Inc.
3081 MAPLE DRIVE, N.E.
ATLANTA, GA. 30305 TEL. 233-5393

Pat.

File

Bill Tome has done some good stuff besides this. Check the VEP files on his project.

Bill

South side, Va.
Bill Towe

Virginia Government Workbook

by Bill Towe

This workbook is being distributed by:
THE VIRGINIA STUDENTS CIVIL RIGHTS COMMITTE

P. O. Box 79

Kenbridge, Virginia

Table of Contents

I. Local Government 1

County 1
Town and City. 7
Review and Summary of Local Government. 8

II. State Government 13

Branches of State Government 13
Legislative Branch 14
Executive Branch 15

III. Federal Government 16

Executive Branch 16
Legislative Branch 16

IV. Voter Registration 17

Registration Requirements 17
Voter Registration Drive 19

1 Local Government

Virginia is divided into 96 counties and 23 independent cities. Each one of these counties and cities has a local government. Also there are many cities and towns in the 96 counties and most of these cities and towns have local governments. The job of each local government is to make sure that Virginia and Federal laws are obeyed. The local governments also pass laws to govern the people in the towns, cities and counties.

A. Local County Government

The most important law making and enforcing body in your county is the Board of Supervisors. While this board is very important, it's powers are greatly limited, as we shall see.

1. How are the Board of Supervisors selected? _____

_____ When? _____

a. How many members are on the board in your county? _____

(1). What determines the number of board members? _____

_____

(2). Below list the districts in your county and the supervisor from each district.

District	Supervisor

(3). Do an equal number of people live in each district? _____

If not, is this fair? _____ Why or why not? _____

_____

b. When does the board meet? _____

Where? _____

c. The board is suppose to act for the state in carrying out certain duties.

What are some of these duties? _____

d. As a local governing body what are some of the duties of the Board? _____

_____

_____

e. While many laws are passed by the Virginia and United States governments to help people, quite often the Board will decide whether or not the people will get the benefit from these laws. What are some Virginia laws to help people that the Board can decide whether or not people will get? _____

_____

_____

What are some U.S.Government laws that the Board can decide on? _____

_____

_____

(1). Do you know of any Virginia or U.S. laws the Board has voted to use to help the people? _____

_____

Has voted against? _____

_____

(2). Often people say it is only necessary to vote for the President and Governor. Would you agree with them? _____ Why or why not? _____

_____

2. What is the job of the Board of Reassessors? _____

_____

a. What are the names of the members of this Board? _____

_____

b. Who appoints this Board? _____

c. How often must a reassessment be made? _____

d. How can a reassessment affect you? _____

_____

3. What is the job of the Board of Equalization? _____

_____

a. Who selects the members of this Board? _____

b. Does your county have a Board of Equalization? _____ If so who are the members? _____

_____

c. Is it important that your county have a Board of Equalization? _____

Why or why not? _____

_____

4. What is the job of the Commissioner of Revenue? _____

_____

a. Who selects the Commissioner? _____

b. Who is the Commissioner in your county? _____

c. How long does the Commissioner serve? _____

5. Who is the County Treasurer? _____

a. What is his job? _____

_____

b. Where does the County Treasurer deposit county funds? _____

_____ Why is this important? _____

_____

c. Who selects the Treasurer? _____

How long does he serve? _____

6. Who is the Commonwealth Attorney? _____

a. What is his job? _____

_____

b. Who selects the Attorney? _____

c. Is it important to you who the Commonwealth Attorney is? _____

Why or why not? _____

_____

7. Who is the Sheriff of the county? _____

a. What is his job? _____

_____

b. Who selects the Sheriff? _____

c. For how long does he serve? _____

d. Is it important to you who the Sheriff is? _____ Why or why not? _____

_____

8. Who is the County Court Judge? _____

a. What kinds of cases does he try? _____

_____

b. Who selects this Judge? _____

c. For how long does he serve? _____

9. Who is the County Clerk? _____

a. What is his job? _____

b. Who selects the clerk? _____

c. For how long does he serve? _____

d. What kind of information can you get from the Clerk or Registrar if you are working on voter registration? _____

_____

How can the Clerk help you find out what the Board of Supervisors and/or School Board have done in the past or plan to do? _____

_____

10. Who are the members of the County Welfare Board? _____

_____

a. What is their job? _____

_____

b. Who selects the Board? _____ Who selects this Judge?

_____

c. Who is the Welfare Superintendent? _____ How is he selected? _____

d. What is his job? _____

_____

e. Is it important to you who is on the Welfare Board? _____ Why or why not? _____

_____

11. Who are the members of the School Board? _____

_____

_____

a. What is their job? _____

_____

b. For how long do they serve? _____ c. How are they selected? _____

_____

d. Who is the School Superintendent? _____ Who selects him? _____

e. Who selects members of the School Trustee Electoral Board? _____

_____

f. Can you have any say-so as to who will be on the School Trustee Electoral Board? _____ If so, how? _____

_____

g. Can you have any say-so as to who will be on the School Board? _____ If so, how? _____

h. Can you think of any way(s) in which you could have more say-so on who the members of the School Board should be? _____

_____

_____

12. Does your county have a Planning Commission? _____ If so, who are the members? _____

_____

a. What is their job? _____

_____

b. Who selects the Commission? _____

c. Can the acts of a Planning Commission affect you? _____ If so, how? ____

_____

13. Who are the members of the Electoral Board? _____

_____

a. What is their job? _____

_____

b. How long do they serve? _____ c. Who selects the Board? _____

_____ d. Who selects the registrar and precinct judges? _____ e. From what political party must a majority of the Board be? _____

_____ How does this help the one-party system continue? _____

_____

_____

14. Who is the County Agent? _____ Home Demonstration Agent? _____

a. What is their job? _____

_____

_____

b. Who selects them? _____

15. Who are the Justices of Peace in your county? _____

_____

a. How are they selected? _____

b. What is their job? _____

_____

16. Who fixes the salaries of the Attorneys for the Commonwealth, Treasurers, Commissioners of Revenue, and Sheriffs? _____

a. Who are the members of this Board? _____

_____

b. Who selects this Board? _____

c. What can this Board do to influence local and state elections? _____

_____

_____

d. How does this help a few men to control the government? _____

_____

_____

B. Local Town and City Government

Over half of Virginians now live in towns and cities. All the towns and the cities, except for the 23 independent cities, are part of the county in which they are located. People living in these towns and cities are part of two local governments-the town and the county- therefore they vote in county and town elections. However, people who live in the county do not vote in town elections.

The most important governing body is the Town Council.

1. Who are the members of the Town Council? _____

_____

_____

a. How are they selected? _____ When? _____

b. What are their chief duties? _____

_____

_____

c. Who is the head of the Council? _____ What is his name? _____

_____ How is he selected? _____

_____

d. Is it important to you who is selected on the town or city council? _____

Why or why not? _____

_____

e. Are there any Virginia or United States laws that the Council can decide whether or not people will get? _____

_____

2. Does your town have a City Manger? _____ If so, what is his name? _____

a. What are his duties? _____

_____

_____

b. How is he selected? _____

3. Who is the Town Clerk? _____

a. What are his duties? _____

_____

b. Who selects him? _____ For how long? _____

4. Who is the Town Treasurer? _____

a. What are his duties? _____

b. Who selects him? _____ For how long? _____

5. Who is the Town Attorney? _____

a. What are his duties? _____

_____

b. Who selects him? _____

6. Who are some other town officials and what are their duties?

Official	Duties
_____	_____
_____	_____
_____	_____
_____	_____
_____	_____

a. How were they selected? _____

b. Do you think they are doing a good job? _____ Why or why not? _____

_____

C. Review and Summary of Local Government

Now let us review what we have learned about local government and gain a better understanding of how our local government works. First, let us fill in several diagrams.

Diagram 1

Name the county officials that are elected by the people. Also name county officials and boards appointed by the Board of Supervisors.

——— Elected by County Voters

- - - - - Appointed by Board of Supervisors

1. What county officials are elected by the people? _____

_____

_____

a. When are they elected? _____

b. Most county officials serve for how many years? _____

2. What county officials does the Board of Supervisors appoint? _____

_____

_____

3. How is it possible for a majority of the Board of Supervisors to be elected by less than a majority of county voters? _____

_____

_____

4. Who is the Circuit Court Judge? _____ What other counties does he serve? _____

a. What county officials and boards does the Circuit Court Judge appoint? ____

_____

_____

b. Why is the Circuit Court Judge sometimes called the "silent partner" in the government? _____

_____

_____

c. Who selects the Judge? _____

d. For how long does he serve? _____

e. How does the power of the Circuit Court Judge weaken the power of the Board of Supervisors? _____

_____

f. Would local county voters have more say so in their government if the Supervisors appointed the boards and officials that are now appointed by the Circuit Court Judge? _____ If so, why? _____

_____

_____

g. Would this be more democratic? _____ Why or why not? _____

_____

_____

h. How does the Circuit Court Judge make it easier for a machine to govern Virginia? _____

_____ _____

5. How could the Byrd machine or other machines in the future punish local officials who are elected by the people if they do not support the machine candidates? _____ _____

_____

6. We have seen that the power of the county voters has been limited by:

a. the power of the Circuit Court Judges who are not directly elected by the people to appoint many people who govern the county.

b. the power of the Board of Compensation to punish county officials if they do not support the candidates of the machine.

If we want our county government to become more democratic we must change this. Let us briefly examine how we can work to make our government more democratic.

a. First we must begin to educate people to the fact that while our leaders tell us we have a democratic form of government that this is not completely true. What are some of the ways we can make people aware of how to make our government more democratic?

1. _____

2. _____

3. _____ _____

4. _____

b. After we make people aware of the weaknesses of our government, then hopefully, they will want to make our county government more democratic. One way to change all the county governments at one time would be to get our Constitution changed. How is the Constitution changed? _____

_____

_____

c. As we can see, it is very difficult to change the Constitution and it takes a long time. However, it is possible to change our local government to make it more democratic. Several laws have been passed to make our county government more democratic. What other forms of county government are possible under these laws? _____

_____

d. Which of these forms of government would be best for our county? _____

_____

e. How can this form of government be bought about in our county? _____

_____

_____

_____

II State Government

Like the U.S.Government, Virginia's government is divided into three branches. They are:

Legislative
Executive
Judicial

A. While we shall primarily be concerned with the first two, let us briefly study all three branches.

1. What is the job of each branch?

Legislative _____

_____

Executive _____

_____

Judicial _____

_____

2. How are members of each branch selected?

Legislative _____

Executive _____

Judicial _____

B. Legislative Branch

The legislative branch of Virginia is the General Assembly which is made up of the House of Delegates and the Senate. There are 100 members in the House and 40 members in the Senate.

1. In which House of Delegate district do you live? _____

a. What other counties and cities are in this district? _____

_____

b. Who is the Delegate from your district? _____

c. When was he elected? _____ How long does he serve? _____

d. How many times has he been reelected, if any? _____

e. Do you know of any laws he has asked the House of Delegates to pass that would help or hurt Negroes and poor whites? _____

_____

_____

f. Do you know of any laws that he has voted for or against that would help or hurt Negroes and poor whites? _____

_____

_____

2. In which Senate district do you live? _____

a. What other counties and cities are in this district? _____

_____

b. Who is the Senator from your district? _____

c. When was he elected? _____ How long does he serve? _____

d. How many times has he been reelected, if any? _____

e. Do you know of any laws he asked the Senate to pass that would help or hurt

Negroes and poor whites? _____

_____

_____

f. Do you know of any laws that he has voted for or against that would help or hurt Negroes and poor whites? _____

_____

_____

C. Executive Branch

Every four years Virginians elect a Governor, Lt.Governor, and an Attorney General. These men head the executive branch of the government.

1. When are the above officials elected? _____

For how long do they serve? _____

2. What is the name of each?

Governor _____

Lt. Governor _____

Attorney General _____

3. What is the job of each?

Governor _____

_____

Lt. Governor _____

_____

Attorney General _____

_____

4. Who are some other members of the executive branch and what are their jobs?

Members	Jobs

III Federal Government

Virginia, like other states, elects people to represent them in the Federal government in Washington, D.C. In addition to voting for a President and Vice-President to represent them, Virginians also elect Congressmen and Senators.

A. Executive Branch

The President and Vice-President head the executive branch of the federal government.

1. For whom did a majority of Virginians vote for in the last presidential election? _____ In the previous three presidential elections? _____

   a. What caused the majority of Virginians to support the Democratic candidate rather than the Republican? _____

   _____

   b. Will this help Negroes? _____ Why or why not? _____

   _____

   _____

2. When are the President and Vice-President elected? _____

   For how long do they serve? _____

B. Legislative Branch

The House of Representatives and the Senate make up the legislative branch of the federal government.

1. How many Congressmen does Virginia have in the House of Representatives? ____

   a. What determines how many Representatives each state has? _____

   _____

   b. When are they elected? _____ For how long do they serve? _____

2. In what Congressional district do you live? _____

   a. What is your Congressman's name? _____

   b. What are some other counties and cities he represents? _____

   _____

   c. How long has he been in Congress? _____

   d. Does he vote with the Democrats or Republicans? _____

   e. How can you find out which laws he votes for or against? _____

   _____

3. Who are Virginia's two Senators?_____

a. When are Senators elected?_____

1. For how long do they serve?_____

b. How long have the present Senators been in office?

1._____ 2. _____

c. Do they vote with the Republicans or Democrats?

1._____ 2. _____

d. How can you find out which laws they vote for or against?

_____

IV. Voter Registration

A. First let us briefly take a look at some requirements for registering to vote in Virginia.

1. Who may register to vote?_____

a. Where do you register to vote_____

b. When can you register to vote?_____

2. What are some of the questions you have to answer when you register to vote? _____

_____

a. If you have trouble reading or writing or if you can not read or write, what is the registrar supposed to do?_____

_____

b. What is the name of the law that requires the registrar to do this? _____

c. What should you do if the registrar does not obey the law?

_____

3. When was the poll tax law passed in Virginia?_____

a. What did this law require?_____

_____

b. Why do you think the poll tax law was passed? _____

c. What political party was gaining power in Virginia when the poll tax law was passed? _____

d. What other laws were passed during the same time as the poll tax law was passed? _____

_____

4. There used to be a requirement that poll taxes must be paid in order to vote in federal elections. How was that requirement ended? _____

a. How was the requirement that poll taxes must be paid to vote in local and state elections ended? _____

_____

b. Can the people who registered for federal elections only and did not pay the poll tax now vote in local and state elections? _____

5. If you have been registered in one county in Virginia and then move into a new county, how do you register? _____

_____

a. If you have moved from one district of the county to another, what must you do? _____

b. If you have changed your name, what must you do? _____

_____

c. Do you think these laws are fair? Why, or why not? _____

_____

6. What are primary elections? _____

_____

a. When are primary elections held? _____

b. Why are primary elections important? _____

_____

7. In Virginia you do not have to register by political party as you do in most states. Why do you think this is so? _____

_____

a. Why is this very important in primary elections? _____

_____

b. Do you think this is fair? Why, or why not? _____

_____

B. Now let us try to determine whether or not our county and city needs a voter registration drive.

1. Has your county had a voter registration drive? _____

a. If so, do you think it was successful? _____ Why, or why not? _____

b. Do you think there is a need for a voter registration drive?

_____

1. How many people are registered? _____ Where can you find this information? _____

2. Do you think this number could be increased. Why or why not? _____

_____

3. If you believe the number of registered voters can be increased, what do you believe is the best way? _____

_____

_____

2. What are some ways to get people to vote after they are registered? _____

_____

3. Do you think voting will really change things? Why or why not?

_____

_____

4. Even though Negroes outside the South have been able to register and vote for many years, most Negroes who live outside the South are also poor and live in slums. Why do you think voting has not helped them get better jobs, schools, and housing? _____

_____

_____

_____

a. What do you think would help them? _____

_____

_____

b. Why do you think people are poor? _____

_____

_____

_____

STOP COP TERROR

A black man, 43 year old Willie Boyd, who is a disabled veteran of World War II, was cursed and insulted by the white woman operator of the Adams Menswear Store, 10 Broad St., after she refused to let him use the washroom.

Mr. Boyd then called the police, thinking that he could get help from them. But instead, when the police came, they arrested Boyd.

All this happened because a black man, with his two young sons watching, thought he could get justice from the Atlanta City Police. But our brother, Mr. Boyd, did not remember that a white woman's word has always put the black man in a "trick bag." Instead of the police dealing with Lady Swartzberg, they arrested the victim.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS!

BLACK PEOPLE ARE 95% OF THE BUYERS IN THE BROAD ST. AND WHITEHALL ST. SHOPPING AREA. DURING MOST OF THE DAY THIS AREA LOOKS LIKE HUNTER ST. OR AUBURN AVE.

WHY DON'T WE HOLD 95% OF THE JOBS?

WHY DON'T WE HAVE BLACK MANAGERS IN THESE STORES?

WHY DOESN'T SOME OF THE HARD-EARNED MONEY THAT WE SPEND GO BACK TO ENRICH OUR BLACK COMMUNITIES?

BROTHERS AND SISTERS!

DON'T SHOP AT STORES THAT ONLY TAKE OUR MONEY TO WHITE SUBURBS, LEAVING OUR OWN COMMUNITIES RUNDOWN AND POOR.

DON'T SHOP AT STORES WITH VERY FEW BLACK SALES PEOPLE AND NO BLACK MANAGERS.

DON'T SHOP AT STORES THAT DON'T HAVE FREE SANITARY TOILET FACILITIES.

DEMAND THAT THESE MERCHANTS CONTRIBUTE A FAIR SHARE OF THEIR PROFITS TO UP-LIFT PROGRAMS IN THE BLACK COMMUNITY OR TO GRASS-ROOTS BLACK ORGANIZATIONS.

DEMAND THAT OUR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN BE TREATED WITH COURTESY BY THESE STORES — OR GO OUT OF BUSINESS!!

ONLY BY THESE ACTIONS CAN WE TRULY GET OUR MONEYS' WORTH FROM THE BROAD STREET MERCHANTS.

Volume IV, Numbers 7 and 8 / 60 cents

P. 26 & others

FOCUS MIDWEST / 66

The Dirty Business of School Magazines

Herbert I. Schiller

On the Wrong Civil Rights Track

—in the City of Chicago / Albert A. Raby

—In the Suburbs of Chicago / Milton Rakove

The Tenuous Base of the St. Louis Economy

William H. Kester

A Reapportionment Proposal / Walter S. G. Kohn

The Day the Communist Came to Town / John S. Garrity

Rockwell Charms Northwestern / Lewis Z. Koch

Announcing: National Essay Invitation On The Triple Revolution

TV SALE!

RECONDITIONED & GUARANTEED!

• Floor Models • Trade-ins
• Demonstrators
• Some Like New

TRUETONE
21" Late model, Mahogany console $67

WESTINGHOUSE
21" Late model console $73

METEOR
21" Table model (Sears) $47

PORTABLE STEREO
Automatic Changer Table Model $37

MUNTZ
17" Table Model $37

PHILCO
21" Table Model $57

EMERSON
21" Lo-boy, extra clean $67

PHILCO
21" console, power tuner $73

GUARANTEED!
1 YEAR picture

Text of Kennedy's Address On Civil Rights in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Following is the text of President John F. Kennedy's civil rights message to the nation Tuesday night:

Good evening, my fellow citizens.

This afternoon, following a series of threats and defiant statements, the presence of Alabama guardsmen was required on the University of Alabama campus to carry out the final and unequivocal order of the United States district courts of the Northern District of Alabama. That order called for the admission of two clearly qualified young Alabama residents who happened to have been born Negro.

That they were admitted peacefully on the campus is due in good measure to the conduct of the students of the University of Alabama, who met their responsibilities in a constructive way.

I hope that every American, regardless of where he lives, will stop and examine his conscience about this and other related incidents. This nation was founded by men of many nations and backgrounds. It was founded on the principle that all men are created equal, and that the rights of every man are diminished when the rights of one man are threatened.

Soldiers Aren't Asked

Today we are committed to a worldwide struggle to promote and protect all of those who wish to be free, and when Americans are sent to Viet Nam or West Berlin, we do not ask for whites only. It ought to be possible, therefore, for American students of any color to attend any public institution they select without having to be backed up by troops.

It ought to be possible for American consumers of any color to receive equal service in places of public accommodation, such as hotels and restaurants and theaters and retail stores, without being forced to resort to demonstrations in the street. And it ought to be possible for American citizens of any color to register and vote in a free election without interference or fear of reprisal.

It ought to be possible, in short, for every American to enjoy the privilege of being American without regard to his race or his color. In short, every American ought to have the right to be treated as he would wish to be treated, as one would wish his children to be treated. But this is not the case.

The Negro baby born in America today, regardless of the sec-

United Press International Photo
PRESIDENT KENNEDY
Addresses the Nation

race except with respect to Negroes?

Now the time has come for this nation to fulfill its promises. The events in Birmingham and elsewhere have so increased the cries for equality that no city or state or legislative body can prudently choose to ignore them.

The fires of frustration and discord are burning in every city, North and South, where legal remedies are not at hand. Redress is sought in the streets, in demonstrations, parades and protests which create tensions and threaten violence and threaten lives.

We face, therefore, a moral crisis as a country and as a people. It cannot be met by repressive police action. It cannot be left to increased demonstrations in the streets. It cannot be quieted by token moves or tort. It is a time to act in the Congress, in your state and local legislative body and, above all, in all of our daily lives.

It is not enough to pin the blame on others, to say this is a problem of one section of the country or another, or deplore it. The fact that we face a great change is at hand, and our task, our obligation is to make that revolution, that change, peaceful and constructive for all.

Inviting Shame

Those who do nothing are inviting shame as well as violence. Those who act boldly are recognizing right as well as reality.

authorize the federal government to participate lawfully in law suits designed to end segregation in public education. We have succeeded in persuading many districts to desegregate voluntarily. Dozens have admitted Negroes without violence. Today a Negro is attending a state-supported institution in every one of our 50 states, but the pace is very slow.

Too many Negro children entering segregated grade school at the time of the Supreme Court's decision nine years ago will enter segregated high schools this fall, having suffered a loss which can never be restored. The lack of an adequate education denies the Negro a chance to get a decent job.

The orderly implementation of the Supreme Court decision, therefore, cannot be left solely to those who may not have the economic resources to carry the legal action or who may be subject to harassment.

Will Be Requested

Other features will also be requested, including greater protection for the right to vote. But legislation, I repeat, cannot solve this problem alone. It must be solved in the homes of every American in every community across our country.

In this respect, I want to pay tribute to those citizens North and South who have been working in their communities to make life better for all. They are acting not out of a sense of legal duty but out of a sense of human decency.

Like our soldiers and sailors in all parts of the world, they are meeting freedom's challenge on the firing line, and I salute them for their honor and their courage.

My fellow Americans, this is a problem which faces us all—in every city of the North as well as the South. Today there are Negroes unemployed two or three times as many compared to whites, inadequate in education, moving into the large cities, unable to find work, young people particularly out of work without hope, denied equal rights, denied the opportunity to eat at a restaurant or lunch counter or to go to a movie theater, denied the right to a decent education, denied almost today the right to attend a state university although qualified—it seems to me that these are matters which concern us all not merely president or congressmen or governors but every citizen of the United States. This is one country. It has become one country because all of us and all the people who come here had

ALL HOTPOINT TWO-DOORS

GUARANTEED!
1 YEAR picture tube warranty!

MUNTZ
21" Table Model $47

RCA
21" Table Model $57

MOTOROLA
21" Table Model $57

PORTABLE
17" TV $47

ADMIRAL
17" Table Model $37

RCA
17" Table Model $37

E-Z TERMS
• low down payments, easy terms
• no down payment financing available

MUNTZ
24" Table Models $57

165 Whitehall downtown

FREE PARKING OPEN 9 A.M. TO 8 P.M.
MUNTZ TV

he would wish to be treated, as one would wish his children to be treated. But this is not the case.

The Negro baby born in America today, regardless of the section of the state in which he is born, has about one-half as much chance of completing high school as a white baby born in the same place on the same day, one-third as much chance of completing college, one-third as much chance of becoming a professional man, twice as much chance of becoming unemployed, about one-seventh as much chance of earning $10,000 a year, a life expectancy which is seven years shorter, and the prospects of earning only half as much.

This is not a sectional issue. Difficulties over segregation and discrimination exist is every city, in every state of the union, producing in many cities a rising tide of discontent that threatens the public safety. Nor is this a partisan issue in a time of domestic crisis. Men of goodwill and generosity should be able to unite regardless of party or politics.

This is not even a legal or legislative issue alone. It is better to settle these matters in the courts than in the streets, and new laws are needed at every level, but law alone cannot make men see right.

We are confronted primarily with a moral issue. It is as old as the scriptures and is as clear as the American Constiution. The heart of the question is whether all Americans are to be afforded equal rights and equal opportunities, whether we are going to treat our fellow Americans as we want to be treated.

If an American, because his skin is dark, cannot eat lunch in a restaurant open to the public; if he cannot send his children to the best public school available; if he cannot vote for the public officials who represent him; if, in short, he cannot enjoy the full and free life which all of us want, then who among us would be content to have the color of his skin changed and stand in his place?

Who among us would then be content with the counsels of patience and delay? One hundred years of delay have passed since President Lincoln freed the slaves, yet their heirs, their grandsons are not fully free. They are not yet freed from the bonds of injustice. They are not yet freed from social and economic oppression, and this nation, for all its hopes and all its boasts, will not be fully free until all its citizens are free.

We Preach Freedom

We preach freedom around the world and we mean it, and we cherish our freedom here at home. But are we to say to the world, and much more importantly, to each other that this is a land of the free except for the Negroes; that we have no second-class citizens except Negroes; that we have no class or caste system, no ghettos, no master

Inviting Shame

Those who do nothing are inviting shame as well as violence. Those who act boldly are recognizing right as well as reality.

Next week I shall ask the Congress of the United States to act, to make a commitment it has not fully made in this century to the proposition that race has no place in American life or law. The federal judiciary has upheld that proposition in a series of forthright cases. The executive branch has adopted that proposition in the conduct of its affairs, including the employment of federal personnel, the use of federal facilities and the sale of federally financed housing.

But there are other necessary measures which only the Congress can provide, and they must be provided at this session. The old code of equity law under which we live demands for every wrong a remedy, but in too many communities, in too many parts of the country, wrongs are inflicted on Negro citizens as there are on remedies at law. Unless the Congress acts, their only remedy is the street.

I am, therefore, asking the Congress to enact legislation giving all Americans the right to be served in facilities which are open to the public—hotels, restaurants, theaters, retail stores and similar establishments.

This seems to me to be an elementary right. Its denial is an arbitrary indignity that no American in 1963 should have to endure, but many do.

Progress Continues

I have recently met with scores of business leaders urging them to take voluntary action to end this discrimination and I have been encouraged by their response, and in the last two weeks over 75 cities have seen progress made in desegregating these kinds of facilities. But many are unwilling to act alone, and for this reason, nationwide legislation is needed if we are to move this problem from the streets to the courts.

I am also asking Congress to

Shuttlesworth Home Guarded

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Police were ordered Tuesday to keep special watch on the home of integration leader Fred L. Shuttlesworth because a telephone caller threatened to blow up his home and family.

The Negro clergyman is the head of the Alabama Christian Movement and was one of the leaders in the integration demonstrations recently in Birmingham, Ala.

His family told police he recently left Birmingham and went to New Orleans.

not merely president or congressmen or governors but every citizen of the United States. This is one country. It has become one country because all of us and all the people who come here had an equal chance to develop their talents.

Cannot Be Said

We cannot say to 10 per cent of the population that you cannot have that right; that your children can't have the chance to

FILL YOUR FREEZER
NO MONEY DOW
90 DAYS SAME AS CASH
6 MO. AT BANK RATES

HAM
19c Lb.
BACON
19c Lb.
FRYERS
19c Lb.
SAUSAGE
19c Lb.
WITH PURCHASE OF ½ HEAVY BEEF

All Carcass Weights Subject To Cutting Loss
*Steak Orders 250 Lbs. or More
BUFORD HW
20-Minute Drive

develop whatever talents they have; that the only way that they are going to get their rights is to go into the streets and demonstrate.

I think we owe them and we owe ourselves a better country than that.

Therefore, I am asking for your help in making it easier for us to move ahead and prove the kind of equality or treatment which we would want ourselves; to give a chance for every child to be educated to the limit of his talents.

As I have said before, not every child has an equal talent or an equal ability or an equal motivation, but they should have the equal right to develop their talent and their ability and their motivation to make something of themselves.

We have a right to expect the Negro community will be responsible, will uphold the law, but they have a right to expect that the law will be fair; that the Constitution will be color blind, as Justice Harlan said at the turn of the century.

This is what we are talking about, and this is a matter which concerns this country and what it stands for, and in meeting it I ask the support of all of our citizens.

Thank you very much.

STOP SMOKING

At last! A pleasant, refreshing way to help break smoking habit. Great taste, gently medicated to help satisfy tobacco craving.

BAN-SMOKE-GUM

ON SALE AT WALGREENS

IT'S Hotpoint TWO-DOOR TRADE-IN TIME

If your refrigerator is ten years old or more, you've outgrown it — in terms of both usable capacity and meaningful operating features. For a limited time, we are featuring special terms and prices on our wide assortment of Hotpoint Two-Door Combination Refrigerator-Freezers. Save! See us now.

JUST TAKE A LOOK AT THESE VALUE-PACKED MODELS:

Model CK70D

Fourteen cubic feet at a rock-bottom price. New door liner with built-in egg tray, tall bottle storage, half-shelf in freezer compartment. Now only

$268.00 With Trade

Model CW70D

Finest of the top-freezer two-doors. Temperature-controlled Butter Bin, twin porcelain crispers, slide-out porcelain meat pan, aluminum shelves.

$4 PER WEEK

THEY'RE FEATURED ON

The TONIGHT SHOW NBC-TV STARRING Johnny Carson

ALL HOTPOINT TWO-DOORS ROLL OUT ON WHEELS FOR EASY CLEANING, SWEEPING, WAXING

Another Special Value from Hotpoint

Archbishop Ousts Selma Priest Who Aided Voter Registration Drive

By JOHN COGLEY

The Rev. Maurice Oulette, pastor of St. Elizabeth's Mission, a Roman Catholic church for Negroes in Selma, Ala., has been ordered to leave the Mobile-Birmingham diocese by Archbishop Thomas J. Toolen.

Father Oulette is a member of the Edmundite Fathers, a religious society of priests that specializes in work among Negro Catholics. Normally, his appointments would be determined by the Superior-General of the Edmundite order, which has its headquarters in Winooski, Vt.

The Superior-General, the Very Rev. Eymard P. Galligan, made a special trip to Alabama two seeks ago to ask Archbishop Toolen to reconsider the decision, but he was unsuccessful.

Father Oulette will leave July 1. He plans to vacation briefly in New York and then proceed to the generalate of his order in Winooski for reassignment. Another Edmundite priest will take his place in Selma.

Father Oulette, 39 years of age, was sent to Selma in 1961 as Superior of the Edmundite Mission House there and pastor of St. Elizabeth's.

His troubles began about three years ago, when he became active in the Negro voter-registration drive in Selma and attended mass meetings organized by the Dallas County Improvement Association and other organizations that were the nucleus of the drive at that time. He was the only white person in Selma associated with the drive.

"I felt," he said yesterday, "that as a priest my obligation was to help my people in every way I could, not just to sit in church but to be actively concerned about their welfare."

As a result of these activities, he was asked by what he termed the "white power structure" to leave the city.

"Word was gotten to me that if I attended any more of these meetings, I would be arrested. I went back, but nobody arrested me," he said.

Then his superior was called by a Selma official, after a meeting of the Selma City Council, and told that Father Oulette was marked for arrest. He said that the superior asked him what he wanted to do.

"I told him I had not done anything wrong and would wait for them to come and get me," he said. "I put on clean clothes, picked up a toothbrush, put my breviary in my pocket and was ready. Nothing happened, so I went to bed."

About 10 o'clock the same evening a call from the city's leaders was put through to the Edmundite superior in the South at that time the same Father Galligan who is now superior-general.

Father Oulette after hearing about the call, got up and went out for a meeting between Mayor Chris Hines, County Solicitor Blanshard McCloud, Probate Judge Bernard Reynolds, and Father Galligan.

"First they asked me if I would leave town voluntarily. I said no. Then they suggested that I take a vacation. I said I had already taken my vacation. Then they told me that they had been getting phone calls and were solicitous about my welfare. I told them I knew about the dangers, but that I felt my job was here and I wasn't about to run away from it."

See the Archbishop

Fathers Oulette and Galligan then went to see Archbishop Toolen. Father Oulette told the Archbishop about his participation in the Negro voter-registration drive. The Archbishop said he saw nothing wrong about it.

"So," said Father Oulette, "I kept up my activities."

"I was accused by the City Council of teaching children how to demonstrate and how to resist the police," he said. "I was charged with calling Atlanta and asking for 500 Negroes to come to Selma and break up the town. None of this was true. At the time I had never seen a demonstration. I told them they were out of their minds."

Then, according to Father Oulette, his phone was tapped and visitors to his office and home were checked out, their license numbers were taken down by vigilant house-watchers. The atmosphere grew increasingly tense.

Then, "about a year ago, before the big publicized march," he said, "we had our first demonstrations in Selma."

"Some 400 kids were jailed," he said. "I went over to the jail to see who was there and to tell them not to be afraid. But I was not allowed inside. They said I was inciting the kids."

At this time, the priest said, he was supported by Archbishop Toolen, though the Archbishop was on the recieving end of complaints from various city fathers and civic leaders charging that Father Oulette was stirring up the Negroes of Selma.

Father Oulette asked the Archbishop's permission to demonstrate. The permission was refused, but he was permitted to continue his work with the voting-registration drive.

Last September the priest underwent two major surgical operations and was still convalescing during the massive demonstrations in Selma in March.

"But when priests and nuns came in from all over the country," he said "I did all I could to help. I told them who the responsible leaders were. I particularly watched over the sisters to see that they did not jeopardize lives by acting imprudently. A couple of times, I raised the roof about their being placed in dangerous situations."

Archbishop Toolen did not approve of the Northern clergy's demonstrating in Selma last March. He told a St. Patrick's Day audience that the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., was "dividing the people."

"I do not believe that priests are equipped to lead groups in disobedience to the laws of the state," he said.

Priests and nuns, he said, "are out of place in these demonstrations—their place is at home doing God's work."

The 79-year-old Archbishop Toolen is not a segregationist. In April, 1964, he ordered that all the Catholic schools in Alabama be integrated by September, 1965.

When Father Galligan asked why his Edmundite confrere was being ordered out of the diocese, Archbishop Toolen said that he did not have to give a reason, he just wanted him out.

"He said that I was a good priest, but that I was too wild on this racial question. But I never disobeyed one of his orders. I never demonstrated. I felt, though, like a man who had been allowed to walk out to the middle of a stream and then was forbidden to swim in either direction," Father Oulette said.

Archbishop Toolen yesterday was unavailable for comment.

Chattanooga Times — Housing Sec — (Sa)

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1965.

SOUTH PARK AREA TO PLAN CLEANUP

Residents Meet Tuesday at Wesley Center to Talk Over Drive

Final plans for a community-wide cleanup-paintup and renovation program in the south Highland Park area will be shaped next Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., when residents of the area—bounded roughly by Willow Street, Bailey Avenue, 23rd Street and Washington Street—are invited to Wesley Community Center, 1024 Main St., to form a community organization.

Lois Whitley Jr. is chairman of the committee directing the organization. William E. Davis is vice chairman, James Hampton, treasurer, and Lemmie E. Thomas, chaplain.

Miss Pearle Edwards, director of Wesley Center, is active in assisting with the program. Don (Chuck) Smith, program worker at the center, is also cooperating.

Pendell Meyers, representing the Scenic Cities Beautiful Commission, has been advising the committee. SCBC does not undertake the program as one of its own projects, but offers counsel and advice.

Dilapidated, dingy buildings, accumulations of rubbish and overgrown property are among the conditions residents of the area hope to correct. It is intended to be a long-range, continuing program, concerned not only with correcting existing problems, but with prevention of new ones, the announcement said.

—Times Staff Photo by Harold Haven

AREA RENOVATORS: Responsibility for renovation of a large area in south Highland Park is assumed by the above committee of residents of the neighborhood. From left are Lemmie E. Thomas, chaplain; Lois Whatley Jr., chairman of the group; William E. Davis, vice chairman; Don (Chuck) Smith, program worker at Wesley Center, and James Hampton, treasurer. Formal organization will take place at a mass meeting next Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

The Journ... Has Served ... For Se... ...abor

Morgan C. Stanford
1431 Candler Bldg.
Atlanta 3, Ga.

The Journal of Labor

OLDEST WEEKLY LABOR NEWSPAPER IN THE SOUTH DEDICATED TO THE INTEREST OF ALL WORKING PEOPLE

Enjoy the BEST
Attend The MOVIES
M.P.M.O., Local 225

VOL. LXX NO. ... ATLANTA, GEORGIA, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1965 Price Seven Cents

It Is Our Re... For The Development... ...man Talent

By J. O. MOORE
President, Atlanta, Ga. Labor Council AFL-CIO

Change today is a constant, never-ending phenomenon for us. It is almost a certainty that the generation now in our schools and colleges will go through a lifetime of technological innovations. When you consider that some 90 per cent of the research scientists who have ever lived are still alive—And that about half of all the research and development money spent in all the history of the United States was spent in the last eight years—you can grasp the extent to which technological change has accelerated our need to move aggressively on the serious problem of training and development.

With the month of September and the start of a new school term upon us, President Johnson has appealed to organizations in every segment of American life to support a nationwide campaign to encourage young Americans to return to school this fall.

The labor movement has every reason to heed this appeal, and to assist in every way possible. The President estimates that during the coming school year more than 750,000 youngsters will drop out of school without a high school diploma. In the age of automation and ever-accelerating technological advance, these boys and girls are courting almost certain economic disaster for their future lives.

They will find themselves qualified for little less but unskilled work, and with each passing year, the amount of that type of work available declines sharply. A high school education has become almost a necessity as preparation for any kind of meaningful job.

The labor movement has been perhaps the most ardent and effective supporter of governmental measures to remedy unemployment, eradicate poverty, and strengthen the Nation's educational structure. The goal has been a purposeful and rewarding life for every American.

Part and parcel of that goal must be an education which equips all of our citizens to meet the demands imposed by today's jobs and those that will come with the jobs of the future. This objective, however, cannot be legislated.

It can only be attained through a national, voluntary effort to convince our young people to remain in school until they have fulfilled the highest possible level of education of which they are capable. The President's plea deserves the strong support of trade unionism everywhere.

All young people between the ages of 14 and 18 are asked to think — think — think. Don't stay away from school! If already out of school and no work—go back! The best chance for a job is for those with high school training. Father, Mother, Friend: Give this note to the boy or girl who does not like school. "If you don't like school, you might not like work." Bosses don't like School Dropouts. Be a School Dropin!

Stewart Avenue Methodist Church To Hold Homecoming

Stewart Ave. Methodist Church will hold its HOMECOMING Sunday, September 12, at 11 a.m.

After the morning message, which will be delivered by Reverend Charles L. Middlebrooks, a former pastor, dinner will be spread under the tent. Members and former members are cordially invited to attend.

J. O. Moore In Georgia Baptist Hospital for Operation

J. O. Moore, president of the Atlanta, Ga. Labor Council and secretary of the Georgia State AFL-CIO, underwent surgery in Georgia Baptist Hospital Thursday, September 9. Mr. Moore is in room 384.

His many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

Harper, Coker And Lee To Attend Conference In San Francisco

Virgil B. Harper, financial secretary-treasurer of Plumbers and Steamfitters Local Union No. 72, accompanied by R. L. (Bob) Coker and M. A. Lee, will leave Saturday to attend the National Conference of the Retirement Pension group, which will meet in San Francisco. They expect to be back in Atlanta next Thursday.

Representatives from all over the United States will assemble for this Conference.

Tom C. Palmer, executive manager of Mechanical Contractors Association and Joel Howell, manager of Huffman Wolfe Company will represent management at the Conference.

If You Like Progress - Give A Buck To COPE

If you like what Congress has been doing — passing progressive laws to help working people and the nation—here's a tip: It would be a smart idea to do what you can now to make sure Congress goes right on enacting needed legislation.

And what you can do now is give a buck to COPE, the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. Your dollar, united with other dollars contributed to COPE by union members, will be used to help re-elect in 1966 the liberal congressmen who have been going to bat for you this year.

This is the only assignment for dollars contributed to COPE, to help finance liberal candidates—our friends—in their campaigns.

Is it worth a buck? Figure it out for yourself on the basic of the achievements of the liberal 89th Congress. Here is part of its record:

"RIGHT TO WORK" REPEAL
...ue went to press,
...s pending on re-
...(b) of the Taft-
...ion authoriz-
...rk" laws.
...oted to

Death Of The Atlanta Times Is Unfortunate And Tragic

By CHARLIE HOUSTON

A tragic event happened in Atlanta on the last day of August. Directly or indrectly its aftermath will be felt by every resident of the metropolitan area.

The Atlanta Times is dead, and once more Atlanta and its surrounding area will be without competition in the daily newspaper field.

The Times did not die a natural death. It was murdered.

Incompetence and inexperience in the management and editorial divisions were primarily responsible for the "assassination."

Ignorance of the mechanical facts of newspaper publishing coupled with staggering extravagance also played parts in the paper's demise.

To the uninitiate, the extravagance was visible in the number of overstuffed, luxuriously furnished executive suites. These suites were fully as ornate as those provided for members of the Congress of the United States. (Perhaps there is a connection there.) Unfortunately, there was no free-spending Uncle Sam to pick up the tab.

The Times took off like a supersonic jet. It is unfortunate that the pilot or pilots were hardly qualified to fly a Piper Cub.

Those responsible for many costly purchases had little or no practical knowledge of the efficency and practicability of the equipment they were buying.

The paper had larger editorial and advertising department staffs than many dailies of twice its size. There was a dearth of able and skilled reporters and writers.

The composing room—cost at least a hundred thousand dollars more than was necessary. The money was wasted in the purchase of "the latest" in typesetting machines. Ten of them, in fact, which cost around $30,000 each. These "what no hands" wonders are more or less in the experimental stage. They do not, and cannot, live up to the claims made by high-pressure salesman "working" on a purchaser possessed by little knowledge of composing room composition. In The Times composing room seldom were more than five of the machines in operation at one time. The others were down for various reasons, usually mechanical.

One member of the original board of directors, himself a printer, owner of a successful union-manned commercial plant, and also publisher of a profitable construction industry magazine, tried to get The Times to buy more practical and economical typesetting equipment. He was the only experienced member on the board, but none would listen to him. When he saw the officials were determined on a policy which could only prove wasteful and extravagant, he promptly resigned. There is little doubt that the same waste existed in all other departments.

It is our hope that The Atlanta Times is only moribund, not dead; that by some miracle it may be resurrected and restored to a vigorous life with a middle-of-the-road policy replacing the far-right, ultra-conservative viewpoints of the past.

RUNOFF FOR CITY-WIDE PRIMARY SET FOR THURSDAY, SEPT. 16 DO NOT FAIL TO VOTE

The runoff for the City Primary will be held Thursday, September 16, 1965.

Atlanta, Ga. Labor Council COPE endorsed the following candidates as friends of the working people and best qualified for ... citizens of the City of At...

FOR ALDERMEN
...

Douglas Wood, Fourth Wood
Cecil Turner, Sixth Ward
FOR BOARD OF ED...
Glenn Frick
CITY EX...
CO...

Dirksen Fights Repeal Of 14(b)

By ED TORBUSH
Member ATU #48

Good old Senator Everett Dirksen from Illinois is at it again. He came on the NBC News on TV Thursday evening, Sept. 9, to tell all us admitted union members that he will fight the repeal of Section 14(b) of Taft-Hartley to the death. He will filibuster against its passage, although he deplores the use of the filibuster as a parliamentary device when it is used by the Senate members from the South, the Deep South, that is. Well, did he not fight every piece of legislation that he had a chance to fight which would help the working people of the United States to have a little say-so about their destiny? Of course, he is opposed to us. He fought Medicare down the line ,he has ridiculed the men and women in organized labor many times by his quick jumps to the defense of Big Business in the interest of helping them to continue to control the laboring men and wome nof this country.

The Hon. Mr. Dirksen has long been a membe rof America's most exclusive Closed Shop, the Senate of the United States of America. The working conditions are the finest, the pay is excellent, fringe benefits have long included a wonderful pension plan, and their own Medicare program certainly has outstripped anything available outside government ranks.

Imagine a man serving in our most exclusive closed shop (one theoretically controlled by the people's vote) turning on the working people of this great country to the end that he votes and works against their best interests and along with the desires of the C of C, the NAM and other select groups dedicated to the suppression of labor organizations, such as the American Medical Association, etc., while their groups arrogate for themselves the most complete form of the closed shop known to the world!

Members of organized labor! When will all of us get up off our lazy derrieres and stage a march on Congress second to none eve... carried out in pursuance of t... right of self-rule for the w... people of the United S... personally am ready!... and tired of ...
bers ...

Peter E. Terzick, General Treasurer United Brotherhood Of Carpenters, To Address Labor Council October 13th

Peter E. Terzick, General Treasurer United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, will address the Atlanta Georgia Labor Council, AFL-CIO at the first regular meeting to be held on Wednesday night, October 13th, 1965. Announcement was made by Council secretary R. J. (Bob) Butler.

Communications were received from Judge Luther Alverson, Judge Jeptha C. Tanksley and Judge Sam Phillips McKenzie, Superior Court Judges, acknowledging letters received from the Council in regard to the fact that no labor representative was appointed on the Grand Jury Commission.

Each expressed willingness upon the next vacancy to consider labor's recommendations.

Judge Harold R. Banke of the Superior Court, Clayton Judicial Circuit, wrote a note of appreciation for the endorsement given him by the Council while he was under consideration for the U. S. District Judge.

Judge Banke stated that he had been informed that he was finally evaluated as number 2 on the list of eight recommended by the Senators.

Two communications, addressed to vice-president Harry Bexley were received, one from Congressman Charles Longstreet Weltner, concerning labor's opposition to the legislation to give home rule to the District of Columbia, and the other from Congressman James A. Mackay.

Congressman Weltner stated that he is inclined to favor this legislation, as he feels it is now time to give the people of the District of Columbia a voice in their own government and the government of the United States. He expressed surprise by the position taken by the Atlanta Georgia Labor Council, and stated that he would be greatly interested to know the reasons for opposing this legislation.

Delegate J. C. Whitley of Fire Fighters Local 134 said the reason for the opposition was that the City Employees would lose all their benefits and would have to start from scratch.

Congressman James A. Mackay, in his communication, stated that he had not committed himself on this issue and enclosed pro and con information which he said he wished Mr. Bexley and others would study and advise him of their conclusions.

Following the reading of a letter from W. H. Montague, Sr., president of the Georgia State AFL-CIO, in which he stated the Georgia State, AFL-CIO would like to sponsor a one day Labor School to discuss Central Bodies and their functions; Civil Rights; Workmen's Compensation-Unemployment Insurance; COPE and legislative matters; Community Services and Collective Bargaining, a motion was made and passed unanimously to support such a school.

President Montague stated that if there is enough interest to warrant a school, top notch instructors from the AFL-CIO Educational Department and probably from the Educational Department staff of international unions could be obtained.

A request was made by President Montague in another communication for all local unions and Centarl Bodies, affiliated with the Georgia State AFL-CIO to prepare all the information on all of the on-the-job accidents which have happened as far back as recorded, due to the lack of safety devices and precautions.

This information is necessary in order to properly draw a general

(Continued on Page Two)

Open House At EOA Neighborhood Center ...nomic Opportunity Atlanta's

...ighborhood
new Center ...
E...

Human Relations Council Assails Integration Plans

BIRMINGHAM POST-HERALD 9/29/65

Special to The Post-Herald

HUNTSVILLE, Sept. 28 — "Freedom-of-choice plans for school desegregation show little promise of effecting in Alabama the purpose and intent of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," the Alabama Council on Human Relations, Inc., said today.

This is the major conclusion of a "Special report" which has been sent to the U.S. Office of Education and to school superintendents in Alabama by the Alabama Council on Human Relations.

Prepared by its staff, the report was adopted by the organization's board of directors.

The report does not suggest possible revisions or alternatives.

Discrimination Forbidden

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act forbids racial discrimination in any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

The Alabama Council report points out that, according to the Office of Education's statement of policies, this part of the law "prohibits the extension of Federal financial assistance to any dual or segregated system of schools based on race." In order to continue to receive such assistance, "school officials must eliminate all practices characteristic of such dual or segregated school systems."

"Freedom-of-choice desegregation plans are not likely to attain this purpose, the Council's paper says, because "as long as certain schools can be understood by a community to be 'the Negro schools,' Negro students are being discriminated against, no matter if they are allowed to transfer to 'the white schools'."

The report interprets the results of the first year of school desegregation under Title VI as tending to confirm that freedom-of-choice plans leave too much responsibility for school desegregation up to Negro parents who may be vulnerable to social and economic pressures and reprisals.

"Under the conditions prevailing in Alabama," the report says, "a freedom-of-choice plan would say, in effect, 'This school system will now make an exception to the rule for all Negro children whose parents insist upon it'."

The Office of Education's regulations, although allowing freedom-of-choice plans, are quoted by the Alabama Council as stating: "The responsibility to eliminate segregation rests with the school authorities and is not satisfied by rules and practices which shift the burden of removing discrimination to the class or classes of persons previously discriminated against."

Few Negroes Integrated

After pointing out that freedom-of-choice plans are basically similar to plans allowed by the courts, the report finds that Alabama's four largest cities, all under-ordered plans for at least the third year, had few Negro students in school with whites this Fall—despite the added impetus of Title VI requirements. Birmingham had 53, Mobile, 39, and Montgomery, 32. Figures were not available from Huntsville, but last year there were only 31.

The school system with the largest number of transfers, the report said, was Florence, with 142.

The Alabama Council estimates the total number of Negroes enrolled in formerly white schools in the state at between 1000 and 1200. This is only about one-third of one per cent of the total Negro school population of approximately 300,000.

This is not a good start, the paper points out, when there are only three years to complete elimination of the dual school system—especially in view of the fact that about half of the districts desegregated all 12 grades this year.

Compared to the number of Negroes in school with whites in other Southern cities, "the cities of Alabama have managed only a token of tokenism," the report says.

The Alabama Council on Human Relations, with headquarters in Huntsville, is an association of more than 1000 Alabama citizens. Its stated purpose is "to attain through research and education, equal opportunities for all people of Alabama."

Pat - If I've already sent you this, I apologize. Can't remember!
Ed

ACCORDING TO RIGHTS ACT HUNTSVILLE NEWS 9/29/65

Report says plan ineffective

"Freedom-of-choice plans (for school desegregation) show little promise of effecting in Alabama the purpose and intent of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964."

That is the major conclusion of a "special report" which has been sent to the U. S. Office of education and to school superintendents in Alabama by the Alabama Council on Human Relations which is headquartered at 2809 Governor's Dr., SW, Huntsville. Prepared by its staff, the report was adopted by the organization's board of directors on Saturday.

The report does not suggest possible revisions or alternatives.

Title VI of the Civil Rights Act forbids racial discrimination in any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

The Alabama Council report points out that, according to the Office of Edcuation's statement of policies, this part of the law "prohibits the extension of Federal financial assistance to any dual or segregated system of schools based on race." In order to continue to receive such assistance, "school officials must eliminate all practices characteristic of such dual or segregated school systems."

Freedom-of-choice desegregation plans are not likely to attain this purpose, the Council's paper says, because "as long as certain schools can be understood by a community to be 'the Negro schools' Negro students are being discriminated against, no matter if they are allowed to transfer to 'the white schools'."

The report interprets the results of the first year of school desegregation under Title VI as tending to confirm the widely-expressed fear that freedom-of-choice plans leave too much responsibility for school desegregation up to Negro parents who may be vulnerable to social and economic pressures and reprisals. "Under the conditions prevailing in Alabama," the report states, "a freedom-of-choice plan would say, in effect, 'This school system will now make an exception to the rule for all Negro children whose parents insist upon it'."

The Office of Education's regulations, although allowing freedom-of-choice plans, are quoted by the Alabama Council as stating: "The responsibility to eliminate segregation rests with the school authorities and is not satisfied by rules and practices which shift the burden of removing discrimination to the class or classes of persons previously discriminated against."

After pointing out that freedom-of-choice plans are basically similar to plans allowed by the courts, the report finds that Alabama's four largest cities, all under court-ordered plans for at least the third year, had few Negro students in school with whites this fall — despite the added impetus of Title VI requirements. Birmingham had 53; Mobile, 39; and Montomgery, 32. Figures were not available from Huntsville, but last year there were only 31.

The school system with the largest number of transfers, the report said, was Florence, with 142.

The Alabama Council estimates the total number of Negroes enrolled in formerly white schools in the state at between 1,000 and 1,200. This is only about one-third of one per cent of the total Negro school population of approximately 300,000. This is not a good start, the paper points out, when there are only three years to complete elimination of the dual school system — especially in view of the fact that about half of the districts desegregated all twelve grades this year.

Compared to the number of Negroes in school with whites in other Southern cities, "the cities of Alabama have managed only a token of tokenism," the report says.

The Alabama Council on Human [illegible] Relations, [illegible] association [illegible] Alabama residents. Its stated purpose is "to attain through research and [illegible] equal opportunities for all people of Alabama."

Wiley A. Branton Speaks In Montgomery, October 2

9/29/65 BIRMINGHAM WORLD

Wiley A. Branton, Executive Secretary of the President's Council on Equal Opportunity, will speak on "The Rationale of the Voting Rights Act" at a conference to be held Saturday, October 2, in Montgomery.

The President's Council is composed of most of the Cabinet members and heads of major Federal agencies, with the Vice President serving as Chairman. The Council has the responsibility of coordinating the activities of the Federal Government in the field of civil rights.

Mr. Branton was formerly Director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta, Georgia. The Project was engaged in research relating to the causes for low registration of voters in eleven Southern States.

Others appearing on a panel at the conference will include:

Howard Gliskstein, General Counsel of the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights;

William T. Atkinson, State Voting Examiner, U. S. Civil Service Commission;

Mrs. Martha Witt Smith, Chairman of the Public Relations Committee of the Alabama Board of Registrars Association and Chairman of the Madison County Board of Registrars.

The conference, which will begin at 10:00 a. m., in the Jefferson Davis Hotel, will be sponsored by the Alabama Council on Human Relations. Executive Director of the organization is J. Edwin Stanfield.

The Alabama Council on Human Relations is a biracial organization of Alabama citizens. Its purpose is to attain, through research and education, equal opportunities for all people of Alabama.

Among other participants in the statewide conference will be members of civil rights organizations, the Natinal Citizens Committee for Community Relations, the Alabama Advisory Committee of the U. S. Civil Rights Commission, and the executive committee of the Alabama Board of Registrars Association.

The purpose of the conference, according to Mr. Stanfield, is "to clarify the provisions of the Voting Rights Act and to obtain information about problems and difficulties which have been encountered both by those seeking to register and by Boards of Registrars trying to comply with the law."

"In the process the council hopes to clear up misunderstandings and reduce tensions," Stanfield added. "Too much heat and not enough light has been generated in Alabama. We feel that people who cannot at all agree with each other's views of actions can at least try to understand why the other person thinks and acts as he does."

PAGE(S) PARTIALLY ILLEGIBLE

Alabama Council Sponsors Voting Rights Conference

ALA. JOURNAL 9/30/65

The Alabama Council on Human Relations will sponsor a conference on the 1965 Voting Rights Act at the Jefferson Davis Hotel Saturday. The meeting will begin at 10 a.m. and continue until 4:30 p.m.

J. Edwin Stanfield, executive director of the Huntsville-based council, said 350 persons are expected to attend

Featured speakers will be Wiley Branton, executive secretary of the President's Council on Equal Opportunity; Howard Glickstein, general counsel for the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights; William T. Atkinson, state voting examiner for the U.S. Civil Service Commission, and Mrs. Martha Witt Smith, chairman of the public relations committee of the Alabama Board of Registrars Association.

Stanfield said developments in voter registration will make this conference particularly significant."

Civil Rights Group Blasts State Plan

ALABAMA JOURNAL 9/29/65

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—Desegregation plans allowing freedom of choice will be ineffective in carrying out integration in Alabama schools, the Alabama Council on Human Relations said today.

The conclusions of the civil rights organization were drawn in a special report released today and sent to the U.S. Office of Education and to school superintendents in Alabama.

The report, adopted by the group's board of directors Saturday, said, "As long as certain schools can be understood by a community to be 'the Negro schools' Negro students are being discriminated against, no matter if they are allowed to transfer to 'white schools'."

The council said freedom-of-choice plans are basically similar to plans allowed by the courts. The report said Alabama's four largest cities, all under court-ordered plans for at least the third year, had few Newro students in school with whites despite requirements of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The group estimated the total number of Negroes enrolled in formerly white schools at between 1,000 and 1,200. "This is only about one-third of one per cent of the total Negro school population of approximately 300,000," the report said.

"The cities of Alabama have managed only a token of tokenism," the document stated.

The Alabama Council on Human Relations, headquartered in Huntsville, has more than 1,000 members.

Alabama Officials Get Credit For Voter Rights

ALABAMA JOURNAL 10/2/65

A 100 years after the Civil War every effort must still be made in order that the South becomes part of the United States of America.

So said Attorney Wiley Branton, Executive Secretary of the President's Council of Equal Opportunity, today to more than 200 persons meeting at the Jefferson Davis Hotel

The one-day conference on the Voting Rights Act of 1965 is designed to explain the Act rather than making plans to enforce it. Branton, who in three weeks will join the staff of the Justice Department, in no way spoke for the department today, he said.

"We are working for people to come together everywhere over this land of ours without feeling odd or discriminated against," he stated.

"It is rather ludicrous to discuss the Voting Act of 1965 with you people gathered here," he said, "because your state and its officials have contributed more to its passage than any other in the U.S."

"They didn't want the act," he stated, "but they so aroused the conscience of the nation and the ire of the President that its (the 1965 Act) passage was immediate."

What happens in Alabama effects all the U.S. and with the fast communications, the entire world, he said. With the great conflict between the Communist and American ideology, how can we (the U.S.) convince people over the world that our way is best with things happening such as in Selma, people in European countries ask, he said.

Branton travelled for more than five weeks in Europe on an unplanned trip telling Europeans who stormed the embassies with questions, what was happening in the South.

State registrars have promised to abide by the act, he said, but the psychological effect on the Negro who has tried to register with these same people over the last 10 or more years, is quite apparent, he said.

"There are many incidents where people (Negroes) have stood all day in line awaiting to register and then been turned away with 'come back next time.' But next time," he said, "is two weeks away in Alabama."

"SUNDAY NOTEBOOK" COLUMN

While in Georgia

CONTRASTING REPORTS on school desegregation came from Alabama and Georgia last week. While the Alabama Council on Human Relations was complaining that "freedom-of-choice plans (for school desegregation) show little promise of effecting in Alabama the purpose and intent of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964," Georgia School Superintendent Claude Purcell was saying that "the local people are carrying out their pledges in good faith. They are doing what they committed themselves to do to comply with the law."

Georgia Board of Education figures indicated that more than 9,000 Negro students now attend over 435 integrated Georgia schools. The Alabama Human Relations Council estimated the number in Alabama at between 1,000 and 1,200.

BHAM NEWS 10/3/65

File

Pat, thought you might be interested in this.
gb

JDN
9/29/65

Cox Refuses To Order Buildings Integrated

By W. C. SHOEMAKER
Daily News Staff Writer

A federal judge has refused to order desegregation of a group of publicly owned buildings in Canton.

District Judge Harold Cox, in an order filed in Jackson today, said he "confidently believes" officials of the offices involved "intend in good faith to comply with federal law in the future."

A group of Negroes had asked for a temporary injunction ordering desegregation of facilities at the Madison County Courthouse, the Canton Municipal Library, the Canton City Hall, and the county office of the U.S. Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

The Negroes also protested lack of tables and chairs in the library, guns they said the county registrar kept in his office and records kept according to race by two justices of the peace headquartered in the courthouse.

Cox said segregation signs had been removed from the offices at the time the suit was heard.

DISMISSES COMPLAINT

He dismissed a complaint that the justices of the peace office doors were decorated with Citizens Councils decals. "These officials themselves have vested rights under the constitution to join any organization of their choice and to be proud of this choice," Cox wrote.

Regarding segregation of JP files by race, he said "it cannot be easily conceived as to any possible right of any one of these plaintiffs that could be or is infringed by the method in which the Justices of the peace keep their records, even though they may designate or identify them as colored."

GUNS NON-FUNCTIONAL

He noted that Negroes had complained of two "non-functional antique guns" in the county registrar's office which he said "seem to frighten or intimidate some of these timid plaintiffs." and Negroes complaints that the registrar was "discourteous to and abusive of" Negroes who try to register.

Cox said he had dismissed similar complaints against the registrar in an earlier suit and noted that most questions raised were moot because federal registrars have since moved into Canton.

He ruled that lack of chairs of tables in the library discriminates against no one.

A library need not "even be provided in whole or in part unless the municipality decided to do so," he said.

Cox dismissed the complaint against the ASCS office manager and said he found "no imperative need" for an injunction.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

File

South Evading, Defying Rights Act, Group Says

94.8% of Negro Students Still Attend Segregated Schools, Race Council Charges

BY JACK NELSON

Times Staff Writer 10/31/65

ATLANTA — Through evasion and defiance of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the South has managed to keep 94.8% of its Negro students in all-Negro schools, the Southern Regional Council reported Saturday.

After surveying the 11 states of the old Confederacy, the council declared that the percentage of Negro students attending desegregated schools is less than 1% in three states, less than 2% in two states, and less than 3% in two others.

The council, a civil rights organization highly regarded for its research reports, called for stringent enforcement of Title 6 of the 1964 act which provides for withdrawal of federal aid from school districts that fail to desegregate.

Figures Noted

The report notes that the U.S. Office of Education, after a "hurried sampling survery," announced last month that 92.5% of Negro students were still in segregated schools.

The council reported that the education office figures were obviously in error in Alabama and North Carolina.

But regardless of which desegregation figures are considered — the education office's or the council's—the performance in the South "falls far short of what the law calls for, or what most observers expected during the first year," the council said.

Integration Lags

The region has 2,891,000 Negro children. Only 2% were in desegregated schools during the 1964-65 school year.

The council reported that desegregation percentages ranged from .25% in Alabama to 20% in Texas. Other states follow:

Arkansas, 2.5; Florida, 5.9; Georgia, 1.3; Louisiana, .68; Mississippi, .34; North Carolina, 2.1; South Carolina, 1.5; Tennessee, 9.1, and Virginia, 11.3

"In order to have their grants from federal funds certified," the report said, "a majority of school districts made false claims that the money would be spent only on a non-discriminatory basis."

Most of the falsification has been done through "freedom of choice" plans, the council reported.

Shift Burden

Under such plans the student and his parents theoretically can apply and expect admission to any school of their choice in the district.

Such plans, long under fire from civil rights organizations, shift the burden of initiating desegregation from school officials to Negro parents, leaving them vulnerable to economic intimidation and terrorism.

The council reported that many Negro parents who finally saw in the 1964 act a chance for their children to get "equal education" found instead "disillusionment . . . pressures and indignities no individuals should have to bear."

Officials and Parents

"Some school superintendents met with parents whose children applied for transfers," the council said, "and told them the Negro children probably would come home many days with black eyes from beatings the Negro parents should hold themselves responsible for."

Other pressures, according to the report, included: threats that Negro students would be demoted or lose credits; threats that Negroteachers would be fired; publication of the names and addresses of Negroes applying for transfers, thus inviting intimidation; cross burnings, shootings into Negro homes and other acts of intimidation.

File

Clipping from

The New York Times

Date November 3, 1965

To Enforce Existing Rights Laws

To the Editor:

Please help us correct one misapprehension arising out of coverage of the report on the double standard of justice for whites and Negroes in the South issued Oct. 18, by the Southern Regional Council and the Southern office of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The report did not support the current suggestions for new laws making it a Federal offense to murder civil rights workers, and establishing a special Federal civil rights police force.

The position of the report is that failure to achieve impartial administration of state and Federal law already on the books is the real problem. It urges basic reform of Southern law enforcement, including selection of juries on a truly representative basis.

If such reform can be achieved, the new legislation would not be needed. If not, there seems little likelihood that the proposed legislation would improve the situation.

The proposals could make it worse, having potential of their own for abuse. PAT WATTERS

Director of Information
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
Atlanta, Oct. 26, 1965.

St. Petersburg Times

Sunday, November 14, 1965

PERSPECTIVE

• Editorials • Education • Travel • Columns

SECTION D

myself find it difficult to accept criti-sm, especially if it is real criticism, rofound criticism, criticism which forc-
me to think again."

The intellectual looked at us almost ith pity. Being capitalists, we would nd it difficult, he said, but Communists ere naturally free from all prejudice in eir own favor. "It arises from the difrence of our social systems."

"It arises naturally from the social ystem . . ." That is another stock Chiese phrase. Everything in Communist hina is right, and it is right naturally.

Inverted Values

Even if the Chinese feel no need to understand us, do we wish, or need, to understand them? Surely we do. China is the oldest and greatest civilization of Asia. After two centuries of helplessness it has become a new nation, a great power of the future, 700-million strong.

Neither in history nor in politics can it be ignored. Too often, because it is remote, we push it aside as an abstrac-

(Please see RED CHINA, 4-D)

An Indictment: A Double Standard Of Justice

Since passage of the Voting Rights Act, the civil rights revolution in America has taken a new direction. Negroes seek a remedy for the dual system of justice in the South. Here is a report on the causes of the shift from the Southern Regional Council.

—Times Art by Joe Tonelli

In The All-White Courts Of Much Of The South, The Negro Expects Little Justice

If the public could ever plead ignorance to the double standard of justice in the South — one brand of justice for the white man, another for the Negro — that time is past. On television and on the front pages of newspapers, the stories have come.

An FBI informant testifies that he was in the same car with three Ku Klux Klansmen as they shot to death Mrs. Viola Liuzzo, a Detroit housewife, on an Alabama highway. The jury does not convict the first defendant charged in the crime — not even of manslaughter. While waiting for a new trial the Klansmen rush off to a Klan rally in North Carolina to sign autographs, openly confident that any new trial will end the same way. It did.

A HAYNEVILLE, Ala., community leader named Tom Coleman shoots down two civil rights workers at midday. Jonathan Daniels, a seminarian, dies at once and the Rev. Richard Morrisroe, a priest, is critically wounded. The trial, reportedly turned into a circus, ends with Coleman acquitted.

The Liuzzo and Daniels cases were not isolated incidents, and Negroes can only reflect bitterly when white men — Southerners and Northerners alike — advise them, as they often do, to stop street demonstrations and take their grievances into the courts.

The Liuzzo case was not an isolated incident. From the sit-in demonstrations of 1960 through the spring of 1965, at least 26 Negroes and white civil rights workers died at the hands of racists in the South. Only one of the assailants was sentenced to prison, and he for 10 years. During the same periods, "justice" was dispensed in double measure when white men were slain by Negroes. Two white segregationists died in the aftermath of racial demonstrations. Four Negroes went to prison, one of them for life.

IN MANY AREAS of the South, dual justice is a standing abuse to all Negroes. It exists from birth to death. It exists in the day - to - day brushes with "the law": the policeman on his beat, at traffic court, in civil cases.

To the extent that it exists, it provokes desperation among Negroes, shakes their faith in democracy, causes them to shun the policemen and the courts as enemies.

More than any other factor it is responsible for what the white South views as increasing "radicalism" and "anarchy" in the civil rights movement.

Why is it possible under the American judicial system for a white man to murder a Negro without fear of serious retribution? How widespread is dual justice and what is its impact?

DUAL JUSTICE SURVIVES because presidents continue to treat federal judgeships as political rewards and pacifiers. It survives because the Justice Department fails to exercise the power that it has to correct abuses. It survives because the judicial network, federal, state, and municipal, is still one of the most segregated institutions in America. It survives through a built-in discrimination in the selection of juries, state and federal, and through the ill-concealed contempt of many courts and police officers for the rights of Negro citizens.

Consider the case of Andrew Wansley at Lynchburg, Va. In the winter of 1963, when he was only 19 years old, he was accused of raping two women, one white and the other Japanese, and of stealing $1.36 from one of the victims.

THE WHITE WOMAN was unable to identify Wansley — a Negro — as her assailant. Police, however, after a private talk with Wansley succeeded in getting a confession. The Japanese woman positively identified Wansley. The youth admitted to having sexual relations with the Japanese woman — not once but on several occasions. All-white juries deliberated, and handed down two death sentences for rape and a 20-year prison term for the $1.36 robbery.

Wansley must have reflected bitterly on the knowledge that three months before in the same court room, a white man had received only a five-year sentence for raping an 11-year-old Negro girl.

Was this an isolated incident? Statistics amassed by the U.S. Bureau of Prisons answer, "No." Despite the fact that more than half of all convicted rapists are white, 87 per cent of all the persons executed for rape between 1930 and 1963 were Negroes convicted and sentenced by Southern courts.

The wrath of Southern judges and juries also falls on Negroes who are convicted of night-time burglaries and robberies. Between 1930 and 1961, 34 people were executed for this capital offense. Twenty-nine of them were Negroes and all but one were put to death in a Southern or border state.

NEGROES ACCUSED of minor crimes also have reason to fear their day in court. On the surface, the Negro would appear to receive equal justice in the traffic courts of many cities.

A white man and a Negro stand before the traffic judge. Both are first offenders and both are found guilty of driving under the influence of intoxicating beverages.

The judge pronounces a standard prescription for the malady: 12 months or $150.

It appeared equal, but was it? The Negro earns $1.25 an hour when he can find work. He cannot raise the equivalent of three weeks salary. He goes to jail for a year.

The white man earns $250 a week as a certified public accountant, hands over three days pay eagerly, and walks from court praising a benevolent judge.

Another judge sentenced a Negro woman to "$35 or 12 months in prison" for public drunkenness. She entered prison on July 12, 1963, and with time off for good behavior was released on May 24, 1964.

"CASH register justice" is widespread in the South. The poor of both races suffer from it, but the Negro, being the poorest, suffers most frequently. In a 12-month period ending in June of 1962, 2,341 persons served terms in Georgia's state prison system for their inability to pay small fines. Seventy per cent of these were Negro.

As serious as they sometimes become, fines and bail are only small parts of the problem faced by the indigent Negro before the bar of justice. The problem of finding and hiring an attorney can be an acute one for Negroes. Often the Negro accused of a major crime is forced to accept a court - appointed white attorney with little enthusiasm for his case.

Even when they have the money, Negroes may find it difficult to find an attorney to represent them. They can cost an attorney his law practice and result even in ostracism by his community.

IN THE SPRING of 1965, Warren C. Fortson, an established attorney in Americus, Ga., and the brother of Georgia Secretary of State Ben Fortson, agreed to defend two Negro teen - agers identified with civil rights against charges of fornication and touched off a storm of protest that, along with milder resentment of his role in calling for a biracial committee, ultimately forced him to leave the city.

In the trial, one patrolman testified in detail to lurid acts which he said he witnessed. Under cross examination, another law enforcement officer conceded he was standing beside the patrolman and saw nothing more than heavy petting.

The two teenagers were convicted by the court and sentenced to reform school. Fortson, for his role in the case, was convicted by the public and forced to leave the city.

WARREN FORTSON'S story, of course, is not unique. Another attorney, Paul Johnston, agreed to defend a government undercover agent against a Ku Klux Klan attorney. His decision cost him his membership in one of Birmingham's most prosperous law firms, a firm which still includes his father and a brother.

With or without adequate counsel, the Negro must often face a hostile judge. Many Southern judges are, of course, scrupulously fair. Others seem to view themselves less as impartial umpires and dispensers of justice than as defenders of white supremacy.

JUDGES ARE OFTEN inclined to be lenient with whites who are charged with

(Please see THE DOUBLE, 4-D)

. . . Florida Checkerboard

Florida's standard of justice on a racial basis is a checkerboard kind of thing. Civil rights leaders in the state differ in outlining the degrees of severity with which justice is molded to fit the feelings of an area.

THEY SAID Negroes charged with offenses against whites invariably draw the maximum penalties provided by law, while whites charged with offenses against Negroes receive minimum sentences, if they are convicted at all. White courts are also lenient in cases of Negroes accused of crimes against other Negroes.

Frank Peterman, a St. Petersburg Negro lawyer, said there are "islands of freedom" for the Negro in Florida courts, with Pinellas County being one of those islands. He said the judges and attorneys are fair, and it is not uncommon to have a Negro in a jury box.

THE CLOSER YOU MOVE to the Alabama and Georgia borders, and in "boondock" areas, pigmentation justice becomes stronger.

Tobias Simon, Miami attorney, associated with many civil rights cases, says Negroes do suffer injustice in Florida courts. A race case is an uphill fight for the Negro, he contends. "It is just about as hard to convict a Klansman in a Florida race case as it is in Alabama," he said.

The failure of the Florida courts, and the courts of other Southern states, to discharge their obligations in a fair manner, Simon said, has resulted in the encroachment by the federal courts into matters — such as civil rights cases — which properly should be the domain of the state judiciary.

AN INDICTMENT

The Double Standard Of Southern Justice

FROM 1-D

offenses against Negroes and harsh with Negroes accused of crimes against whites.

In New Bern, N.C., during June of 1965, three white men — one of them an Exalted Cyclops in the Ku Klux Klan — admitted bombing a Negro funeral home and two cars which were parked outside a Negro church. They have yet to serve a day in prison. A superior court judge handed down suspended sentences.

In Georgia, a 75-year-old white woman, jaywalking after being warned repeatedly by police, walked into the side of a car driven by a Negro and was killed. Officials were reluctant to file charges against the Negro, but ultimately did so after pressure from the woman's family.

Rather than face an all-white jury, the Negro elected to appear directly before the judge. He lost his gamble. The judge sentenced him to five years in prison. A police official called the sentence a "raw deal" and termed the woman's death "strictly" accidental, but the words didn't help the Negro.

DESPITE THE outrageous outcome of his case, the Negro may have been wise to prefer a judge rather than a jury. Southern juries tend to be all-white and, all too often, inclined to support other whites in legal clashes with Negroes.

Take for example, the killing of Clinton Melton, a Negro in Glendora, Mississippi, in the delta, by a white man named Elmer Kimbell, a close friend of the man who had been acquitted of the murder of Emmett Till, also a Negro.

Robert Penn Warren wrote in his book, Segregation, "When the Lions Club met three days after the event, a resolution was drawn and signed by all members present: 'We consider the taking of the life of Clinton Melton an outrage against him, against all of the people of Glendora, against the people of Mississippi, as well as against the human family . . . ' And the town began to raise a fund to realize the ambition of the dead man, to send his children to college . . ."

"But," Warren added, "the jury that tried Elmer Kimbell acquitted him."

Of all the forces that urge the Negro away from the American democracy, none is more vicious or more effective than the dual system of justice.

The white officials of several Southern states have expressed alarm at the growth of the Deacons for Defense and Justice, a Negro protective league that advocates carrying arms and shooting back when white racists attack. The dismayed officials miss an important point. The reason for the popularity of the Deacons among Negroes is the Negro's experience with the white man's justice.

In too many places, the Negro cannot depend on the police for protection and, when an occasional terrorist is arrested and brought to trial, the Negro can be confident that the white court will turn the offender loose or punish him so lightly that the penalty is interpreted as quiet approval of terrorism.

THERE ARE no easy solutions to the Negro's problems anywhere and that is particularly true in the area of equal justice. But it is clear that several steps must be taken before any real progress can be expected.

To begin at the top, the President of the United States needs to find men for federal judgeships who do not owe their political careers to the same system that perpetuates dual justice. Some of the most notorious appointments to the bench have been made by liberal Democratic presidents, simply because a president is loath to violate the tradition of letting these appointments be made, in fact if not in name, by the ruling Democratic apparatus in the one - party states of the South.

(One solution was proposed yesterday by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, which recommended a new federal law making it a crime to harm or threaten persons engaged in civil rights activities.)

IT IS obvious on the face of it that dual justice could not exist, at least with its present excesses, if the American bar had taken aggressive action to end it.

At best, attorneys in most areas of the South have been shy in accepting controversial cases involving Negroes, thus allowing the full wrath of segregationists to fall on a handful of Negro and "liberal" white attorneys.

There is a desperate need for national and Southern bar associations to begin enforcing their ethical codes in a manner which will guarantee that Negroes will be able to choose from a broad range of attorneys.

FINALLY, the people of the South must be fully aware that they have this sickness among them, and that it must be cured. White people sometimes complain that they are weary of being constantly reminded of the Negro revolution. Their weariness is nothing compared to the Negro's.

The ultimate responsibility is with the people to assure liberty and justice for all — in the South and across the nation wherever dual justice prevails.

HAYNEVILLE'S TOM COLEMAN
. . . acquitted.

KLANSMAN COLLIE WILKINS
. . . acquitted.

BARRON'S

35 CENTS — National Business and Financial Weekly — NOVEMBER 15, 1965

"Where Did You Come From..."

A Report on "Students for a Democratic Society"

Recent outbreaks of left-wing extremism hold profound significance for anyone with a stake in the nation's future. In the accompanying report, Alice Widener sheds some badly needed light on the historic origins of today's unrest, on the deepseated roots of the "new" radicalism. Mrs. Widener is a syndicated columnist and publisher of U.S.A. Magazine.

IN the aftermath of the student revolt at the University of California in Berkeley last year, a shocked and bewildered American public asked about the youthful rioters. "Where did they come from? What kind of background have they?"

In August, when dozens of students, accompanied by some Ivy League professors, defied the law in the District of Columbia, penetrated the White House to stage a sit-in, and attempted to break through police barricades at the Capitol, the stunned general public again asked about the demonstrators and practitioners of civil disobedience, "Where did they come from?"

This same question was on the lips of onlookers in New York City and other communities this fall. As I stood on a street corner, observing the astonished faces of bystanders and watching the aggressive young leftists parade, the first line of a poem learned in childhood flashed sardonically through my mind—"Where did you come from baby dear?" ("Out of the everywhere into the here.")

* * *

Trying to recall the next line, I was aware of the origin of a group in the forefront of youthful leftist activities in this country, Students for a Democratic Society. It is the legitimate offspring of the socialist League for Industrial Democracy.

For 60 years, the League has been training young Americans in the leftist way they should not go. Today, it seems, many of them will not depart from it — the laws of the U.S. government notwithstanding.

At home, after the parade of more than 10,000 radicals in New York City ended I went to my library where several shelves are stacked with League for Industrial Democracy official publications, dating from 1911, six years after the group was first organized as the Intercollegiate Socialist Society (ISS), to 1965, when it commemorated its 60th anniversary with the pamphlet, "60 Years of Democratic Education."

It was in 1924 that the ISS changed its name to League for Industrial Democracy (LID), the term "socialist" having become abhorrent to most Americans, who were outraged by a series of bombings and other violent acts committed by anarchists and Marxist radicals after World War I. It was these terrorist activities which led to the "Palmer raids" ordered by the then U.S. Attorney General.

The term "industrial democracy" is to be found in the April-May 1919 issue of the official ISS publication, in an article by the late Alexander Trachtenberg, then a member of the Yale University chapter of the ISS, and later head of the Communist publishing house, "International Publishers," in New York City.

In 1919, Alexander Trachtenberg wrote for the ISS (later LID) publication: "The Russian revolution is the heritage of the world. It must not be defeated by foreign militarism. It must live, so that Russia may be truly free and, through its freedom, blaze the way for industrial democracy throughout the world."

For decades, the League for Industrial Democracy exerted tutelage over its progeny in the Student League for Industrial Democracy (SLID), educating them into thinking about such things as government ownership of the means of production and Marxist "production for use and not for profit."

The 1965 pamphlet contains a brief history of the League for Industrial Democracy by its executive director emeritus, Harry W. Laidler, who writes:

. . ."The LID, first known as the Intercollegiate Socialist Society (ISS), was born in the first decade of the twentieth century . . . for 16 years the ISS conducted its pioneering educational work within and without the country's college campuses, through its college and city chapters, its scores of lectures, its pamphlets, summer conferences, annual conventions, Carnegie Hall lectures and debates, and other channels . . .

"In 1962 the Executive Committee of the SLID voted to change the name of the League's student affiliate to the Students for a Democratic Society. The SDS is now the largest intercollegiate society on the American campus and, under the secretaryship of C. Clark Kissinger, is doing yeoman service in the field of civil rights, peace, academic freedom and community organization among the poor . . .

"The general society since World War II has continued with vigor and effectiveness . . . Tom Kahn, author of The Economics of Equality is now the League's able executive . . . Michael Harrington, author of The Other America, to whom great credit is due for his outstanding work in pressing for the present war on poverty, was elected Chairman of the Board . . .

As an "educational" organization, the League for Industrial Democracy has long enjoyed tax-exempt status granted by the Internal Revenue Service, and has used part of LID funds to subsidize the student offspring organization, Students for a Democratic Society. But this year the SDS activist role in a liberal-radical coalition jeopardized the LID's tax-exemption.

On October 4, the LID and Paul Booth, national secretary of SDS, announced "for tax reasons" the amicable severance of SDS from the parent LID, because the student department's action programs now "transcend" the tax-exempt "educational" role of the parent. Temporarily, therefore, the silver cord tying together adult and youth socialist groups has been cut. But the two ends might be knotted in December, when another parent-offspring meeting is scheduled to consider possible reconciliation.

Apparently the ideological dissension between parent and offspring is not too serious. The severance seems to be mostly for material reasons. It isn't logical to assume otherwise, for the LID has been well aware of what its "children" were doing.

* * *

Concerning Students for a Democratic Society, offspring of the socialist LID of which he is chairman, Michael Harrington wrote in a column (for the New York Herald Tribune) datelined February 21, 1965, Ann Arbor, Mich.:

"I talked to some American Narodniks at the University of Michigan last week.

"The original Narodniks were Russian students who, in the summer of 1874, went out to preach a mystical populism to the peasants. Whenever some one asked where they were going they said, 'To the Narod' (meaning) to the people.

"The young students at Ann Arbor with whom I spoke were activists of the Economic Research and Action Project (ERAP) at Ann Arbor, sponsored by the Students for a Democratic Society. They have already accomplished more than their Russian forerunners. But they and an increasingly larger number of students on the campus have embraced the Narodnik principle: To the people."

Mr. Harrington explained that members of ERAP work in the slums, in the South and among "the American poor." He predicted for ERAP in the 1960s an organizing power in the big city poor, black and white, similar to CIO organiz-

Continued on Page 8

In This Issue

ARTICLES

ENGINE BOOSTERS
Improved Diesels Have Powered Their Way Into Tractors and Trucks 3

STATE OF THE COINAGE
The Treasury Is Betting Heavily Against Gresham's Law 5

DIVERSIFIED PFIZER
The Old Drug Maker Has Expanded Into Promising New Fields 9

IT'S ALL VELVET
Textile Mills Are Counting on a Long Stretch of Prosperity 11

DEPARTMENTS

THE TRADER 4
THE WORLD AT WORK 7
COMING FINANCING 27
SPEAKING OF DIVIDENDS 29

DEPARTMENTS

NEWS AND VIEWS OF INVESTMENTS
American News 25
Microdot 25
White Cross Stores 26
Stephenson 27
COMMODITIES 30

STATISTICAL SECTION

MUTUAL FUNDS 32
COMPLETE STOCK QUOTATIONS 33
REGIONAL, FOREIGN SECURITIES . 46
OVER-THE-COUNTER MARKET 47
BOND QUOTATIONS 51
MARKET LABORATORY 53
PULSE OF INDUSTRY AND TRADE . 54
SECONDARY DISTRIBUTIONS 54
NEW HIGHS AND LOWS IN STOCKS . 55

". . . Baby Dear?"

Continued from Page 1

ing power among factory workers in the 1930s.

There are other new SDS paths strikingly similar to the official Soviet Communist Party subversive strategy of going "to the people" over the heads of their legal government and in defiance of it. This strategy is openly described in the Communist pamphlet, "The United Nations" published in Bombay, India. There is no doubt that SDS is practicing the revolutionary Narodnik strategy, as Michael Harrington openly boasts.

On October 24, 1965, the New York Daily News reported that President Johnson had taken to task, from his hospital bed, the protestors against the American commitment to save South Vietnam from communism. The News added:

". . . Attorney General Nicholas Katzenbach disclosed that the Justice Department is probing the antidraft movement.

"Katzenbach said the Students for a Democratic Society was but one of many New Left groups being investigated. . .

"Booth (Paul Booth, national secretary of SDS), announced that the society was expanding to enlist even high school students. In addition to encouraging youths to file as conscientious objectors, he said, SDS members are to picket draft board offices, distribute pacifist tracts, attack local draft boards as "undemocratic" and recruiters and officer trainees as "war criminals."

On October 25, the New York Journal-American reported on the "Beat the Draft" movement's activities in the city high schools, and quoted from a newsletter distributed by the Committee to End the War in Vietnam:

"We are excited about the proposal offered by Todd Gitlin of SDS on the setting up of information centers for confused draftees and young men about to be drafted, informing them of all the alternatives to fighting in Vietnam — moral, legal and technical—open to them."

Who is Todd Gitlin and where did he come from? The League for Industrial Democracy knows very well; its 60th anniversary commemorative pamphlet lists "Todd Gitlin" as a member of the LID board of directors.

Concerning his special talents, there is an enlightening article "by the Editors" in the spring 1965 issue of the publication, "Studies on the Left." This issue was distributed widely at the First Annual Conference of Socialist Scholars, held this fall at Columbia University (Barron's, September 27).

It discloses that ". . . a songsheet distributed by the National Office (of SDS), 'Songs of Vietnam,' containing four familiar songs with new words written by Todd Gitlin, Nanci Gitlin and Paul Potter, was sent out in an internal SDS mailing. . . . Several individuals at Beekman Street (headquarters in New York City for Liberation magazine, Student Peace Union, War Resisters League, Fellowship of Reconcilation) saw the sheet and took violent objection to one chorus of a revised Freedom Song, with words by Todd Gitlin. The verse began with 'No strategic hamlets. No strategic hamlets around me.' The offending chorus continued, 'And before I'll be fenced in, I'll vote for Ho Chi Minh, Or go back to the North and be free.' "

What Students for a Democratic Society wants to accomplish — reports Steven Kelman in the New Leader—is the creation of "an independent national organization of the poor." SDS calls this kind of social-political organization, "participatory democracy."

Another view of the LID's offspring is presented in the September-October 1965 issue of the publication, "Young Socialist." On page 22, it reports: "Student to speak on Vietnam trip: Carl Oglesby, president of SDS, will be touring college campuses this fall, speaking against the Vietnam war. During his visit to South Vietnam this summer, he was able to talk with members of the (Communist) National Liberation Front, and will be able to give a first hand account of what is taking place."

It is interesting to note the description of SDS president Carl Oglesby as a "student" in Young Socialist. He is otherwise described as "30, dropout, playwright, technical writer" in a caption under his photograph in the New York Times Magazine, November 7, 1965, which carried a lead article on the SDS by Thomas R. Brooks. In a Times' footnote, the author of the article is described as "a freelance writer specializing in labor and politics." No mention is made by the Times of the highly pertinent fact that Thomas R. Brooks is a member of the executive committee of the League for Industrial Democracy, parent of SDS.

As a "parent" reporter on the New Left "student" organization, Mr. Brooks is indulgent, fondly referring to SDS "youngsters," though all SDS staff members to whom he alludes are of voting age or well past it. According to author Brooks, Carl Oglesby, SDS president, charges that the American war effort to save South Vietnam from Communist enslavement is being fought "under the banner of cold-war colonialism." Evidently Mr. Oglesby is not against all wars, for Thomas R. Brooks reports, "SDS is not a pacifist group. 'We're not against violence,' Oglesby told me."

SDS is neither pacifist nor against violence. And it is not anti-Communist, for it is perfectly willing to accept the cooperation of Communists in the pro-Peking Progressive Labor Party, in the May 2 Movement, and in the extremist "New Radicals" sponsoring Young Socialist magazine.

Despite the cooperation of SDS with out-and-out pro-Communist radicals, Thomas R. Brooks of the LID executive committee implies in his New York Times article that SDS and LID might perhaps be reconciled in December, when SDS will hold a membership conference to discuss the question of "coalition." This — Thomas R. Brooks writes — is a choice between "the DuBois Clubs, M2M, etc. on the one hand, or the LID, the AFL-CIO, Socialist Party and Reform Democrats on the other." Mr. Brooks reports: "The parental League for Industrial Democracy has been asked to participate."

What has LID participation in the making of the SDS political "choice" got to do with tax-exempt "educational" activity? Nothing, obviously. It is purely socialist political activity in the guise of "education," a technique practiced by the League since its inception.

Toward the end of World War II, the man who founded the LID in 1905—Upton Sinclair — addressed the League's 40th anniversary symposium on "The Task Ahead." That task was thus projected by Mr. Sinclair, who said: "Production for use and not for profit — you, friends of the League for Industrial Democracy, are not frightened when you hear that slogan. The private owners of industry are frightened, but that is because they do not understand what is happening, and cannot see that the world can get along without private owners of industry."

Today it is not only the private owners of industry who are frightened at what the left is doing. The U.S. government itself and the vast majority of Americans are shocked at the activities of young leftists who—say the Secretary of State and other high U.S. officials—create the impression in Peking, Hanoi and Moscow that the American people are not solidly behind their troops in Vietnam and thus encourage the enemy to prolong the war.

And yet, what Upton Sinclair said in 1945 is true in 1965, for it seems that the leaders of American industry, and the innocent bystanders watching young and old socialists demonstrate against U.S. foreign policy, still "do not understand what is happening."

LID executive committee member Thomas R. Brooks quotes a statement by SDS president Carl Oglesby that the student organization has been receiving money from "richies" and from "friendly institutions."

Congress should find out who are the rich individuals and friendly institutions helping to subsidize the Students for a Democratic Society in their antidraft campaign, their attempts to create a social revolution through their Economic Research and Action Project among "the poor," their illegal efforts to halt troop trains, their marches and their campus revolts.

Mr. Brooks says the SDS annual budget for 90 chapters and a national staff of executives is $80,000. On such a budget, where do SDS leaders get the money needed to play a leading role in such undertakings as the "mass anti-Vietnam demonstrations" of October 15 and 16.

Where did Carl Oglesby get the money to go to South Vietnam last summer to confer with the Communist enemy in the National Liberation Front? Who in Washington obtained for him the hard-to-get permission to go there?

Obviously, the facts about where the money for SDS comes from are not now evident. Just as obviously, however, the facts about where the SDS itself comes from are.

Students for a Democratic Society—the "youth" organization working for social revolution in our nation —comes directly from the socialist League for Industrial Democracy, which set out 60 years ago to abolish capitalism in the U.S. by means of "promoting an intelligent interest in Socialism" among college men and women.

MIDWEST MEMO TO SITE-SEEKERS:

"Compare the transportation facilities you'd have here . . . not only air, rail and interstate highways, but the mighty Ohio River, too. Another reason to PIN IT DOWN TO the 3-state Greater CINCINNATI Area."

This is where the dynamic east-north-central region meets the growing middle south, the No. 1 and No. 2 ranking areas with companies on the move. And the transportation facilities are here to take fullest advantage of this center-of-everything location. If you're looking for the best possible site for a new plant or office, write or phone, we'll supply a great many additional facts that will make it easy . . . to pin it down to the 3-state Greater Cincinnati Area.

One of a new series of CG&E ads appearing in Business Week, Wall Street Journal, New Yorker and Dun's Review . . . to attract additional industry to The CINCINNATI GAS & ELECTRIC Company Service Area.

File

'Sleeper' Bill May Hit Southern Industry

By EDWIN A. LAHEY
Chicago Daily News Service

AUSTIN, Tex., Jan. 15—An unemployment compensation bill with the innocuous title of H.R. 8282 is a sleeper on the congressional docket for 1966.

This is one of three bills that would weaken the sales talk of Southern states in their recruitment of Northern industry.

The other two proposals are well known, and Southern defenses have been mounted against them. One is the bill to repeal state right to work laws, which are used as a competitive lure in the South for new plants. The other would strengthen and broaden the minimum wage act, with maximum impact on the South.

The bill for revamping the federal - state unemployment compensation system—H.R. 8282—would have tremendous repercussions, national and regional, if adopted as introduced by the Johnson administration.

H. R. 8282 would bring another substantial increase in Social Security taxes, to build up the trust funds from which unemployment compensation is financed. The tax for unemployment compensation is paid entirely by the employer.

THE BILL also would supplement the trust funds of the unemployment compensation system with direct appropriations from the federal government, at the rate of about $500 million annually, to increase benefits.

Finally, H.R. 8282 would yank out the inequities that have been installed in state unemployment compensation systems, particularly in the South, for competitive advantages over states with more generous provisions for compensation.

The far-reaching implications of H.R. 8282 for the South have been generally overlooked, possibly because the right to work issue and the threat of drastic revisions in minimum wage coverage have preoccupied the interested parties.

And the fact that chairman Wilburn Mills, D-Ark., of the House Ways and Means Committee, has cosponsored H.R. 8282, may have given Southerners a false sense of security. Mills is a trustworthy conservative.

THE INCREASE in federal payroll taxes for the proposed improvement in unemployment compensation would lift the present maximum of $93 per year for each worker to $174.44 in 1967 and $205.59 in 1971.

This will come as a jolt to many employers who are just now trying to swallow the 1966 increases in social security taxes for higher old age benefits and for Medicare. This increase, which became effective on Jan. 1, lifts the maximum from $174 to $277.20, (employer and employe each pay this amount.)

At present, an employer of four or more people in most industries pays a rate of 3.1 per cent on the first $3,000 of a worker's earnings.

Under H.R. 8282, the taxable base would be increased to $5,600 in 1967 and to $6,600 in 1971.

The tax itself would be increased a mite, from 3.1 per cent to 3.115 per cent.

The increase in the tax rate would amount to $8.40 per worker in 1967 and to $9.90 per worker in 1971.

UNDER THE provisions of H.R. 8282, the federal government would make grants from its general revenue equal to the amount of revenue raised by the slight tax increase of .015 per cent.

It sounds small, but it would soon amount to a steady contribution of $500 million or more per year, direct to the state unemployment compensation systems, to augment benefits.

H.R. 8282, in addition to improving the benefits for unemployment compensation, would extend its protection to about 5 million people not now covered. These would mainly include employes of small firms, nonprofit organizations, and workers on large farms.

The removal of inequities in the different state systems would be done through the manipulation of the credit provisions of the federal tax laws.

At present, an employer gets a credit of 2.7 per cent of his federal tax if he is making payments into a state unemployment compensation system that has been approved by the federal government. That credit is available no matter how poor the state system may be today.

ONE OF THE subtle purposes of H.R. 8282 is to reduce that credit for employers in states that do not meet a new and higher standard of benefits as established by the federal government. This part of the bill would revoke an important premium now enjoyed by employers in some southern states.

The disparities in the operation of state unemployent benefit laws are entwined in a jungle of rules for eligibility, benefits, penalties, and methods for computing compensation.

But some idea of the spread between states can be seen in an official document of the U.S. Department of Labor, comparing the different systems.

In some southern states, the minimum and maximum weekly payments, and the time range in which they are available, are as follows:

Alabama, range of $12 to $38 weekly, from 13 to 26 weeks; Arkansas, $15 to $38, range of 10 to 16 weeks; Florida $10 to $33, range of 10 to 26 weeks; Georgia, $8 to $35, range of 9 to 26 weeks; North Carolina, $12 to $42, period of 26 weeks; Mississippi, $8 to $30, range of 12 to 26 weeks.

A few of the northern industrial states have the following ranges in their systems:

MICHIGAN, $10 to $72, range of 10 to 26 weeks; Ohio, $10 to $53, range of 20 to 26 weeks; Illinois, $10 to $70, range of 10 to 26 weeks; New York, $10 to $55, flat period of 26 weeks.

In presenting the administration bill before the House Ways and Means Committee, Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz was careful to avoid any harsh words about the competitive advantages some states have made in their unemployment compensation systems.

But the lines in his statement were pretty widely spaced, and it was easy to read between them.

He told the congressmen, for example, that state unemployment compensation tax rates were low in some areas, "not only because of low unemployment, but also because under the state law benefits are low in amount, or short on duration, or because eligibility for benefits is restricted."

SECRETARY Wirtz explained that the states, under H. R. 8282, would be required to pay weekly benefits amounting to at least 50 per cent of a worker's average weekly wage. This standard would be raised so that the benefit would represent two-thirds of the statewide average weekly wage by 1971.

A glance at the benefit computations indicates that this provision would have impact on all 11 states of the Deep South.

As southern employer associations and politicians read H.R. 8282 more closely, the telephone lines to their lobbyists and congressmen in Washington will probably start buzzing with agonized calls.

The Sunday Star
WITH DAILY EVENING EDITION
28. ★★★★ S WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 8, 1966
Copyright © 1966
The Evening Star Newspaper

nson Asks Moon

—Star Photographer Byron Schumaker

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Smiley of Dallas County, Ala., stand in front of a rural polling place near Selma after casting the first votes of their lives last Tuesday. He is 85; she is 74.

—Star Photographer Byron Schumaker

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Smiley of Dallas County, Ala., stand in front of a rural polling place near Selma after casting the first votes of their lives last Tuesday. He is 85; she is 74.

The Meaning of Selma

By HAYNES JOHNSON
Star Staff Writer

SELMA, Ala.—A dirt road winds off the Jeff Davis Highway, through the cotton fields of the Black Belt and past a grove of pecan trees sheltering a wooden shack with a tin roof. It stops at the Tyler Union High School for Negroes.

"We didn't have anything but a building until a few weeks before the election. Then the supplies started coming in," said B. W. Dawson, the Negro principal. "I think there has been a basic change. I think they are actually trying to meet our problems. I believe they are trying to give us what we need. I believe that.

"The vote will help. Now, they come and say, 'If I'm elected I'll put a road up to your house.' Now they're saying they'll actually do it. And the city government will change. At least they will listen. At least the offices will be open like they ought to be.

"Your sheriff will be the sheriff of all the people and not just a select group, and your probate judge—at least now you can go in and see him.

"Yes, within a year or two you're going to see a new Dallas County, a Dallas County like it ought to be, a Dallas County where people are proud to be.

Haynes Johnson was awarded the Pulitzer Prize last Monday for his reporting of the 1965 civil rights demonstrations in Selma, Ala., and their aftermath. He returned to Selma last week to write this special report.

"This election set a good pattern."

What he was saying underscores the major historical fact that has come out of the Black Belt last week. Power, political power, now has come to the Negroes of the rural South. To the Negro, it is a power that means he is somebody, at last. If he is not yet on a plane with the white man, at least he is on the way up.

White politicians and businessmen know, whether they say it publicly or not, that after Tuesday, May 3, 1966, when Negroes voted in large numbers for the first time since Reconstruction, they must deal with the black man in the South.

All the Rebel yells that rang out across Alabama last week are not going to obscure that.

"Well, we had them registered all right, but this week they came out and voted," said a Negro. "Now, they know we'll vote."

As the high school principal pointed out, the new political power brings with it change, large and small: In a street being paved or a road being built in the all-Negro sections; in a new set of school textbooks, in access to officials and, most important, in attitudes.

William E. (Big Bill) Lee, the sheriff of Greene County, spelled out the lesson after he won his primary race Tuesday by defeating a Negro, Thomas Gilmore.

"I got about 850 colored votes," said Lee, who once played football for the Green Bay Packers. "I'm certainly thankful for their votes because I couldn't have won without them."

Another white politician, who asked not to be quoted by name, gave another side of the story. He, too, won. But he never would have, he said, if he had not gone directly to the Negroes and

See SELMA, Page A-9

File

—Star Photographer Byron Schumaker

SELMA MIRRORED THE SOUTH LAST WEEK AS ITS NEGROES VOTED, WATCHED AND PONDERED THE FUTURE.

Selma: Vote Brings Power to the Southern Negro

Continued From Page A-1

solicited their support. He asked for their help quietly, for he did not want to alienate his white backers.

He told of a white friend who also had run for office.

"He came to me and asked me to speak to the Negroes for him," he recalled. "He said, 'Just call them on the phone and tell them I'd like their support.' And I told him I couldn't do that. That was something he had to do for himself. But he kept asking me and asking me and I finally told him, 'Look, Tom, you're going to have to make this move yourself. Nobody can do it for you. Just go on over and sit down with them. You don't have to make a big noise about it. But you sure had better do it.' "

His friend never went, and he lost.

New South Emerges

These incidents don't mean that the problems of the past vanished overnight for the Negro. Nor does it mean that the Negro now sees the end of his struggle in the South. But a new South is more sharply in focus today because of what took place last week in the old strongholds of segregation.

Nowhere is that more evident than here in Selma, in the heart of the Black Belt. For Selma, the city where the Voting Rights Act of 1965 was born, again is a symbol — this time of the changing South. Its problems, its people, its attitudes, its efforts at change point up some of the currents flowing through the South today.

History was capricious with Selma. By all rights, Selma should have been merely one of countless rural trading centers with access, through the Alabama River, to a water route to the Gulf Coast.

A hundred years ago last spring the Union forces made Selma the site of one of the last battles of the Civil War. From the bluffs of the river you can still see the marks on old brick buildings, reminders of that day when Yankee troops burned the city. The marks from that conflagration left a deep imprint on Selma and its people.

Selma, slumbering for nearly a century, hardened into fixed attitudes. The whites were stubborn, determined to resist change. When the Negro civil rights drive began more than a year ago, Selma's white population was dealt a severe shock.

Could Not Win

For them, the demonstrations forced a recognition that change was going to take place. Grudgingly, reluctantly, bitterly, Selma's white leaders finally faced the undeniable and unwelcome fact: Fight though they might, they could not win their battle.

For the Negroes, and for the national civil rights groups, that was their finest hour, a period of selflessness and soaring principle. Their freedom songs and their freedom march stirred people around the world.

But later the Negroes suffered the inevitable let-down. After the stirring days of spring their unity was broken by discord, bickering and hints of scandal. Like the whites, they went through a period of re-examination.

In the aftermath of Selma the Dallas County Voters League, the organization that led the local civil rights movement, came under sharp attack from within and without. Charges were made about mismanagement of funds, inadequate book-keeping and accounting procedures, and general laxness of administration.

Since then, the Voters League has been reorganized. Is books are carefully audited, is leaders are in closer contact with the people. Confidence has been restored. The proof came in the massive turnout Tuesday after the Voters League ran a major vote education campaign.

Tuesday was the last chapter of the Selma story; whatever happens next belongs to a new book for the South.

From the beginning, when the Negroes began campaigning for the vote leaving here just like the young Negroes. The whites, they've got an aging population, too."

Stripped of the race question, the problems of Selma came down to such basics as poverty, disease, ignorance. While the Negroes hold the statistical margin in these unwelcome categories, poverty and its handmaidens are no respecter of color. Whites, too, are poor.

A year ago the Chamber of Commerce here liked to tell reporters about the good side of Selma. In its metropolitan area were 75 churches, 15 public schools, one university center, a public library, industries, four banks, three railroads, two bus and six motor freight lines.

The Other Side

There are other, less flattering, figures. Dallas County, of which Selma is the county seat, has a population of 56,667, half of it rural, half of it Negro. Fifty-two percent of the families in from the past. The Negro attitudes now are clear to all. They no longer hide behind what their poet, Paul Laurence Dunbar, called the "mask that grins and lies."

For whites—that is, whites with education—the change in attitudes is more difficult to gauge. Prejudice still runs deep. Acceptance comes slowly, as a talk with a white minister in Selma indicated.

He was interviewed in his book-lined study in the center of the city. He spoke quietly and reflectively about the events of the past year.

"The more sensitive Christians strongly disliked what was going on," he said, "although they scarcely knew everything that was happening. At that time we were in a prayer retreat and the sensitive Christians had a deep prayerful, searching, deep personal humility and a desire to let God's will overrule personal feelings in these matters. And I personally thought God's spirit was with us in those prayer sessions, and I felt a response on at change was going to rudgingly, reluctantly, 's white leaders finally eniable and unwelcome ough they might, they eir battle.

es, and for the national ps, that was their finest d of selflessness and e. Their freedom songs edom march stirred he world.

Negroes suffered the

Since then, the Voters League has been reorganized. Is books are carefully audited, is leaders are in closer contact with the people. Confidence has been restored. The proof came in the massive turnout Tuesday after the Voters League ran a major vote education campaign.

Tuesday was the last chapter of the Selma story; whatever happens next belongs to a new book for the South.

From the beginning, when the Negroes began campaigning for the vote early last year, the sole objective of the Selma civil rights movement was participation in the political process. The demonstrations, the bloodshed, the marches, the emotion that caught the attention of the world—all culminated in the election.

Those results demonstrated again the Negroes' new power: Sheriff Jim Clark, Selma's symbol of segregation, lost the vote count to his rival Wilson Baker, a racial moderate who had the almost unanimous support of the Negroes. Although Clark is challenging the election procedures, the thousands of Negro ballots cast clearly held the margin of victory or defeat in Dallas County.

Common Problems

While it would be naive to suggest that now, because of the election, a new era of racial harmony has begun here, it is nevertheless true that men of both races are quietly discussing their problems. They are finding that they have common problems, problems that do not stem only from the question of race.

"You know," said one Negro after the election, "the Clarks and Wallaces, their day is going faster than they think. It's just like a dying man. He can muster up a little strength in his dying hour and put on a big last show, but when that's done that's all of it. He's gone.

"Now I've been saying it's time to stop getting at each other's throat. Of course the things that happened last year, well, we wouldn't be where we are now without them, but we can't continue to live in a crisis.

"I think a lot of the white people know that. And they know something else. They know that the whole economy through here's made up of whites and Negroes, and they know we can't be divided and still have any kind of progress. And that's a fact. And that's where we've got our problems today.

"The tragic thing down here is that we haven't got a very good middle class, black or white, and you know a good middle class is the salt of any society. The young whites have been itan area were 75 churches, 15 public schools, one university center, a public library, industries, four banks, three railroads, two bus and six motor freight lines.

The Other Side

There are other, less flattering, figures. Dallas County, of which Selma is the county seat, has a population of 56,667, half of it rural, half of it Negro. Fifty-two percent of the families in Dallas County earn less than $3,000 a year. There are 2,585 families earning less than $1,000 a year.

Of those over 65, more than 51 percent receive old-age assistance. A staggering total of 77.4 percent of those examined for military service were rejected for health or mental reasons. In the county, 38 percent of the people over 25 years old have less than an eighth grade education.

In Selma itself, 43 percent of all housing units are substandard.

Translated into human terms, these figures mean someone like Bessie Watts, age 13, a Negro, who sat on the porch of the two-room shack she shares with eight other children and a grandmother. Bessie was holding the youngest child in her arm and saying, "I had to stay home from school today." But in fact Bessie rarely goes to school. She doesn't seem to care. She is unable to express anything she hopes to accomplish in her lifetime.

Her grandmother was asked where Bessie's father was. "He's staying with another woman down the road," she said. "He ain't working. He ain't doing nothing."

Bessie's grandmother was one of those thousands of Negroes who voted for the first time in her life. She walked from her shack across the fields more than a mile to the polling place.

Fear Lessens

In a score of interviews, not one Negro expressed fear about the future. A year ago, during the march from Selma to Montgomery, many of those same Negroes were hesitant even to wave at the marchers from their shacks.

One man, after voting in a rural hamlet, mentioned the possibility he might be thrown off his land. It has happened in the Black Belt. When asked what he would do if that occurred, he said:

"If the man tells you to move out because you voted, we got nowhere to go. We'll go sleep down under the tree with the rattlesnakes if we have to."

To anyone who knows the Deep South, such expressions from Negroes in rural areas are startling departures spoke quietly and reflectively about the events of the past year.

"The more sensitive Christians strongly disliked what was going on," he said, "although they scarcely knew everything that was happening. At that time we were in a prayer retreat and the sensitive Christians had a deep prayerful, searching, deep personal humility and a desire to let God's will overrule personal feelings in these matters. And I personally thought God's spirit was with us in those prayer sessions, and I felt a response on God's part.

"Really, I anticipated more bloodshed than there was here because I thought the radical element would have a freer hand. So I was very much encouraged, even though I was saddened by the violence and the death of (the Rev. James) Reeb (the white Unitarian minister clubbed to death on Selma's streets). But you can't always stop that. But even so, I think we came through it."

A Silent Issue

In his own case, he never discussed the civil rights issue or any problems from the pulpit. It was, as he said, "a silent issue."

But now, he said, he sees a change in attitudes in Selma. The vote has made an impact.

"I think that some people were really impressed that the Negroes, the older Negroes they know personally and who weren't pushing the civil rights movement, they were impressed that the Negroes did vote. And they would see that these Negroes were thrilled to vote.

"I also think it surprised them that some Negroes even voted for conservative candidates."

Then he said:

"They're thinking for themselves, some of them."

One of the older Negroes in Selma, a man who has given leadership and direction over the years and who was instrumental in bringing Martin Luther King here, takes the long view.

He is only one of many here who looks ahead to the day, after all the ugliness and bitterness has passed into history, when Selma, Ala., will move forward with the New South.

"It's working itself out faster than you and I think," he said. "Because we've lived through it we might be more cautious in our predictions But it's going faster. Now there's one thing that I've appreciated most that's come out of this movement: the Negro people now have a sense of manhood. They've been down and oppressed and they had that state of mind, but they're coming out of it fast.

"The millenium isn't here yet, but I'm not a pessimist."

recipient countries, rather than on some arbitrarily-set figure. Nevertheless, it seems clear that one-half of 1 percent of our wealth is not enough for a program which offers so much hope for peace and progress.

It is clear that the American labor movement takes a direct interest in foreign aid, not merely as a bystander, but as a participant in the national effort to spread democracy, economic well-being, political stability, and peace throughout the developing world. We are providing funds and we are sending some of the most qualified men in the American labor movement to serve abroad as needed, often in uncomfortable and even dangerous posts.

From whatever angle the question is considered, it is clear that we can and must provide adequate levels of foreign aid. Recognizing this, the AFL-CIO Executive Council called upon the House and Senate to "take prompt and favorable action on the President's request." We urge again that the Congress approve the requests, and, where needed, add to them.

—From testimony by the AFL-CIO on foreign aid legislation before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin
John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel	P. L. Siemiller
David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton	Paul Jennings
George Burdon	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry — Eugene A. Kelly
Gervase N. Love — David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XI Saturday, May 14, 1966 No. 20

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

STAM FOR AFL-CIO NEWS

Lesson in Alabama:

Broad Coalition Key to Progress For Negroes, Liberals in South

The following is excerpted from an article in the May 14 issue of The New Republic by Pat Watters of the Southern Regional Council.

BY THE NEW MATH of southern politics, with Negroes in such a state as Alabama showing impressive voting strength for the first time, there had been reason to expect that Mrs. George (Lurleen) Wallace would have had to face a run-off election. To gain a majority she had to get her 51 percent from 84.5 percent of the electorate, based on the likely assumption that none of the 16.5 percent of the total vote that is Negro was hers. And that is the lowest estimate of the Negro vote, based on inflated figures which give many counties more than 100 percent of eligible whites registered. Actual voting strength of Negroes was nearer 25 percent.

That Mrs. Wallace carried far more than half of the white vote shows the appeal of her husband's brand of conservative politics. The Wallace campaign was not as overtly racist as his past pronouncements and record, a mark of the influence of the new Negro vote. But Alabamans, as they say, knew where the Wallaces stood. She (he) appealed to all whites, not merely the worst.

The Negro vote went, as expected, to Richmond Flowers. He got it mainly by asking for it, something none of the other nine candidates would do openly. It gave him second place. That victory-in-defeat helps offset somewhat the election's general encouragement of racism-as-usual in southern politics. For in the high expectations of the campaign, Negro leaders and voters were faced with a dilemma that will be common throughout the South—whether to support a man who openly identifies with them and thereby hurt his chances with white voters, or to support a covertly friendly candidate (Carl Elliott, in this case) whose chances with the whites and of winning are better.

In choosing the former course, Alabama Negroes set a precedent which will be noted by politicians and perhaps followed by Negroes of other states. The decision doomed efforts for a coalition between moderate and liberal white elements and Negroes. Labor supported Elliott, and the Johnson Administration was said to favor him —to no avail.

There were some who said the heavy vote for Wallace in the primary was meant merely to show Negroes how things stand, and that much of the segregationist vote will now go to the Republican candidate in the general election in the fall, Rep. James Martin. That seems problematic at this moment.

They voted long and hard. In Birmingham, where more Negroes (61,637) are registered than in all of the black belt, blocks-long lines lasted until nearly midnight. In white and Negro precincts very heavy turnouts were recorded across the state. In the smaller towns, where there is only one polling place, whites and Negroes stood one behind the other, well integrated to vote against or for that integration.

There was no violence of note. Not that things were friendly: At Bessemer, a steelworking town, a Negro approached a white outside the polling place and asked him politely which line he should get in. "I wouldn't tell you," the white answered.

BUT IN A STATE where racial violence and killings by whites have been frequent, on this day, at least, there appeared to be a new way of settling disputes—democracy. The segregationists won the count, but they won it in a free and open election. (The Justice Dept. with its 350 federal poll-watchers in the state seemed satisfied at the end of election day that no flagrant irregularities had occurred. However, they were studying reports of the poll-watchers for indications of scattered irregularities.)

The highest hope had been that, democracy having come for the first time in any real sense to a state like Alabama, the South would be done with its Wallaces.

The results fall short of that: democracy had not fully come—something less than half the eligible Negroes are registered; the 100-percent increase in Negro registration in less than a year had a low starting point. But as elsewhere in the South, the political calculations of men like Flowers are based as much on potential as on the new math of actual Negro voting strength.

There is no gainsaying the meaning of a victory like that of Wallace. It is that the Negro vote alone cannot save the South. Perhaps Alabama is the only state where whites are so overwhelmingly wed to the old ruinous politics. But perhaps too there will now be many more candidates willing to "do a Flowers." And they won't have to run their wives.

N4T CRB-1966

Conrad, The Los Angeles Times

"I forgot a key . . . But, you get a pretty good idea what the house is like from out here."

File

Evasion of School Integration in South Called U.S. Scandal

12-19-66

SRC spec. file

BY JACK NELSON
LA Times Staff Writer (front page)

ATLANTA—The Southern Regional Council Sunday called the evasion of school desegregation by southern school and public officials more of a national scandal than "the lawlessness of violent racist gangs."

In a lengthy report, the council declared that the "poor performance" of the South in the second year of enforcement of Title 4 of the 1964 Civil Rights Act for school desegregation "remained the strongest rebuttal of the southern complaint that the Office of Education has been overzealous in the matter."

The council, a biracial civil rights organization highly regarded for its research reports, questioned whether federal education officials have been diligent enough in enforcement of Title 4, which provides for halting of federal aid to schools that fail to make adequate progress toward elimination of dual school systems.

The Office of Education, the council said, has settled in many instances for tokenism and gradualism in enforcing the provisions.

Several northern congressmen recently have joined southern public officials in criticizing the office for its enforcement of guidelines, which prescribe minimum, but rather flexible standards for compliance. The standards include suggested minimum percentages of Negroes attending previously all-white schools.

The council declared that segments of the southern education and political establishments avoided significant desegregation during the current school year partly by "diverting attention in Congress from the failure in ending segregated dual systems to fears of forced racial violence."

The education office's guidelines would not have ended dual schools

Please Turn to Page 9, Col. 1

SCANDAL

Continued from First Page

"even if perfectly applied," the council reported, because they were intended only as instruments for a significant beginning toward that end.

The council declared that the guidelines were not fully implemented in the five Deep South states where the proportion of Negroes attending previously all-white schools ranges from 2.4% in Alabama to 6.6% in Georgia.

Pointing out that the Supreme Court declared more than 12 years ago that dual school systems are prima facie unconstitutional, the council declared:

"The record of many southern school and public officials and the publics they serve has been one of avoiding and evading this clear-cut dictum of the basic law of the nation.

"Such mistreatments of the legal system by these 'best people' has been far more a national disgrace and scandal than the notorious lawlessness of violent racist gangs comprised of the 'worst people' of the area."

Pressure Factor

Pressure for strong enforcement of desegregation guidelines, the council said, was weakened by political pressures on school administrators, fear of white backlash and confusion about the intent of Congress in Title 4.

The report suggested there is "considerable need" for Congress to clarify its intent in the title.

The emergence of racism among northern white mobs has given encouragement to the advocates of resistance in the South, according to the report.

"Many southern segregationists believe that the rest of the country has come to agree with them on racial matters and that it will not be long before federal pressures for desegregation will dissolve," the report said.

Textile Industry Charged With Discrimination

Jan 13 67

By Thomas Pepper
Staff Reporter

CHARLOTTE — The southern textile industry "has an extremely poor record on Negro employment," a government - sponsored "forum" here was told yesterday.

Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, a Negro economist and president of Clark College at Atlanta, Ga., said, "The industry has a vicious history of discrimination and outright exclusion of Negroes from the work force" in various plants.

Improvement is particularly needed, Henderson said, in the employment of rural Negroes who no longer work on farms. Negroes in larger cities have a variety of job opportunities to choose from, he said, but rural Negroes are especially dependent on textile mill jobs because in many small towns this is the only source of factory employment.

Henderson was one of 14 speakers at a "forum" on Negro employment in the textile industry of North and South Carolina, sponsored by the U. S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The word "forum" was chosen because the commission said it simply wanted to gather information from all parties concerned. Under the ground rules, no charges of discrimination against individuals, companies, or unions can be made in public during the two-day session. About 160 people were at the opening meeting.

Ten leading textile firms, their principal trade association, state and local government agencies, civil rights groups and unions were invited to present their views. But most of the firms and the American Textile Manufacturers Institute decided to boycott the session. The institute said it preferred a private meeting.

Although only one industry spokesman, an official of the Du Pont Corp. of Wilmington, Del., spoke yesterday, numerous industry representatives, including men from Cone Mills and Burlington Industries in Greensboro, were in the audience.

Companies were not alone

See Forum, P. 18, Col. 4

Forum Told About Hiring Practices

Continued from Page 1

in receiving criticism. Kelly Alexander of Charlotte, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that unions and the N. C. Employment Security Commission discriminate against Negroes. The ESC fails to refer Negroes to textile mill jobs, he said.

Alexander and other Negro civil rights spokesmen, including Charles McLean of Winston-Salem, a full - time NAACP employe, urged the commission to find ways to cut off federal programs to the textile industry. They referred to tariff and quota agreements that restrict imports to protect the domestic industry, and to defense contracts.

A speaker from the U. S. Department of Commerce, also a Negro, said that the textile industry is at a serious disadvantage in competition with foreign firms, and that widespread imports would hurt the chances for increased Negro employment in the industry.

Textile Industry Criticized

Paul Swaity, a vice president of the Textile Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO, castigated the textile industry for manufacturing poverty as well as textiles.

He said his union welcomes any employe regardless of race and that because of this, management appeals to racial prejudice in campaigns against union organization.

Commission chairman Stephen N. Shulman asked Swaity whether Negroes are generally more apt than whites to support unions in the southern for manufacturing poverty as well as textiles.

He said his union welcomes any employe regardless of race and that because of this, management appeals to racial prejudice in campaigns against union organization.

Commission chairman Stephen N. Shulman asked Swaity whether Negroes are generally more apt than whites to support unions in the southern textile industry.

Swaity said successful civil rights drives have made Negroes more sympathetic to unions than they used to be. He added that 10 years ago hardly any Negroes were employed at textile mills.

In an interview later, Swaity said the Negroes' inclination to join unions probably makes companies more reluctant to hire them.

Shulman, asked whether this observation by Swaity is true, said, "I hope not."

Pro-Union Sentiment

Shulman said he has to assume that companies willingly obey laws that prohibit discrimination against Negroes and against people sympathetic to unions. He also said he would hate to think that pro-union sympathies by Negroes would hurt their chances for employment in textile mills.

Henderson, Alexander and others said the textile industry needs to make more use of federal manpower training programs, in which the government pays part of the cost of on-the-job training. A labor Department speaker said the textile industry uses very little of these funds.

At the beginning of the program, several commission staff members reviewed the studies that prompted the commission to schedule the "forum."

Commission speakers alternated between a "hard sell," when the head of the compliance division reminded the audience of the commission's responsibilities under the law, and a "soft sell," when the regional director from Atlanta outlined various plans some companies have voluntarily used to recruit and employ more Negroes.

Changes Approach

Textile Industry Defends Hiring

By Thomas Pepper Jan 1967
Staff Reporter

CHARLOTTE — Changing its mind, the American Textile Manufacturers Institute asked yesterday to speak at a government-sponsored "forum" on Negro employment in the textile industry of the Carolinas. The institute said it is willing to discuss programs "for the benefit of all Americans, regardless of race."

F. Sadler Love, secretary-treasurer of the ATMI, the textile industry's principal trade association, spoke near the end of two days of public hearings here before the U. S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. This is the government body charged with enforcement of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which prohibits racial discrimination in any company with more than 25 employes.

The ATMI had indicated earlier it would boycott the meeting because a public session might encourage "unfounded and irresponsible accusations." The ATMI had said it preferred a private meeting.

Statement Offered

But after a day and a half of public statements, most of them critical of the industry, Love told commission chairman Stephen N. Shulman that he wanted to make a statement, an informed source said.

In planning the "forum," the commission wanted participation from all elements concerned with Negro employment in the textile industry—companies themselves, the trade association, state and local government agencies, civil rights groups, unions and individual Negroes who have sought employment.

The word "forum" was chosen because the commission said it wanted to gather information and not hold a judicial or semi-judicial inquiry.

Employment Increases

In his statement, Love sought to emphasize the high percentage increases in Negro employment in the textile industry since passage of the Civil Rights Act. He quoted figures from the commission's own studies, and called these increases "encouraging." Earlier, commission economists said the percentage increases are high because the industry began with a low number of Negroes employed.

Love also said the education and manpower training systems should educate and train Negroes for textile work. The systems are run and paid for by the government. Implicitly, he was answering those who had called on the textile industry to let more Negroes participate in on-the-job training.

These previous witnesses, called for improved educational programs and acknowledged the Negroes' own need for self-improvement, but they stressed industry's responsibility and said it is willing to train whites on-the-job.

Love emphasized the intense competition facing the textile industry, at home and abroad. The industry trains thousands of people each year, he said, but "it does not have the facilities to train the hundreds of thousands of others who lack adequate employment because they lack adequate training."

Earlier yesterday, Watts Hill Jr., chairman of the State Board of Higher Education and president of Home Security Life Insurance Co. of Durham, said equal employment programs in industry could succeed only if top management actively backs them.

Extraordinary recruitment programs, such as visits to predominately Negro high schools and colleges, are needed to reach the Negro community, he said.

Compensation Needed

On education, Hill said compensations for Negroes are needed today to make up for 100 years of unequal expenditures. "Who can say that there would or would not have been equal achievement had the treatment been equal all along? We do not know and never will," Hill said.

Speaking as an executive, Hill said his own company's experience in integration shows that the "apprehension of what might happen always exceeds the reality." Because of progress in the recruitment programs in the last few years, Hill said his company now gets as many Negro as white applicants and about the same percentage of qualified applicants from each race.

Six Negro workers and several ministers told of unsuccessful attempts to get jobs in textile mills or of higher wages going to whites for identical work.

Miss Willie Mae McCrimmon, an 18-year-old high school graduate, said she was refused a job about the time a newspaper in her county advertised 200 openings.

See Textile, P. 12, Col. 5 mining the differences.

Textile Group Says Hiring Is Not Biased

Continued from Page 1

Mrs. Annie Lou Harris, a former business student at Winston-Salem State College, said the company she applied to simply said her application would be kept on file.

Dr. Emory Via, director of labor programs for the Southern Regional Council, a research-oriented civil rights organization in Atlanta, Ga., told the commission that the textile industry, because of its prominence in the economic, social, and cultural life of the Carolinas, can take the lead in integration. Nondiscrimination now is required by law, he said and "fairness can no longer be satisfied with statements of good intentions."

Mrs. Sarah Herbin of the North Carolina fund, an anti-poverty agency at Durham, called for a concrete commission-followup. She deplored public meetings that only increase the frustrations of Negroes and she criticized the industry for wanting "super - Negroes" with higher qualifications for a job than whites.

KOLD DRAFT

Textile Industry Seemed On Defensive at Forum

File

Jan 1967

By Thomas Pepper
Staff Reporter

CHARLOTTE — "Wild Accusations Flare at EEOC Forum" read a banner headline in a weekly trade newspaper for the textile industry, published here Friday.

The headline and main story were about a public forum on Negro employment in the textile industry of North and South Carolina, sponsored by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

It was apparent that the industry regarded the event as a promotion stunt, designed to pressure companies into hiring and upgrading more Negroes.

A News Analysis

Officially, the commission denied any intention to pressure. It said it simply wanted an exchange of information from all parties concerned, and it used the word "forum" to avoid the word "hearing" or any connotation of a judicial or semijudicial inquiry.

Unquestionably, however, the commission did create an event. And the event gathered information that would otherwise be hard for the press to get.

Just as the industry foresaw, economists and laymen alike charged that the industry discriminates against Negroes — both in the low number of Negroes employed and in the kinds of jobs they are given.

But like any business, the commission has a job to do, and it is entitled to try the same kind of promotional gimmicks that business and industry use.

Actually, the forum was more than a mere promotion stunt. It was an ingenious way for the commission to apply pressure on an industry to do more toward making genuine equality of opportunity a reality. Beforehand, and again in a closing statement, commission chairman Stephen N. Shulman said the group would hold similar forums elsewhere in the country and for other industries.

With a limited budget and very few investigators in its 10 regional offices, the commission has to use some technique to do its job, which is to enforce Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This prohibits racial discrimination in any company with more than 25 employes.

Moreover, while the commission held up the "stick" of its complaint investigations, it also did everything possible to hold up the "carrot" of urging voluntary action toward equal opportunity. The commission knows that voluntary action by companies is a far more effective way to achieve gains than case-by-case investigations.

Industry Attitude

What remains unclear at the end of this forum is why the textile industry had to appear so uncooperative—first by saying it would boycott the meeting and later, when it did make a statement, by referring to alleged "malicious and irresponsible accusations" against the industry.

According to one participant, in private conversation, the whole meeting might just as easily have turned into a great "whitewash," with the industry looking like a model of progress.

In his view, last week was the best possible time for the textile industry to appear at any such forum. Before 1964, nobody could complain, except morally, if the industry was overwhelmingly white. Next year, the standards of performance will be even higher than they are now. Hence, he reasoned, the industry was foolish not to parade several new and upgraded Negro employes before the commission as "proof" of recent progress.

Even the commission's own study, the basis of the meeting, he said, can be interpreted in two ways: Emphasis on its finding that a low number of Negroes are employed in the textile industry, or its finding that astronomical percentage gains have been made since 1964. These gains are large, it was pointed out, because the industry began from a very low base.

By boycotting the meeting (except for one executive from the Du Pont Corp. of Wilmington, Del., who gave examples of Negro recruitment by his firm), the industry surrendered the floor to civil rights groups, who naturally emphasized the low numbers of Negroes employed.

Appeared on Defensive

When the industry finally did speak, through its trade association, the American Textile Manufacturers Institute, it appeared on the defensive even as it cited the very percentage increases that, with proper emphasis, could have made the industry look good.

Except for a union charge that the industry manufactures "poverty" as well as "textiles," the participant said there were no really irrelevant points brought up, however much the industry disliked the points.

Hence, he reasoned, the industry's pouting against alleged "sensationalism" probably was caused by a need to satisfy a hard-line faction of executives who opposed any participation in the session.

As Justification

And, in a sense, the industry had to complain about "sensationalism" as a justification for its earlier prediction of "unfounded and irresponsible accusations."

By participating so reluctantly, and only after adverse publicity, the industry did not come out of the forum "smelling like a rose." With other tactics, it might have.

There were several poignant incidents at the meeting:

—Mrs. Sarah Herbin, a 10-year veteran at seeking job opportunities for Negroes, criticized industry executives for wanting "light-skinned" Negroes. With considerable understatement, she said, "I'm not sure what these employers were really asking for." After the laughter subsided, Mrs. Herbin, a Negro, said she herself had not said anything about "miscegenation."

—Mrs. Herbin also said she longed for the day when Negroes no longer lacked the self-confidence to apply for jobs on their own—without needing "middle-men" like herself.

—Col. Clifton M. Craig, North Carolina commissioner of welfare, was interrupted for his pronunciation of the word "Negroes," which, when he said it, sounded like "Nigras." Craig apologized and placed emphasis on the final sound.

—Dr. Luther Holcomb, vice chairman of the commission and former executive director of the Greater Dallas (Tex.) Council of Churches, said many textile executives are deacons and elders in their churches and that churches hold the key in influencing individuals to take further action toward equal opportunity.

—The Rev. Howard McClain, executive director of the South Carolina Christian Action Council, responded to Holcomb's point by saying that textile executives had taken the lead in the peaceful integration of Clemson College in 1963. Ministers should reinforce such acts by commending them, McClain said.

—Courtney Siceloff, secretary of the South Carolina Advisory Committee to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission, said that if the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission lacked the power to get the industry to participate fully in a forum, it probably needed a stronger law behind it. He advocated specific, numerical quotas for Negroes in plants.

Moore's Greetings

David S. Coltrane, chairman of the North Carolina Good Neighbor Council, brought greetings from Gov. Dan Moore and told the commission, "You may all be assured of the governor's interest in this conference and the employment of qualified people irrespective of race."

In the end, the forum managed to create the publicity it sought.

In his closing statement, Shulman said the meeting was "fruitful because there has been an exchange of information."

"I do not know yet whether it has been a success," he said. That, he added, will depend on the effectiveness of the follow-up the commission and others agree to and act upon.

Why?

Judge Cox Cancels A Grand Jury

The action of Federal Judge Harold Cox in cancelling a Grand Jury this week is shocking and not easily understood. The jury was to have heard evidence in seeking indictments against the fourteen persons accused of murdering NAACP leader Vernon Dahmer of Hattiesburg and eighteen persons accused in the slaying of three civil rights workers in Philadelphia. The cases should have been brought to justice long ago.

If there is any person in the world in whom prejudice and discrimination is inexcusable certainly it is a Federal judge — and if there is any place in the world where prejudice and discrimination cannot be tolerated it is a Federal court.

Judge Cox has laid himself wide open to suspicion and criticism on both counts. If a report of two well known Washington columnists is true, Judge Cox has not only exhibited prejudice in an official capacity but has actually taken a hand in impeding justice in his own court.

Evans and Novak reported in their "Inside Report" column of January 10 that Judge Cox, shortly after Christmas called a Justice Department lawyer into his chambers and presented him with this proposition: "I'm not going to call any grand jury in the murder cases until the Justice Department requests a grand jury to investigate CDGM (Child Development Group of Mississippi."

The newsmen said, and we quote, that "to equate what at the worst may be embezzlement with premeditated murder is ludicrous." They also stated "Cox's intransigence undermines cooperative effort between the Federal government and Governor Paul Johnson's administration to make clear that murder — even murder of a civil rights worker—is a crime in Mississippi." (See full column on editorial page.)

The action of Judge Cox is not funny in any manner—it is shocking and deplorable. It is a sad but eloquent commentary on justice, Mississippi style. It is bad enough that local and district courts have historically made a mockery of the law in cases involving racial crimes, but in a Federal court it is intolerable.

In attempting to dictate to the U. S. Justice Department on the CDGM matter Judge Cox is clearly interfering in matters that are none of his business — and that branch of the U. S. government should waste no time in dealing with him.

Continued respect and confidence for Federal courts demands that Federal judges conduct themselves and the courts with dignity, honor and integrity at all times.

Any suggestion, even implied, that a Federal judge is reluctant to bring to justice the killers of those four people in Mississippi is abhorrent to every decent citizen of the state.

Judge Cox should act immediately to clear himself of any suspicion of wrong doing.

Through Hazel Eyes

By HAZEL BRANNON SMITH

Aaron Henry, a Clarksdale dentist who is state president of the Mississippi Chapter of the NAACP, became last week the first Negro to speak to college students on the campus of Mississippi State University at Starkville. He had previously spoken on the Ole Miss campus at Oxford.

So many students came out to hear Mr. Henry at Starkville the meeting place had to be moved to accommodate the crowd. He spoke under the sponsorship of the campus chapter of Young Democrats.

This must have been a unique experience for many of these college boys and girls — their first exposure to any Negro other than a cook, maid or handyman. (How narrow the world they have been brought up in—and how broad and difficult the world in which they are going to have to make their way!)

Henry told the MSU audience that 175,000 Negroes were registered to vote in Mississippi at the end of 1966.

At the end of 1965 there were only 20,000. He said registration of Negroes and the increased voting of this minority group will bring about some changes in Mississippi.

Specifically, Henry expects improved educational opportunities, economic opportunities and employment conditions. He was quoted as saying:

"We can anticipate political support on the state and national level for legislation aimed at ending poverty and generally improving the lot of the poor man."

Henry said the tradition of injustice for Negroes in some courts will probably be the most difficult practice to change but that pressure from voters could also accomplish this.

Henry may be right in what he says—but we think it's going to take a lot more than 175,000 Negro voters in Mississippi to make any real change in the overall situation in Mississippi. Not until the number of Negro voters is doubled or more will Negroes have any real political power in the state.

Of course there are a few counties in the state (including Holmes) where the number of Negro voters is already greater than white. But whether the Negroes go out and vote remains to be seen. (In Holmes County the percentage of Negroes voting in the Congressional elections was a little higher than that of the whites—so it appears that in this county, a least, the Negroes will vote in meaningful numbers.)

1967 is general election year in Mississippi. This is the year in which new officials will be elected in all local, district, county and state offices—everything from Justice of the Peace and Constable to governor of the state.

Only those persons who are properly registered by July 7 will be eligible to vote in either election — the Primary election in August or the general election in November.

If there are any among our readers who want to have a voice in electing the officials who govern us and control our lives they'd better get registered now.

Those persons who are horrified at the thought that former governor Ross Barnett could be returned to office next January (and there are thousands of white Mississippians who feel this way) should lose no time in doing something about it.

One thing they can do is to make certain they and all of the people they can influence get registered to vote.

The only effective weapon for making certain that qualified people are elected to office is the vote — and the men and women we elect to office determine the quality of our life.

One thing certain: Mr. Barnett makes no pretense about the kind of administration his would be. He is definitely alongside Georgia Governor Maddox and Alabama Governor Lurleen-George Wallace. Mr. Barnett appered at the inauguration of both looking pleased as punch.

If Mississippi wants to continue to shadow box the Federal government and try vainly to maintain a world that no longer exists, it can elect Mr. Barnett governor again.

And if Mr. Barnett is elected again, Mississippi will deserve him—just as Georgia and Alabama today deserve the governors they have.

The people of my native Alabama succumbed to hysteria — the same type of hysteria we had in Mississippi when Mr. Barnett was governor—and the people of Georgia went to sleep at the switch.

The Northside Reporter, Jan. 19, 1967

File

Inside Report

Federal Judge Seems To Be Blocking Indictments Of Accused Murderers

By Rowland Evans
And Robert Novak
In The Delta Democrat-Times

WASHINGTON — The U. S. Government's long and gradually successful effort to bring the rule of law to rural Mississippi has entered a new crisis putting the Justice Department on a collision course with a federal judge.

With no hint of warning, Judge Harold Cox of Jackson—perhaps the most uncompromising segregationist on the federal bench today—cancelled plans to summon a grand jury in Jackson next Monday to consider civil rights murder cases. The government is seeking 14 indictments in the murder of Negro Vernon Dahmer at Hattiesburg and 18 indictments in the notorious slaying of three civil rights workers at Philadelphia.

What apparently set off the mercurial Judge Cox was the Johnson administration's decision, under liberal-labor pressure, to reverse itself and refund the Child Development Group of Mississippi (CDGM) — a headstart program controlled by blackpower advocates.

Thus, shortly after Christmas, Cox called a Justice Department lawyer into his chambers and presented him with this proposition: I'm not going to call any grand jury in the murder cases until the Justice Department requests a grand jury to investigate CDGM.

Quite apart from indisputable irregularities in CDGM, it is ludicrous to equate what at the worst may be embezzlement with premeditated murder. More to the point, Cox's intransigence undermines cooperative efforts between the federal government and Gov. Paul Johnson's adminstration to make clear the murder — even murder of a civil rights worker—is a crime in Mississippi.

What makes Cox's failure to summon a grand jury particularly regrettable is that it coincides with boasts by Mississippi Ku Klux Klan leaders throughout the recent election campaign that they had a "fix" on in Washington to protect the accused killers—Klansmen from prosecution. Although rank-and-file Klansmen in Mississpipi generally backed Republican Prentiss Walker, their leaders switched in mid-campaign to Sen. James O. Eastland.

It should be stressed that high-placed officials in Washington do not believe for one instant that Eastland and Cox, honest men as well as militant segregationists, would stoop to a conspiratorial deal with the Klan in order to obstruct justice. But the mere rumor of such a deal frays and undercuts the rule of law.

Actually, the postponement of the grand jury is quite in character for Cox, an old college roommate of Eastland who was President John F. Kennedy's first appointment to the judicary —a step necessary to unlock the federal judgship bill from Eastland Senate Judiciary Committee.

Cox's running feud with the Justice Department hit a peak in 1964 when he cited a U. S. attorney for contempt of court for refusing to bring perjury charges against two Negro witnesses. Ever since that contempt citation was overruled by a higher court in January, 1965, Cox has been convinced the Justice Department will prosecute whites but not Negroes.

In mid-1965 Cox collided with the Justice department over the civil rights killings. He ruled that the accused civil rights slayers could not be prosecuted by the federal government (under a statute carrying a maximum 10-year sentence) but must be handled by the state courts. Overruled on that point by the U. S. Supreme Court, Cox last year tossed out indictments in the two cases on the ironic grounds that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury lists.

It can be said that the federal government has no intention of appeasing Cox by pledging to investigate CDGM (though, in fact, just such an investigation by the Justice Department's criminal division eventually may be made).

Nor will indefinite delay by Cox be tolerated. Hopefully, he will relent and summon a grand jury. If he doesn't, it is entirely likely that the federal government will invoke a rarely-used procedure by seeking from the Fifth U. S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans a mandamus action forcing Cox to act.

For the eye of Mississippi are on that courtroom in Jackson.

Unless the accused murderers are indicted soon, the considerable progress toward law and order in that state since the long, hot and unhappy summer of 1963 may be wiped away.

S-RC
(spec. file)

File

JOURNAL

PAPER ~~KNOXVILLE~~

CITY

DATE 1-28-67 STATE

16—70060-1 GPO

Red-Rooted Council Aids Knox Group

The Greater Knoxville Council on Human Relations has received funds from an organization founded by a onetime regional secretary of the Communist Party and member of the party's national committee.

J. R. Rutter, president of the Greater Knoxville group, in a letter dated June 6, 1966, announced a $2400 grant had been received from the Southern Regional Council which has headquarters in Atlanta.

OPERATED BY BRADEN

The Southern Regional Council was founded by James E. Jackson Jr., who was also instrumental in the organization of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which is now operated by Carl Braden under the name of Southern Conference Education Fund.

A Communist Daily Worker of Dec. 1, 1951, described Jackson as "this stalwart Marxist . . . . Southern regional secretary of the Communist Party and member of its national committee."

The Greater Knoxville group has been in the news recently by cosponsorship of a meeting held here this week along with East Tennessee Civil Liberties Union, the Citizens for Progress and the Tennessee Valley Unitarian Church. This meeting was held in defense of the controversial Highlander Center here and the announced subject was "Free Speech and the Highlander Center."

LABELED RED FRONT

When the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee labeled the Southern Conference for Human Welfare a Communist front, the name was changed to SCEF and it continued to operate at the same address and the same phone number in New Orleans. It was headed for many years by Dr. James Dombrowski, who with Myles Horton, president of Highlander, Don West, onetime Communist Party director for North Carolina, and Rev. John Thompson, now pastor of the Community Congregational Church at Berkely, Calif., who is still a board member of Highlander, founded the original Highlander Folk School at Monteagle.

Berkeley, Calif., is the home of the University of California branch where many demonstrations, including antiwar ones, have been held in the past several years.

Braden, now executive director of the Southern Conference Education Fund, transferred the main offices to Louisville after he took over from Dombrowski. Braden served a one-year federal prison term for a conviction of contempt of Congress for refusing to discuss his Communist activities before an investigation by the House Un-American Activities Committee. The US Supreme Court upheld the conviction and the sentence.

LINKED TO HIGHLANDER

The Greater Knoxville Human Relations group is not only tied to the Southern Regional Council and the Tennessee Council on Human Relations, but is also closely associated with Highlander, Citizens for Progress and the East Tennessee Civil Liberties Union by interlocking members or officers.

Article X of the bylaws of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations states: Cooperation. This council shall cooperate with the Southern Regional Council, other state councils on human relations and groups which share the purposes and concern of the Tennessee Council on Human Relations.

The Tennessee Council is holding its annual meeting Saturday and Sunday in Nashville and the principle speaker on the schedule is Leslie Dunbar, former executive director of the Field Foundation, which has contributed liberally to the Tennessee Council.

The Tennessee Council's newsletter of May-June 1966 reported that on "June 14 the Field Foundation gave a two-year extension of our grant and increased the amount over our previous grant from $15,000 to $25,000."

From Louis S. Sinclair
1721 Saxton Ave
Knoxville, Tenn 37915

for retraction - see next page

THE KNOXVILLE JOURNAL
Knoxville, Tennessee
February 1, 1967

Journal Erred On SRC Origin

In its issue of Jan. 28, The Knoxville Journal on this page stated that the Southern Regional Council was founded by James E. Jackson Jr., once Southern regional secretary of the Communist Party and a member of its national committee. The story was based on an article appearing on Dec. 1, 1954 in the Communist Daily Worker which credited Jackson also with having had a hand in founding the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

The charge that the Southern Regional Council was founded by Jackson The Knoxville Journal has subsequently found to be untrue and is pleased to retract the charge and to extend its apologies to the Southern Regional Council, its officers and members, and to readers of this newspaper.

The Journal was duped by the claim of the Communist Daily Worker which, describing Jackson in its issue of Dec. 1, 1954 as "this stalwart Marxist," asserted: "He participated in the formation and building of the Southern Conference for Human

Continued on Page 2, Col. 5

SRC Origin Story In Journal In Error

CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE

Welfare, the Southern Regional Council."

Protests as to the inaccuracy of the story were received from J. R. Rutter, president of the Greater Knoxville Council on Human Relations, and from TVA Director Frank E. Smith, a member of the council at this time.

It appears that an inaccuracy identical with this one which appeared in The Journal also was published in the Richmond Times-Dispatch on Aug. 21, 1958. An editorial in the Richmond paper, subsequently published, provides a recital of the actual beginnings of the Southern Regional Council and is reproduced herewith:

A Race Agency And The Facts

"Inaccurate statements as to its origins of the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta appeared recently in the Times-Dispatch, and should be corrected. They appeared—inadvertently, we are sure—in one of the series of articles by Edward B. Simmons, of the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard-Times, concerning Communist efforts to incite racial strife in the United States.

"Mr. Simmons stated in the article appearing in our paper on Aug. 5 that the Southern Regional Council, established in Atlanta in 1944, was an 'offshoot of the old Southern Conference for Human Welfare, which was dissolved in 1948 after twice being described by the Federal Government as Communist front.' He also said : 'The Communist Daily Worker openly boasted that James E. Jackson, chief of the southern branch of the US Communist Party, was a cofounder of the regional council.'

"Taking these two charges in order, the Southern Regional Council was not an offshoot of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. It was established in response to an appeal from respected southern Negro leaders, who met at Durham, N.C., in October 1942, on the call of Dr. Gordon B. Hancock, of the Virginia Union faculty here, and Dr. P. B. Young, of Norfolk, publisher of the Norfolk Journal and Guide. These Negro leaders did not ask for the elimination of segregation in the schools or anywhere else; they asked that 'separate but equal' be made a reality.

"Responding to their appeal, a group of white leaders met in Atlanta in the spring of 1943, and expressed a desire to cooperate. Out of this grew the Southern Regional Council. The council was the successor to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, founded in 1919 by leading churchmen. To repeat, it not only was no offshoot of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare; it was criticized in some quarters because it was more conservative than that organization and suspected of being in competition with it.

"We must remember, too, that when the Southern Conference for Human Welfare was established in 1938, it was not suspected of having any Communist connections, and many well intentioned and patriotic southerners participated in its early meetings. A number of these later joined the Southern Regional Council when they discovered the true purposes of the Conference for Human Welfare.

"As to the allegation of the Communist Daily Worker that James E. Jackson, chief of the southern branch of the US Communist Party, was a cofounder of the Southern Regional Council, there is nothing to support this.

"A James E. Jackson is listed as having attended the Durham meeting of Negro leaders in October 1942, but is not mentioned by the Norfolk Journal and Guide as having been on the committee which drew up the statement then issued. Jackson did not participate in the meetings of white and Negro leaders in 1943 and 1944 which led to the establishment of the Southern Regional Council, and he was not at any time an officer, director, or member of that agency. The Daily Worker's statement that he was a founder is as unreliable and inaccurate as nearly everything else in that Communist sheet.

"The late Dr. Howard W. Odum, noted and respected member of the University of North Carolina faculty, was the first president of the council. He was succeeded in 1945 by Paul D. Williams, prominent Catholic layman of Richmond and cofounder of the Catholic Committee of the South, who served until 1951. Mr. Williams was succeeded in that year by Marion A. Wright, South Carolina attorney, former chairman of the South Carolina Library Board and past president of the University of South Carolina Alumni Association.

"It should be emphasized that SRC worked within the framework of "separate but equal" for 7 years, and did not announce for integration until 1951.

"While we disagree strongly and completely with its present position on this issue, we feel obligated to point out, in fairness, that it was in no sense Communist in its origins. The Southern Regional Council was established because of a sincere desire on the part of white and Negro leaders in the South to eliminate many of the disabilities and discriminations from which Negroes were suffering.

"It was hoped that if these could be substantially lessened, the colored South would not look to the colored North for leadership. Insufficient progress was made, unfortunately, and the NAACP moved in and launched its drive for the complete elimination of segregation —sooner than it probably would have done if SRC's accomplishments had been larger.

"That is where we stand today."

The incorporators of the SRC, according to TVA Director Smith, were Arthur J. Moore, Methodist bishop of Georgia; Ralph McGill, then editor of Atlanta Constitution; Dr. Rufus E. Clement; Dr. Charles S. Johnson; and Dr. Howard W. Odum. Dr. Odum was the first president of the organization

President Rutter, of the Greater Knoxville Council on Human Relations, asserts that a man by the name of James E. Jackson Jr. did attend the Durham meeting referred to in the Richmond Times-Dispatch editorial, but the minutes of that meeting reflect no participation on his part.

File

the primary.

In Black Belt—

Co-op runs into snag over grant

B'ham News 4-1-67

SELMA (AP)— The Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative Association (AFCA), in its efforts to obtain a half-million dollar antipoverty grant, has run into opposition.

Selma Mayor Joe T. Smitheran and Probate Judge B. A. Reynolds Friday said there are many unanswered questions about the economic feasibility of the program and about the funding of such a structure as SAFCA.

The two have urged mayors and probate judges from a 10-county area to fight the efforts being made by the SAFCA for the antipoverty grant.

THEY SAID the SAFCA represents itself as a group of low income farmers in 10 Black-Belt counties who are seeking funds to organize a collective engaged primarily in the production of vegetable crops.

Shirtley Mesher, listed as one of three coordinators in the application for funds, has spearheaded the program, they siad.

Rep. Bill Nichols and local leaders conferred on the matter Thursday and Nichols has arranged a Washington meeting for next week on the issue.

Smitherman and Reynolds said the SAFCA program application involves Dallas, Choctaw, Greene, Hale, Lowndes, Marengo, Monroe, Perry, Sumter and Wilcox Counties.

"We certainly feel that any agricultural program underwritten by the Office of Economic Opportunity should at least carry a feasibility endorsement of such professional agriculture agencies as the Extension Service, the Soil Conservation Service, the Farmers Home Administration and others," Smitherman and Reynolds said.

Birmingham News

2 Front Page
Grant to Against "Black Power" Group

11 member elec flew today mobiling
FBI Investig
Wall "

Mayor — interest FWA Calif.

Doug Cater

Families Denied Aid on Technicalities Are in Direst Need, Burson Declares

By ACHSAH NESMITH

The families in the direst need in Georgia are those who have been denied welfare aid because of "technicalities" in regulations, according to William Burson, state director of Family and Children Services.

Most of these rejected people were "caught in the employable mother or substitute father reglations," Burson added.

Because he is a defendant in court cases challenging both regulations, he deals with them in a gingerly way when asked whether he thinks they are good rules.

"I have some reservations about whether they achieve what is intended," he said.

Neither is required by law, either state or federal, he acknowledges, but, "We are tied to the availability of funds. Where there is not enough money to go around, somebody does without. The law requires that we set regulations and that if we give out more money than we have, we'd have to cut everybody across the board later to make up for it."

"I don't think any woman is so bereft of moral sensibilities that she would have a child for a small profit," he says of the "substitute father" regulation. His predecessor, Mrs. Bruce Schaefer, often said she didn't believe any woman would have a child just for welfare assistance because the amount was so small it wouldn't be worth it.

"We're dealing with people who are the least qualified morally, socially and economically to deal with biological forces," Burson said. "I can't see any profit to society from punishing the children for the sins of the parents.

"I see nothing wrong with requiring a mother whose children are properly cared for — I emphasize properly cared for — to take a job and support those children."

STUMBLING BLOCK

But he admits that "properly cared for" is one of the biggest stumbling blocks. Many mothers every year who work but cannot work out a day-care plan that is satisfactory end up with lower salaries than they would be entitled to on welfare and are not eligible for partial grants. Others cannot take jobs because they cannot work out day care for their children.

"We've hardly scratched the surface in day care," he said. "We have to have it if we are going to stress employable mothers. We can pay for care but we can't establish centers for it, and there aren't nearly enough."

He said that using AFDC mothers in day-care centers to care for the children of other AFDC mothers would seem a logical solution, providing needed extra income for all concerned and making them as independent as possible as well as providing adequate care for the children.

HAS MONEY PROBLEMS
William Burson

NOT GEORGIA

But Georgia can't do this, because to get federal money both the mothers working in day-care centers and the working mothers whose children are staying there must get 100 per cent of their budgeted needs.

Georgia does not provide 100 per cent of the budgets the department makes for its families, which include maximums that often are below realistic figures at best. The budget for a large family may go well over $200 a month, but the maximum benefit is $154.

Burson, who is also state director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, feels much can be accomplished by the anti-poverty agency, and hopes funds for it will not be cut back by Congress.

PRAISES OEO

"We wouldn't have food programs in the 48 counties that have them if we didn't have OEO," he said. But he considers Head Start OEO's greatest hope.

"Head Start can lift the eyes and hearts of these children, give them a broader vision of their own worth and capacity," he said. "They can't develop broader goals unless (these goals) are instilled somewhere. If a child doesn't get it in the home, he must have someone to show him life as it could be for him."

SHOULD DECIDE

He considers the community-action concept as American as "barn raising. It's not a foreign concept. I think the people who need help should decide how that help can best be done. Its' the same principle as local government.

"But we've had too much injection of philosophy. We lost a number of good Head Start programs because of rigid specifications from the regional and national level. . . . To insist that they not use a Negro school where the white school was barred just denied the advantages of Head Start to Negro pupils. It's very short-sighted sociology."

"I don't think you can force a parent to send his child to Head Start, but I think those who will come should have the opportunity. That's the American way of liberty."

Police Guests Shed Tears

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (AP) —A group of junior high school students was given a tour of the police headquarters at Brattleboro, and before the tour was over the kids were in tears.

Police unlocked a storage cabinet for tear gas canisters and, a bit too late, discovered some of the canisters were leaking.

FOOD STAMP DIRECTOR REPORTS

Few Counties Try Starving Out Negroes

Some counties in Georgia are trying to "starve out" unskilled Negroes, the state director of Family and Children Services said in an interview.

"There's a definite attitude in some areas of this state to starve these people out—not to starve them to death but into relocating to cities," William Burson said.

"Where there were one-horse farms there is nothing and where there were large farms with many workers there is mechanization. These people were marginal at best when they were working with their hands in the soil," he added.

"During the depression of the 1930s there was a broad spectrum of, if not poverty, then genuine need. Now it's narrowed down to the hard core of people with basically no means of getting out. It's almost a question of black and white now, and in some areas community attitude has hardened. I hate to think it's wholly racial in nature, but that's certainly a big part."

Burson jumped in with both feet when he assumed his new post, trying to get food programs, either surplus commodities or food stamps, set up in every Georgia county. Some 69 counties had no program when he took over.

"The reception we get is in direct proportion to the need. Where less than 10 per cent of the people need it, we generally are received cordially. Where the percentage is high, the reception is different, generally. The greatest need for food is in counties with the lowest public assistance caseload," he added.

"Economics is certainly a factor, but we're only talking about a few thousand dollars a year. Any county willing to state in writing that it can't provide the money (to administer the program), the Department of Agriculture will pick up the tab. But not one county has done that. I think even the poorest can scrape it up," he said.

Since he started his intensive program, the number of counties without a program and which have not applied for one has dropped to 48, and he thinks it can be brought down to less than 20. A conference on feeding hungry Georgians has been scheduled this month, and he and his staff having been making personal visits to counties with no program.

Local merchants often object to commodity programs as cutting into their market, but food stamps bring money into the county and let needy people purchase more food than they could otherwise.

"We hear much about those with taverns cashing in food stamps for beer and whisky, but finding one is like putting your finger on a blob of quicksilver. I don't think it's happened more than a few times, if ever. Our experience is that if one merchant is doing it, the others will tell on him."

A grocer who does such a thing would be warned the first time, and the next time would have his certification to cash food stamps lifted and be subject to prosecution.

County officials who don't want a food program "always get into a religious strain—'The poor you have with you always.' I point out that Christ told the rich young men to sell all he had and give it to the poor, and that the Lord didn't ask who was deserving and who was undeserving when he fed the loaves and fishes. When the children of Israel didn't like the manna He gave them quail, and nobody asked who was deserving and who wasn't."—ACHSAH NESMITH

"I'm Not Striking Out This Year! I'm Entering
FRYE'S 2ND ANNUAL PHOTO CONTEST!

Don't Delay • Entries Close Sept. 15

See Entries Now on Display

—THIS YEAR—
BLACK & WHITE AND COLOR
OVER $450.00 IN PRIZES

Pick up your entry blank now or fill out the coupon below and mail in to us.
Name
Address
City State
No. of Entry Blanks desired

Frye's CAMERA STORE
171 Peachtree St., N.E.
525-4993

Use Journal-Constitution Want Ads For Results — 523-3636

File

-24-67

THE NE

RIBICOFF PROPOSES URBAN RESHUFFLE

He Would Realign Agencies Handling U.S. Aid to Cities

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 — Senator Abraham A. Ribicoff urged today a broad reshuffle of key Great Society programs to strengthen the Government's attack on the manifold problems of the nation's cities.

In what amounted to an indictment of much of the present Federal approach to the cities, the Connecticut Democrat recommended in a speech on the Senate floor:

¶That new authority be given the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

¶That the major antipoverty programs of the Office of Economic opportunity be transferred to other agencies.

¶And that the Government's scattered manpower programs be brought together under a

Continued on Page 17, Column 2

Ribicoff Asks Wide Reshuffling To Improve U.S. Aid to Cities

Continued From Page 1, Col. 8

single agency in the Department of Labor.

He suggested as well that Congress keep a closer watch on Great Society programs. He said he would introduuce legislation to establish an "Office of Legislative Evaluation" in the General Accounting Office to give Congress a systematic review of the effectiveness of programs administered by the Excutive branch.

Mr. Ribicoff's 56-page speech covered every major aspect of the urban dilemma except for mass transportation.

It represented the Senator's personal attempt to condense and translate into legislative proposals six weeks of hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on Executive Reorganization. Mr. Ribicoff is chairman of the subcommittee.

Hundreds of Suggestions

The hearings, which took place in August and December, received wide attention. They provoked controversy more than once, and elicited hundreds of suggestions from 70 witnesses on how to improve the quality of urban life in America.

Congress, concerned now with improving the efficiency of antipoverty programs, is likely to be responsive to the Senator's suggestions for Government reorganization.

In addition to those ideas, Mr. Ribicoff proposed many other measures, including:

¶A 10-year, $50-billion plan to eliminate and rebuild the 4.5 million substandard housing units that now exist in the nation's metropolitan areas.

¶A $2-billion program to provide public service jobs for "men and women who cannot find jobs in the private sector."

¶A system of guarantees and subsidies for private businesses and banks willing to invest their resources in slum areas.

¶The creation, in the Department of Housing and Urban Development, of an "institute for urban development" to examine ways of reducing the costs of housing by improving construction technology.

A program of "neighborhood development corporations" to carry out slum improvement with active citizens participation.

End of Era Seen

The Senator's suggestions were tied together by one basic theme —that the Great Society programs of President Johnson represented "The end of an era," and that the time had come for a new approach to social problems.

"As the problems of the 1930's forced the Federal Government to reorganize," he said "so the problems of the second half of the Twentieth Century demand that the Government be mod-

The New York Times

Abraham A. Ribicoff

would also be transferred to the Labor Department.

In addition, Mr. Ribicoff recommended the eventual transfer of the antipoverty agency's key community action program to the Department of Housing and Urban Development—an agency the Connecticut Democrat criticized as "top-heavy with brick and mortar" but "weak in the social aspects" of community development. He said the transfer of the community action program would give the housing agency a "social content" it now lacked.

Would Retain Agency

Mr. Ribicoff insisted, however, that he was not recommending the dissolution of the antipoverty agency, which, he said, should remain in business "to continue what it can do better than any other agency of government: innovate and experiment."

Mr. Ribicoff placed heavy emphasis on the creation of jobs as a means of achieving what he called "the competent city of tomorrow."

He aid he would introduce legislation to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 so that businesses willing to move into slum areas could qualify for aid and borrow money at interest rates reduced by private lenders whose loans were guaranteed.

Mr. Ribicoff said he would also recommend the establishment of a Public Service Employment Opportunities Administration in the Department of Commerce to enable the Federal Government to function as an "employer of last resort." He said there was a potential of 5.3 million new public service jobs that the unemployed could perform.

Hopes 'It Will Never End'

ways of reducing the costs of housing by improving construction technology.

A program of "neighborhood development corporations" to carry out slum improvement with active citizens participation.

End of Era Seen

The Senator's suggestions were tied together by one basic theme —that the Great Society programs of President Johnson represented "The end of an era," and that the time had come for a new approach to social problems.

"As the problems of the 1930's forced the Federal Government to reorganize," he said "so the problems of the second half of the Twentieth Century demand that the Government be modernized again."

The main flaw in the New Deal-Great Society approach, the Senator declared, is that it is "Programmatic—not systematic —in nature. For 35 years we have acted as if each individual problem in our society—large or small—could be solved by passing a new program."

Some Methods 'Irrelevant'

However, he went on, some of the old methods were outmoded and "irrelevant," while others could be merged to produce better results.

To this end, Mr. Ribicoff said, he will introduce legislation embodying a proposal made earlier this year by the President's National Manpower Policy Task Force.

The proposal would consolidate in the Labor Department manpower programs now scattered among 10 separate organizational units in three departments, with a combined budget of about $2.1-billion a year.

The chief victim of this move would be the Office of Economic Opportunity, which administers the antipoverty program. The agency would lose the Job Corps and work-training, work-study, work experience and adult basic education programs. Certain work-relief and manpower training programs in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare tomorrow."

He aid he would introduce legislation to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 so that businesses willing to move into slum areas could qualify for aid and borrow money at interest rates reduced by private lenders whose loans were guaranteed.

Mr. Ribicoff said he would also recommend the establishment of a Public Service Employment Opportunities Administration in the Department of Commerce to enable the Federal Government to function as an "employer of last resort." He said there was a potential of 5.3 million new public service jobs that the unemployed could perform.

Hopes 'It Will Never End'

John W. Gardner, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, was asked yesterday how many years it would take to complete all Great Society programs. "I like to think it will never end," he replied. "I like to think of the phrase, 'Great Society,' as a way to improve our aspirations."

Mr. Gardner, speaking at the Foreign Correspondents Center, said that progress creates it own problems. Thus, he said, "environmental pollution" arises from technological advances, and problems can be expected to accompany the development of artificial body organs and the control of weather and heredity.

Boston Mayor Critical

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23 (AP) —Mayor John F. Collins of Boston said today that Mr. Ribicoff's criticism of urban programs would "serve nothing and no one."

Mr. Collins, here for a panel discussion on urban affairs, declared: "Senator Ribicoff can serve his nation well by continuing to explore the pending programs in a constructive manner and determine how they may best be carried out. There is no point in characterizing and emphasizing the mistakes of the past."

Chestnut Hill Left on left Lawrence Hall

File Lawrence Hall JA 4 9 1970

The Panther

Wellesley Versus Clark

During and since my Junior year at Wellesley College, the most recurring question asked of me is "how do Wellesley and Clark compare?" Of course, this is a very broad question, and in order to answer it intelligently, it has been broken down into several aspects: (1) academic life, (2) social life, (3) students' attitude, (4) administration's attitude.

Before I proceed, however, I must warn that this article is not intended to be merely factual; it is a plea for reform which, in my estimation, is our (Negro Colleges) only hope for survival. The time has passed when the dual standard recognized a good Negro College and a good White College; now there are good colleges or poor colleges. The irony in this is that we demanded the abolition of the dual standard, and now that it has disappeared, we still cling to outmoded ideas and beliefs on the grounds that our students are "different," and have to be treated in a certain manner. People with this view are the Ku Klux Klan's and other extremist groups best propaganda agents!

Audrey Thomas

I do not propose that we emulate Wellesley because I do not think that Wellesley is the ultimate in educational development. In fact, in many ways it is too superficial and tradition bound, but I do think that we can profit by re-evaluating ourselves in light of some aspects of Wellesley College.

Returning to my comparison of Wellesley and Clark, I would like to begin with the academic life at the two colleges. Wellesley is on the honor system which entails unproctored examinations and sealed, take-home examinations. By taking a sealed exam, a student is allowed to take the exam to her own room and is trusted to adhere to the time limit and, of course, she is on her honor not to use outside help.

The examinations at Wellesley, unlike most exams at Clark, are essay type. The emphasis is placed on analysis, not mere facts and memorization. There are only two exams per year; the mid-term and the final. Most courses require from one to three papers each term. Sometimes this emphasis on paper writing causes neglect of class reading assignments and less interesting class discussions.

Because the reading requirement in most courses is so heavy, it is necessary to read constantly in order to keep a reasonable pace with the lectures. Whereas Clark usually requires one basic

The examinations at Wellesley, unlike most exams at Clark, are essay type. The emphasis is placed on analysis, not mere facts and memorization. There are only two exams per year; the mid-term and the final. Most courses require from one to three papers each term. Sometimes this emphasis on paper writing causes neglect of class reading assignments and less interesting class discussions.

Because the reading requirement in most courses is so heavy, it is necessary to read constantly in order to keep a reasonable pace with the lectures. Whereas Clark usually requires one basic textbook, most courses at Wellesley assign several paperbacks in order to give divergent views. These books are placed on library reserve for those students who are unable to purchase them.

Classes meet, except for a few lab courses, only twice a week for seventy minutes. Wednesdays and Saturdays are used mostly for studying, catching-up, paper-writing or personal endeavors. Class roll is never checked. It is left to the student's discretion as to how many cuts she can afford.

I was most impressed with the academic freedom of both professors and students at Wellesley. It is a common occurrence for a professor to contradict an author and assert his own opinion. By the same token, a student feels no qualms about voicing her disagreement with a professor. A student's grade might suffer if he voices disagreement with certain professors at Clark.

Wellesley's reputation as an educational institution par excellence has perhaps contributed to the bourgeois snobbery in some of the girls. Being admitted to Wellesley is an end in itself, and some of these very intelligent young ladies are surprisingly unaware and apathetic about conditions outside of their narrow worlds. Too many of them strive to make everything they say reverberate with profundity, while often overlooking the obvious and fundamental — and sometimes the best answer.

On the other hand, Clark students have a tendency to do just the reverse. They too often accept the most readily available answer without exploring for a deeper meaning.

Concerning the social life of the two colleges, there is not very much to compare. At Wellesley there are numerous lectures, concerts, mixers, etc. offered during the year which are attended on a voluntary basis. The Wellesley girl's social life is her private concern. If she desires, she may take a weekend in Cambridge (home of Harvard and M.I.T.), drive down to Yale, go skiing, take an over-night, or entertain her date in the dormitory, coffee house, society house without prior consent from officials.

The curfew is one A.M. during the week and two A.M. on Saturdays. A young lady may be out until eleven P.M. every night without signing out. There are no restrictions about riding in cars. Most court cases are handled by students.

Clark seems to be moving slowly in the direction of more freedom for students. However, I do not think that this slow pace is entirely the fault of the administration. Student apathy will never foster progress. As long as you are content with a second rate professor because that is an easy "A," or as long as you would rather break a rule than try to get it changed, who can you blame?

This brings in the attitudes of the students and administration of the two colleges. The Wellesley student is serious about her work. The girl who studies hard is admired by her fellow students. This is not the case at Clark, where a studious person is often the butt of jokes and a social outcast. With this type of attitude it is easy to understand why cheating is so rampant especially when the goal of too many students is just "to get over."

(Continued on Page 3)

Wellesley Versus Clark—

(Continued from Page 2)

The administration at Wellesley, conservative as it is, still recognizes the students as responsible adults and treats them accordingly. The basis of the student-administration relation is based on mutual trust.

At Clark in the past, some of the administration's views would make Goldwater seem radical! However, I feel that the new leadership if supported by all concerned, can reform the remaining Uncle Toms and Nervous Nannies who see change as an evil omen.

Our administration must trade its baby-sitting role for one of advisor and friend to the students. Paternalism will not prepare us for survival in the world today. We realize that life is hard, so why try to protect us from it? It will only make it harder for us in the long run, and it certainly will not make our job of "catch-up" (with the White Race) easier.

I believe that Clark is a potentially good college (more potential than good at this point, however) and it would be a shame if the students and administration fail to get together and solve these problems which all stem from inadequate communication, lack of trust, apathy, and plain ole stubbornness.

—Star Photographer Byron Schumaker

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Smiley of Dallas County, Ala., stand in front of a rural polling place near Selma after casting the first votes of their lives last Tuesday. He is 85; she is 74.

The Meaning of Selma

By HAYNES JOHNSON
Star Staff Writer

SELMA, Ala.—A dirt road winds off the Jeff Davis Highway, through the cotton fields of the Black Belt and past a grove of pecan trees sheltering a wooden shack with a tin roof. It stops at the Tyler Union High School for Negroes.

"We didn't have anything but a building until a few weeks before the election. Then the supplies started coming in," said B. W. Dawson, the Negro principal. "I think there has been a basic change. I think they are actually trying to meet our problems. I believe they are trying to give us what we need. I believe that.

"The vote will help. Now, they come and say, 'If I'm elected I'll put a road up to your house.' Now they're saying they'll actually do it. And the city government will change. At least they will listen. At least the offices will be open like they ought to be.

"Your sheriff will be the sheriff of all the people and not just a select group, and your probate judge—at least now you can go in and see him.

"Yes, within a year or two you're going to see a new Dallas County, a Dallas County like it ought to be, a Dallas County where people are proud to be.

Haynes Johnson was awarded the Pulitzer Prize last Monday for his reporting of the 1965 civil rights demonstrations in Selma, Ala., and their aftermath. He returned to Selma last week to write this special report.

"This election set a good pattern."

What he was saying underscores the major historical fact that has come out of the Black Belt last week. Power, political power, now has come to the Negroes of the rural South. To the Negro, it is a power that means he is somebody, at last. If he is not yet on a plane with the white man, at least he is on the way up.

White politicians and businessmen know, whether they say it publicly or not, that after Tuesday, May 3, 1966, when Negroes voted in large numbers for the first time since Reconstruction, they must deal with the black man in the South.

All the Rebel yells that rang out across Alabama last week are not going to obscure that.

"Well, we had them registered all right, but this week they came out and voted," said a Negro. "Now, they know we'll vote."

As the high school principal pointed out, the new political power brings with it change, large and small: In a street being paved or a road being built in the all-Negro sections; in a new set of school textbooks, in access to officials and, most important, in attitudes.

William E. (Big Bill) Lee, the sheriff of Greene County, spelled out the lesson after he won his primary race Tuesday by defeating a Negro, Thomas Gilmore.

"I got about 850 colored votes," said Lee, who once played football for the Green Bay Packers. "I'm certainly thankful for their votes because I couldn't have won without them."

Another white politician, who asked not to be quoted by name, gave another side of the story. He, too, won. But he never would have, he said, if he had not gone directly to the Negroes and

See SELMA, Page A-9

—Staff Photographer Byron Schumaker

SELMA MIRRORED THE SOUTH LAST WEEK AS ITS NEGROES VOTED, WATCHED AND PONDERED THE FUTURE.

Selma: Vote Brings Power to the Southern Negro

Continued From Page A-1

solicited their support. He asked for their help quietly, for he did not want to alienate his white backers.

He told of a white friend who also had run for office.

"He came to me and asked me to speak to the Negroes for him," he recalled. "He said, 'Just call them on the phone and tell them I'd like their support.' And I told him I couldn't do that. That was something he had to do for himself. But he kept asking me and asking me and I finally told him, 'Look, Tom, you're going to have to make this move yourself. Nobody can do it for you. Just go on over and sit down with them. You don't have to make a big noise about it. But you sure had better do it.' "

His friend never went, and he lost.

New South Emerges

These incidents don't mean that the problems of the past vanished overnight for the Negro. Nor does it mean that the Negro now sees the end of his struggle in the South. But a new South is more sharply in focus today because of what took place last week in the old strongholds of segregation.

Nowhere is that more evident than here in Selma, in the heart of the Black Belt. For Selma, the city where the Voting Rights Act of 1965 was born, again is a symbol — this time of the changing South. Its problems, its people, its attitudes, its efforts at change point up some of the currents flowing through the South today.

History was capricious with Selma. By all rights, Selma should have been merely one of countless rural trading centers with access, through the Alaabma River, to a water route to the Gulf Coast.

A hundred years ago last spring the Union forces made Selma the site of one of the last battles of the Civil War. From the bluffs of the river you can still see the marks on old brick buildings, reminders of that day when Yankee troops burned the city. The marks from that conflagration left a deep imprint on Selma and its people.

Selma, slumbering for nearly a century, hardened into fixed attitudes. The whites were stubborn, determined to resist change. When the Negro civil rights drive began more than a year ago, Selma's white population was dealt a severe shock.

Could Not Win

For them, the demonstrations forced a recognition that change was going to take place. Grudgingly, reluctantly, bitterly, Selma's white leaders finally faced the undeniable and unwelcome fact: Fight though they might, they could not win their battle.

For the Negroes, and for the national civil rights groups, that was their finest hour, a period of selflessness and soaring principle. Their freedom songs and their freedom march stirred people around the world.

But later the Negroes suffered the inevitable let-down. After the stirring days of spring their unity was broken by discord, bickering and hints of scandal. Like the whites, they went through a period of re-examination.

In the aftermath of Selma the Dallas County Voters League, the organization that led the local civil rights movement, came under sharp attack from within and without. Charges were made about mismanagement of funds, inadequate book-keeping and accounting procedures, and general laxness of administration.

Since then, the Voters League has been reorganized. Is books are carefully audited, is leaders are in closer contact with the people. Confidence has been restored. The proof came in the massive turnout Tuesday after the Voters League ran a major vote education campaign.

Tuesday was the last chapter of the Selma story; whatever happens next belongs to a new book for the South.

From the beginning, when the Negroes began campaigning for the vote early last year, the sole objective of the Selma civil rights movement was participation in the political process. The demonstrations, the bloodshed, the marches, the emotion that caught the attention of the world—all culminated in the election.

Those results demonstrated again the Negroes' new power: Sheriff Jim Clark, Selma's symbol of segregation, lost the vote count to his rival Wilson leaving here just like the young Negroes. The whites, they've got an aging population, too."

Stripped of the race question, the problems of Selma came down to such basics as poverty, disease, ignorance. While the Negroes hold the statistical margin in these unwelcome categories, poverty and its handmaidens are no respecter of color. Whites, too, are poor.

A year ago the Chamber of Commerce here liked to tell reporters about the good side of Selma. In its metropolitan area were 75 churches, 15 public schools, one university center, a public library, industries, four banks, three railroads, two bus and six motor freight lines.

The Other Side

There are other, less flattering, figures. Dallas County, of which Selma is the county seat, has a population of 56,667, half of it rural, half of it Negro. Fifty-two percent of the families in Dallas County earn less than $3,000 a year. There are 2,585 families earning less than $1,000 a year.

Of those over 65, more than 51 percent receive old-age assistance. A staggering total of 77.4 percent of those examined for military service were rejected for health or mental reasons. In the county, 38 percent of the people over 25 years old have less than an eighth grade education.

from the past. The Negro attitudes now are clear to all. They no longer hide behind what their poet, Paul Laurence Dunbar, called the "mask that grins and lies."

For whites—that is, whites with education—the change in attitudes is more difficult to gauge. Prejudice still runs deep. Acceptance comes slowly, as a talk with a white minister in Selma indicated.

He was interviewed in his book-lined study in the center of the city. He spoke quietly and reflectively about the events of the past year.

"The more sensitive Christians strongly disliked what was going on," he said, "although they scarcely knew everything that was happening. At that time we were in a prayer retreat and the sensitive Christians had a deep prayerful, searching, deep personal humility and a desire to let God's will overrule personal feelings in these matters. And I personally thought God's spirit was with us in those prayer sessions, and I felt a response on God's part.

"Really, I anticipated more bloodshed than there was here because I thought the radical element would have a freer hand. So I was very much encouraged, even though I was saddened by the violence and the death of (the Rev. James) Reeb (the white Unitarian minister clubbed to death on Selma's streets). But you can't always stop that. But even so, I think we came

Selma civil rights movement was participation in the political process. The demonstrations, the bloodshed, the marches, the emotion that caught the attention of the world—all culminated in the election.

Those results demonstrated again the Negroes' new power: Sheriff Jim Clark, Selma's symbol of segregation, lost the vote count to his rival Wilson Baker, a racial moderate who had the almost unanimous support of the Negroes. Although Clark is challenging the election procedures, the thousands of Negro ballots cast clearly held the margin of victory or defeat in Dallas County.

Common Problems

While it would be naive to suggest that now, because of the election, a new era of racial harmony has begun here, it is nevertheless true that men of both races are quietly discussing their problems. They are finding that they have common problems, problems that do not stem only from the question of race.

"You know," said one Negro after the election, "the Clarks and Wallaces, their day is going faster than they think. It's just like a dying man. He can muster up a little strength in his dying hour and put on a big last show, but when that's done that's all of it. He's gone.

"Now I've been saying it's time to stop getting at each other's throat. Of course the things that happened last year, well, we wouldn't be where we are now without them, but we can't continue to live in a crisis.

"I think a lot of the white people know that. And they know something else. They know that the whole economy through here's made up of whites and Negroes, and they know we can't be divided and still have any kind of progress. And that's a fact. And that's where we've got our problems today.

"The tragic thing down here is that we haven't got a very good middle class, black or white, and you know a good middle class is the salt of any society. The young whites have been

year. There are 2,585 families earning less than $1,000 a year.

Of those over 65, more than 51 percent receive old-age assistance. A staggering total of 77.4 percent of those examined for military service were rejected for health or mental reasons. In the county, 38 percent of the people over 25 years old have less than an eighth grade education.

In Selma itself, 43 percent of all housing units are substandard.

Translated into human terms, these figures mean someone like Bessie Watts, age 13, a Negro, who sat on the porch of the two-room shack she shares with eight other children and a grandmother. Bessie was holding the youngest child in her arm and saying, "I had to stay home from school today." But in fact Bessie rarely goes to school. She doesn't seem to care. She is unable to express anything she hopes to accomplish in her lifetime.

Her grandmother was asked where Bessie's father was. "He's staying with another woman down the road," she said. "He ain't working. He ain't doing nothing."

Bessie's grandmother was one of those thousands of Negroes who voted for the first time in her life. She walked from her shack across the fields more than a mile to the polling place.

Fear Lessens

In a score of interviews, not one Negro expressed fear about the future. A year ago, during the march from Selma to Montgomery, many of those same Negroes were hesitant even to wave at the marchers from their shacks.

One man, after voting in a rural hamlet, mentioned the possibility he might be thrown off his land. It has happened in the Black Belt. When asked what he would do if that occurred, he said:

"If the man tells you to move out because you voted, we got nowhere to go. We'll go sleep down under the tree with the rattlesnakes if we have to."

To anyone who knows the Deep South, such expressions from Negroes in rural areas are startling departures bloodshed than there was here because I thought the radical element would have a freer hand. So I was very much encouraged, even though I was saddened by the violence and the death of (the Rev. James) Reeb (the white Unitarian minister clubbed to death on Selma's streets). But you can't always stop that. But even so, I think we came through it."

A Silent Issue

In his own case, he never discussed the civil rights issue or any problems from the pulpit. It was, as he said, "a silent issue."

But now, he said, he sees a change in attitudes in Selma. The vote has made an impact.

"I think that some people were really impressed that the Negroes, the older Negroes they know personally and who weren't pushing the civil rights movement, they were impressed that the Negroes did vote. And they would see that these Negroes were thrilled to vote.

"I also think it surprised them that some Negroes even voted for conservative candidates."

Then he said:

"They're thinking for themselves, some of them."

One of the older Negroes in Selma, a man who has given leadership and direction over the years and who was instrumental in bringing Martin Luther King here, takes the long view.

He is only one of many here who looks ahead to the day, after all the ugliness and bitterness has passed into history, when Selma, Ala., will move forward with the New South.

"It's working itself out faster than you and I think," he said. "Because we've lived through it we might be more cautious in our predictions But it's going faster. Now there's one thing that I've appreciated most that's come out of this movement: the Negro people now have a sense of manhood. They've been down and oppressed and they had that state of mind, but they're coming out of it fast.

"The millenium isn't here yet, but I'm not a pessimist."

Pat Watters
The Journal

BOOK REVIEW

BY ORVILLE PRESCOTT

(C) 1962 NEW YORK TIMES NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK, OCT. 21 -- LAST NIGHT MOST OF US WENT TO BED AND SLEPT ABOUT AS WELL AS USUAL. IN THE EVENING WE HAD WATCHED TELEVISION, OR PARTICIPATED IN POST-MORTEMS ON THE WORLD SERIES OR EVEN READ A BOOK. BUT ONLY A FEW OF US TALKED ABOUT, READ ABOUT, THOUGHT OR WORRIED ABOUT THE INTERNATIONAL ARMS RACE IN NUCLEAR EXPLOSIVIES--THE MOST DREADFUL CAUSE FOR WORRY THE HUMAN RACE HAS EVER HAD. WE FLINCH FROM THINKING ABOUT IT BECAUSE IT IS SO DREADFUL, BECAUSE ITS SCIENTIFIC MYSTERIES ARE SO MYSTERIOUS, AND BECAUSE OF A CONVICTION OF IMPOTENCE AND RESIGNATION.

THERE'S NOTHING I CAN DO ABOUT IT. IF I'M GONING TO BE BLOWN UP TOMORROW I MIGHT AS WELL ENJOY TODAY. YET THE FORCE OF PUBLIC OPINION IS NEVER ENTIRELY IMPOTENT. OUR LITTLE PART OF PUBLIC OPINION CAN BE INFORMED IF WE WISH IT TO BE. ONE WAY OF BEING WELL-INFORMED ABOUT THE NUCLEAR DOMSDAY THREATENING US ALL IS TO READ A SHORT AND LUCID BOOK CALLED "KILL AND OVERKILL: THE STRATEGY OF ANNIHILATION" (A) BY RALPH E. LAPP.

THIS IS A BOOK THAT SUMMARIZES ESSENTIAL FACTS, SPECULATES CAUTIOUSLY ABOUT GHASTLY PROBABILITIES AND OFFERS A FEW REASONABLE PROPOSALS. LAPP SPEAKS WITH AUTHORITY. A PHYSICIST WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE CREATION OF THE ATOM BOMB, THE AUTHOR OF A TEXTBOOK ON NUCLEAR PHYSICS AND A FORMER ADVISER TO THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE, LAPP IS THE AUTHOR OF EIGHT OTHER BOOKS AND OF MANY NEWSPAPER AND MAGAZINE ARTICLES ON ATOMIC MATTERS.

TODAY, LAPP ESTIMATES, "THE STOCKPILE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS HAS GROWN TO A SIZE SUFFICIENT TO DISPOSE OF LIFE ON THIS PLANET IN SHORT ORDER." THE SOVIET UNION AND THE UNITED STATES CAN DESTROY EACH OTHER'S CITIES AND MILITARY INSTALLATIONS AND "COAT" THE SOIL WITH RADIOACTIVITY. NO LIFE ON EARTH WOULD EXIST EXCEPT THAT OF INSECTS. IF SURVIVORS OF NUCLEAR WAR WAITED UNTIL IT WAS SAFE TO EMERGE FROM THEIR BURROWS, "THE ENVIRONMENT ABOVE GROUND COULD HARDLY SUSTAIN LIFE."

TODAY, LAPP ESTIMATES, "THE STOCKPILE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS HAS GROWN TO A SIZE SUFFICIENT TO DISPOSE OF LIFE ON THIS PLANET IN SHORT ORDER." THE SOVIET UNION AND THE UNITED STATES CAN DESTROY EACH OTHER'S CITIES AND MILITARY INSTALLATIONS AND "COAT" THE SOIL WITH RADIOACTIVITY. NO LIFE ON EARTH WOULD EXIST EXCEPT THAT OF INSECTS. IF SURVIVORS OF NUCLEAR WAR WAITED UNTIL IT WAS SAFE TO EMERGE FROM THEIR BURROWS, "THE ENVIRONMENT ABOVE GROUND COULD HARDLY SUSTAIN LIFE."

"NO NATION WOULD WANT TO FEED ITS PEOPLE THE FOOD GROWN ON LAND CONTAMINATED BY SUCH A FALLOUT," LAPP WRITES. "THOSE WHO DID NOT SICKEN AND DIE WOULD LIVE ONLY TO PROPAGATE A RACE PERMANENTLY DAMAGED WITH A CRIPPLING GENETIC INHERITANCE."

SUCH HORRORS WOULD BE THE RESULT OF MASS NUCLEAR WAR AND ARE THE REASONS WHY PEACE IS IMPOSED FROM DAY TO DAY BY A BALANCE OF MUTUAL TERROR. BUT THE MISSILES AND PLANES BEARING NUCLEAR BOMBS COULD BE LOOSED BY ACCIDENT, MISCALCULATION OR THE MADNESS OF INDIVIDUALS. OR THEY COULD BE LAUNCHED OUT OF FEAR, A DELIBERATE DECISION TO STRIKE FIRST TO PREVENT THE ENEMY FROM STRIKING FIRST.

ONE OF THE WORST DANGERS, LAPP NOTES, IS THAT INTERCONTINENTAL MISSILES, IF USED AT ALL, MUST BE FIRED QUICKLY--BEFORE THEY ARE DESTROYED BY OTHER INTERCONTINENTAL MISSILES. LITTLE TIME IS AVAILABLE TO CHECK RADAR REPORTS, TO INQUIRE IF AN EXPLOSION WAS AN ACCIDENT ("DID YOU MEAN IT?") TO DISCUSS AND CONSIDER. AND LAPP SEES NO JUSTIFICATION FOR OUR PRESENT POLICY OF ADDING TO THE AMERICAN STOCKPILE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS:

"THE QUESTION OF WASTE IS SECONDARY TO THE CENTRAL FACT THAT THE EXISTENCE OF THIS VAST STOCKPILE FOR DESTRUCTION REPRESENTS INSECURITY AND MORTAL DANGER FOR THE WHOLE WORLD. PILING UP MORE TONS OF BOMB MATERIAL, MORE THOUSANDS OF BOMBS, DOES NOT ADD TO THE NATIONAL SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES."

"KILL AND OVERKILL" IS CRAMMED WITH CONCISELY PRESENTED FACTS ABOUT: OUR MILITARY RESEARCH PROGRAM NOW FINANCED BY $10 BILLION A YEAR; THE NEW PROFESSION OF SCIENTIFIC WEAPONRY; BLAST, HEAT FLASH, FIRE STORMS AND RADIOACTIVE FALLOUT; VARIOUS KINDS OF MISSILES AND THE QUESTIONABLE VALUE OF ANTI-MISSILE MISSILES.

MISSILES, IF USED AT ALL, MUST BE FIRED QUICKLY--BEFORE THEY ARE DESTROYED BY OTHER INTERCONTINENTAL MISSILES. LITTLE TIME IS AVAILABLE TO CHECK RADAR REPORTS, TO INQUIRE IF AN EXPLOSION WAS AN ACCIDENT ("DID YOU MEAN IT?") TO DISCUSS AND CONSIDER. AND LAPP SEES NO JUSTIFICATION FOR OUR PRESENT POLICY OF ADDING TO THE AMERICAN STOCKPILE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS:

"THE QUESTION OF WASTE IS SECONDARY TO THE CENTRAL FACT THAT THE EXISTENCE OF THIS VAST STOCKPILE FOR DESTRUCTION REPRESENTS INSECURITY AND MORTAL DANGER FOR THE WHOLE WORLD. PILING UP MORE TONS OF BOMB MATERIAL, MORE THOUSANDS OF BOMBS, DOES NOT ADD TO THE NATIONAL SECURITY OF THE UNITED STATES."

"KILL AND OVERKILL" IS CRAMMED WITH CONCISELY PRESENTED FACTS ABOUT: OUR MILITARY RESEARCH PROGRAM NOW FINANCED BY $10 BILLION A YEAR; THE NEW PROFESSION OF SCIENTIFIC WEAPONRY; BLAST, HEAT FLASH, FIRE STORMS AND RADIOACTIVE FALLOUT; VARIOUS KINDS OF MISSILES AND THE QUESTIONABLE VALUE OF ANTI-MISSILE MISSILES; "NUCLEAR GAMESMANSHIP" AND ITS SUICIDAL CALCULATIONS.

LAPP IMAGINES A TYPICAL CALCULATION: "IF COUNTRY A LOSES 30 MILLION DEAD AND 27 PER CENT OF ITS ECONOMY, WHEREAS COUNTRY B HAS 90 MILLION DEAD AND 68 PER CENT OF ITS ECONOMY DESTROYED, THE COMPUTER PRONOUNCES COUNTRY A THE WINNER, ONE WONDERS HOW MUCH CONSOLATION THAT WOULD BE TO COUNTRY A."

THE HOPE OF CIVILIZATION, LAPP BELIEVES, LIES IN NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT. BEFORE THAT END IS REACHED HE SUGGESTS SUCH STEPS AS THESE TO LESSEN THE FEARS AND TENSIONS OF THE NUCLEAR ARMS RACE:

"OUR MISSILE PROGRAM SHOULD BE REVISED TO MAKE IT A TRULY RETALIATORY FORCE RATHER THAN ONE WHICH APPEARS TO BE PREPARED FOR A FIRST STRIKE. THE MOST EFFECTIVE WAY OF DOING THIS WOULD BE TO PLACE OUR MAIN RELIANCE ON A POLARIS FORCE. THE PROGRAM FOR IMC.B.M.' BASED WITHIN THE COUNTRY SHOULD BE CUT BACK SHARPLY AND ELIMINATED ALTOGETHER AS THE OCEAN-DEPLOYED POLARIS FORCE BECOMES AN ADEQUATE DETERRENT.

"OUR DETERRENT FORCE WOULD BE LESS VULNERABLE TO KNOCKOUT BY THE ENEMY. IT WOULD NOT BE IN POSITIONS WHERE IT MIGHT DRAW ATTACK UPON OUR LAND. IT WOULD ALLOW US MORE TIME FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALARMS, THUS REDUCING THE CHANCES OF WAR BY ACCIDENT. IT WOULD PROVIDE MORE UNIFIED COMMAND AND CONTROL OF OUR STRATEGIC FORCE. IT WOULD OBVIATE ANY NEED FOR MAINTAINING U.S. MISSILE BASES ON FOREIGN SOIL."

DASH (A) KILL AND OVERKILL: THE STRATEGY OF ANNIHILATION, BY RALPH E. LAPP, 197 PAGES, BASIC BOOKS, $4.95.

W/BG

1010P

R. FRANCES KELSEY
Under New Powers

Harvard Psychiatrist Elaborates

MAN'S MENTAL 'ESCAPES' EASE LIFE UNDER PERIL

Special to The Atlanta Journal

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 28 — Man, says a Harvard University psychiatrist, has acquired a set of mental mechanisms by which he is able to live with unwelcome truths even though the truths threaten the existance of a whole civilization. The barriers enable him to enjoy life and to maintain his mental equilibrium.

Dr. Lester Grinspoon, speaking at a session on reactions to nuclear war at the 129th annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, presented six of the major psychological mechanisms used by man to bypass the acceptance of disquieting facts.

DR. GRINSPOON listed the mechanisms:

1. Denial—". . . One of the most primitive and at the same time one of the most important. People are using this mechanism when they manage to ignore or dismiss internal or external events, the perception of which is painful. Common examples are the avoidance of contemplating one's own inevitable death or the reluctance to acknowledge the presence of a fatal disease."

2. Isolation — "When a man can acknowledge the fact that a continued arms race could lead to a nuclear war which might in turn very well mean the death of himself, his family, and millions of his countrymen, without experiencing any more affect than he would upon contemplating the effects of DDT upon a population of fruit flies, then he is probably making use of the defense of isolation. In this way people can be quite facile in speaking about the facts that they and their loved ones would undoubtedly lose their lives should a nuclear war break out."

3. Displacement—". . . A most important mental mechanism which people employ to defend themselves against the facts of a threatened World War III. They unconsciously transfer feeling from its real object, in this case the threat of nuclear war, to substitute objects. The hyperpatriot's concern about 'the enemy,' may, among other things, represent his displaced anxiety about war."

4. Rationalization—"An ubiquitous defense . . . (that) accounts for such common attitudes as, 'It's so terrible it'll never be used,' 'No one's going to be mad enough to start an H-bomb war,' 'I'm sure the President (or premier) and all those generals know more about it than we do,' 'After all, perhaps it's God's will. . . .' Such rationalizations serve to protect the individual from a genuine engagement with the indisputable facts."

5. Intellectualization — ". . . Another of these mechanisms, one not infrequently used alike by those engaged in preparing for war and those involved in peace research. Here an individual appears to have an excellent understanding of the facts, and his grasp of the technical aspects may be most impressive; indeed, he may be an expert. However, all of this knowledge serves to keep him somehow quite distant from the psychological and political actualities. Doctors in their own shop make frequent use of intellectualization; so do strategic thinkers."

6. Dogmatism—"Essential to this mechanism is an air-tight system of beliefs which provides an individual wtih all the answers and does away with uncertainty and anxiety. New facts, however much they may have been distorted, are merely integrated into this system."

TERMITE DAMAGE?
Getz EXTERMINATORS CO.
gets 'em!
CE 7-8694 • Free Inspection

uman Drug Tests
r Dr. Kelsey

Dec. 28 (AP)—Dr. Frances O. Kell heroine for keeping Thalidomide ket, Friday was put at the head ich will pass on requests to test

RICH'S BASEME

SALES AND CLEARANC

Shop Downtown Friday ni and Belvedere 10 til
Saturday Downtown 9:30
Lenox and Belvedere 1

Reprinted from AMERICAN SCIENTIST, Vol. 51, No. 1, March 1963
Copyrighted 1963, by The Society of the Sigma Xi and reprinted by permission of the copyright owner

MAN: THE LETHAL FACTOR*

By LOREN EISELEY

THE great Olduvai Gorge in East Africa has been appropriately called the Grand Canyon of human evolution. Here a million, perhaps two million years of human history are recorded in the shape of successive skulls and deposits of stone tools. The elusive story of the long road man has traveled is glimpsed momentarily in eroded strata and faded bone. Olduvai is now famous all over the world. Only to those who have the habit of searching beyond the obvious, however, may it have occurred that this precipitous rift through time parallels and emphasizes a similar rift in ourselves—a rift that lies like a defacing crack across our minds and consequently many of our institutions. From its depths we can hear the rumble of the torrent from which we have ascended, and sense the disastrous ease with which both individual men and civilizations can topple backwards and be lost.

Brooding upon the mysteries of time and change, a great and thoughtful scholar, Alfred North Whitehead, many years ago recorded his thoughts in a cryptic yet profound observation. He said, in brief, "We are...of infinite importance, because as we perish we are immortal." Whitehead was not speaking in ordinary theological terms. He was not concerned in this passage with the survival of the human personality after death—at least as a religious conception. He was, instead, struggling with that difficult idea which he describes as the "prehension of the past," the fact that the world we know, even as it perishes, remains an elusive unfixed element in the oncoming future.

The organic world, as well as that superorganic state which exists in the realm of thought is, in truth, prehensile in a way that the inorganic world is not. The individual animal or plant in the course of its development moves always in relation to an unseen future toward which its forces are directed: the egg is broken and a snake writhes away into the grass; the acorn seedling, through many seasons, contorts itself slowly into a gnarled, gigantic oak. Similarly, life moves against the future in another sense—an evolutionary one. The creature existing now—this serpent, this bird, this man—has only to leave progeny in order to stretch out a gray, invisible hand into the evolutionary future, into the non-existent.

With time, the bony fin is transformed into a paw, a round, insectivore eye into the nearsighted gaze of a scholar. Moreover, all along this curious animal extension into time, parts of ourselves are flaking off, breaking away into unexpected and unforeseen adventures. One insectivore fragment has taken to the air and become a vampire bat, while another fragment draws pictures in a cave and creates a new prehensile realm where the shadowy fingers of lost ideas reach forward into time to affect our world view, and with it, our future destinies and happiness.

* The Phi Beta Kappa-Sigma Xi Lecture, December 29, 1962.

Thus, since the dawn of life on the planet, the past has been figuratively fingering the present. There is, in reality, no clearly separable past and future either in the case of nerve and bone or within the less tangible but equally real world of history. Even the extinct dead have plucked the great web of life in such a manner that the future still vibrates to their presence. The mammalian world was, for a long time, constricted and impoverished by the dominance of the now vanished reptiles. Similarly, who knows today what beautiful creature remains potential only because of our continued existence; or what renewed manifestations of creative energy our own presence inhibits or has indeed destroyed forever.

As the history of the past unrolls itself before the eye of both paleontologist and archaeologist, however, it becomes evident, so far as the biological realm is concerned, that by far the greater proportion of once living branches on the tree of life are dead, and to this the archaeologist and historian must add dead stone, dead letters, dead ideas, and dead civilizations. As one gropes amid all this attic dust it becomes ever more apparent that some lethal factor, some arsenical poison seems to lurk behind the pleasant show of the natural order or even the most enticing cultural edifices that man has been able to erect.

In the organic world of evolution three facts, so far as we can perceive, today seem to determine the death of species: (1) the irreversibility of the organic process in time; (2) high specialization which, in the end, limits new adaptive possibilities; (3) the sudden emergence of spectacular enemies or other environmental circumstances which overwhelm or ambush a living form so suddenly that the slow adjustive process of natural selection cannot be made to function. This third principle, one could say, is the factor which, given the other two limitations upon all forms of life, will result in extinction. As a drastic example one could point to the destruction of many of the larger creatures as man has abruptly extended his sway over both hemispheres and into many different environmental zones.

The past century has seen such great accessions of knowledge in relation to these natural events, as well as a growing consciousness of man's exposure to similar dangers, that there is an increasing tendency to speculate upon our own possibilities for survival. The great life web which man has increasingly plucked with an abruptness unusual in nature shows signs of "violence in the return" to use a phrase of Francis Bacon's. The juvenile optimism about progress which characterized our first scientific years was beginning to be replaced early in this century by doubts which the widely circulated Decline of the West by Oswald Spengler documents only too well. As the poet, J. C. Squire, says, we can turn:

> "the great wheel backward until Troy unburn,
> ...and seven Troys below
> Rise out of death and dwindle..."

We can go down through the layers of dead cities until the gold becomes stone, until the jewels become shells, until the palace is a hovel, until the hovel becomes a heap of gnawed bones.

Are the comparisons valid? The historians differ. Is there hope? A babble of conflicting voices confuses us. Are we safe? On this point I am sure that every person of cultivation and intelligence would answer with a resounding "No!" Spengler, and not the optimists, was right when he prophesied that this century would be one marked by the rise of dictators, great wars, and augmented racial troubles. Whether he was also right in foreseeing our century as the onsetting winter of western civilization is a more difficult problem.

Faustian, space-loving man still hurls his missiles skyward. His tentacular space-probes seem destined to palpate the farthest rim of the solar system. Yet honesty forces us to confess that this effort is primarily the product of conflict, that millions are now employed in the institutions erected to serve that conflict, that government and taxes are increasingly geared to it, that in another generation, if not now, it will have become traditional. Men who have spent their lives in the service of these institutions will be reluctant to dissolve them. A vested interest will exist on both sides of the iron curtain. The growing involution of this aspect of western culture may well come to resemble the ingrowth and fantasies of that ritualized belief in mana which characterized late Polynesian society.

It is upon this anthropological note that I should like to examine the nature of the human species—the creature who at first glance appears to have escaped from the specialized cul de sac which has left his late existing primate relative, the gorilla, peering sullenly from the little patch of sheltered bush which yet remains to him. I have said that some lethal factor seems to linger in man's endeavors. It is for this reason that I venture to speak to you from a discipline which has long concerned itself with the origins, the illusions, the symbols, the folly as well as the grandeur of civilizations whose records are lost and whose temples are fallen. Yet the way is not easy. As Herman Melville has written in one great perceptive passage:

> "By vast pains we mine into the pyramid; by > horrible gropings we come to the central room;
> with joy we espy the sarcophagus; but we lift > the lid—and no body is there—appallingly > vacant, as vast, is the soul of man"

I have spent a sizable number of my adult years among the crude stones of man's Ice Age adventurings. The hard, clean flint in the mountain spring defines and immortalizes the race that preceded us better than our own erratic fabrications distinguish our time. There is as yet no sharp edge to our image. Will it be, in the end, the twisted gantrys on the rocket bases, or telephone wires winding voiceless through the high Sierras, or will it be the glass from space-searching observatories pounded into moonstones in the surf on a sinking coast?

What makes the symbol, finally, for another age as the pyramids for theirs—writing for five thousand years man's hope against the sky? Before we pass, it is well to think of what our final image as a race may be—the image that will give us a kind of earthly immortality, or represent, perhaps, our final collective visage in eternity. But it is to the seeds of death within us that we must address ourselves before we dare ask this other final question of what may stand for us when all else is fallen and gone down. We shall not begin with western society, we shall begin with man. We shall open that symbolic sepulchre of which Melville speaks. We shall grope in the roiling, tumultuous darkness, for that unplumbed vacancy which Melville termed so ironically the soul of man.

II

Since the days of Lyell and Hutton who perceived, beneath the romantic geological catastrophism of their age, that the prosaic and unnoticed works of wind and sun and water were the real shapers of the planet, science has been averse to the recognition of discontinuity in natural events.[1] Nevertheless, the rise of modern physics with its emphasis on quantum theory in the realm of particles, and even certain aspects of Mendelian genetics serve to remind us that there are still abroad in nature hidden powers which, on occasion, manifest themselves in an unpredictable fashion. Even on a more dramatic scale no one to date has been quite able satisfactorily to account for that series of rhythmic and overwhelming catastrophes which we call the Ice Age. It is true that we no longer cloak such mysteries in an aura of supernaturalism, but they continue to remind us, nevertheless, of the latent forces still lurking within nature.

Another of these episodes is reflected in the origins of the human mind. It represents, in a sense, a quantum step: the emergence of genuine novelty. It does so because the brain brought into being what would have been, up until the time of its appearance, an inconceivable event: the world of culture. The mundus alter—this other intangible, faery world of dreams, fantasies, invention, has been flowing through the heads of men since the first ape-man succeeded in cutting out a portion of his environment and delineating it in a transmissible word. With that word

[1] It should be said in justice to Sir Charles Lyell that in combating the paroxysmal theories which preoccupied his contemporaries he maintained, nevertheless, that "minor convulsions and changes are . . . a vera causa, a force and mode of operation which we know to be true."

a world arose which will die only when the last man utters the last meaningful sound.

It is a world that lurks, real enough, behind the foreheads of men; it has transformed their natural environment. It has produced history, the unique act out of the natural world about us. "The foxes have their holes," the words are recorded of the apostle Matthew, "the wild birds have their nests, but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay his head."

Two thousand years ago in the Judean desert men recognized that the instinctive world of the animals had been lost to man. Henceforward he would pass across the landscape as a wanderer who, in a sense, was outside of nature. His shadow would grow large in the night beside the glare of his red furnaces. Fickle, erratic, dangerous, he would wrest from stone and deep-veined metal, powers hitherto denied to living things. His restless mind would try all paths, all horrors, all betrayals. In the strange individual talents nourished in his metropolises, great music would lift him momentarily into some pure domain of peace. Art would ennoble him, temptation and terror pluck his sleeve. He would believe all things and believe nothing. He would kill for shadowy ideas more ferociously than other creatures kill for food, then, in a generation or less, forget what bloody dream had so oppressed him.

Man stands, in other words, between the two most disparate kingdoms upon earth: the flesh and the spirit. He is lost between an instinctive mental domain he has largely abandoned and a realm of thought through which still drift ghostly shadows of his primordial past. Like all else that lingers along the borders of one world while gazing into another we are imperfectly adapted. It is not only the sea lion from the deep waters that inches himself painfully up the shore into the unfamiliar sunlight. So does man in the deep interior of his mind occasionally clamber far up into sunlit meadows where his world is changed and where, in the case of some few—for such is the way of evolution—there is no return to lower earth. It has taken us far longer to discover the scars of evolution in our brains than to interpret the vestigial organs tucked into odd crannies of our bodies, or the wounds and aches that reveal to us that we have not always walked upon two feet.

Alfred Russel Wallace, Darwin's great contemporary, perceived in 1864 that in man the rise of the most remarkable specialization in the organic world—the human brain—had, to a considerable degree, outmoded the evolution of specialized organs. The creature who could clothe himself in fur or take it off at will, who could by extension of himself into machines, fly, swim, or roll at incredible speeds, had simultaneously mastered all of earth's environments with the same physical body. Paradoxically, this profound biological specialization appeared to have produced an organ devoted to the sole purpose of escaping specialization. No longer could man be trapped in a single skin, a single climate, a single continent, or even a single culture. He had become ubiquitous. The wind wafted his little craft to the ends of the earth, seeds changed their substance under his hands, the plague hesitated and drew back before his cities. Even his body appeared destined to remain relatively stable since he had become the supremely generalized animal whose only mutability lay in his intelligence as expressed upon his instruments and weapons.

A creature who sets out upon a new road in the wilderness, however, is apt to encounter unexpected dangers—particularly if he ventures into that invisible and mysterious environmental zone, that "other world" which has been conjured up by the sheer power of thought. Man, when he moved from the animal threshold into dawning intellectual consciousness, no longer could depend upon the instinctive promptings which carry a bird upon the wing.

Although it is difficult to penetrate into that half world of the past, it is evident that order, simple order, must have rapidly become a necessity for survival in human groups across whose members the inchoate thoughts and impulses of the freed mind must have run as alarming vagaries. Man must, in fact, have walked the knife-edge of extinction for untold years. As he defined his world he also fell victim to the shadows that lay behind it. He did not accept it like the animal, as a thing given. He bowed to stone, and heard sprites in running water. The entire universe was talking about him and his destiny. He knew the powers and heard the voices. He formulated their wishes for himself. He shaped out of his own drives and timidities the rules and regulations which re-introduced into his world a kind of facsimile of his lost instinctive animal order and simplicity.

By means of custom, strengthened by supernatural enforcement, the violent and impulsive were forced into conformity. There was a way, the way of the tribe. The individual conformed or perished. There was only one way and one people, the tribe. That there were many tribes and many ways into the future no one knew, and at first in the wide emptiness of the world it scarcely mattered. It was enough that there was some kind of way or path. Even the Neanderthals had known this and had provided meat and tools that the dead might need upon their journey.

If we pause and comtemplate this dim and unhistorical age for a moment, it is, as we have intimated, with the thought that it reveals a rift or schism in man's endeavors that runs through his life in many aspects and throughout his history. The great historians, like Lord Acton, have spoken of universal history as "an illumination of the soul." They have ventured to foresee the eventual unification of man and the meeting of many little histories, ultimately, in the great history of man's final unification. It may be so. Yet whether we peer backward into the cloudy mirror of the past, or look 'round us at the moment, it appears that behind every unifying effort in the life of man there is an opposite tendency to disruption, as if the force symbolized in the story of the Tower of Babel had been felt by man since the beginning. Eternally he builds, and across the smooth facade of his institutional structures there runs this ancient crack, this primordial flaw out of old time. We of this age have not escaped it.

Scarcely had man begun dimly and uncertainly to shape his new found world of culture than it split into many facets. Its serenity of expression, its "universal" laws were unfortunately less than those of the nature out of which he had emerged. The customs were, in reality, confined to this island, that hill fort, or the little tribe by the river bank. The people's conception of themselves was similarly circumscribed. They were the people. Those who made strange sounds in a different tongue or believed in other gods were queer, and at best tolerated for trading purposes if they did not encroach upon tribal territory.

In some parts of the world this remote life, untouched by self-questioning of any sort, this ancient way of small magical dealings with animals and wood spirits and man has persisted into modern times. It is a comparatively harmless but ensorcelled world in which man's innate capacities are shut up in a very tiny ring and held latent through the long passage of millennia. There are times when one wonders whether it is only a very rare accident that releases man from the ancient, hypnotic sleep into which he so promptly settled after triumphing in his first human endeavor—that of organizing a way of life, controlling the seasons and, in general, setting up his own microscopic order in the vast shadow of the natural world. It is worth a passing thought upon primitive capacities that perhaps no existing society has built so much upon so little.

Nevertheless the rift persisted and ran on. The great neolithic empires arose and extended across the old tribal boundaries. The little peoples were becoming the great people. The individual inventor and artist, released from the restrictions of a low-energy society, enriched the whole culture. The arts of government increased. As wealth arose, however, so war, in a modern sense, also arose. Conquest empires—neolithic and classic—largely erased the old tribalism, but a long train of miseries followed in their wake. Slavery, merciless exploitation such as our paleolithic ancestors never imagined in their wildest dreams, disrupted the society and in the end destroyed both the individual and the state.

There began to show across the face of these new empires not alone the symptoms of a bottomless greed, but what, in the light of times to come was more alarming: the very evident fact that, as human rule passed from the village to the empire, the number of men who could successfully wield power for long-term social purposes grew less. Moreover, the long chain of bureaucracy from the ruler to the ruled made for greater inefficiency and graft. Man was beginning to be afflicted with bigness in his affairs, and with bigness there often emerges a dogmatic rigidity. The system, if bad, may defy individual strength to change it and simply run its inefficient way until it collapses. It is here that what we may call involution in the human drama becomes most apparent.

There tend to arise in human civilization institutions which monopolize, in one direction or another, the wealth and attention of the society, frequently to its eventual detriment and increasing rigidity. These are, in a sense, cultural overgrowths, excessively ornate societal excrescences as exaggerated as some of the armor plate which adorned the gigantic bodies of the last dinosaurs. Such complications may be as relatively harmless as a hyperdeveloped caste system in which no social fluidity exists, or, on the contrary, as dangerous as military institutions which employ increasingly a disproportionate amount of the capital and attention of the state and its citizens.

III

In one of those profound morality plays which C. S. Lewis is capable of tossing off lightly in the guise of science fiction, one of his characters remarks that in the modern era the good appears to be getting better and the evil more terrifying. It is as though two antipathetic elements in the universe were slowly widening the gap between them. Man, in some manner stands at the heart of this growing rift. Perhaps he contains it within himself. Perhaps, as we have remarked, he feels the crack slowly widening in his mind and his institutions. He sees the finest intellects which, in the previous century, concerned themselves with electric light and telephonic communication devote themselves as wholeheartedly to missiles and supersonic bombers. He finds that the civilization which once assumed that only barbarians would think of attacking helpless civilian populations from the air has, by degree, come to accept the inevitability of such barbarism.

Hope, if it is expressed by the potential candidates for mass extermination in this age of advanced destruction, is expressed, not in terms of living, but in those of survival, such hope being largely premised on the confidence in one's own specialists to provide a nuclear blanket capable of exceeding that of the enemy. All else gives way before the technician and the computer specialist running his estimates as to how many million deaths it takes, and in how many minutes, before the surviving fragment of a nation—if any—sues for peace. Nor, in the scores of books analyzing these facts, is it easy to find a word spared to indicate concern for the falling sparrow, the ruined forest, the contaminated spring—all, in short, that spells a life in nature still to man.

As one of these technicians wrote in another connection involving the mere use of insecticides, and which I here shorten and paraphrase: "Balance of nature? An outmoded biological concept. There is no room for sentiment in modern science. We shall learn to get along without birds if necessary. After all, the dinosaurs disappeared. Man merely makes the process go faster. Everything changes with time." And so it does. But let us be as realistic as the gentleman would wish. It may be we who go. I am just primitive enough to hope that somehow, somewhere, a cardinal may still be whistling on a green bush when the last man goes blind before his man-made sun. If it should turn out that we have mishandled our own lives as several civilizations before us have done, it seems a pity that we should involve the violet and the tree frog in our departure.

To perpetrate this final act of malice seems somehow disproportionate, beyond endurance. It is like tampering with the secret purposes of the universe itself and involving not just man but life in the final holocaust—an act of petulant, deliberate blasphemy.

It is for this reason that Lewis' remark about the widening gap between good and evil takes on such horrifying significance in our time. The evil man may do has just this added significance about it—it is not merely the evil of one tribe seeking to exterminate another. It is, instead, the thought-out willingness to make the air unbreathable to neighboring innocent nations, and to poison, in one's death throes, the very springs of life itself. No greater hypertrophy of the institution of war has ever been observed in the West. To make the situation more ironic, the sole desire of every fifth-rate nascent nationalism is to emulate Russia and America—to rattle rockets, and if these are too expensive, then at least to possess planes and a parade of tanks. For the first time in history a divisive nationalism, spread like a contagion from the West, has increased in virulence and blown around the world.

A multitude of states are now swept along in a passionate hunger for arms as the only important symbol of prestige. Yearly their number increases. For the first time in human history the involutional disease of a single, modern civilization, that of the West, shows signs of becoming the disease of all contemporary societies. Such, it would appear, is one of the less beneficial aspects of the communications network which we have flung around the world. The universal understanding which has been the ultimate goal sought by the communications people, that shining Telstar through which we were to promote the transmission of wisdom, bids fair, instead, to promote unsatisfied hunger and the enthusiastic reception of irrationalities that embed themselves all too readily in the minds of the illiterate.

Man may have ceased to teeter uncertainly upon his hind legs, his strange physical history may be almost over. But within his mind he is still hedged about by the shadows of his own fear and uncertainty; he still lingers at the borders of his dark and tree-filled world. He fears the sunlight, he fears truth, he fears himself. In the words of Thomas Beddoes who looked long into that world of shadows:

"Nature's polluted,
There's man in every secret corner of her
Doing damned wicked deeds. Thou art, old world
A hoary, atheistic, murdering star."

This is the dark murmur that rises from the abyss beneath us, and that draws us with uncanny fascination.

If one were to attempt to spell out in a sentence the single lethal factor at the root of declining or lost civilizations up to the present, I would be forced to say adaptability. I would have to remark, paradoxically, that the magnificent specialization of gray matter which has opened to us all the climates of the earth, which has given us music, surrounded us with luxury, entranced us with great poetry, has this one flaw: it is too adaptable. In breaking free of instinct and venturing naked into a universe which demanded constant trial and experiment, a world whose possibilities were unexplored and unlimited, man's hunger for experience became unlimited also. He has the capacity to veer with every wind, or, stubbornly, to insert himself into some fantastically elaborated and irrational social institution only to perish with it.

It may well be that some will not call this last piece of behavior adaptation. Yet it is to be noted that only extreme, if unwise, adaptability would have allowed man to contrive and inhabit such strange structures. When men in the mass have once attached themselves to a cultural excrescence which grows until it threatens the life of the society, it is almost impossible to modify their behavior without violence. Yet along with this, as I have remarked, fervid waves of religious or military enthusiasm may sweep through a society and then vanish with scarcely a trace.

It would take volumes to chronicle the many facets of this problem. It is almost as though man had at heart no image, but only images, that his soul was truly as vacant and vast as Melville intimated in the passage I have earlier quoted. Man is mercurial and shifting. He can look down briefly into the abyss and say, smiling, "We are beasts from the dark wood. We will never be anything else. We are not to be trusted. Never on this earth. We have come from down there." This view is popular in our time. We speak of the fossil ape encrusted in our hearts.

This is one image of many that man entertains of himself. There is another left by a man who died a long time ago. I have spoken earlier of the collective symbol a civilization sometimes leaves to posterity and the difficulty one has with our own because of the rapidity with which our technology has altered, and the restless flickering of our movement from one domain of life to another.

A few months ago I read casually in my evening newspaper that our galaxy is dying. That great wheel of fire of which our planetary system is an infinitesimal part was, so the report ran, proceeding to its end. The detailed evidence was impressive. Probably, though I have not attempted to verify the figures, the spiral arm on which we drift is so vast that it has not made one full circle of the wheel since the first man-ape picked up and used a stone.

Now I saw no use in whispering behind my hand at the Club, next morning, "They say the galaxy is dying." I knew well enough that man, being more perishable than stars, would be gone billions of years before the edge of the Milky Way grew dark. It was not that aspect of the human episode that moved me. Instead it was the sudden realization of what man could do on so gigantic a scale even if, as yet, his personal fate eluded him. Out there millions of light years away from earth, man's hands were already fumbling in the coal-scuttle darkness of a future universe. The astronomer was foreshortening time—just as on a shorter scale eclipses can be foretold, or an apparently empty point in space can be shown as destined to receive an invisibly moving body. So man, the short-lived midge, is reaching into and observing events he will never witness in the flesh. In a psychological second, on this elusive point we call the present, we can watch the galaxy drift into darkness.

The materiality of the universe, Whitehead somewhere remarks, is measured "in proportion to the restriction of memory and anticipation." With consciousness, memory, extended through the written word and the contributions of science, penetrates farther and farther into both aspects of time's unknown domain, that is, the past and the future. Though individual men do not live longer, we might say that the reach of mind in the universe and its potential control of the natural order is enormously magnified.

Material substance no longer dominates the spiritual life. There is not time here to explore all aspects of this fascinating subject, nor the paradoxes with which our burgeoning technology have presented us. This strange capacity of the mind upon which we exercise so little thought, however, means that man both remains within the historical order and, at the same time, passes beyond it.

We are present in history, we may see history as meaningless or purposeful, but as the heightened consciousness of time invades our thinking, our ability to free our intellects from a narrow and self-centered immediacy should be intensified. It is this toward which Whitehead was directing his thought: that all responsible decisions are acts of compassion and disinterest; they exist within time and history but they are also outside of it—unique and individual and, because individual, spiritually free. In the words of Erich Frank, "History and the world do not change, but man's attitude to the world changes."

I wonder if we understand this point, for it is the crux of all my efforts in this lecture, and though I have mentioned modern thinkers, it leads straight back to the New Testament. A number of years ago in a troubled period of my life I chanced to take a cab from an airport outside a large eastern city. The way to the address I gave lay through the back streets of a run-down area of dilapidated buildings. I remember we passed a pathetic little cemetery whose smudged crosses, dating from another era, were now being encroached upon and overshadowed by the huge gray tanks of an oil refinery. The shadow of giant machines now fell daily across the hill of the dead. It was almost a visible struggle of the symbols to which I have earlier referred—the cross that marks two thousand years of western culture, shrinking, yet still holding its little acre in the midst of hulking beams and shadows where now no sunlight ever fell.

I felt an unreasoned distaste as we jounced deeper into these narrow alleyways, or roared beneath giant bridges toward a distant throughway. Finally, as we cut hastily through a slightly more open section, I caught a glimpse of a neighborhood church—a church of evident poverty, of a sect unknown, and destined surely to vanish from that unsavory spot. It was an anachronism as doomed as the cemetery. We passed, and a moment later, as though the sign had been hanging all that time in the cab before me, instead of standing neatly in the yard outside the church, my conscious mind unwillingly registered the words:

> "Christ died to save mankind.
> Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?"

I looked at that invisible hanging sign with surprise, if not annoyance. By some I have been castigated because I am an evolutionist. In one church where I had attended as the guest of a member not long before, I had been made the covert object of a sermon in which I had recognizably played the role of a sinning scientist. I cannot deny that the role may have fitted me, but I could not feel that the hospitality, under the circumstances, was Christian. I had seen fanatical sectarian signs of ignorant and contentious sects painted on rocks all over America, particularly in desert places. I had gazed unmoved on them all.

But here on a plain white board that would not remove itself from my eyes, an unknown man in the shadow of one of the ugliest neighborhoods in America had in some manner lifted that falling symbol from the shadow of the refinery tanks and thrust it relentlessly before my eyes. There was no evading it. "Is it nothing to you?" I was being asked—I who passed by, who had indeed already passed, and would again ignore, much more sophisticated approaches to religion.

But the symbol, one symbol of many in the wilderness of modern America, still exerted its power over me—a dozen lines of thinking, past and present drew in upon me. Nothing eventful happened in the outside world. Whatever took place happened within myself. The cab sped on down the throughway.

But before my mind's eye, like an ineradicable mote, persisted the vision of that lost receding figure on the dreadful hill of Calvary who whispered with his last breath, "It is finished." It was not for Himself he cried—it was for man against eternity—for us of every human generation who perform against the future, the acts which justify creation or annul it. This is the power in the mind of man—a mind print, if you will—an insubstantial symbol which holds like a strained cable the present from falling into the black abyss of nothingness. This is why, if we possess great fortitude each one of us can say against the future he has not seen, "It is finished."

At that moment we will have passed beyond the reach of time into a still and hidden place where it was said, "He who loses his life will find it." And in that place we will have found an ancient and an undistorted way.

Address of ROBERT OPPENHEIMER
National Book Awards
New York City

March 12, 1963

THE ADDED CUBIT

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Stafford, Mr. Edel, Mr. Powers, ladies and gentlemen: It is an honor and a great pleasure to participate in this celebration; and it is with some regret that I obey my injunction to distract you from the good works and writers here honored, and the good words already spoken.

A little more than a year ago, the Scientific Secretary of the Soviet Academy of Science was in this country, as an advisor to the Secretary General of the United Nations. He let it be known that he would like to come to Princeton to meet me and to visit the Institute, and the day before his visit I suggested that we have a few people to lunch with him who would be interested in meeting him and talking with him. He came early, and there was much time to talk. He had been a geophysicist, but was himself no longer very active or very interested, for his life was devoted to the affairs of the Academy and to politics. When we had agreed, as we early did, that science was a good thing, and that peace was a good thing, the conversation lagged. I asked him then how he envisaged the future, say fifty years off. "We know how rapidly our activitie in the sciences are growing. I know that you have five-year plans and ten-year projections; but what will it really be like?" He answered without hesitation, "Everyone will be a scientist." The words died slowly in the room. "No," he said, "I did not say that right. Machines will do all the labor; everyone will be engaged in creative work." Again there was some silence. Then he said, "Of course, there will always be people who are interested in sport."

It will be clear to you, as it is to me, that the poor Secretary did not have the advantage that we enjoy: the availability of the reports of a Presidential Commission on National Goals.

There has been much thought taken in the last centuries; it has certainly added many cubits to the extent and ~~dimensions~~ scope of the problems with which we are living. I shall not repeat to you again the catalog of indicia that attest this growth: the 93% of all men of science in human history who are alive today; the periodicals which, if they continue to grow as they have, will outweigh the world in the next century; the vast ramification of specialized techniques and the feedback of technology and discovery to make new tools for the study of nature and of man. I do want to remind you of two things less often said. One is that the study of history has also deepened, ramified and expanded. The history of art, the history of science, the history of China and of India are enterprises characteristic of our time, and, even more, of our future. We know more of the human past, and are better able to correct our reading of its meaning than has ever been possible before. Only today is a critical edition of Newton's Principia on its way, which will make generally available to us the many variant readings that reflect Newton's philosophical doubts and his maturity. I look to these studies of history to provide new links in the unity of knowledge.

The unity of knowledge, long thought of as corresponding to a structure in which the foundation stones imply the whole, has today a very different topology: very much more than a temple, it is a network, as William James foresaw, with no central chamber, no basic truths from which all else will follow, but with a wonderful mutual relevance between its many branches, and with beauty illuminating the growing tips of knowledge, even in the most recondite and unfamiliar branches. As far as learning goes, as far as the cognitive world that is for many of us a large part of man's world, this means that what we have often said, we now must intend and practice. Learning is not alone for the child and the youth. For the professional it has always been a lifelong vocation; and if our world is to cohere, if we are to be able to talk with one another about our common problems, more and more we shall need, whatever our professional duty, to learn a little of what is being found out about the world of nature, about man and his history: to learn by talk, by reading, by study. The National Book Committee has much to do.

These thoughts, which have been often spoken by others and by me, are not the center of what I would say today. This center lies in some of the problems which the growth of knowledge, and the growth of power that is based on it, have put before us; and with two traits of the European tradition which seem to me helpful and deeply needed in living with them. The first is our sense of responsibility to human history, to its present and future. This is not a trait of the great culture of China, or of that of India; but it is to be found in the Old and the New Testament, and it seems a characteristic of European culture for the last millennium. I cannot help seeing with a ~~certain~~ very deep + unprepared awe the power of this and other elements of the Christian sensibility when they touch lands with ancient traditions, and indeed lands with very primitive cultures; and in this I see one element of hope that a world unified by technology and in danger of tearing itself to shreds in minutes may yet have some human basis for a united world.

Indeed the responsibility for history is probably a decisive reason for the growth of that intimate symbiosis of technology, study, experiment, and analysis and synthesis which is the modern scientific world. Scholars have asked why no such history was made in China, in India, and even more pointedly, in the Mediterranean world of antiquity. Einstein thought that perhaps it was because none of these cultures had a sufficiently developed tradition both in algebra and geometry. Others have suggested that because of slavery or peonage there was no adequate regard and affection for the work of the hand, for technique and the arts; but many serious scholars seem not to find these an adequate reason, and believe that the idea of the improvement of human life on earth has provided the air for the fires of science.

In her own day, which is partly part of ours, Simone Weil said of this time that in comparison with all earlier times it was rich in illusory responsibilities, and very poor in real ones; and she added that an understanding of this brought a sweet serenity. Of course, she is largely right, not only of all of us, but even, perhaps to his astonishment, of the President of the United States, and, perhaps even to his greater astonishment, of the President of France. What this can mean to a writer of novels has been most movingly sketched by Mary McCarthy in her Fact in Fiction. It is true of the two massive problems which science has brought to the world -- but not equally true: the world wide need for social justice, and the maintenance and extension of peace. That these two are related most people believe; that effort and responsibility for one should relieve us of the other seems to me impossible.

We live today in this country with the bitter heritage of centuries of slavery. We live in a world in which foreign oppression has only recently been lifted in some continents, and still prevails in others. We live in a world where hunger, illness and ignorance persist although the resources to reduce them are abundantly at hand. The last years have increasingly seen devoted efforts to these causes, misguided surely in many ways, self-centered and self-congratulatory where they should be modest, global in generalities, and often not responsive to the men and women, and indeed the children, whose hearts and spirits must make their own new world. But to me it seems that we are slowly learning what we can and what we ought not do, and in this a very widely shared responsibility is open to us. Let us learn fast.

But with the question of war, none of these words may be spoken. I cannot regard it as an acceptable evil that we, and ~~no doubt~~ clearly our antagonists, prepare to inflict such unprecedented and believe me very nearly unimaginable harm on the people of this world as we do with our weapons, our weapons systems, and our war plans. I know that neither our Government nor any meaningful part of our people plans to do this harm "one fine day" without cause. I ~~believe~~ think it true that the Soviet Government concludes that it would not be wise to take such a course. It is my earnest hope that when the time comes, as one day it will, when China has a comparable power, its Government and its people will have learned not to use it; but here my hope is nourished by nothing. Like you, I would like to know a little of what I speak. Yet I cannot believe that it is without profound corruption and profound alienation that our culture, our peace, and our lives rest on such an inferno, nor that we can go unscathed, even in matters of learned study or high art, or in the nobility of our converse with one another, by the dark foundation which underlies our perilous tranquillity.

This leads me to the other trait of European society which seems to me rather missing in our secularized age, the trait that can be found in other great religions, in the Buddha for one, but which is a constant word in what underlies the European and the Christian sensibility, the Stoa, Ecclesiastes, the Gospels. It is a truth whose recognition seems to underlie the very possibility of a permanently peaceful world, and to be indispensible as well in our dealings with people with radically different history and culture and tradition. It is the knowledge of the inwardness of evil, and an awareness that in our dealings with this we are very close to the center of life. It is true of us as a people who tend to see all devils as foreigners; it is true of us ourselves, who reflect, project and externalize what we cannot bear to see. When we are blind to the evil in ourselves, we dehumanize ourselves, and we deprive ourselves not only of our own destiny, but of any possibility of dealing well with the evil in others. Perhaps we are most in debt to Freud for seeing the evil in man as a part of nature, and for treating it without contempt or hatred. Yet we, as a part of nature, are not without responsibility for what we make of nature. Today, in a secular world, it is almost wholly through the arts that we have a living reminder of the terror and nobility of what we are. The National Book Committee has much to do.

When St. Matthew said, "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?", he expected no reply. We too cannot reply. By taking thought of our grim responsibility, by knowing our profound and omnipresent imperfection, we may help our children's children to a world less cruel, less unjust, less likely to end in catastrophe beyond words. We may even find our way to put an end to the orgy, the killing, the brutality that is war.

Let me end with an anecdote. Three weeks ago a high officer of the National Book Committee asked for a title for this talk. I did not have one, but promised to call back shortly, and gave the title that is before you. The officer protested that my title was indeed puzzling and uninformative. I said that it had a history, and when the officer asked, I quoted St. Matthew. Then the officer said, "From what book is that?" The National Book Committee still has a lot to do.

pm
#425

ENGINEERING NEWS-RECORD
A McGraw-Hill Publication • 330 West 42nd Street, New York 36, N.Y. • LOngacre 4-3000

PUBLIC AFFAIRS AND COMMUNICATIONS DEPARTMENT
EUGENE MILLER, DIRECTOR • LONGACRE 4-3000

#75/63-M

PRACTICAL NUCLEAR EXCAVATION NEARING REALITY

New York, April 1 --Practical nuclear excavation--though still several years away--will come sooner than any other peaceful use of nuclear explosives.

The technology appears possible within five years, spokesmen for the Army Corps of Engineers and the Atomic Energy Commission told Engineering News-Record, McGraw-Hill publication, in an exclusive briefing.

Government engineers and scientists, the spokesmen said, have reduced nuclear excavation to near-handbook simplicity in some respects. But many unknowns, technical, legal and administrative, must be explored before it becomes a practical construction tool.

Excluding bomb technology, the engineers and scientists know more about control of crater dimensions than any other technical aspect. They know a great deal about controlling radiation fallout, one of the three major hazards, and are making progress in predicting and limiting damage from ground shock and air blast, the other two.

The study of nuclear excavating began formally in 1957 when the AEC launched Project Plowshare, a broad effort to develop peaceful uses for nuclear explosives. Excavating study is taking a quarter to a third of the $9.6 million Plowshare appropriation for fiscal 1963 and could take as much as half of the $16 million requested for fiscal 1964.

---MORE---

In a channel-excavation test slated for later this year, five 10-kiloton devices in a row will be fired simultaneously. AEC officials expect the ditch to be about 2,300 feet long, 700 feet wide and 125 feet deep.

The spokesmen emphasized the progress made in controlling radioactivity. The fusion devices now available generate less radioactive debris than fission bombs, and the scientists expect to make them even cleaner.

Ground shock and air blast are mainly siting problems. Researchers have found preliminary methods of predicting accelerations imposed on structures by ground shock, but the subject requires much more study to learn how to predict the effects of local geology.

Air blast means a lot of broken windows a long way from ground zero under certain conditions. The troublesome effect is a sound wave focused upward from the crater. It hits the ozonosphere and bounces back to earth in an annular ring 150 to 200 miles from the blast.

As air blast is affected by meteorological conditions, minimizing the damage is a matter first of blast site location and second of blast timing to suit the weather.

Whoever uses nuclear excavators will get cheap dirt moving if he uses big ones, and he cannot afford to use small ones, according to AEC predictions.

The AEC has estimated that a sea-level Central American canal 1,000 feet wide and 250 feet deep could be constructed with nuclear explosives for about one-third the cost and in about one-half the time it would take to build one 600 feet wide and 60 feet deep by using conventional excavation methods.

Although "H-digging" might sharply affect some segments of the construction industry, AEC has heard little from them. However, fallout fear and moral objections to nuclear blasts may be generating strong opposition.

###

HARVARD SEISMOLOGIST TAKES ON GOVERNMENT ANEW

U.S. test detection men unqualified

Drawing by Fred Vorkel

Merry Christmas!

sometimes occurs because all categories—earthquake station, doodlebugger and big blast—are commonly called seismologists.

Leet described the scientists on the Berkner panel as "one nuclear physicist, five doodlebuggers, an oceanographer, four instrument designers and two employees of instrument manufacturers." He said: "What these men shared in common was that, regardless of their backgrounds, none of them had any experience in the patrol activities of earthquake stations."

"Since the crux of the problem is in the differentiation of quakes and blasts, it would seem only logical to have people with experience in both on the job . . . There are a dozen working seismologists in the country . . . doing the work every day. They've read records by the thousands. I myself in the past years have read something on the order of 50,000 earthquake records, and I know for an absolute fact that a record from an earthquake of given size just looks different from a record of a similar shot at the same distance.

"One possible approach is to compare the energy levels of thing. I might be able to save some time because I have done a lot of work with big blasts, but the principles are known. Anyone with the right training could do it."

NAIVE ERRORS: The incompetence of the Berkner Panel, Leet pointed out, is indicated by the naive errors it made. For example, it spent almost $348,000 to determine, among other things, the number and location of the world's earthquakes and the seismicity of the earth. This data has been collected and published regularly by the Int'l Seismological Society and is available in any geological library.

In two years, the Berkner Panel spent more than $41,500,000. Of this, more than $15 million went to members of the panel or their companies for research and equipment for the Vela studies, which the panel recommended. Only Berkner and Dr. Hans Bethe, Cornell physicist, failed to benefit personally. The others got contracts ranging from $100,676 to $5,258,761.

Leet also said that he could find no record of a Ph.D. degree for "Dr." David T. Griggs, formerly a teacher in experimental geology at Harvard, and listed as "Dr." in the Berkner panel reports.

Leet made no special pleading for earthquake station seismologists. Finding a means of differentiating quakes from blasts, he said, "has to be a team operation" of station seismologists, big blast seismologists and doodlebuggers who can contribute electronic know-how in developing instruments.

NOT COLLOWED: Leet was particularly disturbed by the secrecy around the Berkner Panel. He said: "The way to solve problems like test detection is simple and has been known and used for generations. You make a thorough analysis of existing knowledge before you begin. You ask everybody who has been working in the area, what have you done, what do you suggest? You don't classify, you let [illegible] you are doing and thinking be known—if you are doing foolish things, people will tell you so. These procedures the Berkner Panel has not followed."

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

greatest movement and are called Surface waves because across the surface of the earth.

For years seismology was use[illegible] a handful of scientists in cap[illegible] tions, who daily recorded [illegible] the earthquake waves. In the 19[illegible] started [illegible] waves in the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PUTS AMERICA FIRST

Warburg Tells Off Pauling on Cuba

By GAY TALESE

(Copyright 1962 by the New York Times Co.)

NEW YORK—There was a noisy, fist-waving feud Thursday night at a meeting of advocates of non-violence. Before it was over, 15 spectators stomped out of the meeting and on the stage the two men they had come to honor, Dr. Linus C. Pauling, Nobel Prize-winning scientist, and James P. Warburg, economist and author, were arguing heatedly with each other.

Moments before the outburst, both men had received the 1962 Gandhi peace award from promoting Enduring Peace, Inc., a non-profit, non-political, religious and educational organization.

The meeting, held at the Community Church of New York, began quietly enough with prayers, amenities and a letter of praise from Ambassador Adlai Stevenson to Warburg.

Warburg listened attentatively while Dr. Pauling told of the perils of nuclear war, said that President John F. Kennedy had made the bomb threat an instrument of American foreign policy, and unfortunately had enabled Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev to seem the peacemaker in the recent Cuban crisis.

When it came Warburg's turn to speak, he said he was surprised to hear Pauling suggest that "we (the United States) are the source of the trouble." At this point a man in the second row rose and, hands waving, yelled: "We are, we are!"

Pauling leaned over and asked the moderator on stage for a right of reply, but Warburg spoke on. He denounced reported efforts in the past by Pauling and representatives from 27 countries to stop U.S. nuclear testing.

STRONG AVERSION

"I have a strong feeling against enlisting citizens of other nations in protests to our government," Warburg said, "and an even stronger aversion to collecting foreign signatures to petitions which seek injunctions in our courts against the action of our own government. I am not one who subscribes to the doctrine: 'My country, right or wrong,' but when and if it seems necessary in the interests of peace to oppose our government's policy—and it has, indeed, seemed to me necessary upon various occasions in the past—I like to think that the job can and should be done here at home."

"It is this difference over methods of working for peace," he continued, seemingly unperturbed by members in the audience who rose and shouted at him, "Which has prevented my joining hands with you, Dr. Pauling, even when we have been working toward a common objective."

ATTACK 'UNCALLED FOR'

"Stop," a man yelled, "This attack on Dr. Pauling is uncalled for."

Pauling wished to rise and answer Warburg, but the president of Promoting Enduring Peace, Inc., Dr. Kirtley F. Mather, talked him out of it.

Then, while Pauling sat in icy silence, Mather thanked the crowd for attending and explained it is possible "to get along courteously in a fine spirit, one with another, even though we are not always in agreement."

The half-dozen officials on stage shook hands.

Pauling denied Warburg's statement that he had brought an anti-bomb petition to the United States —the petition was directed to the United Nations, the scientist said.

'Not the Victory of Might, But the Vindication of Right'

President's Text: 'Many Sacrifices Lie Ahead'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Following is the prepared text of President John F. Kennedy's speech to the nation Monday night:

Good evening, my fellow citizens:

This government, as promised, has maintained the closest surveilance of the Soviet military buildup on the island of Cuba. Within the past week, unmistakable evidence has established the fact that a series of offensive missile sites is now in preparation on that imprisoned island. The purpose of these bases can be none other than to provide a nuclear strike capability against the Western hemisphere.

Upon receiving the first preliminary hard information of this nature last Tuesday morning at 9 a.m., I directed that our surveillance be stepped up. And having now confirmed and completed our evaluation of the evidence and our decision on a course of action, this government feels obliged to report this new crisis to you in full detail.

The characteristics of these new missile sites indicate two distinct types of installation. Several of them include medium range ballistic missiles, capable of carrying a nuclear warhead for a distance of more than 1,000 nautical miles. Each of these missiles, in short, is capable of striking Washington, D.C., the Panama Canal, Cape Canaveral, Mexico City, or any other city in the Southeastern part of the United States, in Central America or in the Caribbean area.

Additional sites not yet completed appear to be designed for intermediate range ballistic missiles—capable of traveling more than twice as far—and thus capable of striking most of the major cities in the Western hemisphere, ranging as far north as Hudson Bay, Canada, and as far south as Lima, Peru. In addition, jet bombers, capable of carrying nuclear weapons, are now being unpacked and reassembled in Cuba.

peated assurances of Soviet spokesmen, both publicly and privately delivered, that the arms buildup in Cuba would retain its original defensive character, and that the Soviet Union had no need or desire to station strategic missiles on the territory of any other nation.

Russia Spoke Falsely

The size of this undertaking makes clear that it had been planned some months ago. Yet only last month after I had made clear the distinction between any introduction of ground-to-ground missiles and the existence of defensive anti-aircraft missiles, the Soviet government publicly stated on Sept. 11 that "the armaments and military equipment sent to Cuba are designed exclusively for defensive purposes," that "there is no need for the Soviet Union to shift its weapons . . . for a retaliatory blow to any other country, for instance Cuba", and that "the Soviet Union has so powerful rockets to carry these nuclear warheads that there is no need to search for sites for them beyond the boundaries of the Soviet Union." That statement was false.

Only last Thursday, as evidence of this rapid offensive buildup was already in my hand, Soviet foreign minister Gromyko told me in my office that he was instructed to make it clear once again, as he said his government had already done, that Soviet assistance to Cuba "pursued solely the purpose of contributing to the defense capabilities of Cuba," that "training by Soviet specialists of Cuban nationals in handling defensive armaments was by no means offensive," and that "if it were otherwise, the Soviet government would never become involved in rendering such assistance." That statement also was false.

Neither the United States of America nor the world community of nations can tolerate deliberate deception and offensive threats on the part of any nation, large or and unjustified change in the status quo which cannot be accepted by this country, if our courage and our commitments are ever to be trusted again by either friend or foe.

The 1930s taught us a clear lesson: aggressive conduct, if allowed to grow unchecked and unchallenged, ultimately leads to war. This nation is opposed to war. We are also true to our word. Our unswerving objective, therefore, must be to prevent the use of these missiles against this or any other country, and to secure their withdrawal or elimination from the Western Hemisphere.

Our policy has been one of patience and restraint, as befits a peaceful and powerful nation, which leads a worldwide alliance. We have been determined not to be diverted from our central concerns by mere irritants and fanatics. But now further action is required—and it is underway; and these actions may only be the beginning. We will not prematurely or unnecessarily risk the costs of worldwide nuclear war in which even the fruits of victory would be ashes in our mouths—but neither will we shrink from that risk if at any time it must be faced.

Acting, therefore, in the defense of our own security and that of the entire Western Hemisphere, and under the authority entrusted to me by the Constitution as endorsed by the resolution of the Congress, I have directed that the following initial steps be taken immediately:

First: to halt this offensive buildup, a strict quarantine on all offensive military equipment under shipment to Cuba is being initiated. All ships of any kind bound for Cuba, from whatever nation or port, will, if found to contain cargoes of offensive weapons, be turned back. This quarantine will be extended, if needed, to other types of cargo and carriers. We are not at this time, however, denying the necessities of life as night that an emergency meeting of the Security Council be convoked without delay to take action against this latest Soviet threat to world peace. Our resolution will call for the prompt dismantling and withdrawal of all offensive weapons in Cuba, under the supervision of UN observers, before the quarantine can be lifted.

Seventh and finally: I call upon chairman Khrushchev to halt and eliminate this clandestine, reckless and provocative threat to world peace and to stable relations between our two nations. I call upon him further to abandon this course of world domination, and to join in an historic effort to end the perilous arms race and transform the history of man. He has an opportunity now to move the world back from the abyss of destruction—by returning to his government's own words that it had no need to station missiles outside its own territory, and withdrawing these weapons from Cuba—by refraining from any action which will widen or deepen the present crisis—and then by participating in a search for peaceful and permanent solutions.

U.S. Willng to Debate

This nation is prepared to present its case against this Soviet threat to peace, and our own proposals for a peaceful world, at any time and in any forum—in the OAS, in the United Nations, or in any other meeting that could be useful—without limiting our freedom of action. We have in the past made strenuous efforts to limit the spread of nuclear weapons. We have proposed the elimination of all arms and military bases in a fair and effective disarmament treaty. We are prepared to discuss new proposals for the removal of tensions on both sides—including the possibilities of a genuinely independent Cuba, free to determine its own destiny. We have no wish to war with the Soviet Union—for we are a peaceful people who desire to live in peace with all other liberty. And I have no doubt that most Cubans today look forward to the time when they will be truly free—free from foreign domination, free to choose their own leaders, free to select their own system, free to own their own land, free to speak and write and worship without fear or degradation. And then shall Cuba be welcomed back to the society of free nations and to the associations of this hemisphere.

My fellow citizens: let no one doubt that this is a difficult and dangerous effort on which we have set out. No one can foresee precisely what course it will take or what costs or casualties will be incurred. Many months of sacrifice and self-discipline lie ahead—months in which both our will and our patience will be tested—months in which many threats and denunciations will keep us aware of our danger. But the greatest danger of all would be to do nothing.

The path we have chosen for the present is full of hazards, as all paths are—but it is the one most consistent with our character and courage as a nation and our commitments around the world. The cost of freedom is always high—but Americans have always paid it. And one path we shall never choose is the path of surrender or submission.

Our goal is not the victory of might but the vindication of right—not peace at the expense of freedom, but both peace and freedom, here in this hemisphere, and, we hope, around the world. God willing, that goal will be achieved.

siles—capable of traveling more than twice as far—and thus capable of striking most of the major cities in the Western hemisphere, ranging as far north as Hudson Bay, Canada, and as far south as Lima, Peru. In addition, jet bombers, capable of carrying nuclear weapons, are now being uncrated and assembled in Cuba, while the necessary air bases are being prepared.

This urgent transformation of Cuba into an important strategic base—by the presence of these large, long-range and clearly offensive weapons of sudden mass destruction—constitutes an explicit threat to the peace and security of all the Americas, in flagrant and deliberate defiance of the Rio pact of 1947, the traditions of this nation and hemisphere, the joint resolution of the 87th Congress, the charter of the United Nations, and my own public warnings to the Soviets on Sept. 4 and 13. This action also contradicts the re-otherwise, the Soviet government would never become involved in rendering such assistance." That statement also was false.

Neither the United States of America nor the world community of nations can tolerate deliberate deception and offensive threats on the part of any nation, large or small. We no longer live in a world where only the actual firing of weapons represents a sufficient challenge to a nation's security to constitute a maximum peril. Nuclear weapons are so destructive, and ballistic missiles are so swift, that any substantially increased possibility of their use or any sudden change in their deployment may well be regarded as a definite threat to the peace.

For many years, both the Soviet Union and the United States—recognizing this fact—have deployed strategic nuclear weapons with great care, never upsetting the precarious status quo which ensured that these weapons would not be used in the absence of some vital challenge. Our own strategic missiles have never been transferred to the territory of any other nation under a cloak of secrecy and deception; and our history—unlike that of the Soviets since World War II—demonstrates that we have no desire to dominate or conquer any other nation or impose our system upon its people. Nevertheless, American citizens have become adjusted to living daily on the bullseye of Soviet missiles located inside the USSR or in submarines. In that sense, missiles in Cuba add to an already clear and present danger—although, it should be noted, the nations of Latin America have never previously been subjected to a potential nuclear threat.

Secret Red Buildup

But this secret, swift and extraordinary buildup of Communist missiles—in an area well-known to have a special and historical relationship to the United States and the nations of the Western Hemisphere, in violation of Soviet assurances, and in defiance of American and hemispheric policy—this sudden, clandestine decision to station strategic weapons for the first time outside of Soviet soil—is a deliberately provocative itiated. All ships of any kind bound for Cuba, from whatever nation or port, will, if found to contain cargoes of offensive weapons, be turned back. This quarantine will be extended, if needed, to other types of cargo and carriers. We are not at this time, however, denying the necessities of life as the Soviet attempted to do in their Berlin blockade of 1948.

Keeping Close Watch

Second: I have directed the continued and increased close surveillance of Cuba and its military buildup. The foreign ministers of the OAS in their communique of Oct. 6 rejected secrecy on such matters in this hemisphere. Should these offensive military preparations continue, thus increasing the threat to the hemisphere, further action will be justified. I have directed the armed forces to prepare for any eventualities; and I trust that, in the interest of both the Cuban people and the Soviet technicians at these sites, the hazards to all concerned of continuing this threat will be recognized.

Third: it shall be the policy of this nation to regard any nuclear missile launched from Cuba against any nation in the Western hemisphere as an attack by the Soviet Union on the United States requiring a full retaliatory response upon the Soviet Union.

Fourth: as a necessary military precaution, I have reinforced our base at Guantanamo, evacuated today the dependents of our personnel there and ordered additional military units to stand by on an alert basis.

Fifth: we are calling tonight for an immediate meeting of the organ of consultation under the Organization of American States, to consider this threat to hemispheric security and to invoke Articles 6 and 8 of the Rio treaty in support of all necessary action. The United Nations charter allows for regional security arrangements—and the nations of this hemisphere decided long ago against the military presence of outside powers. Our other allies around the world have also been alerted.

Sixth: under the charter of the United Nations, we are asking topared to discuss new proposals for the removal of tensions on both sides—including the possibilities of a genuinely independent Cuba, free to determine its own destiny. We have no wish to war with the Soviet Union—for we are a peaceful people who desire to live in peace with all other peoples.

But it is difficult to settle or even discuss these problems in an atmosphere of intimidation. That is why this latest Soviet threat—or any other threat which is made either independently or in response to our actions this week—must and will be met with determination. Any hostile move anywhere in the world against the safety and freedom of peoples to whom we are committed—including in particular the brave people of West Berlin—will be met by whatever action is needed.

Finally, I want to say a few words to the captive people of Cuba, to whom this speech is being directly carried by special radio facilities. I speak to you as a friend, as one who knows of your deep attachment to your fatherland, as one who shares your aspirations for liberty and justice for all. And I have watched with deep sorrow how your nationalist revolution was betrayed—and how your fatherland fell under foreign domination. Now your leaders are no longer Cuban leaders inspired by Cuban ideals. They are puppets and agents of an international conspiracy which has turned Cuba against your friends and neighbors in the Americas—and turned it into the first Latin American country to become a target for nuclear war—the first Latin American country to have these weapons on its soil.

These new weapons are not in your interest. They contribute nothing to your peace and well-being. They can only undermine it. But this country has no wish to cause you to suffer or to impose any system upon you. We know your lives and land are being used as pawns by those who deny you freedom.

Many times in the past, the Cuban people have risen to throw out tyrants who destroyed their

Why We Are Here

We are disturbed by the President's decision to blockade Cuba.

If it is true that the Soviet Union has committed the criminal folly of stationing long-range missiles in Cuba, this does not necessarily justify the President's hasty and provocative response.

No attempt was apparently made to exhaust the usual diplomatic procedures for protesting a hostile act, nor to involve our Latin American neighbors (as the Rio Pact, mentioned by the President, requires) in formulating a hemispheric plan of action. In saying that "We are a peaceful people," the President seems to have forgotten that thus far the principle aggressor in Cuban-American relations has been the United States, which admittedly trained and financed the invasion of Cuba in 1961.

Cabell Phillips, a New York Times reporter, writes from Washington (Atlanta Constitution, Oct. 23) that the President's action will "have the effect, at least momentarily, of countering the most telling political attack Republicans have been making against his administration," and adds that it was generally accepted in Washington Monday that politics played "more than a minor part" in the President's decision. Are we risking nuclear annihilation so that the Democratic Party can win an election?

- - - - -

We are a group of individuals, representing only ourselves, who have come here today to evidence our concern about the Cuban crisis. We wish to make a public witness to urge peaceful means of settling international disputes -- instead of blockades, threats, and missiles.

What You Can Do

SEND TELEGRAMS to President John F. Kennedy
Secretary of State Dean Rusk your congressmen

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

COLLECT money for local advertisements